PREFACE

TO THE FOURTEENTH EDITION.

---

THE present edition of Wharton's "Law Lexicon" has been prepared in order to include legislation and changes in the law since 1925, when the last edition was published. The changes have been considerable, almost as much shelf-room being taken up by the statute books for the twelve years 1925 to 1936 as by those for the preceding thirty years, while much of the law which has been superseded is of practical as well as historical importance, especially in regard to the law of property in land.

The opportunity has been taken to amplify some of the titles which appeared in previous editions and to add new titles on subjects which have lately become important. A feature of the work consists in its explanation of words and formulæ which were current among lawyers in former days, and of place-names which appear to have been included less with the intention of providing derivations than to identify places which are referred to in ancient documents. These have been retained for the greater part, and the editor hopes that the consequent expansion of the book will not be inconvenient for the reader.

The editor has had the advantage of the assistance of MR. W. L. DALE, of Gray's Inn, in the revision of titles in ecclesiastical law, and the titles relating to the law of Scotland in recent times (including a complete synopsis of the Scots law of prescription in the Addenda) have been carefully revised and supplemented by MR. IAN A. DICKSON, W.S., of Edinburgh. To both these gentlemen I offer my grateful thanks for their co-operation, as well as to MR. D. GWYTHYR MOORE, a solicitor of the Supreme Court, for many valuable suggestions and material, and to MR. R. D. H. OSBORNE, of Gray's Inn, for his unremitting assistance in the general preparation of the work. I am also indebted to MR. H. P. LANSDALE-RUTHVEN, of Gray's Inn, now Legal Adviser to the Court of Sarawak, and MR. F. H. COWPER, of Gray's Inn, for the contribution of material required for the preparation of some titles in common and criminal law. I am also under great obligations to MISS JOAN KAHN for her work in revising the earlier titles in Roman law and verifying references to old authorities in the Lexicon.

ADDENDA

Divorce. Until 1st January, 1938, grantable to a husband proving the adultery of his wife; or to a wife (since the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1923) proving the adultery of her husband, or on proof of an unnatural offence (prior to the Act of 1923 adultery of a husband was not sufficient per se, it being necessary to prove also cruelty or desertion). See title DIVORCE.

Firearms. The Firearms Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 12), has consolidated and repealed the Firearms Acts, 1920 to 1936.

Prescription. In Scotland prescription is of various kinds:—

1. Positive Prescription, which may be called Acquisitive Prescription, introduced by an Act of 1617. In the Conveyancing Acts of 1874 and 1924 the periods were altered so that by s. 16 of the latter the given period is twenty years, except where the prescription is relied upon to establish a servitude right of way or other public right, in which cases the period is still forty years. To found on Positive Prescription an ex facie valid irredeemable title recorded in the Register of Sasines is required.

2. Negative Prescription, introduced by Acts of 1469, 1474 and 1617, and altered by the 1924 Conveyancing Act, s. 17 of which makes the period twenty years. The effect is to extinguish rights which have not been enforced.

3. Triennial Prescription, introduced by the Act of 1579, deals with rents where the lease is entered into verbally and, broadly speaking, mercantile debts. The effect is not to extinguish the debt or claim but to transfer the onus of proof to the creditor.

4. Quinquennial Prescription, introduced by the Act of 1669. This covers arrestments, rents and "obligations concerning moveables," excluding claims founded on a written obligation. As the name implies, the period is five years and the effect, with the exception of arrestments, is not to extinguish any right, but to restrict methods of proof and to transfer the onus thereof.

5. Sexennial Prescription. This affects Bills of Exchange, the onus of proving the debt contained in the Bill being laid on the holder after expiry of six years.

6. Vicennial Prescription, introduced by the Act of 1669, precludes holograph writings from being proved except by the writ or oath of the debtor.

All the above prescriptive methods require to run without interruption, the nature of which varies with each type of prescription.

Register of Sasines and Sasine. A title to heritable property in Scotland can only be founded upon after the deed granting it has been registered for publication in the Register of Sasines. Sasine was originally the symbolical delivery of land, i.e., stone and earth by a bailie on the site of the ground being disposed. Payment of the purchase price created a personal right in the buyer and delivery of Sasine converted this into a real right. After numerous Conveyancing Acts which have tended to simplify procedure, the position nowadays is that a "Recorded Title" forms the basis of real right to heritable property in Scotland.

Registration for Execution. A consent to registration for execution in a Scots Deed is theoretically a consent to decree for summary diligence—i.e., the taking of the remedy provided without recourse to a separate process of law.

Removing. The process in Scotland by which a tenant of heritage is judicially warned to remove from the place when his tenure is concluded, failing obedience to which he is removed or ejected from the premises.

Ribbon Development. The name given to the extension of urban house building along main and country roads. Following the policy of the Town and Country Planning Acts, see IMPROVEMENT OF TOWNS, the Restriction of Ribbon Development Act, 1935 (25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 47), enables local authorities to adopt a standard width for roads and to prevent building nearer the edge of the road than half its standard width, or nearer the centre of certain classified roads than 220 feet. Land may be purchased compulsorily for purposes of traffic. Compensation is provided for.

Subinfeudation. A common form of creating holdings in Scotland where generally the feudal principle of holding is universal. Responsible for many intricacies in the Conveyancing Law of Scotland through liability of successors to casualties or capital payments (now defunct through operation of Feudal Casualties (Scotland) Act, 1914).

Teinds. Originally the tenth part of agricultural produce offset to meet stipend. All land in Scotland was assessed for Teind, and Stipend was payable therefrom. Free-Teind—i.e., the difference between the Teind and proportion of Stipend—was an asset. Now, under the Church of Scotland Act, 1929, Teinds and Stipends are stabilised.

Trade Marks. The Trade Marks (Amendment) Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 49), amends the law of trade marks. Sect. 1 substitutes a definition of trade mark for that in s. 3 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905, to the effect that a trade mark other than a certification trade mark shall mean a mark in relation to goods indicating a connection in course of trade between the goods and the proprietor or registered user having the right to use the mark. A certification trade mark is a registered trade mark, under s. 18 of the 1937 Act.

AI—ABA

A1. An expression signifying a first-class vessel excellently built.—Shipping term. See LLOYD'S REGISTER.

'A' list. See CONTRIBUTORY.

A.B. Able-bodied seaman, having served at sea for three years before the mast.—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 126, as amended by Merchant Shipping Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 148), s. 58. Any false statement or false representation for the purpose of obtaining a rating as A.B. renders the offender liable to a fine not exceeding five pounds.—M. S. A. 1906, s. 58 (2).

A and B lists. See CONTRIBUTORY.

Ab, at the beginning of English-Saxon names of places, is generally a contraction of Abbot or Abbey; whence it is inferred that those places once had an abbey, or belonged to one elsewhere, as Abingdon in Berkshire.—Blount's Law Dict.

Abacot, the name of the ancient cap of state worn by the kings of England. It was made in the shape of two crowns.—Jacob's Law Dict.

Abactor [fr. abigo, Lat.], a stealer and driver away of cattle or beasts by herds or in great numbers at once, as distinguished from fur, a person who steals a single beast only.—Encyc. Londin. See ABIGEUS and ABIGEAT.

Abalienation [fr. abalieno, Lat.], a making over of realty, goods, or chattels, to another, by due course of law.—Civil Law.

Aballaba, the ancient name of Appleby, in Westmoreland.

Abandonee, one to whom anything is relinquished.

Abandonment [fr. abandonner, Fr.], the relinquishment of an interest or claim.

The relinquishment by an assured person to the assurers of his right to what is saved out of a wreck, when the thing insured has, by some of the usual perils of the sea, become practically valueless. Upon abandonment, the assured is entitled to call upon the assurers to pay the full amount of the insurance, as in the case of a total loss. The loss is in such case called a 'constructive total loss' (Marine Insurance Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 41), s. 60; no abandonment is necessary where there is nothing which, on abandonment, can pass to or be of value to the underwriters.—Rankin v. Potter, (1873) L. R. 6 H. L. 83.

The abandonment of a sunken ship frees the owner from responsibility: see The Snark, 1900, P. 105, where there was no abandonment of a barge sunk in the Thames, and therefore no freedom from responsibility.

Also the surrender of his property by a debtor for the benefit of his creditors.

The Civil Law permitted a master who was sued for his slave's tort, or the owner of an animal who was sued for an injury done by it, to abandon the slave or animal to the person injured, and thus relieve himself from further liability.

As to abandonment of a building contract, see Sumpster v. Hedges, 1898, 1 Q. B. 673, and Hudson on Building Contracts, 6th ed., 1933. As to abandonment of proceedings, see R. S. C., Ord. XXVI., and For v. Star Newspaper Co., 1900, A. C. 19; as to abandoned mines, see the Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872, ss. 12-14; the Coal Mines Act, 1911, ss. 19, 21, 22; see also the Petroleum (Production) Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 36), s. 7; and as to abandoned canals, see Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, s. 45; also CHILDREN; RAILWAYS; DISCONTINUANCE.

Abandon, or Abandum, anything sequestered, proscribed, or abandoned. Abandon, i.e., in bannum res missa, a thing banned or denounced as forfeited or lost, whence to abandon, desert, or forsake, as lost and gone.—Covel. Pasquier thinks it a coalition of a ban donner, to give up to a proscription, in which sense it signifies the band of the empire. Ban, in the old dialect, signifies a curse; and to abandon, if considered as compounded of French and Saxon, is exactly equivalent to diris devovere. Consult Du Cange.

Ab antiquo, of an ancient date.

Abarnare [fr. abarian, Ang.-Sax., denudo, delego, Lat.], to lay bare, discover, detect. Hence, abere theof, a detected or convicted thief; abere morth, a detected homicide. Also to detect and discover any secret crime to a magistrate.—Ancient Laws and Institutes of England; Leg. Canuti, c. 104.

Abatementum, Abatement, an entry by interposition.—Co. Litt. 277.

Abate [fr. abbattere, Fr.], to prostrate, break down, remove, or destroy; also to let down or cheapen the price in buying or selling.—Encyc. Londin. See ABATEMENT.

Abatement, a making less :—

(1) Abatement of Freehold.—The title of a real action which has been abolished. This takes place where a person dies seised of an inheritance, and before the heir or devisee enters, a stranger, having no right, makes a wrongful entry and gets possession of it. Such an entry is technically called an abatement, and the stranger an abater. It is, in fact, a figurative expression, denoting that the rightful possession or freehold of the heir or devisee is overthrown by the unlawful intervention of a stranger. Abatement differs from intrusion, in that it is always to the prejudice of the heir or immediate devisee, whereas the latter is to the prejudice of the reversioner or remainder man : and disseisin differs from them both, for to disseise is to put forcibly or fraudulently a person seised of the freehold out of possession.—Co. Litt. 277 a.

(2) Abatement of Nuisances.—A remedy allowed by law to a person injured by a nuisance to remove or put an end to it by his own act. Nuisances are either public or private. A public nuisance may be abated, that is, taken away or removed, by urban sanitary authorities and other public bodies under various statutes (see, e.g., Public Health Act, 1936, consolidating and repealing similar provisions in previous Public Health Acts; the Public Health (Smoke Abatement) Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 43), also repealed and replaced by the Public Health Act, 1936; and the Public Health (London) Act, 1936), and also by any private individual to whom it does a special injury : see Campbell Davys v. Lloyd, 1901, 2 Ch. 518. Private nuisances may also be abated by the individuals aggrieved : see

Lemmon v. Webb, 1895, A. C. 1. The law allows this because injuries of this kind require an immediate remedy, and cannot wait for the slow progress of the ordinary forms of justice.

(3) Plea in Abatement.—A defence by which a defendant showed cause to the Court why he should not be sued, or, if sued, not in the form adopted by the plaintiff, and praying that the action might abate, i.e., cease.

A plea in Abatement at Common Law (which by 4 Anne, c. 16, s. 11, had to be substantiated by affidavit, and which is now abolished, see R. S. C. Ord. XXI., r. 20) was one which stated some fact which gave a reason for quashing or abating the action, on account of an informality, or offered an exception to the personal competency of the parties suing or sued; e.g., that the plaintiff was an alien enemy, or that the defendant was a married woman.

In criminal proceedings, a plea in abatement might have been given in writing by a prisoner or defendant on account of misnomer, wrongful or no addition, annexing thereto an affidavit of its truth. But this plea is now obsolete, since by the Criminal Law Act, 1826 (7 Geo. 4, c. 64), s. 19, in case of misnomer the judge may amend the indictment or information, and call upon the prisoner or defendant to plead in bar to the merits; and by the Indictments Act, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90), the Court has power to amend defective indictments before or during trial (s. 5).

(4) Abatement of Debts and Legacies.—When the estate of a deceased person after 1st January, 1925, is insufficient to satisfy fully all the creditors, then subject to the personal representatives' rights of retainer and preference (see A.-G. v. Jackson, 1932, A. C. 365), their debts must abate in proportion according to their degree (see ADMINISTRATION OF ASSETS), and they must be content with a dividend.

So in the case of legacies, upon a deficiency of assets after payment of the debts they abate in proportion, unless a priority is specially given to any particular legacy. A testator is always presumed to intend that the legacies shall be equally paid, unless he express in his will a contrary intention.

When there are specific and pecuniary legacies, and the assets are not sufficient to pay both, the specific have the preference, and only abate in proportion amongst themselves, unless one of them is payable out of a particular fund, and others out of other funds, for then each must bear the loss arising from any deficiency of the particular fund. See also DEMONSTRATIVE LEGACY.

(5) Abatement of Litigation.—By R. S. C., Ord. XVII., rr. 1, 2, a cause does not become abated by marriage, death or bankruptcy of any of the parties if the cause of action survives, but in any of such cases the Court or a judge may order the successor in interest to be made a party. See PARTIES.

(6) Abatement or rebate in commerce, an allowance or discount made for prompt payment.—Lex. Merc. It is sometimes used to express the deduction that is occasionally made at the Custom House from the duties chargeable upon such goods as are damaged, and for a loss in warehouses.

(7) A badge in coat-armour, indicating dishonour of some kind. It is also called rebatement.

Abator, or Abater, one who abates a nuisance or enters into a house or land vacant by the death of the former possessor, and not yet taken possession of by his heir or devisee.—Cowel. Also an agent or cause by which an abatement is procured.

Abatuda, or Abatude, anything diminished. Moneta abatuda is money clipped or diminished in value.—Du Cange's Glos. Used in old records.

Abavia, a great-grandmother's mother.

Abavus [fr. avusavus, avavus, Lat.], a great-grandfather's father.

Abbay [fr. abbatia, or abbathia, Lat.], the government of a religious house and the revenues thereof, subject to an abbot, as a bishopric is to a bishop.—Cowel. The rights and privileges of an abbot.

Abbandunum, Abbendoma, Abbendonla, Abingdon in Berkshire; also, as some say, called Sewsham and Cloveshoe.

Abbas [fr. æstuarium, Lat.] (Anglo-Saxon) singly or in conjunction, the site of an abbey or land belonging to one. For instance, Cerne Abbas in Dorsetshire (from Crem, Anglo-Saxon, a cheese, indicating a place, where cheese-making was carried on) means the abbot's dairy or cheese farm. Edmunds, Names of Places, p. 161. According to Cowel, Abbas æstuarium is Humber in Yorkshire.

Abbatis, an avener or steward of the stables, an ostler.—Spelm.

Abbe, old Norman-French for abbot.

Abbey, or Abby [fr. abbatia, Lat.], a place or house for religious retirement, governed by an abbess where nuns are, and by an abbot where monks reside. No fewer than 190 abbeys were dissolved by Henry VIII., the yearly revenue of which amounted to 2,853,000*l.* per annum (an almost incredible sum, considering the value of money in those days), a great part of which went to Rome, the governors and governesses of several of the richest among them being foreigners resident in Italy. See 27 Hen. 8, c. 28, and 31 Hen. 8, c. 13, printed in supplement to vol. 16 of the 2nd ed. of the Statutes Revised.

Abbot, or Abbat [from abbas, Lat.; abbé, Fr.; abbud, Sax.: others derive it from abba, Syr., father], a spiritual lord or governor, who had the rule of a religious house. An abbot, with the monks of the same house, who were called the convent, made a corporation.—Termes de la Ley.

Mitred abbots were those privileged to wear the mitre and allowed full episcopal authority within their precincts. They were also lords of Parliament, and at the time of the dissolution of the monasteries by Henry VIII. were twenty-six in number.—1 Bl. Com. 151.

Abbreviate of Adjudication (in Scots Law), an abstract of the decree of adjudication, and of the lands adjudged, with the amount of the debt. Adjudication is that diligence (execution) of the law by which the real estate of a debtor is adjudged to belong to his creditor in payment of a debt; and the abbreviate must be recorded in the register of adjudication. See Bell's Dictionary.

Abbreviatio Placitorum is an abstract of ancient pleadings prior to the Year Books. Stephen on Pleadings, 7th ed., p. 410.

Abbreviation, an abridging or contraction, very frequent in old statutes, as of 'rationabilem' by 'rönabilem' (in the Statute de Prærogativa Regis) and of 'every' by 'evy' in 22 Hen. 8, c. 5, s. 4, and writings. The Act 4 Geo. 2, c. 26, provided that all law proceedings should be in the English language, written legibly and prescribed also that they shall be in words at length, and not abbreviated; but 6 Geo. 2, c. 14, permitted numbers to be expressed in figures, and such abbreviations as are commonly used. See 1923, W. N. 288. In 9 Rep. 48 is this maxim, Ille numerus et sensus abbreviationum accipiendus est ut concessio non sit inanis. (In abbreviations such number and sense is to be taken that the grant be not made void.) See REGNAL YEARS.

Abbreviators, officers who assisted in drawing up the Pope's briefs, and reducing petitions into proper form, for their conversion into Papal Bulls.

Abbroach, to monopolize goods or forestall a market.

Abbroachment, or Abroachment [fr. ab, Lat., and broche, Fr., a spit], the forestalling of a market or fair. See FORESTALLING AND REGRATING.

Abbuttals, or Abuttals [fr. abutter, or abouir, Fr., to limit or bound; or perhaps fr. butt or strike.—Wedg.], the buttings or boundings of any land, east, west, north, or south, declaring on what other lands, highways or other places it does abbutt. The sides of the land are properly said to be adjoining to, and the ends abutting on, the land contiguous.—Blount's Law Dict. See BOUNDARIES. In building contracts, the meaning prima facie is 'in physical contact with.' See Hudson on Building Contracts 6th ed.

Abdicant, giving up, renouncing.

Abdicate [fr. abdico, Lat.], to renounce or refuse anything.—Termes de la Ley. In the civil law, to disinherit.

Abdication, where a magistrate or person in office voluntarily renounces or gives it up. It differs from resignation, in that resignation is made by one who has received his office from another and restores it into his hands; as an inferior into the hands of a superior. On King James II.'s leaving this kingdom, and abdicating the crown, the Lords would have had the word 'desertion' made use of, but the Commons thought it was not comprehensive enough, for that the king might then have liberty of returning, and the Lords ultimately gave way: see Macaulay's Hist. of Eng., ch. x. Involuntary resignations are also termed abdications, as Napoleon's abdication at Fontainebleau. See 1 Edw. 8, c. 4.

Abditorium [fr. abditus, Lat.], an abditory or hiding-place to conceal and preserve goods, plate, or money, or a chest in which reliques are kept, as mentioned in the inventory of the Church of York.—Dugdale's Monasticon Anglicanum.

Abduction: (1) The forcible or fraudulent taking away of a woman. It is a felony:—

(a) Where any person from motives of lucre takes away or detains any woman who has any interest in any property (even a presumptive expectation) with intent to marry or carnally know her or to cause her to be married or carnally known. (b) Where any person fraudulently allures, takes away or detains with like intent such a woman under 21 out of the possession and against the will of her parent or other person having the lawful care of her. In either of these two cases a person convicted is incapable of taking any estate or interest in the woman's property.—Offences against the Person Act, 1861. (c) Where any person by force takes away or detains any woman being of age with like intent (Ib. s. 54). It is a misdemeanour:—

(a) Where any person takes away an unmarried girl under 16 out of the possession and against the will of her parent or other person having lawful charge of her (Ib. s. 55). A bona fide belief on reasonable grounds that the girl is over 16 is no defence (R. v. Prince, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 154). (b) Where any person takes away any unmarried girl under 18 out of the possession and against the will of her parent or other person having the lawful charge of her with intent that she shall be unlawfully and carnally known.—Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, s. 7. Reasonable belief that the girl was 'over 18' is a defence (Ib.).

(2) The offence of unlawfully taking or enticing away or detaining any child under 14 by force or fraud with intent to deprive any parent or other person having the lawful charge of such child of the possession of the child or with intent to steal any article upon or about the child is a misdemeanour. The receiving or harbouring of such child with like intent knowing the child to have been taken or enticed away or detained as aforesaid is a misdemeanour.—Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 56, and see Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 12).

(3) The Common Law misdemeanour of forcibly stealing or carrying away any person, sometimes known as kidnapping and more accurately described as assault and false imprisonment. Where the person carried away is taken abroad the offence falls within the Habeas Corpus Act, 1679 (31 Car. 2, c. 2), s. 11.

(4) The removal of a ward of Court out of the jurisdiction: this is Contempt of Court (q.v.). See GUARDIAN.

The statutes 13 Edw. 1, c. 34 & 35, dealing with the carrying away of married women with the goods of their husbands, the abduction of nuns and of wards appear no longer to be of practical effect. See ABUSING CHILDREN; CHILDREN; RAPE.

Abearence, carriage or behaviour. A cognizance to be of good abearence means to be of good behaviour.—4 Bl. Com. 53.

Aberdeen Act, the Entail Provisions Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 87), enabling the owners of entailed estates in Scotland to grant provisions to their wives or husbands and children. See TAIL.

Aberdeen University. See s. 18 of Universities of Scotland Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 83).

Aberemurder [fr. abere, apparent, notorious, and mord, murder, Sax.], plain or downright murder, as distinguished from the less heinous crime of manslaughter or chance medley. It was declared a capital offence, without fine or commutation, by the laws of Canute, c. 93, and of Henry I. c. 13.

Aberfraw [aber-fraw, Welsh, efflux of the Fraw]. The princely seat of Venedotia (North Wales) was situated where the brook Fraw flows into the sea. Here was erected the Supreme Court of Law for the administration of justice in that part of the principality.—Ancient Laws and Institutes of Wales.

Abessed [fr. abaisser, Fr.], humbled, depressed, abased.

Abet (from a (ad vel usque), and bedan, or beteren, to stir up or excite, Sax.), to maintain or patronize: to encourage or set on. The act is called abetment. An abettor or abettator is an instigator or setter on, one who promotes or procures a crime to be committed.—Old Nat. Br. 21. See ACCESSARY.

Abeance, or Abbeyance [fr. abayer, Fr., to expect, to look at anything with open mouth], in expectation, remembrance, and contemplation of law. The word abeance has been compared to what the civilians call hereditas jacens; for, as the civilians say land and goods jacent, so the common lawyers say that things in a similar condition are in abeyance, as the logicians term it in posse or in understanding. Thus in the case of a person, who has an estate for life only, the fee simple of his glebe is in abeyance; and when the parsonage is void, the freehold, until a successor be appointed, is in abeyance.—2 Bl. Com. 107. Commonly used as meaning having no present owner—e.g., a peerage is said to be 'in abeyance' when there is no holder thereof.

Abide the Event. See EVENT.

Abigat, the crime of stealing cattle by droves or herds. It was severely punished by the Roman law, the delinquent being often condemned to the mines, banishment, or death. See 4 Bl. Com. 239. Also a mis-carriage produced by art.—Ash's Dict. See ABACTOR.

Abigeus [fr. abigo, Lat.], a stealer of cattle, the same as abactor.—Civil Law. See ABACTOR.

Ability. See s. 6 of the Statute of Frauds Amendment Act, 1828, tit. REPRESENTATION.

Ab initio [Lat.] (from the beginning). A person who abuses an authority given him by law becomes a trespasser ab initio, i.e., is liable as a trespasser from the beginning. See the Six Carpenters' Case, (1611) 8 Rep. 146; 1 Smith's L. C. A party making an irregular distress for rent is not deemed a trespasser ab initio, by virtue of the Distress for Rent Act, 1737 (11 Geo. 2, c. 19), s. 19. A second distress may be good if the first is void ab initio (Grunnell v. Welch, 1906, 2 K. B. 555).

Ab intestato, title, under the law of succession, to property of a deceased person who has not disposed of it by his will. See INTESTATE.

Ab irato [Lat.] (by a man in anger).—Civil Law.

Abishering, or Abishersing, quit of amercements. It originally signified a forfeiture or amercement, and is more properly mishering, mishersing, or miskering, according to Spelman. It seems by some authors to signify a freedom or liberty: see Blount's Law Dict.

Abjuration [fr. abjuro, Lat.], a forswearing or renouncing by oath. To abjure is to retract, recant or abnegate a position on oath. 'Abjuration of the realm,' in the old law, signified an oath taken by a person accused of crime who had claimed sanctuary (see that title) to forsake the realm for ever. It was abolished by 12 Jac. 1, c. 28.

The oath of abjuration (introduced by 13 Wm. 3, c. 16, and altered by 6 Geo. 3, c. 53) had to be taken by every person entering upon any public office or trust. By this he renounced the Pretender (the son of James II.) and recognized the right of Her Majesty, under the Act of Settlement (q.v.), engaging to support her, and promising to disclose all treasons and traitorous conspiracies against her.—Staunforde Pl. C. b. 2, c. 40. By 21 & 22 Vict. c. 48, one form of oath was substituted for the oaths of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuration. For this form another was substituted by Act 30 & 31 Vict. c. 75, s. 5. This has in its turn been superseded by the Promissory Oaths Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 72), by which a new form of the oath of allegiance is provided numerous obsolete Acts as to oaths being repealed by the Promissory Oaths Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 48).

Abjuratio et Juramentum Latronum, the oath which had to be taken by a thief who had claimed sanctuary and wished to escape punishment by abjuring the realm. See ABJURATION.

Abladum, cut corn.—Cowel.

Abiato-Bulgio, Bulness, or Bolness, in Cumberland.—Cowel.

Able-bodied Man, defined in Corn Production Act, 1917 (7 & 8 Geo. 5, c. 46) (repealed), as 'any male workman who is not incapable, by reason of age or mental or other infirmity or physical injury, of performing the work of a normally efficient workman.' In the Relief Regulation Order, 1930 (S. R. & O. 1930, No. 186), s. 6, 'Male person capable of work.'

Able-bodied Seaman. See A.B.

Ablegate [fr. ablego, Lat.], to send abroad a person on some public business or embassy.

Ablegati, Papal ambassadors of the second rank, who are sent to a country where there is not a nuncio, with a less extensive commission than that of a nuncio

Ablution. Ceremonial washing. In ecclesiastical law the ceremonial washing of the chalice and paten after the Communion and the drinking of the water used.

Ablocation, a letting out to hire for money.

Abnepos, the son of a great grandchild.

Abo, a carcase of an animal killed by a wolf or other beast of prey.

Abode, habitation or place of residence; stay or continuance. In law it is used in different senses, to denote the place of a man's residence, or business, temporary or permanent. For some purposes in law a man may be deemed to have an 'abode' where he has a place of business, even although he reside elsewhere, or where he has a temporary residence, although his permanent residence is elsewhere or even abroad. But 'abode' or residence is quite distinct from domicile, which means much more than even a place of permanent residence (see DOMICIL); whereas it would seem that 'abode' does not even necessarily imply that. 'Abode' seems larger and looser in its import than the word 'residence,' which in strictness means the place where a man lives, i.e., where he sleeps or is at home. 'A man's residence, where he lives with his family and sleeps at night, is always his place of abode in the full sense of that expression' (R. v. Hammond, (1852) 17 Q. B. 781, per Lord Campbell, C.J.). Consult Stroud, Jud. Dict.

Abolition [fr. abolir, Fr.; fr. aboleo, Lat.], a destroying; also the leave given by the sovereign or judges to a criminal accuser to desist from further prosecution.—25 Hen. 8, c. 21.

Abominable Crime. See BUGGERY.

Abone [Abonis, Lat.], Avington or Aventon, in Gloucestershire.

Aborigines [fr. ab, from, and origo, Lat.], the original or first inhabitants of any country. For observations in the Privy Council on the rights and status of aboriginal tribes, see In re Southern Rhodesia, 1919, A. C. 211.

Abortion, a miscarriage, or the premature expulsion of the contents of the womb before the term of gestation is completed.

By the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 58, the unlawful administration of drugs or unlawful use of instruments, by a pregnant woman to herself, or (whether she be with child or not) by any person to her, with intent to procure miscarriage, is made felony, punishable by penal servitude or imprisonment, in the discretion of the Court. A person charged under this section may be convicted under the Infant Life (Preservation) Act, 1929 (19 & 20 Geo 5, c. 34). By s. 59 of the Act of 1861, the unlawful procuring of drug or instrument with the intent that it may be used to procure miscarriage is a misdemeanour whether the woman be with child or not. Earlier Acts (see, e.g., 43 Geo. 3, c. 59) made the offence a capital felony, but applied only in case of the woman being quick with child. A woman can be convicted of conspiracy to procure her own miscarriage (R. v. Whitchurch, (1890) 24 Q. B. D. 420), or with aiding and abetting the commission of the offence by another (R. v. Sockett, 1908, 72 J.P. 428).

As to the 'common practice of inducing premature labour in certain cases of disease,' see Tayl. Med. Jur.

Above-cited, or mentioned, quoted before. A figurative expression taken from the ancient manner of writing books or scrolls, where whatever is mentioned or cited before in the same roll must be above.

Abrevium, Berwick-upon-Tweed.

Abridge [fr. abreger, Fr., abbreviare, Lat.], to make shorter in words retaining the substance. Also the making a declaration or count shorter by subtracting or severing some of the substance therefrom, i.e., a man was said to abridge his plaint in assize, and a woman her demand in action of dower, where any land was put into the plaint or demand which was not in the tenure of the defendant; for if the defendant pleaded non-tenure, joint-tenancy, or the like, in abatement of the writ as to part of the lands, and plaintiff might leave out those lands, and pray that the tenant might answer to the rest.—Brooke, tit. 'Abridgment.' Now obsolete in consequence of the abolition of real and mixed actions, by the Real Property Limitations Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27), s. 36, and the Common Law Procedure Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 126), s. 26.

Abridgment [fr. abbreviamentum, Lat.], a large work contracted into a narrow compass; a summary, epitome, or compendium. As to how far this may be done without breach of copyright, see Butterworth v. Robinson, (1801) 5 Ves. 709; but it has been doubted whether any abridgment is lawful under the Copyright Act, 1911.

Abridgment, or Digests of the Law, of ancient authority. The principal of these are Statham's, Brooke's, Fitzherbert's, and Rolle's Abridgments, and Comyn's Digest. Besides these there are Viner's and Bacon's Abridgments, and Harrison's, Chitty's, Fisher's, and Mew's Digests, of later date; and the English and Empire Digest; also the Encyclopædia of the Laws of England; and The Laws of England, Halsbury, and Hailsham editions.

Abrogation [abrogatio, Lat.], the act of annulling; the repeal of a law. It stands opposed to rogation: it is distinguished from derogation, which implies the taking away only some part of a law; from subrogation, which denotes the adding a clause to it; from obrogation, which implies the limiting or restraining it; from dispensation, which only sets it aside in a particular instance; and from antiquation, which is the refusing to pass a law.—Encyc. Londin.

Abrum, the River Humber.—Cowel.

Abscond, to fly the country in order to escape arrest (see FLY FOR IT) for crime. By s. 6 of the Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), in any action in the High Court in which before the Act the debtor might have been arrested on 'mesne process,' the plaintiff may procure the defendant to be arrested and imprisoned up to six months (unless he has sooner given security not to quit England without leave of the Court) on proof that he has good cause of action to the amount of 50*l.* or upwards; that there is probable cause to believe that the defendant is about to quit England unless he be apprehended; and that the absence of the defendant from England will materially prejudice the plaintiff in the prosecution of his action. See R. S. C., Ord. LXIX.

Absence of Accused. The accused must be present at the trial in cases of treason and felony, and cannot be sentenced in his absence (R. v. Hales, 1924, 1 K. B. 602).

In cases of indictable misdemeanours, though the accused's presence at the actual trial is not absolutely essential, he must be present at the preliminary inquiry. With regard to summary jurisdiction, the justices may proceed ex parte after proof of service of the summonses.

Absence Beyond the Seas. See LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, and TRUSTEE.

Absence of Husband or Wife for Seven Years is, under certain circumstances, a defence on an indictment for bigamy. See BIGAMY.

Absence of Party to Civil Action. See APPEARANCE.

Absentee, a person who is away from his usual place of residence; a non-resident landlord.

Absentees, or des absentees. A parliament so called was held at Dublin, 10th May, 8 Hen. 8. It is mentioned in letters-patent 29 Hen. 8.

Absionare, to shun or avoid, used by the English-Saxons in the oath of fealty.—Somnerus.

Absoluta sententia expositare non indiget [Lat.], legal maxim meaning Plain words need no explanation.

Absolute, complete, unconditional. A rule or order absolute is a completed judgment of a Court, and is so called in contradistinction to a rule or order nisi which is made on the application of one party only without notice to the other (ex parte), to be made absolute unless the other party succeed in showing cause why it should not be made absolute (discharged); but see also DECREE NISI.

Absolute Warrantice, a warranting or assuring of property against all mankind.—Scots Conveyancing Phrase. It is, in effect, a covenant of title.

Absolution, a dispensation; a remission of sins; an acquittal by sentence of law.

Absolve, to acquit of a crime, to pardon or set free from excommunication. See ASSOILE.

Absolvitor (Scots Law), an acquittal: a decree in favour of the defender in any action.

Absque hoc [Lat.] (without this), technical words of exception which were made use of in a special traverse; as, the defendant pleads that such a thing was done at B., etc., without this (absque hoc), that it was done at, etc.—1 Saund. 22: abolished, C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 65.

Absque impeditiōne vasti [Lat.] (without impeachment of waste), a reservation frequently made to a tenant for life, that no man shall proceed against him for waste committed. This reservation does not extend to allow excessive or outrageous acts of waste, such as felling timber planted for ornament, which is called 'equitable waste' and is ground for an injunction. See WASTE.

Absque tali causa [Lat.] (without such cause): formal words in the now obsolete replication de injuriâ.

Abstention, keeping an heir from possession; also, tacit renunciation of a succession by an heir.—French Law.

Abstract, in the, a thing looked at purely by itself and without comparison with any other thing or with any reference to surrounding circumstances.

Abstract [fr. abstrahere, abstractus; fr. trahere, Lat., to draw], an abridgment or epitome, as the abstract of pleas required in some cases before the Judicature Act; also a purloining.

Abstract of Title, an epitome of the evidence of title to property or power to deal with it.

Every purchaser of land or real estate has an implied right to have an abstract of title delivered to him within a reasonable time (Compton v. Bagley, 1892, 1 Ch. 313). As to registered land, see the Land Registration Act, 1925, s. 110, and Brickdale and Stewart-Wallace on the Land Registration Act, 1925.

An abstract is said to be perfect if it deduces the title from the date fixed by the contract or by statute for its commencement and discloses every incumbrance affecting it, by setting out the material parts of all deeds, wills and other documents, and stating the facts on which it depends: cf. 1 Pres. 42, 207. The statutory period is thirty years, Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 44, unless an earlier title may be required by law. On a sale of leaseholds, for instance, the lease, whatever its date, must be abstracted (Frend v. Buckley, (1875) L. R. 5 Q. B. Ex. 213) though the intermediate title before the statutory or agreed commencement need not be abstracted, Williams v. Spargo, 1893, W. N. 100. For other instances, see L. P. Act, 1925, s. 45, and Wolstenholme and Cherry, Conv. Acts, 2nd ed., p. 302.

Upon a sale or mortgage, the solicitor of the vendor prepares the abstract at his client's expense (except on sales to a company under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 22, when it must be borne by the company, unless it be stipulated otherwise), and delivers it to the solicitor of the proposed purchaser or mortgagee, who compares it with the original title-deeds, and makes requisitions (when necessary), in order to ascertain any important but undisclosed facts, to remedy any defects, or to dissipate any doubts or ambiguities.

The object of every abstract is to enable the purchaser or mortgagee to judge of the evidence deducing, and of the incumbrances affecting, the title. It should describe whatever will tend to enable him or his advisers to form an opinion of the precise state of the title at Law and in Equity, together with all chances of eviction or even of adverse claims.

At law a vendor cannot convey a greater legal estate than he possesses, or over which he has a common law or statutory power of disposal, and in equity every purchaser taking property with notice (qu. vide) of any estate, trust, incumbrance, or interest affecting it took the property subject thereto, but legislation and the practice of conveyancers have gradually lessened the inconvenience of this doctrine: see LEGAL ESTATE; PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES; SETTLEMENT; MORTGAGE; TRUSTEES FOR SALE; UNDIVIDED SHARES; EQUITABLE INTERESTS, BANKRUPTCY and VESTING ORDERS. Abstracts on behalf of vendors who are absolute owners entitled in fee simple in possession are not exceptionally affected by legislation under these heads except so far as conveyances after 1925 to the vendor or his predecessors under special powers form part of the chain of title.

A simple abstract relating to one estate only should set forth chronologically a clear statement of the material parts of the deeds, wills, writings, records, and private Acts of Parliament, which at all affect or concern the title to be deduced, together with such matters in pais, as births, majorities, marriages, deaths, survivorships, pedigrees, descents, and successions, as connect the several transactions, or in any wise vary the title; and these facts should be authenticated by such legal evidence as would be deemed satisfactory and conclusive in an action to try the title. Judgments, Crown debts, charges, and incumbrances should be fairly stated. Also a tracing of any plan which is referred to in the operative part of the deed (compare Horne v. Struben, 1902, A. C. 454). For illustrations of abstracts of titles which have been simplified by the L. P. Act, 1925, and its transitional provisions, see the 6th Schedule to the Act.

But a complex or compound abstract is not susceptible of a chronological arrangement; as when the title relates to different parcels of land or different interests, or (before 1926) the property formerly belonging to joint tenants, tenants in common, or coparceners; it is then better to arrange the documents relating to one portion under a distinct heading, so as to keep the title to each part in a connected series, and, sometimes, separate abstracts for the different titles simplify the business and avoid an embarrassing confusion, especially if the several properties be distinct, or the title is compounded of both freehold and formerly copyhold estates. Should the distinct titles to the several parts of the property afterwards become united, then there should be a deduction of the title to each part separately up to the point of junction.

Under the L. P. Act, 1925, abstracts of title deduced after 1925 have become simplified in some cases, but the old rules relating to titles and the state of the title up to 1st January, 1926, have not been affected, and it is necessary to abstract all documents or matters relating to the title to that date according to the law existing on the 31st December, 1925. See LAND CHARGES AND NOTICE.

As soon as practicable after the abstract of title is delivered to the purchaser's solicitor, he compares it with the original documents. As to production of deeds and by whom the expenses are to be borne, see L. P. Act, 1925, s. 45. The points to which his attention should be particularly directed in comparing the muniments with the abstract, are the stamps upon the deeds (see Whiting to Loomes, (1881) 17 Ch. D. 10, and s. 117, Stamp Act, 1891, and subsequent Finance Acts); the dates of the different assurances; the names and additions of the parties; that no important recitals are omitted; and that those that are abstracted are faithfully given. The receipt clause should be attended to, the amount of the consideration, the names of the grantors and grantees, and the identity of the parcels, and that there are no exceptions therein. The words of the different limitations of uses and trusts, if material to the title, must be carefully checked, and the covenants, particularly in leases, must be looked into, and, if equitable interests are material to the title it should be seen that all proper indorsements have been made as required by the L. P. Act, 1925, s. 137. The interest which tenants in possession have in the lands must also be inquired after, for the purchaser will be bound thereby; and it must be seen that the abstracted deeds and wills are all duly executed, and have where necessary been enrolled or otherwise perfected.

Whenever the deeds are in the possession of third parties, inquiry should be made as to their interests therein: see L. P. Act, 1925, s. 13. Such an inquiry should also be made of tenants or persons in possession, when the leases under which they hold cannot be inspected: L. P. Act, 1925, s. 14. If the property be vested in trustees, inquiries should be made of them as to any incumbrances, and they should have notice of the intended purchase, in order to exclude a subsequent purchaser or incumbrancer, since priority of notice gives priority of equity in dealings with equitable things in action, and dealings (after 1925) in equitable interest in land or its proceeds and investments thereof: see DEARLE v. HALL, (1823) 3 Russ. 1, and L. P. Act, 1925, s. 137. See also REGISTRATION OF TITLE TO LAND; Dart, V. & P.; and Williams, V. & P.

Abuse of Process. Actions manifestly frivolous or brought against good faith will be stayed as an abuse of the process of the Court. See, e.g., Edmunds v. Attorney-General, (1878) 47 L. J. Ch. 345. As to an action or defence which appears on the Pleadings to be frivolous or vexatious, see R. S. C., Ord. XXV., r. 4, and also VEXATIOUS ACTION AND BILL OF PEACE.

Abusing Children, having carnal intercourse with young girls. If the girl be under the age of 13 (formerly 10 and afterwards 12) years, the offence is a felony punishable with penal servitude for life; if the girl be above the age of 13 (formerly 10 and afterwards 12) and under 16 (formerly 12 and afterwards 13), the offence is a misdemeanour punishable by imprisonment, with or without hard labour, to the extent of two years.—Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69), repealing the Offences against the Person Act, 1875, repealing 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, ss. 50, 51, which fixed lesser ages as above. The Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1922 (12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 56), amends the Act of 1885, so that in the case of the second of the above-mentioned offences, it shall be a sufficient defence if it shall be made to appear to the Court or jury that the person charged had reasonable cause to believe that the girl was of, or above the age of 16, but only if he has not reached his twenty-fourth birthday and is being charged under the section for the first time (R. v. Chapman, 23 Cr. App. R. 63); 'reasonable cause to believe' means that the accused had reasonable cause to and did, in fact, believe (R. v. Banks, 1916, 2 K. B. 621). An attempt to have carnal intercourse with a girl under 13 years is an offence punishable by a like imprisonment, by the Act of 1885. Consent of the girl is no defence, and the Act of 1885, by raising from 13 to 16 the age at which unresisted sexual intercourse is a crime, has made a very material amendment in the law. A prosecution under s. 5 of this Act in respect of a girl between 13 and 16 must be commenced within 9 months of the offence by virtue of s. 2 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1922. A girl aiding and abetting in her own defilement cannot be convicted of any offence (R. v. Tyrrel, 1894, 1 Q. B. 710). The Act of 1885 has further provisions dealing with the causing and encouraging of prostitution of girls and allowing them to frequent brothels. See also CHILDREN.

Abut [fr. aboutir, Fr., to touch at the end], to border upon or approach.

Abutals. See ABBUTTALS.

Acapitare, Acapitare, Accaptare, or Acaptare, the act of becoming vassal to a lord, or yielding homage to him.—Encyc. Londin. Capitali domino acapitare, i.e., to pay relief, homage, or obedience to the chief lord on becoming his vassal.—Fleta, lib. 2, c. 50, s. 6.

Accapitum, money paid by a vassal upon his admission to a feud; the relief due to the chief lord.—Encyc. Londin.

Accedas ad curiam [Lat.] (that you go to the accedat), an original writ to the sheriff, issued out of Chancery, where a man had received false judgment in a Hundred Court or Court Baron, or justice had been delayed.—Termes de la Ley.

Acceleration, the shortening of the time for the vesting in possession of an expectant interest.

Acceptance, the taking and receiving of anything in good part, and as it were a tacit agreement to a preceding act, which might have been defeated or avoided if such acceptance had not been made.—Jac. Law Dict.

The assenting to an offer: it is by the acceptance, whether express or implied, of an offer that all contracts are made. See CONTRACT; AGREEMENT.

Acceptance of a bill of exchange is defined by the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), s. 17, as 'the signification by the drawee of his assent to the order of the drawer.' It must be written on the bill, and signed by the drawee, whose mere signature is sufficient to charge him: and it must not express that the drawee will perform his promise by any other means than the payment of money.—Ib. See BILL OF EXCHANGE.

Acceptance of Goods. By s. 4 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), a contract for sale of goods of the value of 10*l.* or more is not enforceable by action unless the buyer 'accept' part of the goods and actually receive them, or partly pay, or unless there be a note or memorandum in writing of the contract signed by the party to be charged, and there is an acceptance 'when the buyer does any act in relation to the goods which recognizes a pre-existing contract of sale whether there be an acceptance in performance of the contract or not.'

Acceptance of service of Writ of Summons by solicitor in lieu of personal service on defendant. See R. S. C., Ord. IX., r. 1. Where with the authority of the defendant his solicitor accepts service of a writ and gives a written undertaking to 'enter an appearance in due course,' that undertaking is unconditional and must be performed forthwith, and at the instance of the plaintiff it can be enforced by attachment of the solicitor under R. S. C., Ord. XII., r. 18 (In re Kerly, 1901, 1 Ch. 467). It is necessary for the solicitor to have his client's authority (Re Gray, (1891) 65 L. T. 743); and unless an undertaking to appear is given, personal service cannot be dispensed with (The Anna, (1891) 64 L. T. 332); personal service also is requisite in divorce proceedings (De Niceville v. De Niceville, (1877) 37 L. J. Mat. 43).

Acceptilatio, the verbal extinction of a verbal contract, with a declaration that the debt has been paid when it has not, or the acceptance of something merely nominal in satisfaction of a verbal contract. In order to enter into acceptilatio the formal sentence was used in Civil Law: 'quod ego tibi promisi, habesue acceptum? habeo.'—Sand Just. See STIPULATION.

Acceptor, or Acceptor, a person who accepts a bill of exchange. See ACCEPTANCE.

Access, approach, or the means of approaching. The presumption of a child's legitimacy is rebutted, if it be shown by strong, distinct, satisfactory, and conclusive evidence (see Atchley v. Sprigg, (1864) 33

L. J. Ch. 345) that the husband—whether before or after marriage—had not access to his wife within such a period of time before the birth, as admits of his having been the father. 'If a husband have access, although others, at the same time, are carrying on a criminal intimacy with his wife, a child born under such circumstances is still legitimate': per Alderson, J., in Cope v. Cope, (1833) 5 C. & P. 604. Neither husband nor wife is admissible as a witness to prove non-access; Goodright v. Moss, (1777) 2 Cowp. at p. 594. See also Poulett Peerage Case, 1903, A. C. 395, and Russell v. Russell, 1924, A. C. 687. See PATERNITY.

An owner of land adjoining a highway has a right of access to it where the land adjoins for any kind of traffic required for the reasonable enjoyment of his property (Lyon v. Fishmongers Co., (1876) 1 A. C. 662 at p. 684; and the same case decides that an owner of land has a right of access to and from water whether tidal or non-tidal which is opposite and contiguous to his frontage. And see Marshall v. Blackpool Corporation, (1924) 103 L. J. K. B. 566. For access to light and air, see EASEMENTS. As to provision of access to roofs in the metropolis, see London Building Act, 1930 (21 Geo. 5, c. clviii.), s. 100 (1), (2).

Access to the Sovereign, see PEER, HOUSE OF COMMONS or MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT.

Accessory, or Accessory [particeps criminis quasi accedens ad culpam, Lat. as though assenting to the offence], he who is not a chief actor at a felony, nor present at its perpetration, but yet is in some way concerned therein, either before or after the fact committed. An accessory before the fact is one who being absent at the time of the commission of the felony, yet procures, counsels, or commands another to commit a crime. Absence is necessary to make him an accessory, for if he be present, he becomes a principal. An accessory after the fact is one who, knowing a felony to have been committed, receives, relieves, comforts, or assists the felon; but a wife may lawfully receive, comfort and assist her husband, though knowing him to be a felon. In treason and misdemeanours there are no accessories, either before or after the offence, every person implicated being a principal (see Accessories and Abettors Act, 1861, s. 8, and Du Cros v. Lambourne, 1907, 1 K. B. 40). In manslaughter there cannot be an accessory before the fact, for it is by judgment of law an unpremeditated offence.

As to the trial and punishment of accessories:—By the Accessories and Abettors Act, 1861, an accessory before the fact to any felony may be indicted, tried, convicted, and punished in all respects as if he were a principal felon, and an accessory after the fact is in general punishable with imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years (with or without hard labour), and may also be required to find security to keep the peace, or in default to suffer an additional imprisonment to the extent of one year; but an accessory after the fact to murder is punishable by penal servitude for life, or not less than three years, or by imprisonment (with or without hard labour) to the extent of two years. Offences Against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 67. See Russell on Crimes; Roscoe's Criminal Evidence; Archbold's Crim. Pleading; Steph. Dig. Crim. Law.

Accessory to Adultery, a phrase used in the law of divorce, and derived from the criminal law. It implies more than connivance, which is merely knowledge with consent. A conniver abstains from interference, an accessory directly commands, advises, or procures the adultery. A husband or wife who has been accessory to the adultery of the other party to the marriage cannot obtain a divorce on the ground of such adultery.—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), ss. 29, 31. See Browne on Divorce.

Accession [fr. accedo, Lat.], addition, arriving at, the commencement of a sovereign's reign; also the absolute or conditional acceptance by a nation of a treaty already concluded between other countries. The accession of a sovereign takes place immediately upon the death of the preceding monarch. See BILL of RIGHTS.

Accession, property by. The doctrine of property arising from accession is grounded on the right of occupancy, and derived from the Roman Law; thus if any given corporeal substance receive an accession, either by natural or artificial means, as by the growth of vegetables, the pregnancy of animals, the embroidering of cloth, or the conversion of wood or metal into utensils, the original owner of the thing was entitled by his right of possession to the property of it under its improved state; but if the thing itself by such operation was changed into a different species, as by making wine, oil, or bread out of another's grapes, olives, or wheat (specificatio, Lat.), it belonged to the operator, who only made a satisfaction to the former proprietor for the materials so converted. The brood of tame and domestic animals belongs to the owner of the dam or mother, the English law agreeing with the civil, that partus sequitur ventrem (the offspring follows the mother); and in accordance with the Roman Law principle, si equam meam equus tuus pregnantem fecerit non est tuum sed meum quod natum est (if your horse gets my mare with foal, the foal is not your property, but mine). Bracton, l. 2, c. 2, s. 3; Puff, De Jur. Nat. et G. l. 4, c. 7. The rule of the Roman Law was expressed thus: Accessio cedit principali. Commentators have used the word accessio not only for the increase itself, but also for the mode in which the increase becomes one's property.—Sand. Justin.; Dig. 34, l. 2, c. 19, s. 13. See ADJUNCTIO.

Accession Declaration Act, 1910.—See BILL OF RIGHTS.

Accessory.—See ACCESSARY.

Accident, an extraordinary incident; something not expected. It is also a head of equitable jurisdiction, which was concurrent with that of the Courts of Law.

The meaning to be attached to the word 'accident,' in relation to equitable relief, is some unforeseen and undesigned event, productive of disadvantage and not due to negligence or misconduct on the part of the person seeking relief. The cases in which equity may give relief under certain conditions are (1) lost or destroyed documents. (2) Imperfect execution of powers. (3) Erroneous payments, e.g., by personal representatives.

In logic, something, in any subject, person, or thing not belonging to the essence. See ESSENCE.

Accident occasioned by Negligence. As to the recovery of damages for injuries in such cases, see NEGLIGENCE. As to the rights of wife, husband, parent or child of person killed in such an accident, see CAMPBELL'S (LORD) ACT. Any adopted or illegitimate person is included in the expression 'parent or child' for the purposes of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 41).

In Criminal Law a result is said to be accidental when caused unintentionally and in such circumstances that a person of ordinary prudence would not have taken precautions to prevent its occurrence.

In policies of insurance against accident the meaning of 'accident' depends on the context, but includes results brought about by the negligence of the assured and other persons. See Macgillivray on Insurance Law; Re Scarr, 1905, 1 K. B. 387.

Accident to Workman, compensation for. The Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, provides s. 1, sub.-s. (1), that if in any employment personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment is caused to a workman, his employer shall be liable to pay compensation. Sub-s. (2), that an accident resulting in death or serious and permanent disablement of a workman shall be deemed to arise out of and in the course of his employment, even if at the time of the accident he was acting in contravention of statutory regulations or of the orders of his employer, if such act was done by him for the purposes of and in connection with his employer's trade or business. (See Guest v. Gaston & Co. 1927, 1 K. B. 1.)

The word 'accident' in this section must be given its ordinary and popular sense; it has been defined as 'an unlooked for mishap or an untoward event, which is not expected or designed' (Fenton v. Thorley & Co., 1903, A. C. 443). Thus compensation has been recovered in respect of death caused by anthrax bacillus (Brintons Ltd. v. Turvey, 1905, A. C. 230), and by reason of falling into the hold of a ship during an epileptic fit (Wicks v. Dowell & Co. Ltd., 1905, 2 K. B. 225); but not where death was caused by gradual lead poisoning (Steel v. Cammell Laird Ltd., 1905, 2 K. B. 232). Similarly for this Act 'heatstroke' is an accident (Ismay v. Williamson, 1908, A. C. 437), since if a workman in the reasonable performance of his duties sustains a physiological injury as the result of the work he is engaged in, this is an accidental injury in the sense of the statute, a principle extended to exertion causing the rupture of an aneurism (Clover v. Hughes, 1910, A. C. 242; distinguished, Noden v. Galloways, 1912, 1 K. B. 46. See also Falmouth Docks and Engineering Co. Ltd. v. Treloar, 1933, A. C. 431. A deliberate assault on the workman may be an 'accident' (Trim School Board v. Kelly, 1914, A. C. 667). However, where the accident arose from some peril to which the workman had voluntarily exposed himself by his own conduct and which he was not obliged to encounter by any term of his contract of service, the accident was held not to arise out of his employment. See Stephen v. Cooper, 1929, A. C. 570. See WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION, and tits. NOTICE OF ACCIDENT; INDUSTRIAL DISEASE.

Accident, Notice of. See tit. NOTICE OF ACCIDENT.

Accidental Fire. By the Fires Prevention (Metropolis) Act, 1774 (14 Geo. 3, c. 78), s. 86, no action shall be prosecuted against any person in whose house, chamber, stable, barn, or other building, or on whose estate any fire shall accidentally begin; but nothing herein contained shall defeat any contract or agreement made between landlord and tenant. The statute will not protect tenants from the consequences of fires caused by their negligence.

Accola, a husbandman who comes from some other country to till the land, and is thus distinguished from incola :—

'Accola non propriam, propriam colit incola terram' (Accola is one who does not till his own land, incola one who does).—Du Cange.

Accolade [fr. accoler, Fr., collum amplecti, Lat.], a ceremony anciently used in knighthood, by the king putting his hand upon the knight's neck.—Cowel. Greg. de Tours writes, that the kings of France, in conferring the gilt shoulder-belt, kissed the knight on the left cheek. The accollé, or blow, John of Salisbury assures, was in use among the Normans; by this William the Conqueror conferred the honour of knighthood upon his son Henry. It was first given with the naked fist, but afterwards with the flat of a sword.

Accomenda, a contract whereby a person entrusts property to the master of a vessel, to be sold for their joint profit.—Italian.

Accommodation Bill, one which the accommodating party has signed as drawer, acceptor, or endorser, without receiving value therefor and for the purpose of lending his name to some other person; he is liable on the bill to a holder for value; and it is immaterial whether, when such holder took the bill, he knew such party to be an accommodation party or not. The accommodating party has a right to be indemnified by the party to whom he lent his name. See Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 28.

Accommodation Works, works which a railway company is required to make and maintain for the accommodation of the owners or occupiers of land adjoining the railway, e.g., gates, bridges, culverts, fences, etc.—Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), s. 68.

Accomplice [fr. complice, Fr., complex, Lat., bound up with one in a project, but always in a bad sense], one concerned with another or others in the commission of a crime.—Hawk. P. C. 87. An accomplice could always be called to give evidence, and by virtue of Lord Denman's Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 85), s. 1, even though convicted, and now by virtue of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 36), s. 1, he can with his consent be called for the defence, but should he give evidence tending to incriminate his co-prisoner, such co-prisoner may cross-examine him (R. v. Hadwen, 1902, 1 K. B. 882; see also R. v. Rowland, 1910, 1 K. B. 458; R. v. Paul, 1920, 2 K. B. 183). See APPROVER.

Accord. Accord and Satisfaction [fr. accorder, Fr., to agree], an agreement between two persons, one of whom has a right of action against the other, that the latter should do or give and the former accept something in satisfaction of the right of action. When the agreement is executed, and satisfaction has been made, it is called accord and satisfaction. Accord and satisfaction bars the right of action; accord without satisfaction, or satisfaction without accord, does not.* In the case of an ascertained debt, the acceptance of a smaller sum is no satisfaction, e.g., payment of 50l. is no answer to an action for a debt of 100l.; though if anything other than money, e.g., a negotiable instrument for a smaller amount or a peppercorn, had been accepted in satisfaction, the action would have been barred; see Couldery v. Bartrum, (1881) 19 Ch. D. p. 399; Cumber v. Wane, (1718) 1 Smith's L. C. : Foakes v. Beer, (1884) 9 App. Cas. 605. So also if a smaller sum is sent by a third party 'in full settlement' and retained; Punamchand v. Temple, 1911, 2 K. B. 330; 80 L. J. K. B. 1155. A substituted agreement may be accepted in accord and satisfaction of a cause of action; Hall v. Flockton, (1849) 14 Q. B. 380; Ib., 16 Q. B. 1039; but whether the new agreement in itself or the performance of it constitutes the accord and satisfaction depends on its construction. Ellon Cop Dyeing Co. v. Broadbent, (1920) 89 L. J. K. B. 186.

If a bill or note is given by a debtor to his creditor on account and accepted by the latter and nothing is said as to the terms on which it is given, the legal effect of the transaction is that the original debt remains, but that the remedy is suspended until the maturity of the instrument in the hands of the creditor. The position is the same if the bill or note is given, not by the debtor, but by a stranger; Allen v. Royal Bank of Canada, 95 L. J. P. C. 17. And see CONSIDERATION.

Account or Accoimt [fr. compte, Fr., * See British Russian Gazette, Ld. v. Associated Newspapers, Ltd., 1933, 2 K. B. 616.

compulo, Lat.], a registry of debts, credits, and charges, or a detailed statement of a series of receipts (credits) and disbursements (debts) of money—which have taken place between two or more persons. Accounts are either—(1) open, where the balance is not struck, or it is not accepted by all the parties; (2) stated, where it has been expressly or impliedly acknowledged to be correct by all the parties; and (3) settled, where it has been accepted and discharged. Stated and settled accounts may be investigated and reopened by the Court on the ground of fraud or fiduciary relationships. See SURCHARGE and FALSIFY.

Companies under the Companies Act, 1929, must keep proper books of account, and present to the company in general meeting not less than 18 months after incorporation and subsequently at least once in every year a profit and loss account and balance sheet, to copies of which shareholders of all companies, except private companies, are entitled. See ss. 122 and 131 of the Act (and for contents) s. 124. The regulations relating to Balance Sheets apply to companies registered outside Great Britain and established there; s. 347 ibid.

As to the ancient action of account at Common Law, see 3 Steph. Com., 9th ed. 451, and Bac. Ab. 'Account.'

Prior to the Judicature Act, 1873, Equity entertained suits for accounts when they were mutual, i.e., where there existed a series of expenditures on one side, and of payments on the other, and not merely one payment and one receipt, and also where the account was on one side only, but was of so complicated and intricate a nature that it could not be satisfactorily disposed of at Law, and a discovery was wanted which was material to the right of relief. But for a mere matter of set-off at Law, a suit in Equity would not be the remedy.

By the Judicature Act, 1925, s. 56 (formerly the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 34 (3)), all causes and matters for the taking of partnership or other accounts are assigned (subject to a power of transfer) to the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice. If the plaintiff in the first instance desires to have an account taken, the writ of summons must be endorsed with a claim that such account be taken (R. S. C., Ord. III., r. 8), and in such cases the order made must include the directions which were usual in the Court of Chancery. (ib., Ord. XV., rr. 1, 2.)

As to the Court's power to order an account to be taken, see R. S. C., Ord. XXXIII., rr. 2-9.

By the Judicature Act, 1925, see ss. 88-97, repeating s. 14 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, in any cause or matter (other than a criminal proceeding by the Crown) if the question in dispute consists wholly or in part of matters of account the Court or a judge may order trial before a referee agreed upon, or an official referee.

The Statute of Limitations cannot be pleaded in bar to an open account, unless all accounts have ceased above six years. See the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 97), s. 9.

Account Current, a running or open account between two or more persons or firms.

Account Duties. Duties first made payable by the Customs & Inland Revenue Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 12), s. 38, at the same rates as the Probate Duties, upon a donatio mortis causâ (q.v.); upon the gift inter vivos of a donor dying within three months; on joint property voluntarily so created and taken by survivorship; and on property taken under a voluntary settlement in which the settlor had reserved a life interest. These duties were in name superseded by the 'Estate Duty' imposed by the Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), the property chargeable under the Customs & Inland Revenue Act, 1881, s. 38, being included in the classes of property deemed by the Finance Act, 1894, to 'pass' by death and thus chargeable with the new 'Estate Duty,' and the original provisions affecting gifts inter vivos, voluntary settlements, etc., have been considerably amended by subsequent legislation. See ESTATE DUTY.

Account, Settled. See tit. ACCOUNT.

Account Stated. An account stated is the admission of a balance due from one party to another, and that balance being due there is a debt; the statement of the account and the admission of the balance implies a promise in law to pay it; see Irving v. Veitch, (1837) 3 M. & W. 106. The account must have been stated before action brought. An account stated, however, creates only a prima facie liability, which may be rebutted by disputing the debts charged in the account, as, for instance, by proving mistake (among other ordinary defences): Camillo Tank Steamship Co. v. Alexandria Engineering Works, (1921) 38 T. L. R. 134. For statutory power to re-open an account stated, see MONEY LENDERS ACT. By the Infants Relief Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 62),

s. 1, an account stated with an infant is void.

Accountable. As to the person accountable for Estate Duty, see O'Grady v. Wilmot, 1916, 2 A. C. 231 and Law of Property Act, 1925, ss. 16 to 18, and ESTATE DUTY.

Accountable Receipt, a written acknowledgment of the receipt of money or goods to be accounted for by the receiver. It differs from an ordinary receipt, or acquittance, in this, that the latter imports merely that money has been paid. See Clark v. Newsam, (1847) 1 Ex. 131. By the Forgery Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 27), ss. 2 (2) and 18, the forgery of an accountable receipt, or any assignment thereof or endorsement thereon with intent to defraud, is a felony punishable with penal servitude for not exceeding 14 years.

Accountant or Accountant, one whose business it is to compute, adjust, and range in due order accounts; also to audit accounts. The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales was incorporated by Royal Charter, May 11th, 1880. No person is entitled to describe himself as a chartered accountant unless he is a member of an Institute of Accountants incorporated in the United Kingdom by Royal Charter: see Society of Accountants in Edinburgh v. Corporation of Accountants Ltd., (1893) 20 R. 750; Society of Accountants and Auditors v. Goodway, 1907, 1 Ch. 489.

Accountant in Bankruptcy, an officer who had the management of the proceeds of bankrupts' estates. The repealed Bankruptcy Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 134), s. 12, provided that upon the first vacancy the office should be abolished, and its duties discharged by the Chief Registrar. The funds in the Bank of England standing in his name were transferred (upon certain conditions) to the National Debt Commissioners, by 32 & 33 Vict. c. 91. See BANKRUPTCY.

Accountant-General, or Accountant-General, an officer of the Court of Chancery, appointed by Act of Parliament to receive all money lodged in Court, and to place the same in the Bank of England for security. (12 Geo. 1, c. 32; 1 Geo. 4, c. 35; 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, ss. 18-22 and 39.) The office was abolished by the Chancery Funds Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 44), and the duties transferred to the Paymaster-General. See Sup. Court of Judicature (Funds) Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 29). The office of Accountant-General was revived by the Judicature Act, 1925, Part VI., ss. 133 to 149, repealing and replacing the Act of 1883.

Accountant to the Crown. One who has received money for the Crown and for which he must account. The Crown's lien upon the lands of the accountant has been abolished by statute, but a lien remains upon the accountant's goods. See tit. CROWN DEBTS.

Accounts, Falsification of, a misdemeanour on the part of a clerk, etc., by the Falsification of Accounts Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 24), punishable by penal servitude up to seven years or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, up to two years. See R. v. Oliphant, 1905, 2 K. B. 67. The document or account mentioned in s. 1 of that Act must belong to or be in possession of the employer (R. v. Palin, 1906, 1 K. B. 7). Falsification of accounts may amount to forgery within the Forgery Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 27) (Re Arton, 1896, 1 Q. B. 509). The falsification of a mechanical means of recording an account, e.g., a taxi-meter, and thereby defrauding the employer, is within the Act (R. v. Solomons, 1909, 2 K. B. 980). As to officers of companies and bodies corporate keeping fraudulent accounts, etc., see Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), ss. 82-84, and Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 20; in the case of a company being wound up, Companies Act, 1929, ss. 271 and 272.

Accouple, to marry.

Accredit, to countenance or procure honour or credit to any person.—Johns. To accredit a diplomatic agent is to furnish him with such authority and credentials as are calculated to ensure his being received with the credit and rank due to his public character.

Accredulitate, to purge an offence by an oath.—Blount.

Accrescendi, Jus. See JUS ACCRESCENDI.

Accretion [fr. accresco, or adresco, Lat.], the act of growing to a thing; usually applied to the gradual and imperceptible accumulation of land out of the sea or a river. Accretion of land is of two kinds: by alluvion, i.e., by the washing up of sand or soil, so as to form firm ground; or by dereliction, as when the sea shrinks below the usual water mark. If this accretion of land be by small and imperceptible degrees, it belongs to the owner of the land immediately adjacent to it, but if it be sudden and considerable it belongs to the Crown.—Hale, De Jure Maris, 14; 2 Bl. Com. ch. xvi; A. G. of Southern Nigeria v. John Holt & Co., 1915, A. C. p. 613. Consult Coulson & Forbes on the Law of Waters. See ACCESSION.

Accroaching Royal Power, or attempting to exercise royal power, was in the 21 Edw. 3 held to be treason. 4 Br. & Had. Com. 83.

Accroche [fr. accrocher, Fr.,] to hook or grapple unto, to encroach. The French use it for delay, as accrocher un procès, to stay proceedings in a suit.—Cowel.

Accrue [fr. accroître, accru, Fr. ; fr. crescere, Lat., to grow], to grow to, or to arise.

Accumulation, a gathering together, heaping up, or amassing. The dominion over property, and its rents, issues, and profits, is restrained by our law as regards perpetuity and accumulation. See PERPETUITY.

The prospective accumulation of income of real or personal estate is restrained by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 164, replacing with amendments the Accumulations Act, 1800 (39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 98), commonly called 'The Thellusson Act,' because the case of Thellusson v. Woodford (4 Ves. 227-343, 1798 ; and 11 Ves. 112-151, 1805) was the occasion of its enactment. The Act of 1925 declares that no person shall by any instrument or otherwise settle or dispose of any property, in such manner that the income thereof shall be accumulated for any longer term than—

(1) The life of the grantor or settlor ;
(2) 21 years from the death of the grantor or settlor, or testator ;

(3) During the minority of any person who shall be living or en ventre sa mère at the time of the death of the grantor, settlor or testator ;

(4) During the minority of any person who, under the limitations of the instrument, directing such accumulations, would, for the time being, if of full age, be entitled to the income directed to be accumulated. See Re Cattell, 1914, 1 Ch. 177.

In every case where any accumulation is directed otherwise than as aforesaid, the direction shall (save as hereinafter mentioned) be void ; and the income of the property directed to be accumulated, will, so long as the same is directed to be accumulated contrary to that section (164), go to the person or persons who would have been entitled thereto if such accumulation had not been directed (s. 1).

The section (164), however, does not extend to any provision—

(1) For payment of the debts of the grantor, or other persons. See Re Heathcote, 1904, 1 Ch. 826 ; or

(2) for raising portions for any child or remoter issue of the grantor, settlor or testator, or any child or remoter issue of any person taking any interest under the settlement or other disposition or to whom any interest is thereby limited ; or

(3) respecting the produce of timber or wood.

The statute operates as a restraint upon those trusts for accumulation which aim at a duration beyond the statutory limits, simply by causing them to cease and become of no effect immediately upon the appropriate statutory period becoming exceeded, and until that date leaves them as valid as if the Act had not passed.

The period of any minority during which income is accumulated under compulsion of law is not to be taken into account in computing the permissible period. See s. 165, L. P. Act, 1925.

Section 166 of the L. P. Act, 1925, replacing the Accumulations Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 58), restricts accumulations for the purpose of purchase of land only to the period during minority. Only settlements and dispositions made after 27th June, 1892, are affected, and see Re Llanover, 1903, 2 Ch. 330, but the special restrictions of this section do not apply if the money is capital money under the Settled Land Act, 1925.

Accumulative Judgment, Sentence. If a person already under sentence for a crime be convicted of another offence, the Court is empowered to pass a second sentence, to commence after the expiration of the first.

Accusation, the formal charging of any person with a crime.

Accused. Person charged with crime, commonly called 'the prisoner' if the crime be felony, and 'the defendant' if it be a misdemeanour.

Accused, Statement of. Where an accused person is brought before justices of the peace, the Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 86), s. 12, directs the justices, after the close of the evidence for the prosecution, to ask him whether he wishes to say anything in answer to the charge, telling him that he is not obliged to say anything unless he desires to do so, but that whatever he says will be taken down in writing, and may be given in evidence upon his trial. The justices, before the accused person makes any statement, must make him clearly understand that he has nothing to hope from any promise of favour, and nothing to fear from any threat which may have been held out to him to induce him to make any confession, but that whatever he says may be given in evidence upon his trial, notwithstanding such promise or threat. Whatever the accused states in answer to the charge shall be taken down in the mannner shown in the forms prescribed by the rules made under the Act; and shall be read over to the accused and signed by the magistrates, and by the accused if he desires it.

See further ADMISSION; CONFESSION.

Accustomed Rent. Where there was a power of leasing under a settlement it was formerly usual to stipulate that the accustomed rent should be reserved. The term is now seldom used, but see STANDARD RENT.

Acemannes-ceaster, Bath.

Acephall, the levellers in the reign of Henry I., who acknowledged no head or superior.—Leges H. 1; Cowel. Also certain ancient heretics, who appeared about the beginning of the sixth century, and asserted that there was but one substance in Christ, and one nature.—Gibbon's Dec. and Fall, ch. xlvii.

Ac etiam [and also]. The introduction to the statement of the real cause of action in cases where it was necessary to allege a fictitious cause in order to give the Court jurisdiction.—Bowyer's Law Dict. The ac etiam clause appears to have been invented in consequence of the enactment of 13 Car. 2, St. 2, c. 2, that the particular cause of action must be expressed in the writ where more than 40l. was claimed.—Davison v. Frost, (1802) 2 East, 305. See also LATITAT and BILL OF MIDDLESEX.

Achat [Fr.], a purchase or bargain.—Cowel.

Achators, or Achetors, purveyors, because they frequently bargain; also purchasers.—Chaucer.

Achelanda, Auchelandia, Auklandia, Auckland, in the Bishopric of Durham.

Acherset, a measure of corn, conjectured to have been the same with our quarter or eight bushels.—Cowel.

Achwre [Ach-gwre, near belt], an enclosure of wattles or thorns surrounding a building, at such a distance as to prevent cattle reaching and damaging the thatch.—Anc. Inst. Wales.

Acknowledgment-money, a sum formerly paid in some parts of England by copyhold tenants on the death of their lords, as a recognition of their new lords, in like manner as money is usually paid on the attornment of tenants. See COPYHOLDS.

Acknowledgment of Debt or Liability, is an admission that a debt is due or that some claim or liability is still in existence, so as to prevent the operation of the Statute of Limitations. The precise form of acknowledgment necessary in any particular case depends on the terms of the relevant statute. An acknowledgment or part payment after the statutory period will not revive a barred claim to land under s. 34 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27), Kibble v. Fairthorne, 1895, 1 Ch. 219, but an acknowledgment at any time before action brought will revive actions, on debt grounded on simple contract, if in writing under 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, and for money charged on land under s. 40 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833: see re Chyden, Annaly v. Agar Ellis, 1900, 1 Ch. 774. See LIMITATIONS, STATUTE OF.

Acknowledgment of a Wife's Assurance If, before 1st January, 1925 (see L. P. Act, 1925, s. 167), a woman married before 1883 disposed of her estate or interest in lands or her reversionary interest in personal property she was required, unless her title thereto had accrued since 1882, or unless she was entitled thereto for her separate use to comply with the formalities prescribed by the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74), ss. 77-91, with regard to land, and by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 57, commonly called 'Malins's Act,' which incorporated the procedure of the Fines and Recoveries Act, with regard to reversionary interests in personal estate.

The Fines and Recoveries Act required the acknowledgment to be made before two commissioners, but the 7th section of the Conveyancing Act, 1882, substituted one only, and also dispensed with the affidavit and certificate of acknowledgment required by the former Act; see also the rules made under this section. Now, in the case of deeds executed and orders made after 1st January, 1925, these formalities are no longer necessary, as the L. P. Act, 1925, s. 167, has abolished the necessity for any acknowledgments by and the separate examination of married women. Further, if the Court is satisfied that the wife is entitled for her separate use to the property to be dealt with, the Court may dispense with any concurrence by the husband which would otherwise be required and declare that the disposition shall have the same effect as if the husband had concurred therein, without acknowledgment by the wife. Previously to 1925, by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, no married woman need acknowledge a deed conveying property accrued to her after 1882; and no woman married since the Act need acknowledge any deed at all. There was formerly an exception in the case of property vested in a married woman as a trustee, but this was removed by the Married Women's Property Act, 1907, replaced and extended by s. 170, sub-s. 2 of the L. P. Act, 1925, in regard to all women married after 1882, or to any woman married before 1883 who became a trustee or personal representative after 1882. As to the Court's power to bind by order or judgment for her benefit and with her consent, the interest of a married woman in property in respect of which she is restrained from anticipation or alienation or is by law unable to dispose of or bind, including reversionary interests under her settlement, see L. P. Act, 1925, s. 169, replacing and extending the Conveyancing Act, 1911, s. 7. See also MARRIED WOMAN; LAW REFORM.

Aclea [fr. ac, an oak, and leag, place, Sax.], a field where oaks grow.

Acquest or Acquet [Fr.], goods acquired by purchase or donation, not by heritage.—Encyc. Londin.

Acquiescence, consent, either express or implied.

Acquietandis Plegis, an obsolete writ, lying for a surety against the creditor who refuses to acquit him after the debt is satisfied.

Acquietantia de shiris et hundredis, freedom from suits and services in shires and hundreds.—Cowel.

Acquietare [fr. quietum reddere, Lat.], to acquit, absolve. Also sometimes signifies 'to pay'.—Cowel's Law Dict.

Acquisition, the act of procuring property.

Acquittal [fr. acquitter, Fr.; quietus, Lat., to free, acquit, or discharge], a deliverance and setting free of a person from the suspicion or guilt of an offence; also to be free from entries and molestations by a superior lord, for services issuing out of lands.—Cowel. Acquittal is of two kinds—(1) Acquittal in deed, as when a person is cleared by verdict; and (2) Acquittal in law, as if two be indicted for a felony, the one as principal and the other as accessory, and the jury acquit the principal, by law the accessory is also acquitted.—2 Inst. 384.

If a person is acquitted and ordered to be discharged it is illegal any longer to detain him, and the duty of seeing that he is at once discharged is upon the governor of the prison, and he will be liable for any illegal act of the prison warders though done without his knowledge (Mee v. Cruikshank, (1902) 20 Cox, 210).

Acquittal Contracts, a discharge from an obligation, which is either by deed, prescription, or tenure.—Co. Litt. 100 a.

Acquittance is a discharge in writing of a sum of money or duty which ought to be paid or done; as where a man is bound to pay money on a bond, rent reserved upon a lease, etc., and the party to whom it is due, on receipt thereof, gives a writing under his hand witnessing that he is paid, this will be such a discharge in Law that he cannot demand and recover the sum or duty again, if the acquittance be produced.—Termes de la Ley. As to forgery of an acquittance, see Forgery Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 27), s. 2 (2) (a), s. 18 (1).

Acre [fr. aypos, Gr.; ager, Lat.; acker, Germ.], a measure of land. The extent of the acre was first defined by statute in the 33 Edw. I., according to which an acre contains 160 square perches, the then perch being 5½ yards. See Blount's Law Dict. The imperial or standard English acre contains 4 roods, each rood 40 poles or perches, each pole 272¼ square feet, and consequently each acre = 43,560 square feet or 4,840 square yards. See Weights and Measures Act, 1878. The French acre, arpent, contains 1¼ English acres, or 54,450 square English feet. The Welsh acre contains commonly 2 English acres. The Irish acre is equal to 7,840 square yards; the Scots to 6,150½ square yards.

Act in Pais [Pais, Law Fr., country], a thing done out of Court, and not a matter of record.—2 Bl. Com. 294.

Act of Attainder. See BILL OF ATTAINDER.

Act of Bankruptcy, an act, the commission of which by a debtor renders him liable to be adjudged a bankrupt if the petition is presented within three months thereafter.

Under s. 1 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59), any one of the following acts of a debtor is an act of bankruptcy:—

(a) Having made an assignment of his property in trust for his creditors generally.

(b) Having made a fraudulent conveyance, gift, delivery, or transfer of his property, or of any part thereof.

(c) Having made a conveyance amounting to a 'fraudulent preference.'

(d) Having, with intent to defeat or delay his creditors, departed out of England, or being out of England, remained out of England; or having absented himself; or begun to keep house.

(e) If execution against him has been levied by seizure of his goods under process in any Court or in any civil proceeding in the High Court, and the goods have been either sold or held by the sheriff for 21 days.

Provided that where an interpleader summons has been taken out in regard to the goods seized, the time elapsing between the date at which such summons is taken out and the date at which the sheriff is ordered to withdraw, or any interpleader issue ordered thereon is finally disposed of, shall not be taken into account in calculating such period of 21 days.

(f) Having filed, in the Bankruptcy Court, a declaration admitting his inability to pay his debts or having presented a bankruptcy petition against himself.

(g) Having neglected to pay or secure a judgment debt after service of a 'bankruptcy notice,' or satisfied the Court that he has a good cross claim. See BANKRUPTCY NOTICE.

(h) If the debtor gives notice to any of his creditors that he has suspended or is about to suspend payment of his debts.

A bankruptcy commences at the actual time of day on which an act of bankruptcy is committed (Re Bumpus, 1908, 2 K. B. 330).

See BANKRUPT; DEBTOR'S SUMMONS; Williams on Bankruptcy.

Act of Curatorship, the order by which a curator, or guardian, is appointed by the Court.—Scots Law.

Act of God, a direct, violent, sudden, and irresistible act of nature, which could not, by any reasonable care, have been foreseen or resisted; see Nugent v. Smith, (1876) 1 C. P. D. 423. The general rule is that where the law creates a duty and the party is disabled from performing it, without any default of his own, by the act of God or the King's enemies, the law will excuse him; but when a party by his own contract creates a duty he is bound to make it good, notwithstanding any accident by inevitable necessity (Nichols v. Marsland, (1876) 2 Ex. D. p. 4). See also Common Carrier, tit. CARRIER.

Act of Grace. The Act so termed in Scotland was passed in 1696; it provides for the maintenance of debtors imprisoned by their creditors. It is usually applied in England to general pardons granted at the beginning of a new reign, or on other great occasions.

Act of Indemnity. See INDEMNITY.

Act of Oblivion, 12 Car. 2, c. 11, a general indemnity and legal oblivion of all that had been done amiss in the late interruption of government, but with an exception in the case of certain specified persons; see Hall. Const. History.

Act of Parliament, a law made by the sovereign, with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and the Commons, in Parliament assembled (1 Bl. Com. 85); but, in the case of an Act passed under the provisions of the Parliament Act, 1911, a law made by the sovereign 'by and with the advice and consent of the Commons in this present Parliament assembled in accordance with the provisions of the Parliament Act, 1911, and by authority of the same'; also called a 'statute.'

The Parliament Act, 1911, made a fundamental alteration in the powers previously possessed by the House of Lords in relation to the passing of Acts of Parliament. Its provisions are briefly as follows:—(1) If a money bill sent up by the House of Commons is not passed by the House of Lords within a month without amendment, it becomes an Act of Parliament on receiving the Royal assent without the House of Lords having consented to it. (2) If a bill, other than a money bill or a bill containing any provision to extend the duration of Parliament beyond five years, is passed by the Commons in three successive sessions (whether of the same Parliament or not) and is rejected on each occasion by the Lords, it becomes an Act on receiving the Royal assent without the Lords having consented to it; but two years must have elapsed between the date of the second reading in the first of these sessions of the bill in the Commons and the date on which it passes the Commons in the third of those sessions; and provision is also made for the introduction of amendments in the second and third sessions. (3) Five years are substituted for seven (fixed by the Septennial Act) as the duration of Parliament. Every money bill must be endorsed with a certificate signed by the Speaker of the House of Commons that it is a money bill. As to the statutory effect given to resolutions varying or renewing taxation, see Provisional Collection of Taxes Act, 1913 (3 Geo. 5, c. 3), and Finance Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 28), s. 12.

The Royal assent to a bill is given either by the sovereign personally or by commission. Consent by commission is limited to those bills set out in the schedule to the commission. The words of Royal assent are, 'Le Roy le veult,' or in the case of a money bill, 'Le Roy remercie ses bons sujets, accepte leur b n volence et ainsi le veult.'

Acts of Parliament are either (1) public;

(2) local or special ; or (3) private or personal. Public Acts are those which affect the whole realm or important parts of it. Local Acts, which are very numerous, and since 1798 have been printed in separate volumes from those which contain the public Acts, concern particular localities, as railway or gas and water Acts. Private Acts concern individuals and families only, as Acts naturalizing a party, dissolving a marriage, or settling particular estates. There is a further class of Acts which contain clauses frequently required in local Acts. The provisions of such general Acts are incorporated in private Acts by reference, e.g., Railways Clauses Act, 1863.

The principal rules for the interpretation of Acts of Parliament are the following :—

(1) a statute begins to operate from the time when it receives the Royal assent, unless otherwise provided (Acts of Parliament (Commencement) Act, 1793 (33 Geo. 3, c. 13)). Before this Act, all statutes related back to the first day of the sessions in which they were passed. But where an Act expires before a bill continuing it has received the Royal assent, the latter Act takes effect from the expiration of the former, unless otherwise provided, and except as to any penalty : Acts of Parliament (Expiration) Act, 1808 (48 Geo. 3, c. 106). (2) A statute is to be construed according to the intent and object with which it was made, and not according to the mere letter ; (3) these points must be considered—the old law, the mischief, and the remedy ; (4) remedial statutes are to be more liberally, and penal more strictly, construed ; (5) in construing a statute, all other statutes made in pari materia ought to be taken into consideration ; (6) a statute which treats of things and persons of an inferior rank cannot by any general words be extended to those of a superior ; (7) where the provision of a statute is general, everything which is necessary to make such provision effectual is supplied by the Common Law ; (8) a subsequent statute may repeal a prior one, not only expressly, but by implication, as when it is contrary thereto, i.e., so clearly repugnant that it necessarily implies a negative, but if the Acts can stand together, they shall have a concurrent efficacy ; (9) Acts of Parliament cannot derogate from the power of subsequent Parliaments ; (10) the King is not bound by any Act of Parliament unless he be named therein by special and particular words ; and see INCORPORATION BY REFERENCE.

As to the important ' Interpretation Act, 1889,' see that title.

Statutes are variously cited ; many of the old statutes are called after the name of the place where the Parliament which passed them was held, as the Statute of Merton, of Marlebridge, or Westminster ; others entirely from their subject, as the Statute of Distribution (22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 10), or the Fines and Recoveries Act (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74) ; others from their initial words, as the statute Quia emptores or De donis (see those titles) ; others from the Member of Parliament who introduced them, as Lord Campbell's Act (6 & 7 Vict. c. 96) ; Jervis's Act (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43) ; and some few, as the Statute of Elizabeth, which founded the Poor Law (43 Eliz. c. 2), and the Statute of James, which founded the law of limitation of time for suing (21 Jac. 1, c. 16) from the name of the sovereign in whose reign they were passed. After the time of Edward II. they were for a long time generally cited by their full titles, by naming the years of the sovereign's reign during which the session of Parliament was held in which the statute was passed, together with the chapter or particular Act, according to its numerical order, e.g., 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74, the chapter, if the Act be a local or personal one, being printed in Roman figures, e.g., 20 & 21 Vict. c. xciv.

In 1845 ' short titles ' began to be introduced, by enacting (see 8 & 9 Vict. c. 16, s. 4) that 8 & 9 Vict. c. 16 might be cited in other Acts of Parliament and in legal instruments, as the ' Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845,' and similarly 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, as the ' Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845,' and 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, as the ' Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845.' This useful nomenclature was more and more frequently adopted, and is now almost universal, two ' Short Titles Acts,' passed in 1892 and 1896 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 10), and (59 & 60 Vict. c. 14) (the latter repealing, and, with additions, re-enacting the former), having supplied more than 2,000 short titles.

All the Acts of a session together make properly but one statute, and therefore, when two sessions have been held in one year, stat. or sess. 1 or 2 is spoken of. Thus the Bill of Rights is cited as 1 W. & M. sess. 2, c. 2 ; and the Riot Act as 1 Geo. 1, st. 2, c. 5.

Of late years many steps have been taken by the Government with a view to classifying and consolidating the Statute Law, and various Statute Law Revision Acts (see that title) have been passed, by which a vast number of obsolete and unnecessary Acts and portions of Acts have been repealed; but the inconvenience of 'incorporation by reference,' that is, of incorporating in a later Act the provisions of an earlier one by mere reference to the earlier one—a practice of very long standing—has been much felt. See Practical Legislation, by Lord Thring, late Parliamentary Counsel, p. 48.

A statute is passed annually continuing various temporary Acts, some of them of great importance. See EXPIRING LAWS CONTINUANCE ACTS. For an invaluable collection of selected Acts, arranged in alphabetical and chronological order, see Chitty's Statutes of Practical Utility, annually continued.

Act of Settlement, 12 & 13 Wm. 3, c. 2 (1700), limiting the Crown, after the death of William III. and Princess (afterwards Queen) Anne, to the Princess Sophia of Hanover, and to the heirs of her body being Protestants. The Act further provided (inter alia) that (i.) the sovereign shall join in the communion with the Church of England as by law established. (ii.) No pardon under the Great Seal of England be pleadable to an impeachment. Ministers were thus prevented from escaping responsibility because the King had pardoned them. (iii.) Judges should hold office quandiu se bene gesserint (during good behaviour), i.e., not at the King's pleasure, and should be removable upon the address of both Houses of Parliament. Substantially re-enacted by s. 5 of the Judicature Act, 1875 (now repealed), which specifically excepted the Lord Chancellor.

Act of State. The act of the sovereign power of a country or its agent (if acting intra vires). By its very nature such an act cannot be questioned by any Court of Law.

Act of Uniformity, 14 Car. 2, c. 4 (1662), which enacts that the Prayer Book, scheduled thereto, shall be used in churches, and applies as to such Book the penalties of the earlier Acts of Uniformity, 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 1 (1548), 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 1 (1551), and 1 Eliz. c. 2 (1558). See UNIFORMITY.

Act of Union. The term usually applied to the Union with Scotland Act, 1706 (5 Anne, c. 8); when applied to Wales, refers to 27 Hen. 8, c. 26 (1536), by which Wales was made subject to English law. The Statutum Wallie of 1284 made Wales feudally subject to the King of England, but left the Welsh law unaltered. The Union with Ireland Act, 1800 (39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 67), is often so called. See Irish Free State (Agreement) Act, 1922.

Actio ad exhibendum, an action for the purpose of compelling a defendant to exhibit a thing or title in his power. It was preparatory to another action, which was always a real action in the sense of the Roman Law, that is for the recovery of a thing, whether it was movable or immovable.—Civil Law.

Actio bonæ fidei is an action available in Civil Law to a party in a negotium bonæ fidei. All actions instituted by the prætorian Law were actiones bonæ fidei. The obligations produced by a negotium bonæ fidei are not precisely determined, therefore the intentio of an actio bonæ fidei is incerta quidquid N<sup>us</sup> N<sup>us</sup> A<sup>o</sup> A<sup>o</sup> dare facere oportet ex bona fide. Accordingly the judge was allowed to take consideration of equity into account and he was acting as an arbiter rather than as a juder. See CONDUCTIO.—Sand. Just.

Actio commodati contraria, an action by a borrower against a lender, to enforce the execution of a contract.—Civil Law.

Actio commodati directa, an action by the lender against the borrower in order to enforce the recovery of the object lent to the defendant and the fulfilment of all other liabilities undergone by the borrower ex bona fide.—Civil Law.

Actio conductio indebiti, an action for the recovery of a sum of money or other thing paid by mistake.—Civil Law.

Actio conducti, an action resulting from a contract called locatio conductio which enables the conductor to enforce the duties of the locator. There are three forms of locatio conductio and accordingly the object of the actio conducti varies: (1) locatio conductio rei (locator agrees, in consideration of money payment, to let conductor have the use, or the use and fruits, of a thing); (2) locatio conductio operarum (locator agrees, in consideration of a money payment, to supply conductor with a certain amount of labour); (3) locatio conductio operis (conductor agrees, in consideration of a money payment, to supply locator with a certain result of labour).—Civil Law. See also ACTIO LOCATI.

Actio ex conducto, an action by a bailor of a thing for hire, against a bailee, to compel him to deliver the thing hired.—Civil Law.

Actio contra defunctum cæpta continetur in hæredes. (An action begun against a person who dies is continued against his heirs.) This rule did not apply to actions strictly personal. See Lansdowne v. Lansdowne, (1815) 1 Mad. 116; and see ACTIO PERSONALIS.

Actio contraria. See ACTIO DIRECTA AND CONTRARIA.

Actio depositi contraria, an action which a depositary has against a depositor, to compel him to fulfil his engagement towards him.—Civil Law.

Actio depositi directa, an action by a depositor against a depositary, in order to get back the thing deposited.—Civil Law.

Actio directa and contraria. Contracts and obligations in the Roman Law gave rise to two actions: the actio directa for enforcing implement of the essential obligation, and the actio contraria for enforcing the counter-obligation.

Actio iudicati, an action after four months had elapsed from the rendition of judgment, in which the judge issued his warrant to seize, first, the movables, which were sold within eight days afterwards, and then the immovables, which were delivered in pledge to the creditor, or put under the care of a curator, and, if at the end of two months the debt was not paid, the land was sold.—Civil Law.

Actio locati, an action resulting from a contract called locatio conductio, which enables the locator to enforce the duties of the conductor.—Civil Law. See ACTIO CONDUCTI.

Actio non accrevit infra sex annos, the name of the plea of the Statute of Limitations when the defendant alleges that the plaintiff's action has not accrued within six years.—See LIMITATIONS, STATUTE OF.

Actio personalis moritur cum personâ. A personal action dies with the person, i.e., the right to sue is gone. 'As if battery be done to a man, if he who did the battery or the other die, the action is gone' (Noy, 9th ed., p. 20). This maxim now states the general rule that actions of tort are destroyed by death of either the injured or the injuring party. Besides the statutory exceptions mentioned below, an action may be brought by the personal representatives of a deceased person for injury done to his property in his lifetime. It has also been applied to actions arising out of contracts of a purely personal nature, e.g., promise to marry (Finley v. Chirney, (1880) 20 Q. B. D. 494), or to write a book or paint a picture.—See Leake on Contracts; Broom's Max.; Twycross v. Grant, (1877) 4 C. P. D. 40; Phillips v. Homfray, (1883) 24 Ch. D. 439; and Jones v. Simes, (1890) 43 Ch. D. 607 as to injunction.

This rule of the Common Law has been encroached upon by various statutes; by 4 Edw. 3, c. 7, as to trespass to goods (no limit of time by that statute), and the Civil Procedure Act, 1833, s. 2, as to trespass to land within 6 months before death (action to be within one year after death), and by the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (Lord Campbell's Act) (q.v. sub-tit. CAMPBELL'S (LORD) ACT), as to negligence causing death (action to be brought within 12 months after death); and the maxim does not apply in cases under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (United Collieries, Ltd. v. Simpson, 1909, A. C. 383). See DEPENDANT.

A further restriction upon the doctrine has been effected by the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 41), which amends the law as to the effect of death in relation to causes of action and as to the awarding of interest in civil proceedings. Subject to the provisions of s. 1 of the Act, on the death of any person after the commencement of the Act all causes of action subsisting against or vested in him shall survive against or for the benefit of his estate. By s. 1 (2) the damages are limited in certain cases by s. 1 (3); the action must either be pending at the date of death or commenced not earlier than six months before or not later than six months after grant of probate of letters of administration. This provision does not apply to causes of action for defamation of character or seduction or for inducing one spouse to leave or remain apart from the other or to claims for damages on the ground of adultery; and see LAW REFORM.

Actio pro socio, an action by which either partner could compel his co-partners to perform their social contract.—Civil Law.

Actio quanti minoris, an action in which the purchaser of an object claimed an abatement of the price proportionate to the reduction in value caused by a defect. This action was barred within one year from the conclusion of the contract.—Civil Law.

Actio redhibitoria, an action instituted to avoid a sale within six months from the conclusion of the contract on account of some vice or defect in the thing sold, which renders it either absolutely useless, or its use so inconvenient and imperfect, that it must be supposed the buyer would not have purchased it had he known of the vice.—Civil Law.

Action, conduct, something done; also the form prescribed by Law for the recovery of one's due, or the lawful demand of one's right. Bracton (Bk. 3, cap. 1) defines it:—Actio nihil aliud est quam jus prosequendi in judicio quod alicui debetur.—(An action is nothing else than the right of suing in a court of justice for that which is due to some one.) Actions are divided into criminal and civil: criminal actions are more properly called prosecutions, and perhaps actions penal, to recover some penalty under statute, are properly criminal actions. There were formerly three classes of actions in England: personal actions, in which the plaintiff sought to recover a debt or damages from the defendant; real actions, in which he sought to establish his title to land or other hereditaments; mixed actions, in which he sought only to establish his right to possession of land. All forms of action are now abolished, but there still inevitably remains the distinction between actions in personam brought against an individual, actions in rem, which determine questions of title, and possessory actions, which decide merely the right to have physical control of the property in dispute (Odgers on the Common Law, p. 1254). For old forms of actions, see under their respective titles—e.g., COVENANT; ASSUMPSIT; TRESPASS; CASE; TROVER; DETINUE; REPLEVIN; EJECTMENT. See also VENUE.

The term 'action' is now applied to all proceedings in the Supreme Court which would have been commenced by writ in the Superior Courts of Common Law, the Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster, and the Court of Pleas at Durham; and all suits formerly commenced by bill or information in the Court of Chancery or by a cause in the Court of Admiralty, or in the Court of Probate (Jud. Act, 1925, s. 225, and R. S. C. 1883, Ord. I., r. 1).

Also stock or shares in a company or corporation.—Fr. Comm. Law.

Action of a Writ, a phrase used when a defendant pleads some matter by which he shows that the plaintiff had no cause to have the writ which he brought, although it may be that he is entitled to another writ or action for the same matter.—Termes de la Ley.

Action of abstracted Miltures, an action for miltures or tolls against those who are thirled to a mill, i.e., bound to grind their corn at a certain mill, and fail to do so.

Action of Adherence, an action competent to a husband or wife, to compel either party to adhere in case of desertion; unknown in practice except where combined with an action for aliment.—Scots Law.

It is analogous to the English suit for restitution of conjugal rights.

Action on the Case. See CASE.

Action possessory, a class of real actions where the plaintiff had been seised of the land claimed, e.g. novel disseisin as opposed to action ancestral, where the claim was founded on descent from a person who had been seised, such as Mort d'Ancestor. Actions ancestral were ancestral droirual, and ancestral possessory.—Co. Inst., Part 2, 241.

Action prejudicial, otherwise called preparatory or principal, an action arising from some preliminary doubt, as in case a man sue his younger brother for lands descended from the father, and it is objected against him that he is bastard, this point of bastardy must be tried before the cause can proceed. It is, therefore, termed prejudicialis.

Actionare [i.e., in jus vocare, Lat.], to prosecute a person in a cause at law.

Actionary [fr. actionnaire], a foreign commercial term for the proprietor of an action or share of a public company's stock, a stockholder.

Actio non. A plea in bar under the old system of pleading had a formal 'commencement'—that the said plaintiff ought not to have or maintain his aforesaid action against him, the defendant, because etc.' This commencement was called actio non.—Steph. Plead.

Abolished by the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), s. 66.

Actiones nominatæ, writs for which there were precedents. The Statute of Westminster 2, c. 24, gave Chancery authority to form new writs in consimili casu. Hence the action on the case.—Bac. Ab. 'Court of Chancery,' a. See CASE.

Actions ordinary, all actions not rescissory.

Actions rescissory are either (1) actions of proper improbation for declaring a writing false or forged; (2) actions of reduction—improbation, for the production of a writing in order to have it set aside or its effect ascertained under the certification that the writing if not produced shall be declared false or forged; or (3) actions of simple reduction, for declaring a writing called for null until produced.—Scots Law.

Actitation, a debating of law suits.

Active Debt, a debt whereon interest is paid.

Active Service. 'On active service,' as applied to a person subject to military law, is defined by the Army Act (44 & 45 Vict. c. 58) as meaning 'whenever he is attached to or forms part of a force which is engaged in operations against the enemy or is engaged in military operations in a country or place wholly or partly occupied by an enemy or is in military occupation of any foreign country.'

Active Trust, a confidence connected with a duty. See BARE TRUSTEE.

Active Use, formerly a use leaving the legal estate in the feoffee to uses, q.v.

Acto, Acton or Aketon [ex Gallico Hoqueton or Hanqueton, or ex Cambro-Britannico Actum], a military cloak.—DuCange.

Acton-Burnel, the statute enacting that a debtor's property might be sold to pay his debts, 11 Edw. 1, A.D. 1283, so termed from the place where it was made, situated in Shropshire. Repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1863.

Actor, a doer, generally a plaintiff or complainant. In a civil or private action the plaintiff was called by the Romans petitor; in a public action (causa publica) he was called accusator. (Cic. ad. Att. 1. 16.) The defendant was called reus, both in private and public causes; this term, however, according to Cicero (De Orat. ii. 43), might signify either party, as indeed we might conclude from the word itself. In a private action the defendant was often called adversarius, but either party might be called so with respect to the other. Also a proctor or advocate in civil Courts or causes. Actor dominicus, a term often used for the lord's bailiff or attorney. Actor ecclesiæ was sometimes the forensic term for the advocate or pleading patron of a church. Actor villæ was the steward or head bailiff of a town or village.—Cowel.

Actori incumbit onus probandi.—(The burthen of proof lies on the plaintiff.)—Hob. 103. See BURDEN OF PROOF AND EVIDENCE.

Acts of Court, legal memoranda of the nature of pleas, especially in Admiralty Courts. See ADMIRALTY.

Acts of Sederunt, rules of the Court of Session in Scotland. See SEDERUNT, ACTS OF.

Acts of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. The acts of the General Assembly, issued under their legislative powers, are binding on all the members and judicatories of the church. The form of their procedure is regulated by an Act of the church (1697), termed the Barrier Act.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Actual Bodily Harm. 'An assault occasioning actual bodily harm' is an offence within s. 47 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861. On an indictment for an assault occasioning actual bodily harm the accused may be convicted of a common assault (R. v. Oliver, (1860) 30 L. J. M. C. 12).

A husband, who, whilst suffering from venereal disease, had marital intercourse with his wife and thereby infected her, cannot be convicted under this section (R. v. Clarence, (1888) 22 Q. B. D. 23). The expression is also used in the Dangerous Performances Acts, 1879 and 1897. See also BODILY HARM.

Actuarial, a notary.

Actuary, a registrar of a public body. Also a clerk who registers the acts and constitutions of the Lower House of Convocation; or a registrar in a Court Christian. Especially a person skilled in calculating the value of life interests, annuities, and insurances. The Local Government and other Officers' Superannuation Act, 1922 (12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 59), defines actuary as meaning a fellow of the Institute of Actuaries or the Faculty of Actuaries in Scotland. The Institute of Actuaries was formed in 1848 and incorporated by royal charter on July 29, 1884.

Actus, a servitude of footway and horseway.—Civil Law.

Actus curiæ neminem gravabit. Jenk. Cent. 118.—(An act of the Court will hurt no person.) See Broom's Leg. Max., citing Cumber v. Wane, (1719) 1 Str. 126; 1 Smith L. C., in which it was held that if one party to an action die during a curia advisari vult, judgment may be entered nunc pro tunc—a principle recently applied in Ecroyd v. Coulthard, 1897, 2 Ch. 554; 1898, 2 Ch. 358.

Actus Del nemini noceat [or, facit injuriam].—(The act of God does injury to nobody.)—Lofft, 102; see Broom's Leg. Max. And see ACT OF GOD.

Actus non facti reum, nisi mens sit rea. 3 Inst. 307; Co. Litt. 247 b.—(An act does not make a man guilty, unless there be guilty intention.) This is one of the most important rules of criminal law. 'As a general rule of our law, a guilty mind is an essential ingredient of crime, and this rule ought to be borne in mind in construing all penal statutes.'—Broom's Leg. Max. Applied by 9 judges to 5 in Reg. v. Tolson, (1889) 23 Q. B. D. 168, so as to acquit on trial for bigamy a woman reasonably believing her first husband (whom she had lost sight of for less than 7 years) to be dead; see the elaborate judgment of Stephen, J., pp. 184 et seq., who, however, described the maxim as most unfortunate and misleading. An intention to offend against the penal provisions of a statute constitutes mens rea (Bank of New South Wales v. Piper, 1897, A. C. 383).

The trend of modern legislation in regard to the health or security of the public is to attach the offence to the person who possesses, at least hypothetically, some control over the acts constituting the offence and to impose penalties on the breach of the regulation either without inquiring into the knowledge or volition of the accused or leaving the onus on him of proving that he is innocent. See Blaker v. Tillstone, 1894, 1 Q. B. 345, where the defendant was charged with exposing unwholesome meat. In cases under the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, 50 & 51 Vict. c. 28, s. 2, the employer is liable unless he can show that he acted in good faith and has taken all reasonable steps to prevent the offence. See L. Q. R. Vol. 52, January, 1936.

A.D. [Lat.], contraction for Anno Domini (in the year of our Lord).

Adawlut, corrupted from Adalat, justice, equity; a Court of justice. The terms Dewanny Adawlut and Foujdarry Adawlut denote the civil and criminal Courts of Justice in India. See DEWANNY and FOUJDARRY.

Ad colligenda bona, Administrator, a person to whom the Probate Division has made a limited or temporary grant for the purpose of collecting the property of a deceased person. See Whitehead v. Palmer, 1908, 1 K. B. 156.

Adcordabilis denaril, money paid by a vassal to his lord upon the selling or exchanging of a feud.—Encyc. Londin.

Adcredulitare, to purge one's self of an offence by oath. See ACCREDULITARE.

Ad damnum (to the damage). The concluding words of the declaration which state the amount of the plaintiff's damage. See 1 Chil. Pl. 434.

Addecimate, to take tithes.

Addictio, the act of a magistrate, the praetor in Civil Law. The addictio had different purposes: to enfranchise a slave (manumissio vindicta), to adopt a child, or to transfer the ownership of goods. The transfer of ownership by addictio was like the mancipatio an acquisitio civilis. Such an addictio might be pronounced, either when ownership is transferred by way of in jure cessio, or on the ground of a sale by public auction or upon succession, or for the purposes of an assignatio (magistral grant of ager publicus), or it might take the form of an 'ad-judicatio,' the judge deciding a partition suit.

Ad diem, at the day (appointed).

Addition, the title, or occupation, and place of abode of a person besides his names. See

1 Hen. 5, c. 5; Termes de la Ley, and compare the Criminal Procedure Act, 1851, s. 24.

Aditionales, propositions or terms added to a former agreement or contract.

Address, a petition, also a place of business or residence.

Address for Service. See INDORSEMENT OF ADDRESS.

Adeling, Ethling, or Edling [ædelan, Sax.], noble, excellency. A title of honour among the Anglo-Saxons, properly belonging to the king's children.—Spelm. Glos.

Ad ea quæ frequentius accidunt jura adaptantur. Wing. 216; 2 Inst. 137; Broom's Leg. Max.—(The laws are adapted to those cases which more frequently arise).—'A good sound maxim in construing Acts of Parliament' (Dixon v. Caledonian Ry. Co., (1880) 5 App. Cas., at p. 838, per Lord Blackburn).

Ademption [fr. adimo, Lat.], revocation; a taking away of a specific legacy, i.e., if a testator, after having given a legacy of this nature by his will, alienate the subject of it during his life, it is an ademption and the legacy is gone. As to charges on specific legacies of personal estate, see s. 35 of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925. See Theobald on Wills. The term is also used to denote the satisfaction of a legacy to a child by the testator subsequently giving the child a portion on his or her marriage. See SATISFACTION.

Ad feodi firmam. To fee farm.—Fleta, lib. ii. c. 50, s. 30.

Ad flum aquæ. To the thread or centre line of the stream. See AD MEDIUM FILUM AQUÆ.

Ad flum viæ. To the centre of the way or road. See AD MEDIUM FILUM VIÆ.

Ad finem, abbrev. ad fin. [Lat.] (at or near to the end).

Adiation, a term used in Dutch law signifying the entrance upon an inheritance by an heir or executor, without which the succession is not complete; see Van Leeuwen's Roman-Dutch Law, p. 402; B. Freyhaas v. Cramer, (1829) 1 Knapp, 107.

Ad idem (at the same point), said of negotiating parties when they are quite agreed, so that a binding contract has been made between them. So long as any new term is put forward by one party and not accepted by the other, this cannot be.

Ad infinitum (without limit).

Ad inquirendum, a judicial writ commanding inquiry to be made of anything relating to a cause in the Superior Courts. And see AD MELIUS INQUIRENDUM.

Ad interim (in the meantime).

Adiutus, a price or value set upon things stolen or lost as a recompense to the owner.—Cowel's Law Dict.

Adjoining, continuous with, see Mayor, etc., of New Plymouth v. Taranaki Electric Power Board, 1933, A. C. 653, but the word sometimes means near or neighbouring; 'adjacent' is not as precise, and this word generally includes places which are near or neighbouring, ibid.; and see Ecclesiastical Commrs.' Case, 1936, Ch. 430.

Adjoining Owner. An adjoining owner has a common law right to the support necessary to sustain his own land in its natural unincumbered state (Brown v. Robins (1859) 4 H. & N. 186); but only obtains a right to support for buildings by grant, express or implied, or by prescription (20 years); see Angus v. Dalton, (1881) 6 App. Cas. 740.

By the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), upon the sale of superfluous lands (s. 127) adjoining owners have a right of pre-emption (s. 128).

By the London Building Act, 1930 (21 Geo. 5, c. clviii.), s. 5, the expression 'adjoining owner' means the owner or one of the owners, and 'adjoining occupier' means the occupier or one of the occupiers of land, buildings, storeys or rooms adjoining those of the building owner; see Crosby v. Alhambra Co., 1907, 1 Ch. 295. See ACCESS; PARTY-WALLS.

Adjournment [fr. jour, Fr., a day], a putting off to another time or place, a continuation of a meeting from one day to another. An adjourned meeting is in ordinary cases a mere continuation of the original meeting and no fresh notice of it need be given (Scadding v. Lorant, (1851) 3 H. L. C. 418). The adjournment of a trial is in the discretion of the judge. As to adjournment of trial in the High Court, see R. S. C. Ord. XXXVI., r. 34; and as to adjournments in County Courts, see County Courts Act, 1934, s. 36.

As to adjournment by justices on hearing charge of offence punishable on summary jurisdiction, see Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43), s. 16.

Adjournment-day, a further day appointed by the judges at the Nisi Prius sittings to try issues in fact which were not then ready for trial. See NOTICE OF TRIAL.

Adjudication, giving or pronouncing a judgment or decree. In Bankruptcy Law, adjudication is the act of the Court declaring a person to be bankrupt. In Scots Law it signifies the 'diligence' by which land is attached in security and payment of debt, or by which a feudal title is made up in a person holding an obligation to convey without a procuratory of resignation or precept of sasine. There are thus (1) the adjudication for debt; (2) the adjudication in security; and (3) the adjudication in implement.—Bell's Dict.

Adjudication contra hæreditatem jacentem. When a debtor's heir apparent renounces the succession, any creditor may obtain a decree cognitionis causæ, the purpose of which is that the amount of the debt may be ascertained so that the real estate may be adjudged.—Scots term. Consult Encyc. of Scots Law.

Adjudication in debitum fundi. See ACTION FOR POUNDING OF THE GROUND.

Adjudication in Implement. See ADJUDICATION.

Adjudication Stamp, the stamp impressed on or affixed to an instrument after the Commissioners of Inland Revenue have been requested by any person under s. 12 of the Stamp Act, 1891, in a case of doubt, to assess the duty chargeable on any instrument. There is an appeal from this assessment to the High Court.

Adjunctio, the act by which the owner of one thing attaches to or includes in his own property a thing belonging to another. If it cannot be separated again and thereby becomes an extincta res, the property in the whole generally belongs to the person who effected the change. If it can be separated, each owner retains his property.—Civil Law.

Adjuncts, additional judges.

Adjunctum accessorium, an accessory or appurtenance.

Ad jura regis, a writ which was brought by the king's clerk, presented to a living, against those who endeavoured to eject him, to the prejudice of the king's title.—Reg. Brev., 61.

Adjuration, a swearing or binding upon oath.

Adjustment of a loss [fr. adjuster, Fr., to make even], the settling and ascertaining the amount of the indemnity which the assured, after all allowances and deductions made, is entitled to receive under the policy, and fixing the proportion which each underwriter is liable to pay. See York-Antwerp Rules, 1890, Marine Insurance Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 41), and Loundes on Average.

Adamwr [ad-lam-gwr, Cym., one returning], a proprietor, who, for some cause, entered the service of another proprietor without agreement, and left him after the expiration of a year and a day, was liable to the payment of thirty pence to his patron.—Welsh Law.

Ad Lapidem, Stoneham in Hampshire.

Ad largum (at large), used in the following and other expressions: title at large, common at large, assize at large, verdict at large, to vouch at large, etc.

Adlegiare [fr. aleier, Fr.], to purge oneself of a crime by oath.—Du Cange.

Ad longum, at length.

Admanuenses, in ancient law books persons who swore by laying their hands on the book, in contrast to clergymen, whose word was reputed as their oath.—Du Cange.

Admeasurement, Writ of. It lay against persons who usurped more than their share, in the two following cases; admeasurement of dower, where the widow held from the heir more land, etc., as dower than rightly belonged to her; and admeasurement of pasture, which lay where any one having common of pasture surcharged the common.—Termes de la Ley.

Ad medium filum viæ (aquæ) [filum, a thread, Lat.], an imaginary line in the centre of a road or river. The soil of a highway, and the bed of a non-tidal river, are presumed to belong to the owners of the adjacent lands usque ad medium filum viæ, or aquæ; and accordingly where in a conveyance of land it is said to be bounded by a highway or a river, half of the road or half of the bed of the river passes to the grantee, unless a contrary intention is shown; see Micklethwait v. Newlay Bridge Co., (1886) 33 C. D. 133, and City of London Land Tax Commissioners v. Central London Railway, 1913, A. C. 364. The presumption does not apply to a railway that is a boundary (Thompson v. Hickman, 1907, 1 Ch. 550).

Ad melius inquirendum. A writ directed to a coroner commanding him to hold a second inquest. See Reg. v. Carter, (1876) 45 L. J. Q. B. 711, in which the defendant coroner was directed on a second view, by exhumation, of the body, to hold a second inquest (two months after the first), in a case of death by poison, and Coroners Act, 1887, s. 6, sub-s. 1, by which the High Court may direct another inquest where necessary or desirable by reason of fraud, rejection of evidence, irregularity of proceedings, etc., sub-s. (3) dispensing with the necessity, 'unless the Court otherwise order,' of a view of the body. See also Coroners (Amendment) Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 59), s. 19.

Adminicle, aid, help, or support, 1 Edw. 4, c. 1. In Scots Law, it is a term used in the action of proving the tenor of a lost deed, and signifies any deed, or even scroll, tending to establish the existence or terms of the deed in question.—Bell's Dict.

Adminicular Evidence, explanatory or completing testimony.

Administration, the giving or supplying of something. The term is used in three different senses. (1) The granting of letters of administration to an administrator by the Probate Division. (2) The administration of the estate of a deceased person by an executor or administrator, i.e., the payment of his debts and the distribution of his assets among the persons entitled. See ss. 32 et seq., First Sched., Part III., of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, and Re Tong, 1931, 1 Ch. 202. (3) The administration of the estate by the Chancery Division in cases where difficulties have arisen in the course of administration. Orders for administration by the Chancery Division are made on originating summons, and only by the judge in person. See Trist. and Coote, Prob. Pr.; R. S. C. Ord. LV., rr. 3 et seq.; Seton on Judgments. And see ADMINISTRATOR; WIDOW.

The body of ministers appointed by the Crown to carry on the government of the country; now more commonly called 'the Government.'

Administration Bond. The bond, usually for double the value of the property placed in possession of the administrator of the grant required under s. 167 (1) of the Jud. Act, 1925, as amended by the Administration of Justice Act, 1928, Schedule 7, from every person to whom a grant of administration of a deceased person's estate has been made. As a rule, two sureties are also required. The conditions of the Bond are (1) to make and exhibit an inventory; (2) to administer according to law; (3) to exhibit any later will if found, and then deliver up the letters of administration. See Jud. Act, 1925, and Probate Rules, 1925; and see ADMINISTRATOR.

Administration, Oath of, an oath which is required from persons applying for administration showing title or right to the grant and for due administration, see P. R., 1925, 113 (Principal) and 106 (District) Registry. See ADMINISTRATOR.

Administrative Business, the business of managing conducted in private by persons having complete discretion, as distinguished from judicial business, which is conducted in Court under specific rules as to evidence, etc. In the Chancery Division the term is used as meaning that portion of the business of the Court which consists of executing the trusts of deeds and wills and deciding the numerous questions which arise in connection therewith, as distinguished from the 'contentious' business of the Court, which means hostile litigation between parties. Formerly also certain business transacted at Quarter Sessions now transferred to County Councils by s. 3 of the Local Government Act, 1888.

Administrative Counties. The divisions of the counties of York, Lincoln, Sussex, Suffolk, and Northampton, the county of London, the sixty-one 'county boroughs,' and the other counties of England and Wales, except such parts of them as are not included in London or the county boroughs, form separate 'administrative counties' of themselves for the purpose of managing, through county councils, the administrative business (see COUNTY COUNCIL) of their respective areas. Local Government Act, 1933, s. 1.

Administrator, he to whom the property of a person dying intestate, or without executors appointed, accepting, or surviving, is committed by the Probate Court (now the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice). Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 56 (3). By the Court of Probate Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77) (re-enacted in Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 175), 'Administration' includes all letters of administration of the effects of deceased persons, whether with or without the will annexed, and whether granted for general, special, or limited purposes.

Administration is ordinarily granted to some one or more . . . persons interested in the residuary estate of the intestate. Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 162, as amended by Administration of Justice Act, 1928, s. 9. See DISTRIBUTION. If there is a minority, or if a life interest arises under the intestacy, administration must be granted to not less than two persons, or to a trust corporation (with or without another administrator). Judicature Act, 1925, s. 160. The oath to be made by an applicant is so worded as to clear off any person possibly entitled in priority to a Grant and to show the capacity in which the proposed Administration applies.

A Creditor may obtain a Grant of Administration if none of the persons entitled to the estate are willing to apply (Probate Rules, 120).

Where the estate is known or believed to be insolvent, the Public Trustee can obtain a grant subject to certain conditions (Public Trustee Act, 1906, s. 6 (1); see PUBLIC TRUSTEE).

The proposed administrator must give a bond to the Senior Registrar of the Probate Division, conditioned for due collection and administration of the estate (Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 167, as amended by Administration of Justice Act, 1928, Schedule 1). See ADMINISTRATION BOND and Probate Rules.

Until a grant is obtained, the personal estate of a person who dies intestate vests in the President of the Probate Division: Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 9, reproducing and extending to real estate the Statute of Westminster II. (13 Edw. 1), c. 19, and the Court of Probate Act, 1858, s. 19; Whitehead v. Palmer, 1908, 1 K. B. 157.

In certain cases limited administrations are granted, which are as follows :—Administration durante minore aetate, where an infant is entitled to administration, or is made sole executor, the grant is made to the duly appointed guardian of the infant for his use and benefit until he attain the age of 21 years, when it ceases: Administration durante absentia, when the next person entitled to the grant is beyond sea, lest the goods perish or the debts be lost: Administration pendente lite, where a suit is commenced in the Probate Court concerning the validity of a will or the right to administration, until the suit be determined, in order that there may be somebody to take care of the estate: Administration cum testamento annexo, when there is no executor named in the will, or the person named is incapable or refuses to act: Administration de bonis non, arising thus: The office of an administrator is not transmissible like that of an executor; consequently if an administrator dies before he has completely administered, a grant of administration de bonis non administratis, or shortly de bonis non, becomes necessary; and so if an executor dies intestate before he has fully administered, a like grant is required. There is also what is known as an ancillary administration, so called because it is subordinate to the original administration, which is granted for collecting the assets of foreigners; it is taken out in the country where the assets are situated. And there are certain other cases of limited or temporary administrations which do not very often occur ; as to the powers of such limited or temporary administrators, see Whitehead v. Palmer, 1908, 1 K. B. 156.

A County Court Judge may, in certain cases, when the estate does not exceed 200*l.*, make an order for grant of administration. See County Courts Act, 1934, ss. 60-62, and COUNTY COURTS.

The administration in bankruptcy of the estate of a person dying insolvent is provided for by the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 130. See Re Hay, 1915, 2 Ch. 189.

The term 'administrator' also means the person appointed under the Forfeiture Act, 1870, 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, in whom a convict's property vests ; see Re Gaskell, 1906, 2 Ch. 1.

The corresponding term in Scotland is 'executor-dative.'

Admiral [derived through the Fr. amiral, from Amir al Bahir, Arab., commander of the sea or fleet], an officer having high command in the Royal Navy. An admiral has two subordinate commanders under him, a vice-admiral and rear-admiral, distinguished into three classes by the colour of their flags, white, blue, and red. The admiral carries his flag at the main-topmost head, the vice-admiral at the fore-topmast head, and the rear-admiral at the mizzen-topmost head.

Admiralty, the Executive Department of State which presides over the naval forces of the kingdom. The normal head is the 'Lord High Admiral,' but in practice the functions of the Office are discharged by several Commissioners, of whom one is the Chief, and is called the First Lord. He is a member of the Cabinet and is assisted by four Sea Lords, now always selected from Officers of the Service, two Civil Lords and a Secretary.

Admiralty. The Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice was, as far as relates to Admiralty, formerly called the High Court of Admiralty, and was held before the Judge of the Admiralty, who formerly sat as deputy of the Lord High Admiral of England until that office was put into commission, and afterwards as deputy of the Lords Commissioners. As to the jurisdiction of the High Court of Admiralty, see Reg. v. Judge of City of London Court, 1892, 1 Q. B. 273 ; The Zeta, 1893, A. C. 468, Judicature Act, 1925, s. 22, and Administration of Justice Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 49), s. 58.

The Judge now holds his appointment of the Crown as a Judge of the High Court of Justice. The jurisdiction of the Admiralty Division comprises (1) the matters set out in s. 22 of the Judicature Act, 1925 ; (2) the jurisdiction of a Prize Court within the meaning of the Naval Prize Acts, 1864 to 1916, as amended by subsequent Acts, s. 23, ibid.

Proceedings in Admiralty may be in rem or in personam. By the first, the property in relation to which the claim has arisen, or the proceeds thereof, may be made available to meet the claim. As to warrants for arrest in Admiralty actions, the property is arrested on a warrant supported by affidavit (see R. S. C. Ord. V., rr. 38 and 39). Upon arrest, bail may be accepted for the value of the property arrested : see Williams and Bruce, Admiralty Practice. Appeals from the Admiralty Court lie to the Court of Appeal (R. S. C. Ord. LVIII.) and from the same Court sitting as a Prize Court only to the Privy Council : Jud. Act, 1925, s. 27. See DROITS OF ADMIRALTY—NAVAL PRIZE.

This Court formerly had cognizance of all crimes and offences, committed either upon the sea or on the coasts out of the boundary or extent of any English county, until the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 36, establishing the Central Criminal Court, when this jurisdiction was transferred to the latter Court, the Judge of the Admiralty being made a member of the tribunal.

County Court Jurisdiction.—Certain County Courts, as selected by the Sovereign in Council, on the representation of the Lord Chancellor, have Admiralty jurisdiction up to a limited amount under the County Courts Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 53), ss. 55-59, replacing County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Acts of 1868 and 1869.

There is also an unlimited jurisdiction when the parties so agree.

A list of the County Courts exercising Admiralty Jurisdiction will be found in the Yearly County Court Practice.

There is a Court of Admiralty in Ireland.

In Scotland a Court of Admiralty existed prior to 1830. In that year it was abolished by 1 Will. 4, c. 69, and its jurisdiction was transferred to the Court of Session and the Sheriff Courts.

The jurisdiction of the Admiralty in the colonies is regulated by the Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 27) ; and see Statute of Westminster, 1931 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 4).

Admiralty, Droits of. See DROITS OF ADMIRALTY.

Admission. See CONFESSION BY CULPRIT.

Admission of a Clerk by the bishop when a patron of a church has presented him to it. It is, in fact, the ordinary's declaration that he approves of the presentee to serve the cure of the church to which he is presented.—Co. Litt. 344 a.

Admissions in Evidence, concessions of certain facts by an opponent. See NOTICE TO ADMIT.

Admittance, giving possession of a copyhold estate, now abolished by the L. P. Act, 1922. See COPYHOLDS; formerly it was of three kinds: (1) Upon a voluntary grant by the lord, where the land has escheated or reverted to him. (2) Upon surrender by the former tenant. (3) Upon descent, where the heir became tenant on his ancestor's death. Land formerly copyhold now being freehold vests in the person having the best right to be admitted, see L. P. Act, 1922, 12th Schedule (8) as amended, and L. P. Act, 1925, s. 202 and 1st Schedule, Part II., S. L. Act, 1925, 2nd Schedule, and see Re King's Theatre, 1929, 1 Ch. 483.

Admittendo clerico, a writ of execution upon a right of presentation to a benefice being recovered in quare impedit, addressed to the bishop or his metropolitan, requiring him to admit and institute the clerk or presentee of the plaintiff.—Reg. Brev. 33 a.

Admittendo in socium, a writ for associating certain persons, as knights and other gentlemen of the county, to justices of assize on the circuit.—Reg. Brev. 206.

Admonition, a judicial or ecclesiastical censure or reprimand. See MONITION.

Admortization or Amortization [fr. Amortissement, Fr.], (1) the alienation of lands or tenements into mortmain; (2) the redemption of debt by a sinking fund.

Ad Murum, Waltham or Walton.

Adnichled [fr. nihil, Lat.], annulled, cancelled, made void.—28 Hen. 8.

Adolescence, the period from 12 in females and 14 in males till 21 years of age.

Adoption, an act by which a person adopts as his own the child of another. Until recently there was no law of adoption in this country though it exists in other countries, as France and Germany, where the civil law (as to which, see Sand. Just.) prevails to any great extent. In 1889 and 1890, Lord Meath introduced Bills in the House of Lords to legalize adoption.

By the Adoption of Children Act, 1926

(16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 29), after the 31st December, 1925, the Court (usually in the Chancery Division) may authorize the adoption of an infant who is under twenty-one years of age, a British subject, and resident in England and Wales, by an applicant who is more than twenty-five years of age, and also twenty-one years older than the infant, unless closely related, and a British subject, resident and domiciled in England or Wales, but a single adopter, only, will be authorized unless two spouses jointly apply. A male may not adopt a female infant unless the Court finds special reasons.

The consents of the parents and guardians (if any) and of any other persons having the custody of, or liable to contribute to, the support of the child, are required, and one of two spouses may not apply without the consent of the other, but the Court may dispense with any of these consents in the special circumstances provided for by the Act.

The Court may impose terms and require the adopter to make and secure such provision for the adopted child as the Court thinks fit. Probationary adoptions not exceeding two years may likewise be authorized, and if the infant had been maintained and in the custody of the proposed adopter for at least two years before 1926, the Court may dispense with the consents referred to. No money or reward may be paid to any adopter, parent or guardian without leave of the Court and no other person may give any such money or reward. The effect of the order is to place the adopted child for all purposes except as mentioned below in the position of a child as if born to the adopter in lawful wedlock, inter alia in regard to custody, maintenance and education, appointment of guardians or consent to marriage, and the child assumes the same relation to the adopter, e.g., in regard to liability for the latter's maintenance, and natural parents are deprived permanently of their parental rights, and are required to acknowledge the fact.

In regard to property, however, under any disposition or an intestacy the child retains his status as a child of his or her own parents and does not acquire any right or interest as a child of the adopter. The death duties in respect of any interest in property under any disposition of the adopter and vice versa are leviable as if the child had been born to the adopter in lawful wedlock. See DEATH DUTIES, INTESTACY.

The adoption of children is not recognized by the Common Law of Scotland, but the Adoption of Children (Scotland) Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 37), provides that upon an application of any person desirous of being authorized to adopt a child, the Court of Session or the Sheriff Court may in certain circumstances make an adoption order authorizing the adoption. Applications are made to the Court within whose jurisdiction the child resides at the date of application, and are heard in camera.

For the Roman Law, as altered by Justinian, see Sand. Just.

Adoption is much practised amongst the Hindoos, and in the United States of America there are State laws regulating it.—Chamb. En cycl.

Except as provided by the Adoption of Children Act, 1926, in English Law any renunciation by parents of their legal rights and liabilities in favour of an adopter is a mere empty form; however desirable an adoption may be, and however solemnly consented to by the parents, it may be cancelled by them, and the adopted children restored to the parents, unless they be legally unfit to have the custody of the children; see Custody of Children Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 3), s. 3. A contract by the mother of even an illegitimate child for the transfer to another person of the rights and liabilities of the mother in respect of the child is invalid (Humphreys v. Polak, 1901, 2 K. B. 385; Reg. v. Walker, (1912) 28 T. L. R. 342 and 375).

See Geary on Marriage and Family Relations, and Law Reform (Misc. Prov.) Act, 1934, s. 2.

Adoption of Poor Child.—Sometimes benevolent persons apply to County or Borough Councils, formerly boards of guardians, to be permitted to adopt children from the workhouse whose parents are unknown. Though there is no legal objection to the authorities giving up the possession of the children under such circumstances, they should satisfy themselves that it is for the child's advantage before consenting to it.—Glen's Poor Law Orders. See now the Poor Law Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 52.

Adoptive Act of Parliament, an Act which comes into operation within a limited area upon being adopted, in manner prescribed therein, by the local authorities or inhabitants of that area, e.g. :—

The Vestries Act, 1831 (repealed as to rural parishes by the Local Government Act, 1894).

Also the following, which in rural parishes can only be adopted by Parish Meetings :—

The Lighting and Watching Act,

1833. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Gas.'

The (repealed) Baths and Washhouses Acts, 1846 to 1899, and London Government Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 14). See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Baths.'

The Burial Acts, 1852 to 1906. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Burial.'

The Public Improvements Acts. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Public Improvements.'

The Infectious Diseases Notification Act, 1879—made general in England by Act of 1899: The Infectious Diseases Prevention Act, 1890 (all repealed): The Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907 (part repealed). See PUBLIC HEALTH, and Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Public Health.'

The Museums and Gymnasiums Act, 1891. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Museums.'

The Public Libraries Act, 1892 to 1919. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Libraries.'

Sometimes an adoptive Act may be put in force in spite of non-adoption, see e.g., s. 3 of the Notification of Birth Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 40) (repealed). See P. H. Act, 1936.

Ad ostium ecclesie, Dower. Where a tenant in fee-simple of full age, openly 'at the door of the church' (where all marriages were formerly celebrated) after affiancing and troth plighted between them, endowed his wife with the whole or such quantity of his land as he pleased, specifying and ascertaining the same, the wife, after her husband's death, might have entered without further ceremony. Abolished by the Dower Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 105, s. 13).

Ad Pontem, Pantown in Lincolnshire.

Adpromissor, an accessory to a promise; in order to give a stipulator greater security he guaranteed the fulfilment of a promise.—Sand. Just.

Ad quem [Lat.], to whom.

Ad questiones facti non respondent iudices; ad questiones legis non respondent iuratores. Co. Litt. 295.—(Judges do not answer questions of fact; juries do not answer questions of law). See Broom's Leg. Max. Since the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, and now by R. S. C. Ord. XXXVI., a judge in a civil action may answer questions of fact without a jury.

Ad quod damnum, a writ which ought to be issued before the Crown grants further liberties, as a fair, market, etc., which may be prejudicial to others: it is addressed to the sheriff, to inquire what damage it may do to grant a fair, market, etc. It is also used to inquire of lands given in mortmain to any house of religion, etc.—Termes de la Ley. See 27 Edw. 1, st. 2.

Adrectare, to do right, satisfy, or make amends.—Cowel's Law Dict.

Adrogation. See ARROGATIO.

Adscripti vel adscriptitii glebæ, a class of slaves, among the Romans, attached to and transferred along with the land which they cultivated.

Adstipulator, an accessory party to a promise, who received the same promise as his principal did, and could equally receive and exact payment; or he only stipulated for a part of that for which the principal stipulated, and then his rights were co-extensive with the amount of his own stipulation.—Civil Law.

Ad terminum qui preterit, a writ of entry, which lay for a lessor or his heirs, where a lease of premises had been made for life or years, and after the term had expired the premises were withheld from the lessor or his heirs, by the tenant or other person in possession of them; but see now the titles, DOUBLE RENT and DOUBLE VALUE.

Ad tunc et ibidem [Lat.] (then and there).

Adulteration, the corrupt production of any article, especially food: indictable at common law (see R. v. Dixon, (1814) 3 M. & S. 11). The adulteration of bread, corn, meal, or flour is made a statutory offence by the Bread Act, 1836, and the Bread Acts (Amendment) Act, 1922 (12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 28), and that of food, including drink, generally by the Food and Drugs (Adulteration) Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 31).

By this Act the mixing, colouring, staining or powdering of any article so as to render it injurious to health, as to affect injuriously the quality of the drugs or lettering any article in such estate, is punishable for a first offence by a fine not exceeding 50*l.*; for a second offence by imprisonment not exceeding six months. The sale to the prejudice of the purchaser of articles of food and drngs not of the nature, substance or quality demanded by the purchaser, is prohibited. Where, however, the article is properly labelled as mixed, no liability arises. Provision is made for setting up of Food and Drug Authorities, who can appoint analysts who have powers of sampling articles for the purpose of analysis. Prosecution for offences is in accordance with the Summary Jurisdiction Acts. The Act also has special provisions dealing with milk, butter, margarine, cheese, etc.

As regards milk the complete public control over the production and distribution is provided by the Milk and Dairies (Consolidation) Act, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 66), the Milk and Dairies (Amendment) Act, 1922 (12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 54), and the Statutory Rules and Orders.

Cream which is artificial cream must not be sold except as artificial cream; for a definition of cream and artificial cream see the Artificial Cream Act, 1929 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 32) s. 6; and Lyons v. Keating, 1931, 2 K. B. 525.

Tea.—See the Adulteration of Tea and Coffee Act, 1724 (11 Geo. 1, c. 30); the Adulteration of Tea Act, 1776 (17 Geo. 3, c. 29), and the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), s. 30, provide for the examination of imported tea. See TEA.

As to food imported from abroad, see Public Health (Regulations as to Food) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 32), and the Public Health (Imported Food) Amendment Regulations, 1933 (S. R. & O., 1933, No. 347), and see FERTILIZERS, UN SOUND FOOD.

As to the adulteration of seeds, see Adulteration of Seeds Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 112); Adulteration of Seeds Act, 1878 (41 Vict. c. 17); the Seeds Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 54), and the Amending Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 667), deal with the sale and use of seeds and provide for the testing of them.

In addition to the Acts mentioned above, the following should be referred to: Bread Acts Amendment Act, 1922 (12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 28), the Milk and Dairies (Consolidation) Act, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 66), and the Amendment Act of 1922 (12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 54).

Adulterine, the issue of an adulterous intercourse. Consult Sir Harris Nicolas on Adulterine Bastardy.

Adulterine Guilds, traders acting as a corporation without a charter, and paying a fine annually for permission to exercise their usurped privileges.—Smith's Wealth of Nations, bk. 1. c. 10.

Adulterium, a fine imposed for the commission of adultery.

Adultery [ad Lat., and alter, another person], anciently termed Advoltry (quasi ad alterius thorum). The sin of incontinence between two married persons, or it may be where only one of them is married, in which case it may be called single adultery to distinguish it from the other, which has sometimes been called double.

By the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, which created a Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes (superseding the Ecclesiastical Court) which would grant to the innocent party a divorce a mensâ et thoro on the ground of the other's adultery, a husband could obtain a dissolution of his marriage (before that Act, only obtainable and not infrequently obtained by a private Act of Parliament) upon the ground of his wife's adultery, and a wife could obtain a judicial separation on the ground of her husband's adultery, or a dissolution of marriage on the ground of his adultery coupled with cruelty or desertion or bigamy, or of his incestuous adultery, provided there be no collusion or connivance, and that the alleged charges have not been condoned. The Matrimonial Causes Act, 1923, gave a wife the right to divorce a husband for adultery only if committed after the marriage and since July 18, 1923. Section 176 of the Judicature Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 49), now governs the grounds for divorce, and s. 185 those for judicial separation. By s. 189 a husband may claim damages from an adulterer (who in ordinary circumstances must be made a co-respondent, s. 177) to be assessed by a jury, and the Court has power to direct in what manner the damages shall be paid and that the whole or any part thereof shall be settled for the benefit of the children or the wife. See now DIVORCE and also HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Where a man finds another in the act of adultery with his wife (see Rex v. Greening, 1913, 3 K. B. 846), and kills him or her, in the first transport of passion, he is only guilty of manslaughter, and this has been extended to a sudden confession by a wife of past adultery (R. v. Rothwell, (1871) 12 Cox, C. C. 145; Rex v. Jones, (1908) 72 J. P. 215); but the killing of an adulterer deliberately and upon revenge is murder.

Formerly the husband of an adulteress was relieved from the obligation to support her, though he himself had committed adultery, and was the first offender, but now see the very full powers of granting maintenance and alimony which the Court has by virtue of the Judicature Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 49), s. 190. Proof of a wife's adultery is a good defence to a summons against the husband for maintenance under s. 6 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, unless the husband has condoned, connived at or conduced to the adultery. An order already made may be set aside by proof of the wife's subsequent adultery, or even on proof of prior adultery, if unknown to the husband at the time of the previous hearing, or if he was unable to prove it owing to sufficient cause, e.g., non-attendance through illness.

The word is also used by ecclesiastical writers to describe the intrusion of a person into a bishopric during the former bishop's life. The reason of the appellation is, that a bishop is supposed to contract a sort of spiritual marriage with his church.

Adultery is a ground of divorce in Scotland. Adurni portu, De, Etherington, or Ederington.

Ad valorem, a term used in speaking of the duties or customs paid on certain goods (see e.g. Import Duties Act, 1932 (22 Geo. 5, c. 8)); the duties on some articles are paid by the number, weight, measure, tale, etc., and those on others are paid ad valorem—that is, according to their value. The term is used also of stamp duties, which, in many cases—e.g., in the case of an award, a bill of exchange, a conveyance or transfer, and a lease—are payable under the Stamp Act, 1891, according to the value of the subject-matter of the particular instruments or writings. See STAMP DUTIES.

Advance [fr. avancer, Fr., to push forwards, fr. avant, Fr., avante, It., ab ante, Lat.], money paid before it is due; a loan; increase.

Advance Note. A draft on the owners of a ship or their agents issued by the captain to a seaman for a sum not exceeding a month's wages payable to the seaman's order after the sailing of the ship, provided he goes to sea pursuant to his agreement (Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 140).

Advanced Member, a member of a building society who has obtained an advance of money from the society on mortgage of real or leasehold estate; see BUILDING SOCIETY.

Advancement, promotion; additional price. An advancement clause in a settlement or will is a provision authorizing the trustees, with the consent of the tenant for life, to pay by anticipation a limited portion of the share to which a remainderman will ultimately be entitled for his benefit or advancement in life.

In equity the presumption of advancement is an important exception to the doctrine of resulting trusts that a conveyance to a stranger without a consideration is merely a nominal one, and no intention on the face of it of conferring the beneficial interests will result to the grantor. The presumption of advancement generally arises where a person advances money for the purchase of any property or right in the name of another for whom the purchaser is under a legal or even in some cases a moral obligation to provide. It will arise in favour of a wife, legitimate children, and in some cases in regard to persons to whom the purchaser stands in loco parentis, but it has been held not to arise where the money was advanced for a purchase in the name of a wife who had not been legally married (Soar v. Foster, 4 K. & J. 152) or of a mistress (Rider v. Kidder, 10 Ves. 360). A purchase by a parent in the joint names of himself and his child and a stranger will be held an advancement for the child to the extent of the interest vested in him, the stranger, however, holding the interest vested in him in trust for the parent. The presumption of advancement is rebuttable by parol or other extrinsic evidence. In all cases the whole of the surrounding circumstances must be considered (Re Whitehouse, 37 C. D. 683). See Lewin on Trusts.

By the A. of E. Act, 1925, s. 47 (1) (iii.) (replacing s. 3 of the Statute of Distribution), any money or property which has been paid or settled by way of advancement or on the marriage of a child shall, subject to any contrary intention expressed or appearing, be brought into account and taken towards satisfaction of the child's share in the intestate estate as provided by the A. E. Act, 1925. The child may elect not to take under the intestacy (see Wolst. & Ch. Conv. Acts, vol. 2, p. 1502).

A power conferred by settlement upon trustees authorizing them to advance a part (or the whole) of the estate or funds to which a beneficiary may ultimately become entitled under the will or settlement for his or her benefit before the period of enjoyment or vesting. The Trustee Act, 1925, s. 32, confers very wide powers on trustees (extended in the case of intestacies by s. 47 (1) of the A. E. Act, 1925, to personal representatives) to advance up to one half of the beneficiary's interest in personal property and proceeds of a trust for sale of land, subject to the protection of interests prior to the interest of the beneficiary and other conditions as provided by s. 32 of the Trustee Act, 1925. The section only applies to trusts constituted or created after 1925 and does not extend the power to land or capital money for the purposes of the S.L.A., 1925. In all settlements of land other than by way of trust for sale a power of advancement should be conferred expressly if so intended by the settlement. See Lewin on Trusts.

Adventitious, that which comes unexpectedly or incidentally.

Ad ventrem inspiciendum [to inspect the womb]. See DE VENTRE INSPICIENDO.

Adventure [fr. advenire, Lat., to come to], the sending to sea of a ship or goods at the risk of the sender.

Adventure, Bill of, a writing signed by a merchant, stating that the property in goods shipped in his name belongs to another, to the adventure or chance of which the person so named is to stand, with a covenant from the merchant to account to him for the produce.

Adversaria [adversa, things remarked or ready at hand], rough memoranda, commonplace books.

Adverse possession is that form of possession or occupancy of land which is inconsistent with the title of any person to whom the land rightfully belongs and tends to extinguish that person's title, see Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), which provides that no person shall make an entry or distress, or bring an action to recover any land or rent, but within twelve years next after the time when the right first accrued, and does away with the doctrine of adverse possession, except in the cases provided for by s. 15. See Nepean v. Doe, (1837) 2 M. & W. 910.

Possession is not held to be adverse if it can be referred to a lawful title. Doe v. Bightwen, 10 East, 583, Wall v. Stanwick, 34 Ch. D. 763. Non-adverse possession is of two kinds. The title of the dispossessed may not be paramount, as in the case of a leasehold term when dispossession of the lessee is not necessarily inconsistent with the reversioner's rights, and secondly, the person setting up dispossession may have been holding under the rightful owner's title, e.g., trustees, guardians, bailiffs or agents. Such persons cannot set up possession adverse to their cestui que trust, principal or persons for whom they are acting or may be presumed to be acting until the character of the possession is changed. See Nepean v. Doe, (1834) 2 M. & W. 894, Sm. L. C., Carson's R. P. St., and LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Advertisement [fr. avertissement, Fr.], a public notice or announcement of a thing.

The duties payable on advertisements were repealed by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 63, s. 5.

As to the protection afforded to Trustees and Personal Representatives by issuing an advertisement for creditors before distributing any real or personal property, see Trustee Act, 1925, s. 27, amended by the Law of Property (Amend.) Act, 1926, s. 7, and extending the Law of Property Amendment Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35), s. 29; Re Bracken, (1890) 43 Ch. D. 1.

The regulation of advertisements is provided for by the Advertisements Regulation Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 27), and the Ancient Monuments Act, 1931 (20 & 21 Geo. 5), s. 7. See also Advertisements Regulation Act, 1925, respecting advertisements affecting the view or amenities of a village or historic building. Advertisements for stolen property may amount to an offer to compound a felony, and thus constitute an offence within s. 102 of the Larceny Act, 1861. See Mirams v. Our Dogs Publishing Co., 1901, 2 K. B. 564, and the Larceny Advertisements Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 65).

Persons advertising the treatment of, or any remedy for, venereal disease may be summarily proceeded against under the Venereal Disease Act, 1917 (7 & 8 Geo. 5, c. 21).

As to defacing advertisements set up by local authorities, see Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (c. 59), s. 48, and for advertising in streets by wearing fancy dress or to drive, etc., any animal or vehicle either wholly or partly for advertisement, see London Traffic (Miscellaneous Provisions) Consolidation Provisional Regulations, 13th April, 1934.

Persons affixing to walls, etc., any advertisements 'of any indecent or obscene nature' may be summarily proceeded against under the Indecent Advertisements Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 18). Chit. Stat., tit. 'Criminal Law.'

The owner of land used for advertisements and not otherwise occupied is rateable, according to the value of such use, by virtue of the Advertising Stations (Rating) Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 27).

See STOLEN GOODS; REWARD; LIBEL; SUBSTITUTED SERVICE; SKY SIGN; and as to contract by acceptance of advertised offer, see Carlill v. Carbolic Smoke Co., 1893, 1 Q. B. 256.

By the Health Resorts and Watering Places Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5, and 1 Edw. 8, c. 48), powers are given to local authorities to levy a rate for the purpose of advertising the amenities of the district.

Advice [fr. avis, Fr., avviso, It., avice, Old Eng.], view, opinion, counsel; also, the instruction usually given by one merchant or banker to another by letter, informing him of bills or drafts drawn on him, with particulars of date, or sight, the sum, and the payee. Bills presented for acceptance or payment are frequently dishonoured for 'want of advice.'

Advice on Evidence. The advice of counsel is usually taken as to the evidence with which it is necessary to be prepared at the trial of an action. It is customary to lay all the papers before counsel for this to be done as soon as the pleadings are closed and the case entered for trial.

Advisement, deliberation.

Ad vitam aut culpam, an office which is to determine only by the death or delinquency of the holder, or which is, in fact, held quandiu se bene gesserit (so long as he conducts himself properly). See Encyc. of Scots Law.

Advocate [(Lat.) Tyman getyman, Ang.-Sax.], to defend, to call to one's aid, also to vouch to warranty.

Advocate [Lat. advocatus], a patron of a cause assisting his client with advice, and pleading for him. He is defined by Ulpian (Dig. 50, tit. 13) to be any person who aids another in the conduct of a suit or action. The term is at the present day confined to persons professionally conducting cases in Court, i.e., Barristers and Solicitors (q.v.).

In the English Ecclesiastical and Admiralty Courts, until 1857, certain persons learned in the civil and canon law, called advocates, had the exclusive right of acting as counsel. They were members of a college situate at Doctor's Commons, incorporated by charter, June 22, 8 Geo. 3, under the title of 'The College of Doctors of Law exercent in the Ecclesiastical and Admiralty Courts,' and had, previously to their admission to that college, taken the degree of Doctor of Laws at an English university. The jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts in matters matrimonial and testamentary was in 1857 transferred to the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes and the Court of Probate respectively. It is now vested in the High Court, see Judicature Act, 1925, s. 21.

In Scotland all counsel are called advocates. See ADVOCATES, FACULTY OF; and BARRISTER.

Advocate, Lord, the principal Crown Lawyer in Scotland, and one of the great Officers of State of Scotland. It is his duty to act as public prosecutor; but private individuals injured may prosecute upon obtaining his concurrence. He is assisted by a Solicitor-General and four junior counsel, termed advocates-depute. He has the power of appearing as public prosecutor in any Court in Scotland where any person can be tried for an offence, or in any action where the Crown is interested, but it is not usual for him to act in the inferior Courts, which have their respective public prosecutors, called procurators-fiscal, acting under his instructions. He does not, in prosecuting for offences, require the intervention of a grand jury, except in prosecutions for treason, which are conducted according to the English method. Until the creation of the office of Secretary for Scotland the Lord Advocate was virtually Secretary of State for Scotland. Consult Omond's Lord Advocates of Scotland.

Advocate, King's, a member of the College of Advocates, appointed by letters patent, whose office was to advise and act as counsel for the Crown in questions of civil, canon, and international law. It is believed that the office has never been formally abolished.

Advocates, Faculty of, the bar of Scotland. The Faculty was instituted along with the College of Justice in 1532. Members are entitled to plead in every Court in Scotland, and also before the House of Lords, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and Parliamentary committees. In the Supreme Courts in Scotland they have an exclusive right of audience except (1) where a party conducts his own case, and (2) in cases falling under s. 3 of the Administration of Justice (Scotland) Act, 1933. The head of the Faculty is Dean of Faculty, who is elected annually. He takes precedence of all other members of the Bar except the Lord Advocate; these two and the Solicitor-General for Scotland in Court sit within the Bar. Before 1897 only the Law Officers and Deans of Faculty were appointed King's Counsel, but since that year it has been the practice to confer this honour on distinguished Counsel recommended by the Lord Justice-General. They do not sit within the Bar. The Library of the Faculty was in 1925 transferred to the nation and is now the National Library of Scotland.

Advocates in Aberdeen, Society of. A society of Solicitors in Aberdeen, originating in 1633. Until the passing of the Law Agents Act of 1873, they enjoyed the exclusive privilege of practising in all the Courts within the City of Aberdeen.

Advocati, patrons of churches.

Advocatia, the quality, function, privilege, or territorial jurisdiction of an advocate.—Civil Law.

Advocati fisci, advocates of the revenue among the Romans.

Advocation, a process by which an action was carried from an inferior to a superior Court in Scotland. By the Court of Session Act (31 & 32 Vict. c. 100), s. 64, the process of advocacy is abolished, and appeals are substituted.

Advocations declamarum, a writ which lay for tithes, demanding the fourth part or upwards that belonged to any church.—Reg. Brev. 29.

Advocatus diaboli, the devil's advocate, the name popularly given to the promoter of the Faith (promotor fidei), an officer of the Sacred Congregation of Rites at Rome, whose duty is to prepare all possible arguments against the admission of any one to the posthumous honours of beatification and canonization.—Enc. Brit.

Advow, or Avow, or Avouch [under the feudal system, when the right of a tenant was impugned, he had to call upon his lord to come forward and defend his right. This, in the Latin of the time, was called advocare, Fr. voucher à garantie, to vouch or call to warrant. As the calling the lord of the fee to defend the right of the tenant involved the admission of all the duties implied in feudal tenancy, it was an act jealously looked after by the lords, and advocare, or the equivalent, Fr. avouer, to avow, came to signify the admission by a tenant of a certain person as feudal superior. Finally, with some grammatical confusion, the words advocare, and avow or avouch, came to be used in the sense of performing the part of the vouchee, or person called on to defend the right impugned. Wedg.], to justify or maintain an act, e.g., one distrains for rent, and he that is distrained brings an action of replevin; if the distrainer in his defence justify or maintain his act, he is said to advow or avow, and his plea is called avowment or avowry. See AVOWRY.

It also signifies to call upon or produce—thus anciently, where stolen goods were bought by one and sold to another, it was lawful for the right owner to take them wherever they were found, and he in whose possession they were found was bound to produce the seller to justify the sale, and so on till they found the thief.—Old Nat. Br. 43.

Advowee, or Avowee, the person or patron who has a right to present to a benefice.—Fleta, lib. v. c. 14.

Advowee paramount, the sovereign, or highest patron.

Advowson [fr. advocare, Lat.], a right of presentation to, or the patronage of, a church or spiritual living; the person possessed of this right or patronage being called the patron or advocate (patronus aut advocatus), on account of his obligation to protect and defend the privileges of the particular benefice. An advowson is in the nature of a temporal property and spiritual trust. For the origin and history of advowsons, consult Mirehouse on Advowsons, pp. 1-6.

There are several kinds of advowsons, viz. :—

- (I.) Presentative advowsons, subdivided into,
  - Appendant.
  - In gross, and
  - Partly appendant, and partly in gross.

- (II.) Collative advowsons.

(I.) A presentative advowson appendant is a right of patronage annexed to the possession of some corporeal hereditament. Thus, where an advowson has immemorially passed together with a manor or reputed manor by a simple grant of such manor, without particularly referring to the advowson, it is then said to be appendant, i.e., annexed to the demesnes of such manor, which subsist perpetually.

A presentative advowson in gross is a right of patronage self-subsistent, belonging to the patron as an individual, and not in any wise appendant to a corporeal inheritance.

While a few advowsons were originally in gross, as when the right originated in an agreement that a builder of a church and his heirs should be its patrons ratione fundationis, yet the greater number of them were primarily appendant, becoming by subsequent circumstances severed in gross.

The severance may take place in several modes :—(1) when the corporeal inheritance is conveyed away, with a special reservation of the advowson ; (2) when the advowson is granted away, and not the corporeal inheritance to which it was incident ; (3) when the patron presents to it as though it were already severed. An advowson, once completely and unconditionally severed, can never again become appendant. But should an advowson be disappended conditionally, as in the case of a mortgage, it will reunite when the loan is repaid. So, if the advowson be excepted in a lease of the corporeal inheritance, it remains in gross during the lease, but upon its expiration it becomes appendant again. These instances, however, are rather suspensions than severances.

A disappancy created by a wrongful act may be done away with by defeating such act ; and should it be effected by operation of law, the appendancy will be preserved, unless otherwise expressly intended.

A presentative advowson may be partly appendant and partly in gross ; thus, when the owner grants to another every second presentment, for then the advowson will be appendant for the grantor's turn, and in gross for that of the grantee. And should the advowson appendant, and that in gross, be afterwards possessed by the same person, still the advowson will be appendant for one turn, and in gross for the other. So, if three persons be seized of a manor with a presentative advowson appendant, and two of them release their right of the patronage to the third, he then becomes seized of two-thirds of the advowson as in gross and of the unsevered third as appendant ; but on death of this third person, the entire advowson will devolve in gross upon his heir or devisee. — Mirehouse on Advowsons, 20.

(II.) A collative advowson arises when a bishop has the right of patronage. Collation is the conferring of a benefice by a bishop. It is an immediate institution without any presentation, and is completed by the induction of the collatee. Where a bishop collates and dies before induction, the Crown presents as having in its custody the temporalities of the vacant bishopric.

There was also formerly another class called donative advowsons, but they are all now converted into presentatives : see DONATIVE.

The transfer of presentative advowsons is much restricted by the Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), and by the Benefices Act, 1898 (Amendment) Measure, 1923 (14 & 15 Geo. 5), No. 1. See also the Benefices (Transfer of Rights of Patronage) Measure, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5), No. 8, and the Benefices (Purchase of Rights of Patronage) Measure, 1933 (23 Geo. 5), No. 1 (see BENEFICE).

The patrons of united churches (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, ss. 15 et seq. ; and 4 & 5 Vict. c. 39, s. 23) have several rights, for though there be but one advowson, yet every patron has the whole advowson in his turn, since the patronage remains as before, though by the union the incumbency of one church is extinguished ; and though the incumbency of the churches is united, the tithes, boundaries, moduses, and profits continue as before, for there can be no union of parishes though there be of churches.

As to the exchange of advowsons, see 3 & 4 Vict. c. 113, s. 73, and 4 & 5 Vict. c. 39, s. 22 and Elcho (Lord) v. Andrews, 1910, 1 Ch. 706.

As to the sale of advowsons held by or in trust for parishioners and others forming a numerous class, see 19 & 20 Vict. c. 50. By the Lord Chancellor's Augmentation Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 120), the Lord Chancellor is authorized to sell the numerous advowsons specified in the schedule to that Act, the proceeds to be applied in the augmentation of benefices and otherwise. As to the union of contiguous benefices in cities, towns, and boroughs, see 23 & 24 Vict. c. 142. See NEXT PRESENTATION.

Æbudaæ, the Hebrides or Western Isles of Scotland.

Ædificatum solo, solo cedit. Co. Litt. 4 a.—(That which is built upon the land goes with the land.) See FIXTURES.

Æfesn. [Pasnagium or Pannagium, Lat.], the remuneration to the proprietor of a domain for the privilege of feeding swine under the oaks and beeches of his woods.

Æglesburgus, Aylesbury in Buckinghamshire.

Ægyldæ, or Agyldæ, or Orgyldæ [inultus, Lat.], uncompensated, unpaid for, unavenged. From the participle of exclusion, a, æ, or ex (Goth.), and gild, payment, requital.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Ægyptians, commonly called Gypsies. See GYPSIES.

Æhlip, transgression of the law.—Ancient Inst. Eng.

Æhte-swan [Servus Porcarius, Lat.], a swine herd, from 'æht,' property, and 'swan' (Old Norse or Icelandic, sveinn), a servant.—Ibid.; Bosworth, Ang. Sax. Dict., 1898, p. 13.

Ælmsfeoh, or Ælmsfeoh, Peter pence, which used to be paid to the Pope.

Ærarium, the State Treasury of Rome. Under the Emperors the ærarium as the public treasure was distinguished from the fiscus, the privy purse of the emperor.—See FISCUS.

Aerial Navigation. The Aerial Navigation Acts, 1911, 1913 and 1919, were repealed by the Air Navigation Act of 1920 as amended, which together with the Air Navigation Orders thereunder contain the general law, and see also the Air Navigation Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 44). The purpose of this legislation was (inter alia) to prevent air-craft from being a military danger and to protect persons on the ground. Air-craft from abroad are obliged to land in specified areas. Very stringent powers of enforcing orders are given, including power to fire into any disobedient craft. Air-craft are now included among the things which may be requisitioned for army purposes; see Army (Annual) Act, 1913, s. 5. For rules of the air, see The Air Navigation (Consolidation) Order, 1923 (S. R. & O. 1923, No. 1508). For the composition of the Air Force and Air Force Reserve, see the Air Force Act, 1917, and succeeding Acts, also the Army (Annual) Acts.

Ærie [fr. æria accipitum, Lat.], an airy, or nest of goshawks.—Spelm. Glos.

Æstimatio capitis [pretium hominis, Lat.], fines paid for offences committed against persons according to their degree and quality, by estimation of their heads, ordained by King Athelstane.—Cressy, Ch. Hist. 834.

Ætate probanda, a writ which inquired whether the king's tenant, holding in chief by chivalry, was of full age to receive his lands. It was directed to the escheator of the county. Long disused.—Reg. Brev. 294.

Ætheling, a noble, though generally signifying a prince of the blood.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Affairs, a person's concerns in trade or property.

Affairs of the Church. These, including the distribution of offertories and other collections made in any church, were transferred by the Parochial Church Councils (Powers) Measure, 1921 (11 & 12 Geo. 5), No. 1, to the control of the Parochial Church Council.

Affectum, challenge propter.—See JURY.

Affeerors [fr. afeurer, or afferer, Fr., to tax, fr. forum, Lat., a market], persons who, in courts-leet, upon oath, settle and moderate the fines and amercements imposed on those who have committed offences arbitrarily punishable, or that have no express penalty appointed by statute. They are also appointed to moderate fines, etc., in courts-baron.—Cowel's Law Dict.; 4 Bl. Com. Shakespeare was an affeeror in Stratford-on-Avon.

Affiance [fr. fidem dare, Lat.], the plighting of troth or promise between a man and woman, upon agreement of marriage.—Termes de la Ley; Co. Litt. 34 a.

Affidare, to plight faith, or give or swear fealty, i.e., fidelity.—Cowel's Law Dict.

Affidatio dominorum, an oath taken by the lords in parliament.—Ibid.

Affidatus, a tenant by fealty, a retainer.—Blount.

Affidavit [fr. affidare, M. Lat., to pledge one's faith, fr. fides, Lat.], a written statement sworn before a person having authority to administer an oath.

By the practice of the Supreme Court of Judicature, all evidence is, as a rule, to be given videlicet; but this may be altered by agreement of the parties, or the Court or a judge may for sufficient reason order that any particular fact or facts may be proved by affidavit, or that the affidavit of any witness may be read at the hearing or trial on such conditions as are thought reasonable; provided that no such order be made where a witness can be produced and is bona fide required for cross-examination (R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXXVII., r. 1). A New Procedure is provided for by R. S. C., Ord. XXXVIII. A., r. 8 J. Affidavits must be confined to such facts as the witness is able of his own knowledge to prove, except on interlocutory motions, on which statements as to his belief, with the grounds thereof, may be admitted.

As to time for filing affidavits, see Ord. XXXVIII., r. 25.

Any affidavit may be sworn to either in print or in manuscript, or partly in print and partly in manuscript (R. S. C. 1883, Ord. LXVI., r. 4).

Where the above rules do not state anything to the contrary, the practice previously existing in reference to affidavits is still applicable (Jud. Act, 1925, s. 101). In the Chancery Division, motions and proceedings, commenced by originating summons, are heard on affidavit evidence. So applications for attachments, certiorari, criminal information, mandamus, quo warranto, and other processes are usually made on affidavit (see, e.g., r. 53 of the Crown Office Rules of 1886), and by R. S. C. 1883, Ord. LII., r. 4, copies of affidavits intended to be used on the hearing of a motion for attachment, to set aside an award, and in certain other cases must be served on the other party together with the notice of motion. Any person who has made an affidavit in any cause or matter is liable to be cross-examined thereon. See Ord. XXXVIII., r. 28.

The Commissioners for Oaths Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 10), repealing 24 enactments from 16 & 17 Car. 2, c. 9, to s. 18 of the Solicitors Act, 1877, regulates the appointment and powers of commissioners to 'administer any oath or take any affidavit' in England or elsewhere. See COMMISSIONER FOR OATHS, and also AFFIRMATION and DECLARATION.

Affidavit of Documents, an affidavit by a party against whom an order for discovery has been made specifying all the documents material to the matters in dispute in the action which are or have been in his possession or power. See DISCOVERY.

Affidavit of Increase. See INCREASE.

Affidavit Office in Chancery, abolished by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, ss. 27 and 29, and its duties transferred to the Clerks of Records and Writs.

Affidavit to hold to Bail. By the Judgments Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110), s. 3, it was provided that upon an affidavit of the existence of a debt to the amount of 20*l.* or upwards, and that a defendant was about to quit England, the plaintiff might apply to a judge to hold such defendant to bail. The Bankruptcy Repeal and Insolvent Court Act, 1869, s. 20, repealed the above section and substituted other provisions. See ABSCOND.

Affidari (seu affidiari ad arma), to be mustered and enrolled for soldiers, upon an oath of fidelity.—Cowel's Law Dict.

Affiliation, the fixing any one with the paternity of a bastard child and the obligation to maintain it. The process is regulated by the Bastardy Acts, 1845, 1872, and 1873 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 10, 35 & 36 Vict. c. 65, and 36 Vict. c. 9), and the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 101), ss. 4–8, Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Bastardy.' The law has been further amended by the Affiliation Orders Act, 1914, which provides for the payment of money through an officer of the Court unless ordered to be paid to applicant personally, and the Bastardy Act, 1923, which makes the maximum sum payable per child 20*s.* per week, and see 25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 46. The evidence of the mother must be corroborated in some material particular by other testimony, by virtue of s. 6 of the Act of 1845, and s. 4 of the Act of 1872 (Cole v. Manning, (1877) 2 Q. B. D. 611; Thomas v. Jones, 1921, 1 K. B. 22).

As to issue of process for compelling attendance of witnesses, see Bastardy (Witness Process) Act, 1929 (c. 38), and Poor Law Act, 1884, s. 70, as regards bastardy proceedings. See Lushington on Affiliation.

Affinage [purgatio metalli, Lat.], refining metal, hence fine and refined.—Blount.

Affinitas affinitatis, the connection which has neither consanguinity nor affinity, as, the connection between a husband's brother and his wife's sister.

Affinity, relationship by marriage between the husband and the blood relations of the wife, and between the wife and the blood relations of the husband.—1 Bl. Com. 434.

Affinity is distinguished into three kinds, (1) Direct, or that subsisting between the husband and his wife's relations by blood, or between the wife and the husband's relations by blood. (2) Secondary, or that which subsists between the husband's and his wife's relations by marriage. (3) Collateral, or that which subsists between the husband and the relations of his wife's relations.

Marriage within the prohibited degrees of affinity as well as of consanguinity as printed in the Prayer Book Table is void by s. 2 of the Marriage Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 54), as varied by the Marriage (Prohibited Degrees of Relationship) Acts, 1907 to 1931. See CONSANGUINITY; MARRIAGE.

Affirm, to ratify or confirm a former law or judgment; to make a statement which, though not on oath, carries with it, if false, the penalties of perjury.

Affirmance, the confirmation of a voidable act.

Affirmant, a person who solemnly affirms, instead of taking an oath.

Affirmation, a solemn declaration without oath; the being allowed to make it was an indulgence at first confined to the people called Quakers, and Moravians (9 Geo. 4, c. 32, s. 1; 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 49), and to Separatists (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 82), but was afterwards extended to all persons objecting to take an oath. See Common Law Procedure Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 125), s. 20; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 66 (criminal proceedings); 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, s. 8 (jurors); and particularly the Evidence Amendment Act, 1869, s. 4 (extended to evidence before arbitrators and others by 33 & 34 Vict. c. 49, s. 1), under which persons having no religious belief were first allowed to affirm, the former statutes having applied only to persons prevented by a religious belief from swearing.

The Act of 1869, however, did not apply to promissory oaths, e.g., to the oath directed by the Parliamentary Oaths Act, 1866, as amended by the Promissory Oaths Act, 1868, to be taken by Members of Parliament (Clarke v. Bradlaugh, (1880) 7 Q. B. D. 38).

Finally, therefore, the Oaths Act, 1888 (see OATHS) (51 & 52 Vict. c. 46), has allowed every person objecting to be sworn to affirm, instead of taking an oath, in all places and for all purposes where an oath is required by law. A form of affirmation sufficient to satisfy the requirements of this Act is:—

'I A.B. solemnly and sincerely affirm and declare as follows' [or 'that as touching the matters in question I will speak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth'].

For the purposes of the Perjury Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 6), the forms and ceremonies used in administering an oath are immaterial, and the expression 'oath' in the Act includes 'affirmation'; see s. 15. See the False Oaths (Scotland) Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 20), which consolidates and simplifies the law of Scotland relating to false oaths, declarations and statements.

Affirmative pregnant, an assertion implying a negation.

Afforare, to set a price or value on a thing. See AFFEERORS.—Blount.

Afforatus, appraised or valued, as things vendible in a fair or market.—Cowel.

Afforcement, a fortress, stronghold, or other fortification.—Cowel.

Afforcere, Afforce, to add, increase, or make stronger; in case of disagreement of the jury, let the assize be increased, which is an enforcement of the assize.—Cowel.

Afforest, to turn ground into a forest.—Carta de Foresta, c. 1. See Forestry Act, 1919 (9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 58), and FOREST.

Affranchise, to make free.

Affray [fr. effrayer, Fr. to affright], a skirmish or fighting between two or more persons; there must be a stroke given or offered, or a weapon drawn, otherwise it is not an affray. It is a public offence, and is so called because it affrights persons. It differs from an assault in that it is a wrong to the public, while an assault is of a private nature.—1 Hawk. P. C. 154.

Affreightment [fr. fret, Fr.], the contract of a shipowner to carry goods for the payment called freight. See CHARTER-PARTY; BILL OF LADING.

Affri, or Affra, bullocks, horses, or beasts of the plough.—Cowel.

Aforesaid, already mentioned.

Aforethought, prepenze, premeditated.

A fortiori [by so much stronger (reason), Lat.]. It is thus applied:—A private person, and a fortiori a peace officer (it being his especial duty), who is present at the commission of a felony, is bound by the law to arrest the felon, on pain of fine and imprisonment.—2 Hawk. P. C. 74.

African Company, a company which, under a charter of Charles II., enjoyed an exclusive trade from the port of Saltee, in South Barbary, to the Cape of Good Hope, both inclusive, with all the islands near to those coasts. Several statutes were passed, placing their trade upon a new footing, but 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 28, abolished the company and annulled all the grants made to them; under it the Crown took possession of their forts and castles, and the trade was thrown open.

After-acquired Property. A covenant to settle any property that may be acquired by the wife subsequently to the marriage is often inserted in marriage settlements. The construction and effect of such a covenant depends chiefly on the language of the covenant itself. See Wurtzburg on Covenants for the Settlement of a wife's after-acquired property; Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 42 (2). And see SETTLEMENT.

Aftermath, the second crop of grass after a meadow has been mown for hay.

Age, the criminal responsibility of males and females, and their power to do certain acts, depends upon their age. A child under 7 cannot commit any offence; between the ages of 7 and 14 is presumed to be doli incapax, but this presumption may be rebutted by evidence of the infant's capacity to discern good from evil (malitia supplet aetatem—malice supplies age). The old rule in criminal matters was that a person of the age of 14 might be capitally punished for any capital offence, but under the age of 7 he could not. A male under the age of 14 years is presumed impotent as well as doli incapax, and since the presumption of impotence cannot be rebutted (R. v. Phillips, 8 C. & P. 736), he cannot be convicted of an offence involving carnal knowledge, except as a principal in the second degree in a rape, or the like, where if he has a mischievous discretion, the presumption of impotence will not excuse him from aiding and assisting in the commission of the offence. He may, it seems, be convicted of indecent assault (Reg. v. Williams, 1893, 1 Q. B. 320). The penalties are now regulated by the Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 12), which provides that a 'child,' i.e., a person under 14, shall not be imprisoned or sent to prison or penal servitude; and a 'young person,' i.e., a person of 14 or upwards and under 17, shall not be sent to penal servitude at all, and shall not be imprisoned except under special circumstances (s. 52). Further, no sentence of death may be pronounced against a child or young person (s. 53), but provision is made for the detention of the offender in the case of certain crimes committed by children or young persons; see s. 54, and see generally ss. 50 to 63, dealing with juvenile offenders. A male at 12 years old may take the oath of allegiance. At 21 males and females are at their own disposal, may alien their lands, goods and chattels and possess the parliamentary and municipal franchise. Full age in male or female is 21 years, which age is completed on the day preceding the twenty-first anniversary or a person's birth. By s. 1 (1) 5 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, a legal estate in land is not capable of being held by an infant, by s. 21 ibid. A married infant can give a receipt for income. As to marriage settlements by male of 20 or female of 17, see MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT.—1 Co. Litt. 78; Bro. Abr. 'Age.' For an infant's rights upon intestacy, see INTESTACY. See also EDUCATION; CHILDREN.

The Age of Marriage Act, 1929 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 36), makes a marriage between persons either of whom is under the age of 16 void. Nothing in the Act shall affect any marriage solemnized or contracted before the passing of the Act or in Scotland any right or capacity of legitimation per subsequens matrimonium.

There is no age in law at which a man is presumed to be too old to be the father of a child, or a woman to be past child-bearing, but in the latter case the Court will sometimes in fact make this presumption for convenience in the administration of estates (Farwell on Powers, 3rd ed., p. 339); see, e.g., Re Widdow's Trusts, (1871) 11 Eq. 408 (widow 55½ years and spinster 53½ years); Re Millner's Estate, (1872) 14 Eq. 245 (married woman 49½ years, but childless); Davidson v. Kimpton, (1881) 18 Ch. D. 213 (spinster 54 years); but the Court refused to make the presumption in Croxton v. May, (1878) 9 Ch. D. 388 (woman 54½ years but married three years previously).

The Roman Civil law divides age thus:—

I. Infantia, from birth to 7 years.

II. Pueritia. { (a) Ætas infantie proxima, from 7 to 10½.
(b) Ætas pubertatis proxima, from 10½ to 14.

III. Pubertas, from 14 upwards. During infantia and ætas infantie proxima, a person was not punishable for any crime. During ætas pubertatis proxima, a person was liable, if doli capax. At pubertas, a person became fully responsible.—Tayl. C. L. 254 et seq.

Agency, the relation which exists between one person, called 'the principal' and another person called 'the agent' who, by his authority, express or implied, acts on his behalf. See AGENT.

Agency, Deed of, a revocable and voluntary trust for payment of debts.—Consult Lewin on Trusts.

Agentfrida, the true lord or owner of anything.—Cowel.

Agenthine, otherwise, but less correctly, 'Hogenhine,' and also 'Third-night awne hine,' a guest at an inn, who having stayed there for three nights, was then accounted one of the family, 'and if he offend the king's peace, his host' had to be 'answerable for him.'—Bracton, lib. 3, c. 10, s. 2.

Agent, a person acting for another, whether by his express or implied authority, the general rule being, that whatever a person may do himself, that he may, as 'principal,' authorize another to do for him, and in accordance with the maxim, qui facit per alium facit per se, to fix him with the same liability in contract or tort as if he had done it himself. See BROKER, FACTOR, MERCANTILE AGENT, VICARIOUS RESPONSIBILITY, and consult Bowstead on Agency or Evans on Principal and Agent.

Where the principal is disclosed, only the principal can be sued. Where the principal is not disclosed, but the agent acts as agent, either the agent or the principal, when disclosed, can be sued. If an agent represents himself as such, and contract for an undisclosed and unascertained principal, his contract may be ratified by the principal when disclosed and ascertained.

If a person when making a contract does not disclose that he is acting as agent, a principal who subsequently ratifies, cannot inconsistently with the contract render himself able to sue or liable to be sued (Durant v. Keighley, Maxted & Co., 1910, A. C. 240).

The expression 'agents or servants' used in the Carriage of Goods by Sea Act, 1924 (14 & 15 Geo. 5, c. 22), Sched., Art. IV., r. 2 (2), includes stevedores (Heyn and Others v. Ocean Steamship Co. Ltd., (1927) 43 T. L. R. 358).

For the purposes of s. 136 (2) of the Companies Act, 1929 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 23), the expression 'agents' in relation to a company shall be deemed to include the bankers and solicitors of the company and any persons employed by the company as auditors whether those persons are or are not officers of the company.

An agent who represents himself to have authority when in fact he has none, is answerable to those who are deceived by him for the breach of an implied warranty (Collen v. Wright, (1857) 7 E. & B. 301; Godwin v. Francis, (1870) L. R. 5 C. P. 295; Durant v. Keighley, Maxted & Co., 1910, A. C.

240). As to election agents see the Parliamentary Elections Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 125), by new law. As to bribery of agents and their secret profits, see CORRUPTION.

Agentes et consentientes pari pœna plectentur. 5 Rep. 80.—(Acting and consenting parties are liable to the same punishment.)

Agents-General. The colonies forming the Commonwealth of Australia are each represented in London by an official called an Agent-General. The Commonwealth is represented as an entity by a High Commissioner.

Age-prier, or prayer [ætatis precatio, Lat.], to pray age; thus, when an action is brought against a minor for the recovery of lands, which he possesses by descent, he petitions or moves the Court to stay the action until he attain his majority, which is generally acceded to.—Termes de la Ley.

Aggravated Assaults. 'Aggravated' means aggravated in respect of violence, not by reason of indecency, R. v. Baker, (1876) 46 L. J. Ex. 75; on females or boys under fourteen, see Offences against the Person Act, 1861, s. 43, which allows two justices, 'if the assault or battery is of such an aggravated nature that it cannot in their opinion be sufficiently punished under the provisions of s. 42 as to common assaults and batteries,' to give a convicted offender six months' imprisonment with hard labour or to fine him up to 20*l.* including costs (the maximum punishment for a common assault being two months' imprisonment, or a fine up to 5*l.*) and to bind him over to keep the peace. Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (c. 86), s. 39 (2), has increased the fine up to 50*l.*, not including costs.

Aggravation, the increase of the enormity of a wrong. Matters of mere aggravation, that is, which tend only to increase the amount of damages, and do not constitute the right of action itself, need not be traversed in pleading. In a count, for example, charging a trespass in pulling down a house, it is mere matter of aggravation to state that the plaintiff was in it at the time. And see DAMAGES.

Aggregate, a collocation of individuals, units, or things, in order to form a whole.

Aggregation of all property passing at death in one estate for the purposes of ascertaining the rate of estate duty. See ESTATE DUTY.

Aggressor, the beginner of a quarrel or dispute.

Agild [sine mulcta, Lat.], free from penalties, not subject to customary fines or impositions.—Blount.

Agiler [fr. a gilt, Sax., without fault], an observer or informer.—Ibid.

Agillarius, a hey-ward, a herd-ward, or keeper of cattle in a common field, solemnly sworn at the lord's court. There were two sorts, one of the town or village, another of the lord of the manor.—Ken. Paroch. Antiq., 534, 576.

Agio [aggio, Ital., an exchange of money for a premium], expresses the difference in point of value between metallic and paper money, or between one sort of metallic money and another.—McCall. Com. Dict.; Smith's Wealth of Nations.

Agistment [fr. jacere, Lat.; gesir, Fr., to lie, whence giste, a lodging], the taking in of other men's cattle into pasture-land, at a certain rate per week, without letting them the land for their exclusive use as tenants; so called because the cattle are suffered agiser, i.e., to be levant et couchant there. Also the profit of such feeding. As to the extent to which the 'agister' is liable for negligence in the keeping of the cattle, see Halestrap v. Gregory, 1895, 1 Q. B. 561. A restriction upon the power of distraining agisted cattle (in some parts of the country called 'tacks') for rent is imposed by s. 35 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923. See also Manwood's Forest Laws, cc. 11–80, where to 'agist' is to take in and feed strangers' cattle in the Royal Forest and to collect the money due for it. Agistment does not include a right of lien. Chapman v. Allen, (1631) Cro. Car. 271.

Agistment of sea banks [terræ agitatæ, Lat.] is where lands are charged with a tribute to keep out the sea.

Agnates, agnati, or adgnati, relations derived per virilis sexus personas, i.e., relations by the father's side, as distinguished from cognati, relations by the mother's. An agnate is related by generation; thus, my son, brother, paternal uncle, and their children, as also my daughter and sister, are agnated to me. See Smith's Dict. of Antiq.; Maine's Ancient Law.

Agnation, kinship by the father's side.

Agnomen, a name derived from some notable personal circumstance, as the name Africanus, borne by the two Scipios on account of their victories over the Carthaginians.

Agnomination, a surname.

Agnus Dei (Lat.), a piece of white wax, in a flat, oval form, like a small cake, stamped with the figure of a lamb, and consecrated by the Pope.

Agraria lex, an Agrarian law. Agrarian laws were enacted to distribute among the Roman people lands which they had gained by conquest, or to limit the quantity of such land possessed by each person to a certain number of acres.—Cicero pro Leg. Agr.

Agreed. This word in a deed creates a covenant. As to the persons respectively bound by a clause beginning 'It is hereby agreed,' see Dawes v. Tredwell, (1881) 18 Ch. D. 359. By the Real Property Act, 1845, as reproduced and extended by L. P. Act, 1925, s. 56, a person may take an immediate interest or the benefit of any covenant or agreement over land or other property although not named as a party to the Agreement. See COVENANT.

Agreement [fr. gratus, Lat., acceptable; aggregatio mentium, Lat.], a consensus of two or more minds in anything done or to be done. See CONTRACT.

Agri, arable lands in common fields.

Agri limitati, lands belonging to the state by right of conquest, and granted or sold in plots.—Sand. Just.

Agricultural Children Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 67). This Act made regulations as to the employment of children under ten years of age. It was repealed by the Elementary Education Act, 1876, which was itself repealed by the Education Act, 1921, see Part VIII. of which for restrictions on employment of children and young persons, and see Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 12), s. 18. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Education.'

Agricultural Credits Acts, 1923 and 1928, The 1923 Act to facilitate the advance of money and granting of credit for agricultural purposes and to amend the Improvement of Land Act, 1864. The Public Works Loans Commissioners are empowered to lend to associations money to be advanced upon mortgage to certain persons for the purpose of buying land for agricultural purposes. See the Act and the Agricultural Credits (Approved Associations) Regulations, 1923, and the Agricultural Credits (Advances to Credit Societies) Regulations, 1923. Under the Agricultural Credits Acts, 1928 and 1932, an agricultural loan company has been established for making long-term loans, and also for short-term loans which may be charged on farming stock.

Agricultural Fixtures. See AGRICULTURAL HOLDINGS ACTS, 1923, and FIXTURES.

Agricultural Gangs Act, 1887 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 130). This Act, after reciting that in certain counties in England certain persons known as gangmasters hire children, young persons, and women, with a view to contracting with farmers and others for the execution on their lands of various kinds of agricultural work, enacts certain regulations to be observed by gangmasters, and requires them to obtain licences. Amended as to children by the Agricultural Children Act, 1873, ante.

Agricultural Holdings Acts, 1923 (13 & 14 Geo. 5, cc. 9 and 25). By a series of statutes commencing with the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1875, statutory compensation has been provided for an outgoing agricultural tenant in respect of the improvements effected by him during his tenancy. The operation of this Act could be and frequently was excluded by agreement, but now the tenant cannot deprive himself by contract of the right to claim compensation which is conferred on him by the Act, although he may within limits substitute other benefits by agreement. The Act of 1923 (as amended by the Agricultural Holdings Amendment Act, 1923) repeals and consolidates all the earlier statutes dealing with the subject, and confers on outgoing tenants of 'holdings' the rights and benefits briefly outlined below. The term 'holding' means any parcel of land held by a tenant which is wholly agricultural or wholly pastoral, or in whole or in part cultivated as a market garden, and which is not let to the tenant during his continuance in any office, appointment or employment under the landlord, but it does not include an allotment garden or land unless cultivated wholly or mainly for the purpose of the trade of market gardening (s. 57). See Re Joel's Lease, 1930, 2 Ch. 359.

1. Compensation for Improvements (ss. 1-8).—Where a tenant of a holding makes any improvement comprised in the First Schedule of the Act (or where the contract of tenancy was made on or after January 1st, 1921, whether required by it to make the improvement or not), the tenant becomes entitled at the termination of the tenancy on quitting the holding to compensation from the landlord for the improvement, the compensation being such sum as fairly represents the value of the improvement to an incoming tenant, allowance being made for any benefit allowed by the landlord in consideration of the improvement being made by the tenant.

The principal improvements mentioned in the First Schedule are :—

(1) Buildings, silos, laying down permanent pasture, various kinds of planting, fencing, works, etc.—For these the written consent of the landlord is required : the consent may be either unconditional or upon such terms as to compensation as may be agreed, which terms take the place of the statutory compensation.

(2) Drainage.—For this, written notice to the landlord is necessary not more than three nor less than two months before beginning to execute the improvement. Terms of compensation may be agreed in place of the statutory compensation. The parties may agree to dispense with notice.

(3) Chalking of land, clay burning, liming, marling, manuring with artificial or purchased manure. Consumption on the holding by animals, other than those regularly employed on the holding, of foodstuffs not produced on the holding or of corn produced on the holding. Laying down temporary pasture with clover, etc., sown more than two years prior to the termination of the tenancy.—Neither consent nor notice is necessary.

(4) Repairs to necessary buildings other than repairs which the tenant is obliged to execute.—The tenant must give notice with particulars before beginning to execute the repairs and give the landlord a reasonable time to carry them out himself.

In the case of (3) and (4), an agreement entered into before January 1st, 1921, which provides for fair and reasonable compensation to the tenant, may substitute the compensation therein agreed to for the statutory compensation. Where an outgoing tenant has been paid for improvements by an incoming tenant with the landlord's written consent, the incoming tenant is entitled on quitting the holding to claim compensation in respect of the improvements in like manner as if the outgoing tenant had continued in occupation. The Act contains restrictions on compensation in respect of improvements by tenants about to quit.

2. Compensation in respect of increased or diminished value of holding (ss. 9 and 10).—The Act provides for compensation to a tenant who increases the value of the holding to an incoming tenant by the continuous adoption of a standard or system of farming more beneficial than that required by the contract of tenancy. Compensation is not payable unless a record of the condition of the holding has been made under statute and the tenant has given notice of his intention to claim compensation to the landlord (s. 9). S. 10 contains similar provisions entitling the landlord to compensation for failure by the tenant to cultivate in accordance with the rules of good husbandry or the terms of his tenancy.

3. Compensation for Damage by Game.—S. 11 provides for compensation in this respect to be assessed by arbitration. See GAME.

4. Compensation for Disturbance (ss. 12-14).—If a tenant quits a holding by reason of a notice to quit given by the landlord, compensation for disturbance is payable, unless the tenant was not cultivating according to good husbandry or had failed after notice within a reasonable time to pay rent due or to remedy a breach of a term or condition of good husbandry, or had materially prejudiced the landlord's interests by a breach of the tenancy incapable of remedy, or had become bankrupt or had refused to arbitrate as to rent or had refused to execute an agreement setting out the terms of the existing tenancy, and if the notice to quit states that it is given for one or more of the above reasons. The compensation is such loss or expense as is directly attributable to the quitting of the holding as the tenant may unavoidably incur in connection with the sale or removal of household goods, implements, fixtures, farm produce and stock. To avoid disputes this sum is taken to be equivalent to one year's rent unless proved to exceed this sum, but is limited to the equivalent to two years' rent. S. 15 contains provisions as to compensation where a mortgagee takes possession of a holding occupied by a tenant of the mortgagor under a contract of tenancy not binding on the mortgagee.

5. Arbitration (ss. 16-19 and Sch. II).—Any question or difference between landlord and tenant of a holding, arising out of any claim for compensation payable under the Act, or for breach of contract in respect of the holding, or in respect of waste, etc., is to be determined, notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary, by a single arbitrator in accordance with the provisions in Schedule II. Such claims are not enforceable unless particulars thereof have been given within two months of the expiration of the tenancy.

6. Fixtures and Buildings (s. 22).—Any engine, machinery, fencing or other fixture affixed to a holding by a tenant, and any building erected by him for which he is not entitled to compensation and which is not fixed or erected in pursuance of an obligation to the landlord, is the property of the tenant and removable by him, provided no rent is owing and he has performed all his obligations in respect of the holding and he does no avoidable damage and makes good damage done by the removal. He must give a month's notice to the landlord, who may elect to purchase the fixture or building.

7. Notices to Quit (s. 25).—Notwithstanding anything in a contract of tenancy to the contrary, a notice to quit a holding shall be invalid if it purports to terminate the tenancy before the expiration of twelve months from the end of the then current year of tenancy. There are certain exceptions.

8. Distress (ss. 34-37).—A landlord may not distrain for rent which became due more than one year before making the distress, unless by the ordinary course of dealing between the landlord and tenant the payment has been deferred until the expiration of a quarter or half-year after the rent became due, in which case the later date is to be taken as the date when the rent became due. Certain limitations are imposed in respect of things which can be distrained. All disputes arising out of a distress may be determined by a County Court or a Court of Summary Jurisdiction.

9. Market Gardens (ss. 48 and 49 and Sch. III).—Market garden includes part of private premises so treated (Saunders-Jacob v. Yates, 1933, 2 K. B. 240). In the case of a holding in respect of which it is agreed in writing on or after January 1st, 1896, that the holding shall be treated as a market garden, the Act applies as if the improvements mentioned in the Third Schedule formed part of Part III. of the First Schedule. These improvements are the planting of fruit trees and bushes, strawberry plants and various vegetable crops, and the erection of buildings for the purpose of the trade or business of a market gardener. See MARKET GARDEN; HOLDING. For further provisions consult the Act and the Agricultural Holdings (England) Rules of 1923 (No. 779) and Spencer's Agricultural Holdings Acts.

Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1928 (13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 10), a consolidating Act of similar scope to the last title and differing therefrom principally in respect of procedure. Slightly amended by 13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 25.

Agricultural Land 'means any land used as arable, meadow, or pasture ground only, cottage gardens exceeding one quarter of an acre, market gardens, nursery grounds, orchards or allotments, but does not include land occupied together with a house as a park, gardens other than as aforesaid, pleasure grounds, or any land kept or preserved mainly or exclusively for purposes of sport or recreation, or land used as a race-course.'—Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, s. 9.

Compare definition of 'agriculture' in Small Holdings and Allotments Act, 1908, s. 61, as including 'horticulture, forestry and the use of land for any purpose of husbandry, inclusive of keeping or breeding of live stock, poultry or bees, and the growth of fruit, vegetables and the like.'

The Act of 1931 (21 & 22 Geo. 5, c. 42) enables schemes to be made for regulating the marketing of agricultural products, foods and drinks made or derived therefrom, and fleeces and skins of animals, to establish marketing boards in connection with such schemes, to establish funds for loans to these boards, and to encourage agricultural co-operation, research and education. The Act of 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 31) amends and extends the 1931 Act by provisions for restrictions on the importation and sale of agricultural products and for the production of such secondary agricultural products wholly or partly manufactured or derived from another agricultural product as may be specified by an order in force under s. 7, Part II., of the Act of 1933. Schemes under the Act of 1931 may be submitted by the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries after consultation with the Board of Trade by laying a draft before each House of Parliament, and if each House resolves that the scheme be approved, the Minister may make an order in the terms of the draft. Schemes under the 1931 Act must provide inter alia for penalties on offences by registered producers and for references to arbitration, for the prohibition of sales by persons who are not registered producers or exempt from the scheme (s. 5). Under the Act of 1933, the Board of Trade after consultation with the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries may, under similar conditions, make an order regulating the importation into the United Kingdom of agricultural products of kinds which are the subject of schemes under the Acts and cannot be effectively developed without restricting importation, and such restriction may relate either to quantity or description of the product, the interests of consumers being taken into consideration, see s. 1. The Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries may at the same time regulate the sales by producers or Boards in the United Kingdom of products of a kind affected by the importation order. Development Schemes for the production of secondary products (supra) may include penalties on every person who produces any article in contravention of such scheme (s. 6 (5) of 1933). Part IV. of the Act of 1933, extending the Agricultural Produce (Grading and Marketing) Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 19), enacts that sales of more than 24 eggs produced in Great Britain must be by weight or under grade designation. The Acts apply to Scotland, with modifications, but not to Northern Ireland. See also the Agricultural Marketing (No. 2) Act, 1933 (24 Geo. 5, c. 1), and the Milk Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 51). Schemes and Orders restricting importation have been made in connection with a variety of agricultural products such as Hops, Pigs, Bacon and Milk.

Agricultural Produce (Grading and Marketing) Acts, 1928 and 1931 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 19, and 21 & 22 Geo. 5, c. 40), enable the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries to make regulations prescribing grade designation marks of statutory definitions as defined in the Regulations for agricultural produce. The Act of 1931 extends these provisions to fish. Regulations affecting meat and many varieties of fruit and vegetables have been issued by the Minister, see also the Agricultural Marketing Act, 1933, as to eggs. The Act applies to Scotland with modifications, but not to Northern Ireland.

Agricultural Rates. The Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, as amended by the Agricultural Rates Act, 1923, provides that the occupier (including the owner if rated in place of the occupier) of agricultural land shall be liable to one quarter only of the rate in the pound payable in respect of buildings and other hereditaments. These exemptions were preserved by the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925, s. 22, but agricultural land and buildings are now entirely derated, see the Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928, and the Local Government Act, 1929, s. 67.

Agricultural Returns Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 39). Under this Act the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries may by regulation prescribe forms of agricultural returns or persons from whom these returns are required. The Act applies to Scotland with modifications, but not to Northern Ireland.

Agriculture and Fisheries, Ministry of. The Board of Agriculture, created by the Board of Agriculture Act, 1889, to take over the powers of the Privy Council as to the diseases of animals, and of the Land Commissioners under the Copyhold, Inclosure and Tithe Acts, etc., had transferred to it by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries Act, 1903, the powers of the Board of Trade under the Salmon Fishery Act, 1861, the Sea Fisheries Regulation Act, 1868, and other Fishery Acts, and took the style of 'The Board of Agriculture and Fisheries.' There is power to appoint two secretaries, who can sit and vote in the House of Commons. The Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries Act, 1919, replaced the Board and its President by a Minister and Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries. The Board had in fact never met, but its opinions had been those of its permanent officials and of its President. See Board of Agriculture and Fisheries Act, 1909, the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries Act, 1919.

Agriculture, Department of, for Scotland.

A department of the Secretary of State for Scotland takes the place of the Board of Agriculture for Scotland which was established by the Small Landholders (Scotland) Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 49), and which was charged with the general duty of promoting the interests of agriculture, forestry, and other rural industries in Scotland.

Agusadura, in ancient customs, a fee, due from the vassals to their lord for sharpening their ploughing tackle. Anciently, the tenants in some manors were not allowed to have their agricultural implements sharpened by any but those whom the lord appointed, for which an acknowledgment was paid, called agusadura or agusage, which some take to be the same with what was otherwise called rullage, from the ancient French, reille, a ploughshare.—Encyc. Londin.

Agweddi [ag-gweed, conjunction], a portion given with a bride.—Anc. Inst. Wales.

Aid of the King [auxilium regis, Lat.], the king's tenant prays this, when rent is demanded of him by others. A city or borough, holding a fee-farm from the king, if anything be demanded which belongs to such fee-farm, may pray, in 'aid of the king,' and the king's bailiffs, collectors, or accountants shall have aid of the king. The proceedings are then stayed until the Crown counsel are heard, but this aid will not be granted after issue, because the Crown cannot rely upon the defence made by another.—Termes de la Ley.

Aid Prayer, formerly made use of in pleading for a petition in Court, praying in aid of the tenant for life, etc., from the reversioner or remainderman, when the title to the inheritance was in question. It was a plea in suspension of the action.—Com. Dig. 'Abide,' B. 5.

Alders, advocates, abettors. See ACCESSARY.

Aids [fr. aides, Fr.; auxilia, Lat.], originally mere benevolences granted by a tenant to his lord in times of distress, but at length the lords claimed them as of right. They were principally three: (1) To ransom the lord's person, if taken prisoner; (2) To make the lord's eldest son and heir apparent a knight; (3) To give a suitable portion to the lord's eldest daughter on her marriage. Abolished by 12 Car. 2, c. 24. Also extraordinary grants to the Crown by the House of Commons, and which were the origin of the modern system of taxation.—2 Bl. Com. 63, 64.

Aiel, or Alle [fr. aiel, Fr.; avus, Lat., a grandfather], a writ which lay when a man's grandfather, or great-grandfather (called besaile), died seised of lands in fee-simple, and on the day of his death the heir was dispossessed of his inheritance by a stranger.—Fitz. N. B. 222.

Aillt [aill, other], a villein.—Anc. Inst. Wales.

Ainsty, a district on the south-west of the city of York, annexed thereto by 27 Hen. 6, and subject to the Lord Mayor and Corporation under the name of the county of the city of York.—Gorton's Topographical Dictionary.

Air. As to the right to the enjoyment of air free and unpolluted, see Gale on Easements, and Goddard on Easements; but the claim to air is usually made good under a claim to light and air. The nature and extent of the right to air (which is not a subject of prescription within the Prescription Act) is discussed by Fry, J., in Hall v. Lichfield Brewery Co., (1880) 49 L. J. Ch. 655, in which damages were given for the obstruction of air to a slaughter-house; and see Bass v. Gregory, (1890) 25 Q. B. D. 481, and Chastey v. Ackland, 1897, A. C. 155.

Air Board. The New Ministries and Secretaries Act, 1916, established the Air Board for the purpose of organizing and maintaining the supply of air-craft during the Great War. It was superseded by the Air Council in 1917. See AIR FORCE.

Air Council. See AIR FORCE.

Air-craft. See AERIAL NAVIGATION ACTS.

Air Force. The Air Forces (Constitution) Act, 1917, replaced the Air Board by the Air Council, and provides that it shall consist of a Secretary of State and other persons appointed in accordance with s. 8. The Air Force is subject to the Army Act, and its organization, administration and discipline is further provided for by the Act of 1917 and succeeding Acts. See also Auxiliary

Air Force and Air Force Reserve Act, 1924.

Air Navigation. See AERIAL NAVIGATION.

Airway, a passage for the admission of air into a mine. To maliciously fill up, obstruct, or damage, with intent to destroy, obstruct, or render useless the airway to any mine, is a felony punishable by penal servitude or imprisonment at the discretion of the Court (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 28).

Al or Ald [eald, Sax., age]. This syllable prefixed to the names of places denotes antiquity, as Aldborough, i.e., Old Borough, Aldeburgh, Aldworth, Aldgate, etc.—Blount.

Alabama, The. See GENEVA ARBITRATION.

Ala Campi, Wingfield.

Alæ ecclesiæ, the wings or side aisles of a church.—Cowel.

Alænus, the river Axe, in Devonshire.

Alanerarius, a manager and keeper of dogs for the sport of hawking; from alanus, a dog known to the ancients. A falconer.

Alauna, Alnwick in Northumberland; also Alcester in Warwickshire.

Alba firma. When quit-rents payable to the Crown by freeholders of manors were reserved in silver or white money, they were called white-rents or blanch-farms, reditus albi, in contradistinction to rents reserved in work, grain, etc., which were called reditus nigri, black-mail.—2 Inst. 19.

Albinatus, jus, the droit d'aubaine in France, whereby the king, at an alien's death, was entitled to all his property, unless he had peculiar exemption. Repealed by the French laws in June, 1791.

Albo Monasterio, De, Whitechurch.

Albom, white-rent paid in silver. See ALBA FIRMA.

Albrea and Albericus, Aubrey.

Albus Liber, an ancient book containing a compilation of the law and customs of the City of London. It has lately been reprinted by order of the Master of the Rolls.

Alcalde, a judicial officer in Spain.

Alder, the first, as alder best is the best of all; alder liefest, the most dear.

Alder Carr, land covered with alders.—Norfolk phrase.

Alderman [ealdorman, Ang.-Sax., fr. eald, old, ealdor, a parent]. Originally the word was synonymous with 'elder,' but was also used to designate an earl, and even a king. The word is now confined to the class of municipal officers in a borough next in order to the mayor. The Municipal Corporations Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76), which gave aldermen no special duties of any importance, enacted that they should be in number one-third of the number of the councillors, should remain six years in office (being twice the length of the councillors' period of office), and be elected by the councillors, but not necessarily from amongst the councillors; and this enactment is repeated by s. 14 of the consolidating Act of 1882; but the Municipal Corporations Amendment Act, 1910, provides that aldermen shall not vote in the election of an alderman or mayor. As to number, qualification and term of office in boroughs, see Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), s. 21. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATION; and as to 'county aldermen,' see COUNTY COUNCIL.

Alderney, see CHANNEL ISLANDS.

Alditheleia, De, Audley.

Ale. See ALE-HOUSE, and see LICENSE.

Alea [a die, Lat.], the chance of gain or loss in a contract.—Civil Law.

Aleatory Contract, an agreement of which the effects, with respect both to the advantages and losses, whether to all parties, or to some of them, depend on an uncertain event.—Ibid. See WAGERING CONTRACT.

Alecinarium, a hawk, called also a lanner.

Ale-conner, or Ale-founder, or Ale-kenner [gustator, cerevisiæ Lat.], one who kens or knows what good ale is; an officer appointed at a court-leet, who is sworn to look at the assize and goodness of ale and beer within the precincts of the lordship.—Kitch. 46. There were at one time four ale-conners, chosen by the liverymen of the City of London, in Common hall, on Midsummer-day, whose office it was to inspect the measures used in public-houses.

Ale-house, a place where ale with other intoxicating liquors, as deemed proper by the keeper, is sold by retail to be drunk on the premises where sold. Such a house, commonly called also a public-house, has for a long time, by a series of Acts consolidated in 1828 by 9 Geo. 4, c. 61 (styled 'The Alehouse Act, 1828,' by the Short Titles Act, 1896, but (and more correctly) 'The Intoxicating Liquors Licensing Act, 1828,' by the Licensing Act, 1872), required a license from justices of the peace as well as an excise license; whereas the houses called beer-houses, first established in 1830 by 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 64, required an excise license only until the passing of the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869. See INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

Aleler. See ADLEGIARE.

Ale Silver, a rent or tribute paid annually to the Lord Mayor of London, by those who sold ale within the liberty of the City.—Blount's Law Dict.

Ale-stake, a maypole or long stake driven into the ground, with a sign on it for the sale of ale.—Blount.

Ale-taster. See ALE-CONNER.

Alfet, a cauldron into which boiling water was poured, in which a criminal plunged his arm up to the elbow and there held it for some time, as an ordeal.

Algarum maris, probably a corruption of Laganum maris, lagan being a right, in the Middle Ages, like jetsam and flotsam, by which goods thrown from a vessel in distress became the property of the king or the lord on whose shores they were stranded.—Jac. Law Dict., Du Cange.

Alla enormia [Lat.] (other wrongs). A declaration in trespass sometimes concluded thus:—‘and other wrongs to the plaintiff then did,’ etc. This was technically called an allegation of alia enormia.

Allamenta, a liberty of passage, open way, watercourse, etc., for the tenant's accommodation.

Alias (otherwise), a second or further writ, which was issued after a first writ had expired without effect. Abolished by the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, s. 10. As to concurrent writs, see R. S. C. Ord. VI., rr. 1, 1a, 2 and 2a.

Alias (dictus) (otherwise called), a second name applied to a person where he has been styled or has styled himself by more names than one, as in the case of Reg. v. Thomas Castro, otherwise Arthur Orton, otherwise Sir Roger Charles Doughty Tichborne, Baronet, (1873) L. R. 9 Q. B. 219.

Alibi (elsewhere). It is a defence resorted to where the party accused, in order to prove that he could not have committed the crime with which he is charged, offers evidence that he was in a different place at the time the offence was committed.

Alien [fr. alienigena, alibi natus, Lat.], a person not born within His Majesty's dominions and allegiance (q.v.). See definitions in the British Nationality and Status of Aliens Acts, 1914 and 1933, infra. At common law aliens were subject to very many disqualifications, the nature of which is shown by the Act of 1844, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 66, which greatly relaxed the law in their favour. It provided, inter alia, that every person born of a British mother should be capable of holding real or personal estate; that alien friends might hold every species of personal property except chattels real; that subjects of a friendly power might hold lands, etc., for the purposes of residence or business for a term not exceeding twenty-one years; and it also provided for aliens becoming naturalized.

The Naturalization Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 14), repealed the above and other Acts, and contained further provisions in favour of aliens, but this Act, together with several others, has been repealed and the statute law on the subject is now contained in the British Nationality and Status of Aliens Act, 1914, as amended by the Acts of the same name of 1918 and 1922. This Act is divided into three parts, the first (s. 1) dealing with natural-born British subjects; the second (ss. 2–9) with the naturalization of aliens; and the third (ss. 10–28) containing certain general and supplemental provisions, relating to the national status of married women and infant children, loss of British nationality, the status of aliens, and procedure and evidence.

The effect of the Act is shortly as follows: By s. 1 the following persons are deemed natural-born British subjects:—

(a) Any person born within His Majesty's dominions and allegiance; and

(b) Any person born out of His Majesty's dominions, whose father was a British subject at the time of that person's birth and either was born within His Majesty's allegiance or was a person to whom a certificate of naturalization had been granted or had become a British subject by reason of any annexation of territory, or was at the time of that person's birth in the service of the Crown, or his birth was registered at a British Consulate within one year (or with the consent of the Secretary of State two years) after its occurrence, or if born after 31st December, 1914, a person who would have been a British subject if born before 1st January, 1915, and who was born within twelve months after 1st August, 1922; and

(c) Any person born on board a British ship whether in foreign territorial waters or not:

Provided that the child of a British subject, whether that child was born before or after the passing of the Act, will be deemed to have been born within His Majesty's allegiance if born in a place where by treaty, capitulation, grant, usage, sufferance, or other lawful means, His Majesty exercises jurisdiction over British subjects. Any person whose British nationality is conditional on registration at a British Consulate shall cease to be a British subject unless within one year after he attains the age of twenty-one (or some other age authorized by regulation) he asserts his British nationality by a declaration of retention registered in accordance with regulations made under the Act (as amended by the British Nationality and Status of Aliens Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 49)), and divests himself of any other nationality; and see MARRIED WOMAN.

A person born on board a foreign ship will not be deemed to be a British subject by reason only that the ship was in British territorial waters at the time of his birth.

Except as otherwise expressly provided, nothing in s. 1 is to affect the status of any person born before the commencement of the Act. See R. v. Albany, etc., Superintendent, 1915, 3 K. B. 716.

By s. 2 the Secretary of State may, on application and in his absolute discretion, grant a certificate of naturalization to an alien who satisfies the Secretary—

(a) That he has either resided in His Majesty's dominions for a period of not less than five years in the manner required by the section, or been in the service of the Crown for not less than five years within the last eight years before the application; and

(b) That he is of good character and has an adequate knowledge of the English language; and

(c) That he intends if his application is granted either to reside in His Majesty's dominions or to enter or continue in the service of the Crown.

The residence required is residence in the United Kingdom for not less than one year immediately preceding the application, and previous residence in some part of the King's dominions, here or elsewhere, for four years within the last eight. If the Secretary of State thinks fit, a period spent in the service of the Crown may be treated as equivalent to a period of residence in the United Kingdom. The certificate does not take effect till the applicant has taken the oath of allegiance. The certificate gives the grantee all the rights, powers, and privileges and subjects him to all obligations, duties and liabilities of a natural-born British subject, and gives him the status of such a subject (s. 3).

Section 4 deals with the granting of special certificates in cases of doubt, s. 5 with the case of persons under disability, s. 6 with the case of persons previously naturalized, and s. 7 empowers the Secretary of State to revoke certificates obtained by false representations or in the case of a person who has communicated or traded with an enemy or within specified limits been fined or imprisoned in the Empire, or who was not of good character at the date of the certificate. Section 8 empowers the Governments of British possessions to grant certificates of Imperial naturalization, and s. 9 provides that the provisions of the Act as to naturalization shall not have effect within the Self-Governing Dominions unless the Government of the Dominion adopts them.

The third part of the Act deals with the national status of married women (s. 10) (see below), the status of widows (s. 11), the status of children (s. 12), the loss of British nationality by foreign naturalization (s. 13), and declarations of alienage (s. 14). By s. 15 power is given to naturalized subjects to divest themselves of their status in certain cases, but (s. 16) with a saving of obligations incurred before the loss of nationality.

The Act of 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 44), repealing s. 10, supra, gave facilities to married women of British nationality to retain that nationality in certain cases.

With certain exceptions, no alien enemy was to be naturalized for ten years after the termination of the Great War.

The important question of the status of aliens is dealt with by ss. 17 and 18, which are as follows:—

17. Real and personal property of every description may be taken, acquired, held and disposed of by an alien in the same manner in all respects as by a natural-born British subject; and a title to real and personal property of every description may be derived through, from or in succession to an alien in the same manner in all respects as through, from or in succession to a natural-born British subject:

Provided that this section shall not operate so as to—

(1) Confer any right on an alien to hold real property situate out of the United Kingdom; or

(2) Qualify an alien for any office or for any municipal, parliamentary, or other franchise; or

(3) Qualify an alien to be the owner of a British ship; or

(4) Entitle an alien to any right or privilege as a British subject, except such rights and privileges in respect of property as are hereby expressly given to him; or

(5) Affect any estate in real or personal property to which any person has or may become entitled, either mediately or immediately, in possession or expectancy, in pursuance of any disposition made before the twelfth day of May, 1870, or in pursuance of any devolution by law on the death of any person dying before that day.

18. An alien shall be triable in the same manner as if he were a natural-born British subject.

It should, however, be observed that the right to own land which has been conferred on companies registered under the Companies Act, 1929, notwithstanding the Mortmain Acts, has not been extended to alien companies established outside Great Britain and carrying on business in England (q.v.), and see Part XI. of the Act (ss. 343 et seq.).

Sections 19 to 24 deal with questions of procedure and evidence, the Secretary of State being empowered to make regulations for carrying into effect the objects of the Act. Section 25 contains a saving for letters of denization, and s. 26 a saving for the powers of Legislatures and Governments of British possessions; and s. 27 defines a 'British subject' as meaning a person who is a natural-born British subject, or a person to whom a certificate of naturalization has been granted, and an 'alien' as a person who is not a British subject.

Aliens are now controlled by the Aliens Restriction Act, 1914, as amended by the Aliens Restriction Amendment Act, 1919. By an Order in Council aliens may be prohibited from landing or leaving the United Kingdom: may be deported, made to register themselves, and many other provisions may be made. The Act was originally a war measure, but has to date been continued annually. The Secretary of State frequently deports undesirable aliens upon the recommendation of Courts of Summary Jurisdiction. Reference should be made to the above-mentioned Acts.

As to the position of an alien residing within the realm who violates the local allegiance which he owes to the Crown, see Johnstone v. Pedlar, 1921, A. C. 262, and the cases there cited, and DEPORTATION.

Aliens may be insured persons under the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1935 (25 Geo. 5, c. 8), s. 1, and the National Health Insurance Act, 1936, s. 2.

Alien ami, or amy, a subject of a nation which is at peace with this country. See ALIEN.

Alien Enemy, a subject of a nation which is at war with this country. A contract with him is void (Brandon v. Nesbitt, (1794) 6 T. R. 23) unless he have a safe conduct or be living in this country by licence of the Crown; and so is a contract with his wife (De Wahl v. Braune, (1856) 25 L. J. Ex. 343). Further, not only commercial intercourse but all intercourse with an alien enemy is prohibited by the common law; see The Hoop, (1799) 1 C. Rob. 196, where Sir William Scott described an alien enemy as 'totally ex lega'; The Cosmopolite, (1801) 4 C. Rob. 8; The Panariellos, (1915) 138 L. T. Journ. 484. Nor can an alien enemy exercise a right of voting in respect of shares in an English company (Robson v. Premier Oil Co., 1915, 2 Ch. 124), nor (unless within the realm by the King's licence) can he sue here during the war, though he remains liable to be sued (Porter v. Freudenberg, 1915, 1 K. B. 857). As to the Crown's right at common law to forfeit the private property of subjects of an enemy state, see In re Ferdinand, Ex-Tzar of Bulgaria, 1931, 1 Ch. 107. The test of a person being an alien enemy is not his nationality but the place in which he resides or carries on business (Janson v. Driefontein, etc., Mines, 1902, A. C. at p. 505). See the Trading with Enemy Acts, 1914 to 1918, and the Former Enemy Aliens (Disabilities Removal) Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 43).

Alien nee, a man born an alien.

Alienage, the state of an alien.

Alienate, or Aliene, to transfer property.

Alienation, a transferring property to another.—Co. Litt. 118.

Alienation Office, a place to which all writs of covenants and entries were carried for the recovery of fines levied thereon.

Alienee, one to whom a transfer of property is made.

Alieni juris, a form of status; under potestas or authority of another, opposed to sui juris; the term is not used in English law. See Irish Just. i. 8.

Alienor, one who transfers property.

Aliment [fr. alimentum, Lat.], a fund for maintenance—alimony.—Scots Law.

Alimony [fr. alimonia, Lat.], the allowance made to a wife out of her husband's estate for her support, either during a matrimonial suit or at its termination, when she proves herself entitled to a separate maintenance, and the fact of a marriage is established. But she is not entitled to it if she elope with an adulterer, or wilfully leave her husband without any just cause for so doing.

It is of two kinds: (a) In causes between husband and wife. The husband is obliged to allow his wife alimony during the suit, and this whether the suit be commenced by or against him, and whatever its nature may be. It is usually such a sum as will provide the wife with one-fifth of the joint incomes, and will be reduced according to fluctuations of income. The wife may apply for an increase if his means have improved. (b) Permanent alimony, which is allotted to a wife after final decree. Alimony is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Probate and Divorce Division. The Court may direct its payment either to the wife herself or to a trustee on her behalf. The Judicature Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 49), s. 190, provides that on any decree for dissolution or nullity of marriage, the Court may order the husband to secure to the wife such gross sum or such annual sum for any term not exceeding her life, as, having regard to her fortune (if any), to the ability of the husband, and to the conduct of the parties, it may deem reasonable, and for that purpose may refer the matter to one of the conveying counsel of the Court to settle a proper deed to be executed by all necessary parties, and the Court may suspend pronouncing its decree until such deed shall have been executed.

The Court may order monthly or weekly payments, and may discharge the order, or increase, modify, or temporarily suspend the payments. In default of agreement it is usually one-third of the joint incomes for the wife alone, further provision being made if she has to support a child of the marriage. See Browne and Latcy, or Dixon on Divorce; and as to allowance of a reasonable weekly sum, not exceeding 2*l.*, by a Court of Summary Jurisdiction to a wife forced by cruelty to leave her husband or deserted by him, see the Married Women (Maintenance) Acts, 1895 and 1920, and Stone's Justices Manual. The same practice and principles as apply in the High Court will govern the allotment of such alimony (Cobb v. Cobb, 1900 P. 294).

Allo Intuitu, with a collateral motive, a motive other than the professed one: e.g., when a man brings an action by way of advertising his goods.

Aliter (otherwise).

Allud est celare, allud tacere.—(To conceal is one thing, to be silent another.) See Broom's Legal Maxims.

Alifunde, from another place or person.

Alkali Works. The Acts regulating alkali works, 26 & 27 Vict. c. 120—a temporary Act, made perpetual by 31 & 32 Vict. c. 36—and 37 & 38 Vict. c. 43, were consolidated and amended by the Alkali, etc., Works Regulation Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 37), s. 29 of which defined 'alkali work' as 'every work for the manufacture of alkali, sulphate of soda, or sulphate of potash in which muriatic acid gas is evolved,' and recently after further amendment in 1892, again consolidated with additional amendments by the Alkali, etc., Works Regulation Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 14), by s. 27 of which the expression 'alkali work' means every work for—(a) the manufacture of sulphate of soda or sulphate of potash, or (b) the treatment of copper ores by common salt or other chlorides whereby any sulphate is formed, in which muriatic acid gas is evolved.

Allaunds [fr. alanis, Scythiæ gente, Lat.], hare-hounds.—Cowel.

Allegans contraria non est audiendus. Jenk. Cent. 16.—(A person making contradictory allegations is not to be heard.) See Broom's Legal Maxims, and Buckland v. Johnson, (1854) 23 L. J. C. P. 204, where it was held that a plaintiff having sued one of two joint feasers in tort could not afterwards sue the other for money had and received. See also ELECTION.

Allegans suam turpitudinem non est audiendus. 4 Inst. 279.—(A person alleging his own infamy is not to be heard.)—This maxim of the civil law is no part of the law of evidence in England; and it is doubtful whether it ever was. See Best on Evidence. But a person cannot take advantage of his own wrong, and in equity, the maxim holds good that he who comes into equity must come with clean hands.

Allegata, a word anciently subscribed at the bottom of rescripts and constitutions of the Roman Emperors, as signata or testata under other instruments. It is synonymous with verificata, verified.—Encyc. Londin.

Allegata et probata, matters alleged and proved.

Allegation [fr. alleguer, Fr.; allegare, Lat., to allege], an asserted fact; the adduction of reasons or witnesses in support of an argument.

Allegation of Faculties, the statement of a person's means. A term formerly used in the Ecclesiastical Courts in proceedings for alimony.

Allegiance [fr. ligo, Lat.], the natural, lawful, and faithful obedience which every subject owes to the supreme magistrate who oversteps not his prerogatives. It is either natural or perpetual, where one is a subject born, or has been naturalized; or local and temporary, where one is merely a resident in the British dominions.—Co. Litt. 129 a. It is also either implied, so soon as the relationship of sovereign and subject is created; or express, which is the formal declaration of it. An alien resident within British territory owes allegiance to the Crown, and may be indicted for high treason, though not a subject (De Jager v. A.-G. of Natal, 1907, A. C. 326). It seems that the subject of a friendly state residing within the realm who violates the local allegiance which he owes to the Crown does not lose the rights of an alien amicus until the Crown withdraws its protection (Johnstone v. Pedlar, 1921, A. C. 262). See Broom's Const. Law, Calvin's Case.

Allegiance, Oath of. A new form of this oath was substituted for the older form by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 48. A new form was again provided by 30 & 31 Vict. c. 75, s. 5, and this has in its turn been superseded by the Promissory Oaths Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 72), which provides as follows: 'I, do swear that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Victoria, her heirs and successors, according to law. So help me God.'

The 10th section of the Act provides that 'where in any oath under the Act the name of Her present Majesty is expressed, the name of the Sovereign of this Kingdom shall be substituted from time to time.'

See also Irish Free State (Agreement) Act, 1922, Sch., art. 4.

The oath, or an affirmation in similar terms, must be taken by certain high officers of State, by judges of the Supreme Court and justices of the peace on their appointment, by Members of Parliament on taking their seats, and by clergymen before their ordination. A like oath must be taken by an alien on obtaining a certificate of naturalization; see British Nationality and Status of Aliens Act, 1914.

Allegiare, to defend or justify by due course of law.

Aller, superlatively, as aller good is the greatest good.—Blount.

Aller san jour, to go without day, i.e., to be finally dismissed from the Court, because there is no further day assigned for appearance.

Alleviare, to levy or pay an accustomed fine.—Cowel.

All Fours, a case agreeing in all its circumstances with another case is sometimes said to be 'on all fours' with it. Nullum simile est idem, nisi quatuor pedibus currit.—Co. Litt. 3. (Nothing similar is the same, unless it runs on all fours with it.)

Alliance [fr. alleanga, It.; alianca, Sp.; alliance, or allier, Fr.; alligo, Lat., to tie or unite together], the state of connection with another by confederacy; a league. In this sense our histories mention the Grand Alliance, the Holy Alliance, and others. Also relation by marriage; relation by any form of kindred.

Allision, the running of one vessel against another. See COLLISION.

Allocation, an allowance made upon accounts in the Exchequer; also, the act of allotting or appropriating.

Allocacione facienda, a writ allowing to an accountant such sums of money as he had lawfully expended in his office; it was addressed to the Lord Treasurer and the Barons of the Exchequer.—Reg. Brev. 206.

Allocato comitatu, in proceedings in outlawry, when there were but two County Courts holden between the delivery of the writ of exigi facias to the sheriff and its return, a special exigi facias, with an allocato comitatu, issued to the sheriff in order to complete the proceedings. See Bac. Abr., 'Outlawry.'

Allocatur (it is allowed), the certificate of the allowance of costs by the master on taxation.

Allocatur exigent, a writ which was issued when an outlaw had not been exacted five times under the exigi facias, in order to complete the number of exactions.

Allocutus. In cases of treason and felony, if the defendant is found guilty, the Court is bound to ask him what he has to say why the Court should not proceed to judgment against him. This demand is called the allocutus and is entered on the record.

Allodarii, tenants having as great an estate as subjects can enjoy.

Allodial. See ALODIAL.

Allograph, a document not written by any of the parties thereto: opposed to autograph.

Allonge. If there be not room on the back of a bill of exchange to write all the indorsements, the supernumerary indorsements may be written on a slip of paper annexed to the bill and called an allonge, and are then 'deemed to be written on the bill itself.' Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 32, sub-s. 1. It requires no additional stamp.

Allotment, partition, the distribution of land under an inclosure Act, or shares in a public undertaking. See COMPANY. By Companies Act, 1929, ss. 39-42, reproducing and amending s. 85 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, no allotment of the share capital of a company can be made unless the conditions therein contained have been complied with.

Allotment Notes, as to the payment of seamen's wages during absence by means of allotment notes, see Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, ss. 140-144 ; Merchant Shipping Act, 1906, s. 62 ; and Merchant Shipping (Seamen's Allotment) Act, 1911, s. 1.

Allotments. Many Acts (see Chit. Stat., tit. 'Allotments') have been passed authorizing parish officers to let out to poor persons small quantities of parish land or land originally allotted under inclosure Acts for the benefit of the poor. The Small Holdings and Allotments Act, 1908 (Part II.), empowers parish, urban, borough or county councils to provide plots of land for persons belonging to the labouring population of the locality to cultivate as farms or gardens. Land for allotments may be acquired compulsorily by the above bodies (ss. 12 and 27, Land Settlement (Facilities) Act, 1919) (as amended by the 1925 Act, s. 1). This Act as amended by the Allotments Act, 1922, necessitates a six months' or longer notice to quit (but see s. 30 (2) of the Act, 1908, and s. 1 of the Act of 1922), and provides, notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary, for compensation to an outgoing tenant by the landlord for growing crops, manure, improvement, etc. (s. 47 of the Act of 1908, and ss. 2-7 of the Act of 1922). A simple method of determining the amount of compensation by arbitration is provided.

'Allotment garden' was defined by the Act of 1922, s. 22 (6) (repealed by the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923), as meaning an allotment not exceeding 40 poles in extent which is wholly or mainly cultivated by the occupier for the production of vegetable or fruit crops for consumption by himself or his family. The Allotments Act, 1925, defined 'allotment' as an allotment garden as defined by the Allotments Act of 1922, as any parcel of land not more than five acres in extent cultivated as intended to be cultivated as a garden or farm, or partly as a garden and partly as a farm.

A special department of the Board (now Ministry) of Agriculture and Fisheries (q.v.) has been created to deal with small holdings and allotment matters, and Small Holdings Commissioners have been appointed.

See 'Spencer's Small Holdings and Allotments' and 'Aggs on Agricultural Holdings.'

Allottee, a person to whom land under an inclosure Act or shares in a public undertaking are allotted. See COMPANY.

Allowance [fr. locare, Lat. ; allocare, alloware, It. ; alogar, Prov. ; louer, allower, Fr., to place or assign], a deduction, an average payment, a portion.

Also in selling goods, or in paying duties upon them, certain deductions are made from their weights, depending on the nature of the packages in which they are inclosed, and which are regulated in most instances by the custom of merchants, and the rules laid down by public offices. These allowances, as they are termed, are distinguished by the epithets draft, tare, tret, and cloff.

Draft is a deduction from the original or gross weight of goods, and is subtracted before the tare is taken off.

Tare is an allowance for the weight of the bag, box, cask, or other package in which goods are weighed.

Real, or open tare, is the actual weight of the package.

Customary tare is, as its name implies, an established allowance for the weight of the package.

Computed tare is an estimated allowance agreed upon at the time.

Average tare is when a few packages only among several are weighed, their mean or average taken, and the rest tared accordingly.

Super-tare is an additional allowance or tare where the commodity or package exceeds a certain weight.

The remainder, after the allowance of tare, is called the suttle weight ; but if tret be allowed, the remainder is called the net weight.

Tret is a deduction of 4 lb. from every 104 lb. of suttle weight. This allowance, which is said to be for dust or sand, or for the waste or wear of the commodity, was formerly made on most foreign articles sold by the pound avoirdupois ; but it is now nearly discontinued by merchants, or else allowed in the price. It is wholly abolished at the East India warehouses in London, and neither tret nor draft is allowed at the Custom-house.

Cloff, or Clough, is another allowance that is nearly obsolete. It is stated in arithmetical books to be a deduction of 2 lb. from every 3 cwt. of the seconduttle, that is, the remainder when tret is subtracted ; but merchants, at present, know cloff only as a small deduction, like draft, from the original weight, and this only in the case of two or three articles. See Kelley's Cambist, art. 'London,' and McCull. Comm. Dict.

Allowances. — Deductions or payments allowed by law or in equity to persons such as trustees, personal representatives, tenants for life, mortgagees in possession, receivers, and others liable to account, also the admission of claims or items in an account, also payments of a non-obligatory nature by persons sui juris or the Court acting in the exercise of its discretion; and see DEATH DUTIES and FINANCE ACTS.

Allowances to Agricultural Tenants.—The term 'allowances' is also used to designate the payments made, under custom of the country or agreement, by landlord to tenant on the determination of agricultural tenancy, to compensate the tenant for outlay on seed, labour, or crops, of which he cannot reap the benefit in kind. See AGRICULTURAL HOLDINGS.

Allowances to Witnesses in Prosecutions.—The term 'allowances' is also used to designate payments to witnesses for both prosecution and defence in criminal matters. These are now provided for by the Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 15), and the regulations made thereunder. For allowances to witnesses in Civil Proceedings in the High Court, see Annual Practice; in the County Courts, see County Court Rules.

All Saints, Feast of, 1st of November.

Alltud [all-tud, other land], a person either from foreign parts or from another part of the island, in villenage under the king or freeholder.—Anc. Inst. Wales.

Alluminor, one who anciently illuminated, coloured, or painted upon paper or parchment, particularly the initial letters of charters and deeds. The word is used in 1 Rich. 3, c. 9.

Alluvion or Alluvio [fr. alluo, Lat.], land imperceptibly gained from the sea or the river by the washing up of sand and soil so as to form terra firma.—2 Bl. Com. 261; Res. Cotidianæ Dig. 40, tit. 1, s. 7. See ACCRETION, and Hindson v. Ashby, 1896, 2 Ch. 1.

Ally. See ALLIANCE.

Almanack [fr. the Arabic particle al, and manach, to count or reckon], a publication in which is recounted the days of the week, month, and year, both common and particular, distinguishing the fasts, feasts, terms, etc., from the common days by proper marks, pointing out also the several changes of the moon, tides, eclipses, etc. It is a part of the law of England, of which the Courts must take notice in the returns of writs, etc., but the almanack to go by is that annexed to the Book of Common Prayer. It is not evidence of the time of sunrise on a particular day (Tutton v. Darke, (1860) 5 H. & N. 647).

Almaria, the archives or muniments of a church or library.—Blount.

Almner, or Almoner, an officer of the Royal household, whose business it is to distribute the royal arms. The lord almoner, who is usually now a bishop, had the disposition of the sovereign's dish of meat, after it came from the table, which he might give to whom he pleased. The Marquis of Exeter is hereditary Grand Almoner.—Fleta, lib. ii. c. 22; Co. Litt. 94 a. A collector or treasurer of a benevolent institution.

Almodrall, the lords of free manors, lords paramount.

Almoin, a tenure of lands by divine service. See FRANKALMOIGNE.

Almonarium, a kind of safe or cupboard in which broken victuals were laid up to be distributed among the poor.—Old Records.

Almonarius [corruption of elemosynarius], a distributor of alms.

Alms. Charitable contributions. The receipt of parochial relief or other alms was a disqualification for the parliamentary franchise in boroughs by s. 36 of the Reform Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 45), and in counties by s. 40 of the Representation of the People Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 102), while by s. 9 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), it was also a disqualification for the municipal franchise; but s. 9 (1) of the Representation of the People Act, 1918, provides that a person shall not be disqualified from voting at a parliamentary or local government election because he or his dependants have received poor relief or other alms.

Alms-houses. Houses given by charitable persons for poor persons to live in free of charge are very numerous in this country. They are exempt from property tax, see Income Tax Act, 1918 (8 & 9 Geo. 5, c. 40), s. 37, and subsequent Finance Acts, and in respect of revenues payable to them before 1693 from land tax, by the Land Tax Act, 1797 (38 Geo. 3, c. 5).

Almsfeoh or Almesfeoh [Sax.], alms-money. It has been taken for Peter-pence, first given to the Pope by Ina, King of the West Saxons, and anciently paid in England on the first of August. It was likewise called romesfeoh, romescot, and heorthpening.—Selden's Hist. Tithes, 217.

Almutum, a cap made of goat's or lamb's skin, the part covering the head being square, and the other part hanging behind to cover the neck and shoulders; worn by priests.—Dugd. Mon. tom. iii. 36.

Alnage, or Aulnage [fr. aune, Fr., an ell], a measure, particularly the measuring with an ell.—Cowel.

Alnager, or Aulnager, formerly a public sworn officer of the king, who examined into the assize of cloth, and fixed seals to it, and also collected a subsidiary or aulnage duty on all cloths sold (25 Edw. 3, st. 4, c. 1). There were afterwards three officers belonging to the regulation of clothing, viz., searcher, measurer, and aulnager.—4 Inst. 31. Alnage duties were abolished in England by 11 & 12 Wm. 3, c. 20, and in Ireland by 57 Geo. 3, c. 109.

Alnet, De, D'Auney.

Alnetum, a place where alders grow, or a grove of alder trees.—Co. Litt. 4 b.

Alodial, or Allodial, or Allodium [perhaps fr. odal, Icel.; odel, Dan. Sw., a patrimonial estate. See Wedg.], a holding of lands in absolute possession without acknowledging any superior lord, contradistinguished from Feudal lands, which are held of superiors.—There are not any alodial lands in England, according to Coke.—Co. Litt. 93 a; 1 Hall. Mid. Ages, ch. 2, pt. i.

Alody, inheritable land.

Aloverium, a purse.—Fleta, lib. ii. c. 82, p. 2.

Alsatia, formerly a cant name for Whitefriars, a district in London between the Thames and Fleet Street, and adjoining the Temple, which, possessing certain privileges of sanctuary, became for that reason a nest of those mischievous characters who were generally obnoxious to the law; see Scott's Fortunes of Nigel, ch. 17. These privileges were derived from its having been an establishment of the Carmelites, or White Friars, founded in 1241. In the time of the Reformation the place retained its immunities as a sanctuary, and James I. confirmed and added to them by a charter in 1608, but all privileges of sanctuary were shortly afterwards abolished in 1624 by 21 Jac. 1, c. 28.

Alta, De, ripa, Dantry.

Alta proditio, high treason; now simply called treason.

Altar. The table for the celebration of the Holy Communion, which in the Church of England should be covered during the communion service with 'a fair white linen cloth,' and at other times with 'silk or other decent stuff.'

Altarage, offering made upon the altar; the profit arising to the priest by reason of the altar.—Termes de la Ley.

Alteration. An alteration vitiates a deed or other instrument, if made in a material part after execution. In the case of deeds, an unexplained alteration is presumed to have been made at the time of execution; but it is otherwise with wills. See Wills Act, 1837 (7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 21.

As to alteration of a bill of exchange, see s. 64 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, by which, where a bill is materially altered without the assent of all parties liable on it, the bill is avoided, except as against a party who has himself made, authorized, or assented to the alteration, and subsequent indorsers. But if the alteration is not apparent, and the bill is in the hands of a holder in due course, such holder may avail himself of the bill as if it had not been altered, and may enforce payment of it according to its original tenor. In particular the following alterations are material, namely, any alteration of the date, the sum payable, the time of payment, the place of payment, and, where a bill has been accepted generally, the addition of a place of payment without the acceptor's assent. See also Slingsby v. Westminster Bank Ltd. (No. 2), 1931, 2 K. B. 583 (alteration of payee by adding words 'per C. & P.'). Knock v. Dicks, 1933, 1 K. B. 307 (inland bill turned into foreign bill).

A lease sometimes contains a covenant by the lessee not to make 'alterations.' For the meaning of such a covenant, see Bickmore v. Dimmer, 1903, 1 Ch. 158, and see L. P. Act, 1925, s. 84, as to restrictions in leases, and Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 36), s. 19, also LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Alteration of Share Capital. Under the Companies Act, 1929, the share capital of a company may be altered by increase (s. 53), consolidation or division, conversion of shares into stock and reconversion or cancellation of unissued capital (s. 50), or redemption of redeemable preference shares (s. 46). The alteration must be authorized by the articles, and the memorandum modified. A company cannot make an original issue of stock (Home & Foreign Investment and Agency Co., 1912, 1 Ch. 72, and subject to confirmation by the Court a company may reduce its capital by special resolution for reducing share capital and consequential alteration of the memorandum. The words 'and reduced' need not be added to the name of the company unless the Court so orders (ss. 55-60). As a rule in all these cases the alteration must be notified to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies (s. 5), and, in the case of reduction, registered by him (s. 58).

Alternat, a usage amongst diplomatists by which the rank and places of different powers, who have the same rights and pretensions to precedence, are changed from time to time, either in a certain regular order, or one determined by lot. In preparing treaties and conventions, it is the usage of certain powers to alternate both in the preamble and the signatures, so that each power occupies, in the copy intended to be delivered to it, the first place.—Wheaton, Int. Law, pt. ii., c. 3, s. 4.

Alternative, the one or the other of two things. Where a new remedy is created in addition to an existing one, they are called alternative if only one can be enforced; but, if both, cumulative.

As to alternative pleading, see R. S. C. Ord. XIX., r. 24; Ord. XX., r. 6.

Altius non tollendi, a servitude due by the owner of a house, by which he is restrained from building beyond a certain height.—Dig. 8, 2, 4; Sand. Just.

Altius tollendi, a servitude which consists in the right, to him who is entitled to it, to build his house as high as he may think proper. In general, however, every one enjoys this privilege, unless he is restrained by some contrary title.—Civil Law; Sand. Just.

Alto et basso (high and low), an absolute submission of all differences.—Blount.

Altum mare (the high sea).

Alumnus, a child which one has nursed; a foster-child.—Dig. 40, 2, 14; Civil Law. One educated at a college or seminary is called an alumnus thereof.

Always Afloat. Charter-parties often require that a ship shall discharge her cargo 'always afloat.' This means that the port to which she is sent to discharge must be one in which she can lie safely with her full cargo and discharge it without touching the ground (Halsb. Laws of England).

Amabyr, or Ambabyr, a custom in the honour of Clun, belonging to the Earls of Arundel.—Pretium virginialis domino solvendum. Abolished.—Cowel.

Amalphitan Code, a collection of sea-laws, compiled about the end of the eleventh century by the people of Amalphi. It consists of the laws of maritime subjects which were or had been in force in countries bordering on the Mediterranean, and was for a long time received as authority in those countries.

Amanuensis [a manu, Lat.], one who writes on behalf of another that which he dictates.

Ambastus, a servant or client.—Cowel.

Ambassador [legatus, Lat.], a representative minister sent by one sovereign power to another, with authority conferred on him by letters of credence to treat on affairs of state.—4 Inst. 153. Ambassadors are either ordinary, who reside in the place whither they are sent; or extraordinary, who are employed upon special matters. An ambassador during the period of his residence here is entirely exempt from the jurisdiction of the courts of this country (Magdalena Steam Navigation Co. v. Martin, (1859) 2 E. & E. 94; Musurus Bey v. Gadam, 1894, 2 Q. B. 352). Ambassadors and their domestic servants are protected from civil arrest and their goods from seizure under distress or execution by the Diplomatic Privileges Act, 1708 (7 Anne, c. 12), which is declaratory of the Common Law, but imposes severe penalties, including corporal punishment, on persons violating its provisions. The King can veto the appointment of an ambassador, and this constitutional right was last exercised by William IV. in 1835, in the case of Lord Durham as ambassador to St. Petersburg. The Sovereign can also refuse to receive an ambassador accredited to him. See Chit. Stat., tit. 'Ambassadors.'

Ambassy, an embassy.

Amber, or Ambra, a measure of four bushels.—Introd. Domesd., vol. i., 133.

Ambidexter, one who plays on both sides. A juror or embracer, who takes bribes from both parties to influence his verdict.—Termes de la Ley.

Ambiguity, doubtfulness, double-meaning, obscurity. There are two species of ambiguity—'latent' and 'patent.' Where the words of a document as they stand are quite clear and intelligible but it turns out that they can apply equally well to two or more persons, or to two or more things, that is a 'latent ambiguity,' and parol evidence is admissible to shew which was really meant. This is not contradicting the document, because each answers the written words equally well. A 'patent ambiguity,' on the other hand, is one which appears on the face of the document and renders it unintelligible, e.g., a legacy of 100*l.* to ——. No parol evidence is admissible to supply the missing name; but see Watcham v. A.-G. of East Africa, 1919, A. C. 533 (Powell on Evidence). The rule is expressed accordingly in the two following Latin maxims:

Ambiguitas verborum latens verificatione suppletur; nam quod ex facto oritur ambiguum verificatione facti tollitur. Bacon.—(A hidden ambiguity of the words may be supplied by evidence ; for whatever ambiguity arises from an extrinsic fact may be removed by extrinsic evidence.)

Ambiguitas verborum patens nullâ verificatione excluditur. Lofft, 249.—(A patent ambiguity cannot be cleared up by extrinsic evidence.)

Ambiguum placitum interpretari debet contra proferentem. Co. Litt. 303 b.—(An ambiguous plea ought to be interpreted against the party delivering it.)

Ambit [metaph.], the limits or circumference of a power or jurisdiction, the line circumscribing any subject-matter.

Amboglanna, Ambleside in Westmoreland, and Burdowsold in Cumberland.

Ambra, a Saxon vessel or measure for salt, butter, meal, or beer. See AMBER.

Ambrosil Burgus, Amesbury in Wilts.

Ambulance. An ambulance service can be established and maintained in the County of London by virtue of the Metropolitan Ambulance Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 17).

Ambulatoria est voluntas defuncti usque ad vitæ supremum exitum. Dig. 34, 4, 4.—(The will of a deceased person is ambulatory until the latest moment of life.)

Amellorating Waste, acts which though technically amounting to what the law calls 'waste,' yet, so far from injuring the inheritance, improve it ; see Doherty v. Allman, (1878) 3 App. Cas. 709 ; Meux v. Cobley, 1892, 2 Ch. 253 ; and see Settled Land Act, 1925, ss. 88 and 89, as to improvements involving impairment for waste.

Amenable [fr. amener, Fr., to lead unto].

1. Tractable, that may be easily led or governed ; formerly applied to a wife who is governable by her husband.—Blount.

2. Responsible or subject to answer, etc., in a Court of justice.

Amende honorable [Fr.], an adequate reparation, an apology (see that title). In French law a species of punishment to which offenders against public decency or morality were anciently condemned.

Amendment, a correction of any errors in the writ or pleadings in actions, suits, or prosecutions. The power of allowing amendments has been much extended by modern statutes and rules, but it will not be exercised to the prejudice of a party to the proceeding ; apart from this, it is in general a mere matter of costs.

1. Amendment of proceedings in the Supreme Court. By R. S. C. Ord. XXVIII., r. 1, the Court or a judge may, at any stage of the proceedings, allow either party to alter or amend his indorsement or pleadings, in such manner and on such terms as may be just, and all such amendments shall be made as may be necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties. This is the general principle. The remaining rules of the Order prescribe the practice in detail ; they allow the plaintiff to amend his statement of claim once without leave, and the defendant similarly to amend a counterclaim or set-off. But a defence cannot be amended without leave unless the plaintiff has amended his statement of claim.

2. Proceedings in County Courts. Ample powers of amendment, in equitable as in all other proceedings, are possessed by these Courts ; and provided for by County Court Rules, 1936, Ord. XV., under County Courts Act, 1934.

3. Criminal Proceedings. Under the Indictments Act, 1915, the Court may amend a defective indictment unless such amendment cannot be made without injustice. Quarter Sessions can amend the statement of grounds of appeal to them from Courts of Summary Jurisdiction upon such terms as to costs and postponement as they may think fit.

As regards Courts of Summary Jurisdiction the King's Bench Division can amend an order bad for want of form upon the return of a writ of certiorari. In these Courts no objection to any information, complaint or summons for any defect in substance or form is allowed, but if the party summoned has been deceived or misled by a defect, the justices may adjourn the hearing.

Amends, satisfaction.

Amends, Tender of, was by many particular statutes made a defence in an action for a wrong, especially in cases where the wrong had been done by some public authority or person acting in pursuance of an Act of Parliament, as the Highway Act, 1835 (see s. 105), or the Larceny Act, 1861 (see s. 113), in apprehending, for instance, a person found committing an offence against that Act. These are repealed by the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, which provides, amongst other things, for the pleading of tender of amends, and for taxation of the defendant's costs between solicitor and client in event of the plaintiff not recovering more than the sum tendered, etc. As to tender upon distress (q.v.), whether before or after impounding but before sale, see Johnson v. Upham, (1859) 2 E. & E. 250. For wrongful distress, see Distress for Rent Act, 1737, and for trespass on land with disclaimer of title, Limitation Act, 1623 (21 Jac. 1, c. 16), s. 5, the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), s. 135, and Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), s. 139, and Acts incorporated with either of these statutes, and PUBLIC AUTHORITIES PROTECTION.

A mensâ et thoro (from table and bed). A term used to describe a partial divorce, in cases in which the marriage was just and lawful, but for some supervenient cause, such as the commission of adultery or cruelty by the husband or wife, it became improper or impossible for them to live together. This divorce was effected by sentence of the Ecclesiastical Court. It caused the separation of the husband and wife, but did not dissolve the marriage, so that neither of them could marry during the life of the other.

A decree of judicial separation has been substituted for this kind of divorce by the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), s. 7, now repealed and replaced by the Judicature Act, 1925, s. 85. See MATRIMONIAL CAUSES; DIVORCE.

Amentia, insanity, idiocy.

Amercement or Amerciament, a pecuniary punishment or penalty assessed by the peers or equals of the party amerced for an offence, by the commission of which he had placed himself at the mercy of the lord. The difference between ameracements and finés is as follows: The latter are certain, and are created by some statute; they can only be imposed and assessed by Courts of record; the former are arbitrarily imposed by Courts not of record, as Courts-leet.—Termes de la Ley.

American Law. A term generally applied to the law of the United States of America which is based, in the main, on the common law of England. The law of Louisiana, however, is derived from the Code Napoleon. Though the decisions of the Courts of the United States are often helpful in elucidating analogous questions, and accordingly are frequently quoted in text-books by English writers and sometimes cited in argument, they have no binding effect upon any English Court. America, however, it need scarcely be said, has produced lawyers and text-writers of the highest eminence, and such works as those of Wheaton, Story, and Professor Gray are in constant use in this country.

Ambinlogau tîr (land borderers), witnesses in a Court in suits respecting landed property, whose lands bordered on that in dispute.—Anc. Inst. Wales.

Aml. See AMY.

Amlcia, a cap made of goat's or lamb's skin. See ALMUTIUM.

Amietus, or Amesse, the uppermost of the six garments worn by priests of the Roman Catholic Church. It is tied round the neck, and covers the breast and heart. The other five garments are alba, cingulum, stola, manipulus, and planeta.

Amicus curiæ (Lat., friend of the Court), a member of the bar or other stander by, who informs the Court when doubtful or mistaken of any fact or decided case.

Amita, a paternal aunt; the sister of one's father.

Amita magna, a great aunt.

Amittere legem terræ, or liberam legem, to lose the liberty of being sworn in any Court. But by 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, persons who were previously excluded from giving evidence by incapacity arising from crime or interest are made competent witnesses, their credibility being left to the jury. A person outlawed was (see OUTLAW) said to lose his law; i.e., to be put without its protection, so that he could not sue, although he could be sued.—Glanvil, lib. ii.

Ammobragium, a service, or poll-money, like chevage.—Spel.

Ammodwr [am-bod-wr], a compactor, one before whom a compact is made, and who is therefore admissible as a witness to prove the terms of it.—Anc. Inst. Wales.

Amnery, an almshouse.

Amnesty [fr. ἀμνηστία, Gk., non-remembrance], an act of pardon or 'oblivion' (see, e.g., the Act of Oblivion, 12 Car. 2, c. 11, and 20 Geo. 2, c. 52), by which crimes against the Government up to a certain date are so obliterated that they can never be brought into charge. All acts of amnesty originate with the Crown.

Amnltum Insulæ, isles upon the west coast of Britain.—Blount.

Amobh [fr. am-gobr, fee], the fee paid to a lord on the marriage of a female.—Anc. Inst. Wales.

Amortization, or Amortizement. See ADMORTIZATION.

Amortize, to alienate lands in mortmain.

Amotion, a putting away, a removing, deprivation or ouster of possession. In municipal boroughs, a removal from his office of a councillor by his fellow-councillors, frequently exercised before the Municipal Corporations Act, 1835, and not expressly abolished either by that Act or by the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882. The power of amotion is implied or may be conferred by charter. Under the old law it has been said that offences justifying amotion must either be committed in the official character, infamous, or indictable (Kyd on Corporations); but habitual drunkenness was held a sufficient cause in Reg. v. Taylor, (1694) 3 Salk. 231, where also a bye-law giving power to amove for just cause was held good; nor does there seem to be any means except amotion of getting rid of a clearly unfit councillor who refuses to resign. See Halsbury's L. of E., 2nd ed., Vol. 8, pp. 38 et seq.

Amove, to remove from a post or station.

Amoveas manus, or Ouster le main, a livery of land to be amoved out of the king's hands on a judgment obtained upon a monstrans de droit, to restore the land, its effect being the same as a judgment that the party should have his land again. Abolished by 12 Car. 2, c. 24.

Ampliation, an enlargement, a deferring of judgment till the cause be further examined.

Amputation of right hand, an ancient punishment for a blow given in a Superior Court; or for assaulting a judge sitting in the Court. It was also inflicted by the Star Chamber for duelling or striking a blow within the precincts of a royal palace.

Amrygoll [am-rhy-coll, total loss], loss of property.—Anc. Inst. Wales.

Amy, or Aml [fr. amicus, Lat.], usually called prochein amy, the next friend (as distinguished from the guardian) suing on behalf of an infant. Infants sue by a next friend and defend by a guardian ad litem; see R. S. C. Ord. XVI. r. 16; also alien amy, a friendly alien.

An, Jour, et Waste, year, day, and waste. A forfeiture of the lands to the Crown incurred by the felony of the tenant, after which time the land escheats to the lord.—Termes de la Ley.

Anacoenosis [fr. ἀνακoinώσις, Gk.], a rhetorical figure, whereby we seem to deliberate and argue the case with others upon any matter of moment.—Encyc. Londin.

Anacoluthon, or Anacoluthus [fr. ἀνακόλυθος, Gk.], a rhetorical figure, when a word is to answer another is not expressed.—Ibid.

Anaorisis [fr. ἀνάκρισις, Gk.], an investigation of truth, interrogation of witnesses, and inquiry made into any fact, especially by torture.—Ibid.; Civil Law.

Anagraph, a register or inventory.

Analognism, an argument from the cause to the effect.

Analogy, identity or similarity of proportion: where there is no precedent in point, in cases on the same subject, lawyers have recourse to cases in a different subject-matter but governed by the same general principle. This is reasoning by analogy. See COMMON LAW, and remarks of Parke, J., in Mirehouse v. Rennell, (1830) 8 Bing. at p. 515.

Analysis, the resolution of a thing into its elements or component parts. By the Food and Drugs (Adulteration) Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 31) (see ADULTERATION), provision is made for the appointment in every district by the local authorities of one or more persons possessing competent medical, chemical, and microscopical knowledge as analysts of all articles of food and drink. An article purchased for analysis under this Act must be divided into three parts (s. 18), each sufficiently large to afford reasonable facilities for analysis: see Lowery v. Hallard, 1906, 1 K. B. 398. The Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 45), contains analogous provisions for securing to agriculturists the purity of artificial manures and feeding stuffs for cattle, etc.

Anarchy, absence of government. See SEDITION.

Anathematize, to pronounce accursed by ecclesiastical authority, to excommunicate.

Anatocism [fr. ἀνά and τοκος, Gk.], taking compound interest for the loan of money.

Anatomy Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 75), by which the practice of dissecting human corpses is regulated, and a license required for it.

Ancestor, one that has gone before in a family; it differs from predecessor, in that it is applied to a natural person and his progenitors, while the latter is applied also to a corporation, and those who have held offices before those who now fill them.—Co. Litt. 78 b.

Ancestral, or Ancestrel, that which has relation to ancestors.—Blount's Law Dict.

Anchor. The Anchors and Chain Cables Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 23), consolidating, with small amendments, three Acts of 1864, 1871, and 1874, provides that unproved anchors are not to be sold or bought for a British ship, and regulates the mode of testing by testing establishments licensed by the Board of Trade. See also Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, ss. 290, 538–40. As to recovering the value of an anchor which has been slipped to avoid a collision, see The Port Victoria, 1902, P. 25.

Anchorage, a duty taken from the owners of ships for the use of the havens where they cast anchor.

Ancient Demesne, a tenure now abolished by s. 128 of the L. P. Act, 1922 (12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 16), see COPYHOLDS, but formerly existing in certain manors, which, though now granted to private persons, were in the actual possession of the Crown in the times of Edward the Confessor and William the Conqueror, and appear to have been so by the great survey in the Exchequer called Domesday Book, and, therefore, whether lands are ancient demesne or not, is to be tried only by this book, called in consequence Liber Judicatorius; but the question must be tried by a jury whether lands be parcel of a manor which is ancient demesne, being a question of fact. There is great confusion in the books respecting this tenure. It is only the freeholders of the manor who are truly tenants in ancient demesne, and land held in ancient demesne, passes by common law conveyance without the instrumentality of the lord. The copyholders in an ancient demesne manor are merely to be considered as occupying a part of the lord's demesne and do not hold of the manor. They form the customary Court. The Court of Ancient Demesne, which is analogous to the Court Baron, is constituted by those who hold in socage of the lord of the manor. The tenants in ancient demesne, properly so called, were made subject to certain restraints and entitled to certain immunities. They were forbidden to bring or to defend any real action, touching their tenements, except in the lord's Court. In ancient demesne there are no subdivided and conflicting interests in the soil. The timber and minerals belong to the tenant, and the rents, fines and services due to the lord are certain. See Third Report of the Real Property Commissioners; Mertens v. Hill, 1901, 1 Ch. 853.

Ancient Lights, windows, glazed or unglazed, through which the access of light has been enjoyed otherwise than by consent or permission for twenty years and upwards.—See LIGHT; Gale or Goddard on Easements; and Prescription Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 71).

Ancient Monuments. See Ancient Monuments Consolidation and Amendment Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 32), and Advertisements Regulation Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 52); Ancient Monuments (Ireland) Act, 1892; and post, MONUMENTS.

Ancients, gentlemen of the Inns of Court and Chancery. In Gray's Inn the Society consists of benchers, ancients, barristers, and students under the bar; and here the ancients are of the oldest barristers. In the Middle Temple, those who had passed their readings used to be termed ancients. The Inns of Chancery consisted of ancients and students or clerks; from the ancients a principal or treasurer was chosen yearly.

Ancient Serjeant, the eldest of the Queen's Serjeants.—See Manning's Serviens ad legem, 19-20, and SERJEANT.

Ancient Writings, documents upwards of 30 years old. These are presumed to be genuine without express proof, when coming from the proper custody. The judge decides in each case whether the custody is proper.—Taylor on Evidence.

Ancienty, eldership or seniority.

Ancillary [fr. ancilla, a maid servant, Lat.], that which works out, or assists, or is subordinate to, some other decision.—Encyc. Londin.

Anewyn, a stated allowance of provision allotted to the officers of the Court in their lodgings; the term appears to be put in opposition to cwynnos (cæna), supper, as being a privileged private allowance for that meal; the cwynnos being the public evening meal. Anewyn is translated cæna in some Latin copies of the ancient Welsh laws.—Anc. Inst. Wales.

Andaga, or Andæg, a day or term appointed for hearing a cause; hence Andagian, to appoint the day.—Anc. Inst. England.

Andena, a swath or line of grass or corn in mowing, or as much ground as a man can stride over at once.—Jac. Law Dict.

Anderida, Newenden in Kent.

Andreapolis, St. Andrews in Scotland.

Androgynus [fr. ἀνρ ἀνδρῶς, Gk., man, and γυνή, woman], a hermaphrodite.

Androlepsy, the taking by one nation of the citizens or subjects of another, in order to compel the latter to do justice to the former.

Anfeldtynde, or Anfealtihle, a simple accusation.—Saxon.

Angaria [fr. ἀγγαρεία, Gk.], personal service, which tenants were obliged to pay to their lords. Impressing of ships.—Blount's Law Dict.

Angel, an ancient English coin of the value of 10 shillings.—Jac. Law Dict.

Angella vestis, a monkish garment which laymen put on a little before death, in order to have the benefit of the monks' prayers.—Dugd. Mon., tom. i. 632.

Anghyvarech [fr. an, cyvarech, unquestionable], a term used for the articles which were exclusively the property of a man or woman, and not subject to a division upon a separation ensuing. A fine for committing certain actions without permission.—Anc. Inst. Wales.

Angidllarianum, monasterium, the city of Ely in Cambridgeshire.

Angild [fr. an, one, and gild, payment, mulct, or fine, Sax.], the single valuation or compensation of a criminal. Twigild was the double and trigild the treble, mulct or fine.—Laws of Iua, c. 20; Spelm. See ANGYLDE.

Angilæ jura in omni casu libertati dant favorem. Co. Litt. 124 b; Fortesc. c. 42.—(The laws of England in every case are favourable to liberty.)

Anglo-French Convention Act, 1904 (4 Edw. 7, c. 33), ratifies the Convention between His Majesty the King and the President of the French Republic dealing with disputes which had arisen respecting rights of fishing off Newfoundland. The Convention is scheduled to the Act.

Angylde, the rate by law at which certain injuries to person or property were to be paid for; in injuries to the person, equivalent to the 'wer,' i.e., the price at which every man was valued. It seems also to have been the fixed price at which cattle and other goods were received as currency, and to have been much higher than the market price, or ceap-gild.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Anhlote, a single tribute or tax, paid according to the custom of the country as scot and lot.—Leges Wm. I. c. 64.

Anhllled, cancelled, or made void.

Aniens, or Anient, void, of no force or effect.—Füz. N. B. 214.

Animals may be divided into—

(1) Domestic animals, such as dogs, horses, cows, etc., sometimes called animals mansuetæ naturæ. See White v. Fox, 48 T. L. R. 641.

(2) Animals that are naturally dangerous, i.e., wild beasts, such as lions, bears, etc.

(3) Animals feræ naturæ, but harmless, such as hares, pheasants, partridges, etc. See FERÆ NATURE and GAME.

Animals of the first or second class are ordinary subjects of property in this country. But there is no property in those of the third class until they are caught or reclaimed. As to the liability of the owner for mischief done by a wild beast, or by a vicious domestic animal, see MISCHIEVOUS ANIMAL.

Dogs. As to injury by dogs and seizure of stray dogs, see DOG.

Malicious Damage. By the Malicious Damage Act, 1861, s. 40, the unlawful and malicious killing, maiming, or wounding of cattle is made a felony. And by s. 41, the unlawful and malicious killing or wounding any animal not being cattle, but being the subject of larceny at Common Law, or being ordinarily kept in a state of confinement, or for any domestic purpose, is punishable by imprisonment and fine (Larceny Acts, 1861, s. 21 (unrepealed) and 1916, s. 1 (3)). See POACHING, GAME.

Cruelty. By the Protection of Animals Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 27), amended by the Acts of 1912 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 17), 1921 (11 & 12 Geo. 5, c. 14), and 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 27), various earlier statutes are repealed and further provision made for the punishment of persons guilty of cruelty to domestic or captive animals, and the Court is empowered to order the destruction of the animal where necessary, and to deprive any person convicted of cruelty of the ownership of the animal.

And by the Protection of Animals (Cruelty to Dogs) Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 17), the Court is empowered to disqualify from keeping dogs persons convicted of cruelty to them. The Performance of Animals Acts, 1925 and 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 21), prohibit certain contests, performances and exhibitions with animals. As to poultry, see the Poultry Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 11). The Animals (Anæsthetic) Act, 1919, makes the administration of an anæsthetic to horses, dogs, cats and bovines compulsory when specified operations are performed; but see VIVISECTION and the provisions of the Diseases of Animals Acts, 1894–1935. As to Scotland see the Protection of Animals (Scotland) Act, 1912 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 14).

Diseases. The subject of the diseases, including exportation, importation, quarantine, of animals, is dealt with in a series of statutes known together as the 'Diseases of Animals Acts, 1894 to 1935.' The principal Act is that of 1894. The Acts are amended in respect of the exportation of horses by the Diseases of Animals Act, 1910, and the Exportation of Horses Act, 1914. The importation of cattle from Canada is regulated by the Importation of Animals Act, 1922, as amended and extended by 17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 13; the Ottawa Agreements Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 53), and see S. R. & O., 1933, and the Diseases of Animals Acts; see 25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 31, including poultry.

Noisy Animals. The London County Council, by bye-law made in July, 1898, in pursuance of s. 23 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, and s. 16 of the Local Government Act, 1888, for the Good Rule and Government of the Administrative County of London, has provided that no person shall keep any noisy animal which shall be or cause a serious nuisance to residents in the neighbourhood, but no proceeding can be taken until after the expiration of a fortnight from the date of the service of a notice, alleging a nuisance, signed by not less than three householders residing within hearing of the animal. The Public Health Act, 1936, s. 81 (6), provides that local authorities may make bye-laws preventing the keeping of animals so as to be injurious to health.

Performing Animals. Restrictions on exhibition and training of performing animals is dealt with in the Performing Animals (Regulation) Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 38).

As to destructive animals (musk rats), see 22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 12, and S. R. & O., 1933, No. 106.

See HORSES.

Animus, an intent.

Animus ad se omne ducit.—(Intention attracts all law to itself.)

Animus cancellandi, the intention of destroying or cancelling (applied to wills).

Animus et factum, the intention and the deed.

Animus furandi, the intention of stealing.

Animus manendi, the intention of remaining (applied to domicile).

Animus morandi, the intention of remaining.

Animus quo, the intent with which.

Animus recipiendi, the intention of receiving.

Animus revertendi, the intention of returning.

Animus revocandi, the intention of revoking (viz., a will).

Animus testandi, the intention of making a will.

Anker, a liquid measure chiefly used at Amsterdam, containing about 32 gallons English measure.—Encyc. Londin.

Ann, or Annat, half a year's stipend, over and above what is owing for the incumbency, due to a minister's relict, child, or nearest of kin, after his decease.—Scots Law.

Anna, a piece of money, the sixteenth part of a rupee.—Indian.

Annales, yearlings or young cattle from one to two years old.—Cowel.

Annat, or Annates, first fruits (being one year's whole profits) of a spiritual living.—Termes de la Ley. See BOUNTY OF QUEEN ANNE.

Anne, Queen, Bounty of. See BOUNTY OF QUEEN ANNE.

Annealing of Tile [fr. onalan, Sax., or nello, It.; nigellum, M. Lat.; a kind of black enamel on gold and silver], burning or hardening tiles, which are made of burnt clay and are used for covering houses.—17 Edw. 4, c. 4. Also a tempering of glass or metal ware.

Annexation, the union of lands to the Crown, and declaring them inalienable. Also the appropriation of the church lands by the Crown, and the union of land lying at a distance from the parish church to which they belong, to the church of another parish to which they are contiguous. The permanent occupation by a sovereign state of the territory formerly belonging to another, and see RES NULLIUS. As to concessions granted by the former sovereign prior to annexation, see Cook v. Sprig, 1899, A. C. 572. The financial liabilities of a conquered state are not after annexation binding on the conquering state. See West Rand Gold Mining Co. v. R., 1905, 2 K. B. 391.

Anniented [Low Fr.], abrogated, frustrated, brought to nothing or taken away.—Co. Litt. 388 a.

Anni nubles, marriageable years of woman, i.e., 12 years.—Co. Litt. 79 a.

Anniversary Days, solemn days appointed to be celebrated yearly in commemoration of the death of a saint or other event.

The death of Charles I., 30th January, the Restoration of Charles II., 29th May, and the discovery of the Gunpowder Plot, November 5th, gave rise to 'anniversaries' and special church services, abolished by 22 Vict. c. 2. The anniversary of the accession of the sovereign is still observed by an Accession Service, and the signing of the Armistice on the 11th November, 1918, by Remembrance Day.

Anno Domini (abbreviated A.D.), in the year of the Lord. The Christian computation of time is from the incarnation of our Saviour Jesus Christ. It is called the 'Vulgar Era.'

Annolance, or Annoyance [fr. annoiare, It.; ennuter, Fr.], any hurt done to a place, public or private, by placing anything thereon that may breed infection, or by encroachment, or such-like means. It is the same as noisance or nuisance.—22 Hen. 8, c. 5.

Annona civiles, rents paid to monasteries.

Annotation, the designation of a place of deportation; the citing of an absentee; the prince's answer on a doubtful point of law.

Annua pensio, an ancient writ to provide the king's chaplain, if he had no preferment, with a pension.—Reg. Brev. 165, 307.

Annuale, the yearly rent or income of a prebendary.

Annuaia, a yearly stipend assigned to a priest for celebrating an anniversary, or for saying continued masses for the soul of a deceased person.

Annuity. An annuity is a fixed sum payable annually either in perpetuity or for any less period. When charged upon land either freehold or leasehold or both, exclusively of purely personal estate, it is strictly a rent charge; see Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27), s. 21, and RENT CHARGE. But if the annual sum is payable either under a personal obligation only or out of funds which consist of personal estate exclusively, it is an annuity. If the source of payment is mixed and consists of real and personal estate, its nature will depend upon the construction which the Court will give to the grant. In a will an annuity of this kind is prima facie personalty, but the word annuity may also be construed as a charge upon lands out of which the payment is to be made exclusively of the personal estate, see Turner v. Turner, (1783) Amb. 776; Re Trenchard, 1905, 1 Ch. 82. Annuities as a rule are held to be comprised in the word 'legacies,' see Hawkins on Wills, 3rd ed., p. 346. But although annuities which are not charged on real estate are personal estate if bequeathed or granted before 1926 to A. and his heirs, they were for the purposes of intestate succession but not for any purpose other than descent, considered to be heritable and descended to the heir. On the other hand, a limitation of a personal annuity to A. and the heirs of his body was ineffectual to create an estate tail, and passed an absolute interest conditional only upon an heir of the body being born. But now under s. 130 of the L. P. Act, 1925, an equitable estate tail may be created after 1925 in respect of an annuity or any other personal estate if the technical words 'heirs of the body' or 'in tail' are used. Testamentary annuities are prima facie considered to be payable out of income and for the life of the annuitant only, but the source and order and duration of payment depend upon the meaning and intention of the will. In general it may be said that an annuitant is entitled to payment in cash of the capital sum where there is a direction to purchase or to invest a definite amount in the purchase of an annuity. If there is only a power as distinguished from a trust to purchase an annuity, the annuitant's right to the capital value only arises upon or after the trustees have actually provided money for the purpose of the purchase. Until then, as well as in the cases where there is a simple bequest of an annuity, or even where trustees are directed or authorized to set apart a fund for an annuity, the annuitant cannot claim the capital value of the annuity from the personal representatives. As to the power of the personal representative to set aside a fund to answer an annuity, see s. 41 of the A. E. Act, 1925.

A perpetual annuity, if charged upon land, is redeemable under the provisions of s. 45 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, reproduced by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 191.

An annuity for life or years is not redeemable in the same manner; but it may be agreed by the parties to the contract that it shall be redeemable on certain terms.

An annuity may be bequeathed. It may be either created, or, if already existing, may be transmitted, by will. A created annuity is a general legacy, and will abate with the other legacies upon a deficiency of assets. It commences, as a rule, from the death of the testator (Re Robbins, 1907, 2 Ch. 13), but arrears of it do not carry interest (Re Hiscoe, (1902) 71 L. J. Ch. 347). A personal annuity of inheritance will pass under a general bequest (Aubin v. Daly, (1820) 4 B. & A. 59; In re Trenchard, 1905, 1 Ch. 82).

An annuity is frequently resorted to as a means of borrowing money, where the borrower has not any available security, the borrower undertaking to pay an annuity during his own life, instead of interest and the return of the loan. The borrower is the grantor, and the lender is the grantee, of such annuity.

Government annuities may be purchased by persons wishing to exhaust all or part of their capital in exchange for an annual provision for life. See Government Annuities Act of 1929 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 29), and see other statutes under title 'Saving-Banks' in Chitty's Statutes as to the purchase of annuities through savings banks. Before 1926 an annuity not created by marriage settlement or will did not affect lands or hereditaments as against purchasers, mortgagees or creditors without notice unless it was registered, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 15, ss. 12, 13; Greaves v. Tofield, (1880) 14 Ch. D. 563. This register has now been closed, see Land Charges Act, 1925; LAND CHARGES; SETTLED LAND.

For the recovery of arrears of annuities charged on land, i.e., rent charges, see RENT CHARGE, and for apportionment of annuities generally see the Apportionment Acts, 1834 and 1870 (4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 22 and 33 & 34 Vict. c. 35); also Michael Bowles on Testamentary Annuities.

Annulus et baculum, ring and pastoral staff or crosier, the delivery of which by the prince was the ancient mode of granting investitures to bishoprics.—1 Bl. Com. 366.

Annunciation, Feast of, 25th March, known as Lady Day, see QUARTER DAYS.

Annus deliberandi, the year allowed by Scots law for the heir to deliberate whether he will enter upon his ancestor's land and represent him. By 21 & 22 Vict. c. 76, s. 27, the period of deliberation was reduced to six months.—Scots Law.

Annus, dies, et vastum [Lat.] (year, day, and waste). See AN, JOUR, ET WASTE.

Annus luctus, the year of mourning, during which the widow, by the ordinances of the Civil Law, could not marry, to prevent the inconvenience of a widow bearing a child which, by the period of gestation, might be the child either of her deceased or her present husband.—Cod. 5, 9, 2.

Anomy [fr. ἀνομία, Gk.], lawlessness, breach of law.

Anon., An., A., abbreviation for anonymous. Anon. is frequently in the older Reports used as the title of a case where the reporter for some reason or other was unable or unwilling to state the names of the parties. In modern times the names of the parties in nullity suits in the Divorce Court are generally concealed under initials, and this has been also done in Bankruptcy cases, which have been often styled 'A Debtor, In re,' to the considerable confusion of referees.

Anrhaith [anrhaith, lawless], spoil.—Anc. Inst. Wales.

Anrhaith-grbiddail, pilfering, spoliation. A term for the graver spoliation to be exercised towards a homicide.—Ibid.

Anrhaith-oddev, spoliation, sufferance. A term used when a person's goods were confiscated and seized by the lord.—Ibid.

Ansel, Ansul, or Auncel, an ancient mode of weighing by hanging scales or hooks at either end of a beam or staff, which, being lifted with one's finger or hand by the middle, showed the equality or difference between the weight at one end and the thing weighed at the other.—Termes de la Ley.

Answer [fr. andswarian, A.-S.; andswer, Goth.; antwoord, Belg.], reply, counter-speech.

Answer in Chancery. The statement of the defendant's case, in answer to the plaintiff's bill of complaint. It was sworn to by the defendant.

'Statement of Defence' is now substituted for the 'Answer.'—See STATEMENT OF DEFENCE and R. S. C. Ord. XIX.

Ante, occurring in a report or a text-book, is used to refer the reader to a previous part of the book.

Antedate, to date a document before the day of its execution.

Antejuramentum, or Præjuramentum, an oath taken by the accuser and accused before any trial or purgation.—Leg. Athelstan apud Lambard, 23.

Ante litem motam [Lat.] (before litigation commenced).

Antenati, those born before a certain period, e.g., before marriage. In Scotland marriage removes the illegitimacy of antenati who inherit as heirs; but in England a child legitimated per subsequens matrimonium could not, before 1926, inherit real estate (Doe v. Vardill, (1835) 2 Cl. & F. 571; 7 ib. 895); but he could take as devisee under a devise to children (Re Grey's Trusts, 1892, 3 Ch. 88). See Legitimacy Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 60), and LEGITIMATION.

Ante-nuptial, before marriage.

Anthrax, a splenic fever of sheep and cattle; a malignant boil or pustule caused in man by infection from animals either directly or through articles manufactured from their hair, skin, etc. See The Anthrax Prevention Act, 1919, and the orders made thereunder.

Anth ax is scheduled as an industrial disease by the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 84), 3rd Sched.

Antilethesis [fr. ἀντίλησις, Gk.], in the Civil Law, a covenant or convention whereby a person borrowing money of another engages or makes over his lands or goods to the creditor, with the use and occupation thereof, for the interest of the money lent. This covenant was allowed by the Romans, among whom usury was prohibited; it was afterwards called Mort-gage to distinguish it from a simple engagement, where the fruits of the ground were not alienated, which was called Vif-gage, i.e., vivum vadium. The obsolete Welsh mortgage bears a resemblance to this kind of pledge.—I Domat, b. iii. tit. l. s. i. art. 28; Story on Bailments, 307, par. 344.

Anticipation, doing or taking a thing before the appointed time. For Anticipation of an invention see PATENTS. A married woman may be restrained by the terms of a will or settlement from aliening, by way of anticipation, property settled to her separate use during coverture. Such a clause absolutely disables her from selling, mortgaging or dealing with the property in anticipation, but it does not apply to income actually accrued due (Hood Barrs v. Heriot, 1896, A. C. 174), and on the determination of the coverture the restraint is at an end (Tullett v. Armstrong, (1839) 4 My. & Cr. 377; 1 Beav. 1). Such a provision is only effective during coverture; it cannot affect dispositions in favour of a man (Brandon v. Robinson, (1871) 18 Ves. 429, or a feme sole). The restraint may be applied either to corpus or income, usually only to the latter; in a marriage settlement the wife's income is almost invariably directed to be paid to her, without power of anticipation. The L.P. Act, 1925, s. 169, repeating and extending the Conveyancing Act, 1911, s. 7, empowers the Court to bind the interest of a married woman, notwithstanding that she is so restrained. And see Trustee Act, 1925, s. 62, and Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 52.

The Married Women's Property Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 63), s. 2, allows the costs of the opposite party in any action or proceeding instituted by a married woman to be paid by order of the Court out of property subject to restraint on anticipation, and the Trustee Act, 1925, s. 62, enables the court to impound the interest, although restrained to indemnify a trustee for a breach of trust instigated or consented to by a married woman.

Property acquired by a married woman who has obtained a judicial separation or protection order while in force is not affected by the restraint, see Jud. Act, 1925, s. 1, and the Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935 (25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 30). The Act of 1935 has abolished the doctrine of restraint upon anticipation in the case of all instruments executed on or after the 1st January, 1936, and wills of persons dying after that date or appointments after that date of powers conferred at any time; but see Trustee Act, 1925, s. 33, and RESTRAINT UPON ALIENATION.

Antigraphy, copy or counterpart of a deed.

Anti-manifesto, the declaration of a belligerent, as a reply to the manifesto of the other belligerent, showing that the war, as far as he is concerned, is defensive.

Antinomy [fr. ἀντι against, and νόμος, law, Gk.], a contradiction between two laws or an opposition to an express law, by disobedience or by a directly contrary practice.—Encyc. Londin.

Antipelargia, an ancient law whereby children were obliged to furnish necessities to their aged parents. The ciconia, or stork, is a bird famous for the care it takes of its parents when grown old. Hence, in some Latin writers, this is rendered lex ciconiaria, or the stork's law.—Encyc. Londin.

An.iqua customa, a duty which was collected on wool, wool-felts, and leather.

Antiqua statuta, the Acts of Parliament from Richard I. to Edward III.

Antistitium, a monastery.—Blount.

Antithetarius, or Anthetarius, the recriminating upon the accuser of the same crime which he has charged against the accused.—Canutus, c. 47.

Antivestæum, the Land's End.

Antona, the River Avon, in Warwickshire.

Anstrustions, among the Franks, who were the personal vassals or dependents of the kings and counts.

Apatisatio, an agreement or compact.

Apertura testamenti, a form of proving a will in the Civil Law by the witnesses acknowledging before a magistrate their having sealed it.—1 Wm. Ezors., 6th ed., p. 312.

Aplacum, Pap Castle, in Cumberland.

Aplices juris non sunt jura.—(Fine points of laws are not laws).—'An excellent and a profitable law, concurring with the wisdom and judgement of ancient and latter times, that have disallowed curious and nice exceptions tending to the overthrow or delay of justice': Co. Litt. 304 b.—See Broom's Legal Max.

Apograph, a copy, an inventory.

Apology. By the Libel Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 96), s. 1, (commonly called Lord Campbell's Act), a defendant in an action of libel may in some cases plead the offer of an apology in mitigation of damages. And by s. 2, in any action for damages for a libel contained in a newspaper or other periodical publication, the defendant may plead an apology and pay money into Court. See LIBEL.

Aporiare, to bring to poverty, to shun or avoid. Walsingham in Ric. 2. See APPORIATUS.

Apostacy, a total renunciation of Christianity, by embracing either a false religion or no religion at all (4 Bl. Com. 43). A person educated as a Christian who denies the truth of Christianity, or the Divine authority of the Holy Scriptures, is liable to heavy penalties under the 'Blasphemy Act.' See BLASPHEMY.

Apostare, to violate, break, or transgress.—Blount; Leg. Edw. Conf. c. 35.

Apostata capiendo, a writ that formerly lay against one who, having entered and professed some order of religion, broke out again and wandered up and down the country, contrary to the rules of his order. It was addressed to the sheriff to apprehend the offender and deliver him into the possession of his abbot or prior.—Reg. Brev. 71, 267.

A posteriori. See A PRIORI.

Apostolæ, brief letters of dismissal given to an appellant. They state the case and declare that the record will be transmitted.—Civil Law. See Coloquhoun's Roman Civil Law, vol. iii., par. 2370.

Apothecaries [fr. apothicaire, Fr.; fr. αποθηκη, Gk.], persons who combine the giving of medical advice with the supply of medicines prepared by themselves. Their practice in England and Wales is mainly regulated by the Apothecaries Act, 1815 (55 Geo. 3, c. 194) (which recites and partly repeals but otherwise confirms the charter of James the First to the Apothecaries Company), and the Apothecaries Act Amendment Act, 1874, (37 & 38 Vict. c. 34). To 'act or practise as an apothecary' without a certificate which under the earlier Act is an offence, indicates an habitual or continuous course of conduct, and consequently an offender is only liable to one penalty though several persons may have been attended to (Apothecaries Co. v. Jones, 1893, 1 Q. B. 89). An apothecary, as such, may sell drugs prescribed by another as well as drugs prescribed by himself: a chemist may not prescribe but only sell drugs; a medical practitioner, as such, may only sell drugs prescribed by himself. See MEDICAL PRACTITIONERS AND CHEMIST.

Appanage, or Apanage [fr. panis, Lat., bread, whence panar, apanar, Prov., to nourish], (1) the provision of lands or feudal superiorities assigned by the Kings of France for the maintenance of their younger sons. (2) The allowance assigned to the prince of a reigning house for a proper maintenance out of the public chest.—1 Hall. Mid. Ages, c. 1. And see Spelm.

Apparator, or Apparitor, a messenger who cites and arrests offenders, and executes the decrees of the judges of the Spiritual Courts. He holds his office at the pleasure of Parliament, and does not possess a vested interest in it. See the Ecclesiastical Fees Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 76).

Apparator comitatus, an officer formerly so called, for whom the sheriffs of Buckinghamshire had a considerable yearly allowance.—Jac. Law Dict.

Apparel. The penal laws against excess in this luxury were repealed by 1 Jac. 1, c. 25.

Apparent Heir. See HEIR. In Scots Law, he is the person to whom the succession to heritable property has actually opened. He is so called until his regular entry on the lands. The term is now of little practical importance.

Apparlement [fr. pareillement, Fr., in like manner], a resemblance or likelihood.—2 Rich. 2, st. 1, c. 6.

Apparura, furniture, etc.—Blount.

Appeach, to accuse or bewray.

Appeal [fr. appellatio, Lat.; appeller, Fr.]. The judicial examination of the decision by a higher Court of the decision of an inferior Court. Thus there is an appeal from the High Court to the Court of Appeal (see Judicature Act, 1925, s. 27), from the Court of Appeal to the House of Lords (see s. 3 of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1876, c. 59), from the Petty Sessions to Quarter Sessions, where the appeal is by way of retrial (see s. 19 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, also Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Act, 1933, and SESSIONS OF THE PEACE), from the County Courts to the Court of Appeal (see s. 105 of the County Courts Act, 1934, and next title), and in criminal matters, to the Court of Criminal Appeal under the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, or under the Crown Cases Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 78). Appeals to the House of Lords in forma pauperis are checked by the Appeal (Forma Pauperis) Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 22), which gives the House of Lords power to refuse these appeals. See CRIMINAL APPEAL; CROWN CASES RESERVED; NEW TRIAL; PRIZE COURT; PRIVY COUNCIL.

Appeal, Court of. This Court, which was constituted under the Judicature Act, 1873, the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1876, and the Judicature Act, 1881, has, by Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 26, vested in it the appellate jurisdiction and powers of the Lord Chancellor and of the Court of Appeal in Chancery, and of the same Court as the Court of Appeal in Bankruptcy and from the County Palatine of Lancaster; of the Exchequer Chamber; and of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in appeals in Admiralty causes other than in the Prize Court, or in matters of lunacy. The Court (which usually sits in two divisions) consists of (ex officio) the Lord Chancellor, the Lord Chief Justice of England, the Master of the Rolls, and five Lords Justices.

The judges may not sit on appeal from judgments to which they themselves were parties.

A puisne judge is occasionally summoned to sit as an additional judge (s. 7).

An appeal to this Court lies as of right from any order or judgment of the High Court, s. 27, except in criminal matters and as to costs, and by leave of the High Court from any judgment on appeal from an inferior Court. As to appeals from jury cases, see Mechanical etc. Co. Ltd. v. Austin Motor Co. Ltd., 1935, A. C. 346; and from non-jury cases, Powell v. Streatham Manor Nursing Home, 1935, A. C. 243. As to restrictions on appeals, see s. 31. By Administration of Justice (Appeals) Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 40) and by s. 105 of the County Courts Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 53), appeals from the County Court lie to the Court of Appeal. For further appeal to the House of Lords, see APPELLATE JURISDICTION ACT.

Appeal of Death, of Felony. See Ashford v. Thornton, (1818) 1 B. & Ald. 405, and 59 Geo. 3, c. 46, abolishing this kind of appeal.

Appeal to Rome, abolished by 24 Hen. 8, c. 12, commonly called the Act of Appeals, and 25 Hen. 8, cc. 19, 21.

Appearance. When a person is served with a summoning process from a Court he generally comes into such Court to defend himself by entering an appearance with the proper officer.

Appearance to actions in the High Court of Justice must be entered within eight days from the service of the writ of summons, that being the time limited by the writ; but by r. 22 of R. S. C. Ord. XII., he may appear at any time before judgment, and by r. 5 if an action is commenced in a district registry there is an option to enter appearance in London, and if appearance is entered in London the action proceeds there (r. 7).

Formerly in indictments for felony, the accused had always to appear and plead in person, and likewise in appeal or on attachment; but in indictments or informations for misdemeanours, the accused might appear by attorney; and in misdemeanours generally after the accused had once appeared, the trial might proceed in his absence.—2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22, s. 1; Cro. Jac. 462; 4 Steph. Comm. See ACCEPTANCE OF SERVICE.

Appearance sec. stat. (i.e., Secundum statutum), which was entered at law by a plaintiff for a defaulting defendant under 12 Geo. 1, c. 29, and 2 Wm. 4, c. 39, was abolished by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 26.

Appellant, the party appealing; the party resisting the appeal is called the respondent.

Appellate Jurisdiction, the power of a superior Court to review the decision of an inferior Court. See APPEAL.

Appellate Jurisdiction Acts, 1876, 1887, 1913 and 1929 (19 Geo. 5, c. 8). These Acts modernize the procedure of the House of Lords as a Court of Appeal. An appeal lies to the House of Lords from any judgment or order of the Court of Appeal in England, and also from certain Courts in Scotland and Ireland. But Administration of Justice (Appeals) Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 40) provides that no appeal shall lie from the Court of Appeal to the House of Lords except with the leave of that Court or the House of Lords. Three members of the House, having held high judicial office, form a quorum, but any member of the House, whether having held high judicial office or not, has still a technical right to take part in a judgment; but peers not being law lords have not taken such part since 1783 (in Bishop of London v. Fytche, (1783) 1 East, 487), except in Bradlaugh v. Clarke, (1883) 48 L. T. 681, in which Lord Denman took part in a hearing and voted with Lord Blackburn against three other peers. See O'Connell v. The Queen, (1844) 11 Cl. & F. 155, in which, after considerable discussion, all the lay lords withdrew; Sugd. Law of Prop., pp. 1, et seq.

The Crown may appoint salaried 'Lords of Appeal in ordinary,' and an additional Lord of Appeal in Ordinary may be created who also sits on the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. By the Act of 1929, Indian judges or lawyers may be appointed as additional members of the Judicial Committee. Appeals may be heard during a prorogation or dissolution of Parliament. As to Irish appeals to the House of Lords, see Government of Ireland Act, 1920, s. 49. See LORDS OF APPEAL; LORDS OF APPEAL IN ORDINARY; HOUSE OF LORDS.

Appellee, one who is appealed against or accused.

Appellor, an accuser; a criminal who accuses his accomplices, one who challenges a jury, etc.

Appenage, Apennage, or Appanage, a child's part or portion. It is properly the portion of the king's younger children in France. See APPANAGE.—Cowel.

Appendant, a thing of inheritance belonging to another inheritance which is more worthy: as an advowson, common, etc., which may be appendant to a manor, common of fishing to a freehold, a seat in a church to a house, etc. It differs from appurtenance, in that appendant must ever be by prescription, i.e., a personal usage for a considerable time, while an appurtenance may be created at this day, for if a grant be made to a man and his heirs of common in such a moor for his beasts levant or couchant upon his manor, the commons are appurtenant to the manor, and the grant will pass them. Co. Litt. 121 b. See APPURTENANCES, COMMON.

Appenditia, the appendages or pertinances of an estate.—Cowel.

Appensura, the payment of money at the scale or by weight.—Spelm.

Applicatio est vita regulæ. 2 Buls. 79.— (Application is the life of a rule.)

Application, a request, a motion to a Court or judge; the disposal of a thing.

Application for Shares. Under the Companies Act, 1929, s. 35, the issue of forms of applications for shares in a public company must be accompanied by the prospectus, and the amount payable on such application must not be less than five per cent. of the nominal amount of the share (s. 39).

Appodiare, to lean on or prop up anything.—Jacob.

Appointed Day. A day fixed by an Act of Parliament for some purpose of the statute; see, e.g., the Local Government Act, 1894, s. 84; Merchant Shipping Act, 1906, s. 5.

Appointee, a person selected for a particular purpose; also the person in whose favour a power of appointment is executed.

Appointment of New Trustees. See TRUSTEES. It was formerly necessary to insert a full power in instruments creating a trust providing a succession of trustees and nominating the person or persons by whom the power was to be exercised and specifying the various contingencies, as death, resignation, incapacity, etc., of the trustee, in which the power was to arise; otherwise application had to be made to the Court of Chancery. Latterly, however, a power for this purpose has been supplied by various Acts of Parliament, the statute at present in force being the Trustee Act, 1925, ss. 36 and 37 replacing and extending the 10th section of the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), and s. 36 of the Act of 1925 also provides for the appointment of additional trustees. Section 40 provides for the vesting of the trust property in the new trustees by a declaration in the deed of appointment or, if in deeds of appointment executed after 1925, no express vesting declaration appears, by implication. The declaration express or implied will not transfer lands constituting a security for trust moneys, except lands securing debentures or debenture stock; it will not pass certain leaseholds or shares or other property which are only transferable in the books of a company or other body or otherwise as directed by Statute. Accordingly it is not usual in modern deeds and wills to do more than nominate the person or persons who are to have the power of appointing new trustees.

Sections 41, 42 and 43 of the Trustee Act, 1925, enable the Court, whenever it is expedient in cases of difficulty and impracticable otherwise, to appoint a new trustee or trustees and, if necessary (s. 44), to make an order vesting the trust estate in the new trustees, or the continuing and new trustees, as the case may require. Under s. 42 the Court may authorise remuneration for a Trust Corporation. As to appointment of new trustees on trust for sale, and trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Act, 1925, see s. 35 of the T. A. Act, 1925, and s. 35 of the Settled Land Act, 1925.

Appointment in Exercise of a Power. In the case of freeholds an instrument which alters, abridges, or suspends a use limited by a prior assurance or trust creating the power which sanctions such appointment. In the case of appointments of uses of freeholds effected under the Statute of Uses the seisin to serve the appointed use was transferred by the prior assurance; the appointment vested the legal estate in the appointee, who took as though he were named in such prior assurance. After the 31st December, 1925, a power of appointment of land can only operate in equity, Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 1 (7).

Powers may also be reserved over personal estate, and in that case also only the equitable estate now passes; a common instance is the power of appointment among the issue usually given by a marriage settlement, by virtue of which the parents can distribute the settled funds amongst the issue in such shares as the donees of the power think fit, and the trustees will then hold the funds in trust for the appointees accordingly. A deed of appointment should recite or refer to the power, and be expressed to be in exercise of it, as manifesting the intention of the appointor, or person executing the power, and also of every other authority enabling him in that behalf, so as to guard against any misrecital of the assurance creating the power. It should likewise state than any formalities required for the execution of the power are complied with, and the attestation should set forth that such formalities were observed.

The formalities required by the creator of a power should be few and simple, for many an appointment has failed because they have not been precisely attended to. When the consent of any person is required to the exercise of a power, it is generally a condition precedent, and an execution of the power without such consent is not cured by subsequent acquisition. In all cases, legal or equitable, an appointment is deemed to be part of the instrument conferring the power for the purposes of construing the appointed limitation or trust. Sugden on Powers, 8th ed., p. 472. See Preston's Act (54 Geo. 3, c. 168), as to the attestation of appointments made prior to the 30th July, 1814; and also see the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 10, and the Wills (Soldiers and Sailors) Act, 1918 (7 & 8 Geo. 5, c. 58), as to appointments exercisable by will; and see the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 159, replacing the Law of Property Amendment Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35) s. 12, as to appointments by deed. For frauds on Powers see FRAUD and Farwell on Powers.

Illusory Appointments, by s. 158 of the L. P. Act, 1925, replacing and extending the Illusory Appointments Act, 1830 (11 Geo. 4, and 1 Wm. 4, c. 46), and the Powers of Appointments Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 37), appointments of nominal shares are to be valid in equity as well as in law and are not to be invalidated on the ground that any object of the power is thereby excluded or takes an illusory share. See also FRAUDS ON POWERS.

Frauds on powers of appointment.—Where a limited power is executed for a corrupt purpose as by a bargain with any of the proper objects of the power to benefit the appointor, Hinchinbroke (Lord) v. Seymour (1784), 1 Bro. C. C. 395 (unless the appointor actually buys the interest of the person entitled, see Brownlow v. Meath (Earl) (1840) 2 Dr. and Wal. 674), or where the appointment includes a purpose or condition not contained in the power by the donor, see Hay v. Watkins (1843), 3 Dr. and War. 339, the exercise of the power is void. The Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 157, protects purchasers in good faith and making reasonable inquiry when dealing after 1925 with an appointee who is not less than 25 years of age, to the extent of the appointee's own interest as provided by the section. See Farwell, or Sugden on Powers. And see POWER.

Appointor, a donee of a power after he has executed it; also a person who nominates another for an office.

Apponere, to pledge or pawn.—Jac. Law Dict.

Appropriatus, impoverished.—Annales de Dunstaplin, an. 1269.

Apportionment, a division of a whole into parts (usually unequal) proportioned to the rights of more claimants than one. It is either (1) Apportionment in respect of time, or (2) Apportionment in respect of estate.

Apportionment in respect of Time.—At Common Law there is no apportionment in respect of time. When a successor in interest succeeds just before a rent or other periodical payment falls due, he takes, at Common Law, the whole, and the executors of his predecessor take nothing (Clun's Case, 1 Rep. 127). This was remedied by 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 25, which apportioned rent between the representatives of a deceased tenant for life, and the person succeeding in remainder, and by 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 22, passed to obviate doubts which had arisen upon the earlier Act.

The 'Apportionment Act, 1870' (33 & 34 Vict. c. 35) now provides (but without repealing the above Acts) that all rents, annuities, and dividends, and other periodical payments in the nature of income shall, like interest on money lent, be considered as accruing from day to day, and shall be apportionable in respect of time accordingly (s. 1). This Act has been held in and since Swansea Bank v. Thomas, (1879) 4 Ex. D. 94, to apply not only, as the former Acts did, between two classes of receivers, as the executors of tenants for life and remaindermen, but between receiver and payer, as between a landlord and a tenant, so that if a tenancy be determined in the middle of a quarter, the landlord gets rent up to the day of determination, whereas before the Act the whole of the quarter's rent was lost to him. The Act does not apply to rent payable in advance, annuities, dividends, and other payments in the nature of income which have accrued due before the happening of the event by reason of which it is proposed to apply the Act (Ellis v. Rowbotham, 1900, 1 Q. B. 740).

Apportionment in respect of Estate means the attribution of benefits and burdens according to their nature to each part of an estate or other property upon severance, by conveyance, surrender or otherwise. At Common Law rent was apportionable upon severance by act of law, e.g., upon the devolution on intestacy of freeholds, and leaseholds which were comprised in one lease, or upon partition, or upon eviction from part of the land by title paramount, or where part of the demised premises became lost to the tenant by irruption of the sea, also by act of parties, e.g., upon surrender, release, grant or devise of part of demised land. The right to apportionment is a question of law, the apportionment may be by consent or by judicial process or, under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 34), s. 20, by the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries, and neither the reversioner nor the lessee is bound unless he consents or is a party to the proceedings, see Bliss v. Collins, (1822) 5 B. & Ald. 876; Swansea Corporation v. Thomas, (1882) 10 Q. B. D. 48.

Covenants if implied by law were apportionable but express covenants were not, until the 32 Hen. 8, c. 34, see Twynam v. Pickard, 2 B. & Ald. 105, and Swansea Corporation v. Thomas ubi supra.

Conditions in leases were not apportionable at all even after the Statute 34 Hen. 8, c. 34, except upon severance by act of law, e.g., upon a partition or intestacy as between the heir and personal representative, Dumport's Case, Sm. L. C.

Apportionment of Rent and Covenants is now provided for by ss. 140, 141 and 142 of the Law of Property Act, 1925. Previously to that Act the Law of Property Amendment Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35), s. 3, provided that where the reversion upon a lease is severed, and the rent is legally apportioned, the assignee of each part of the reversion shall, in respect of the apportioned rent allotted to him, be entitled to the benefit of all conditions of re-entry for non-payment of the original rent, and the Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 12, applies the principle of this enactment in case of leases made after that Act to conditions generally in leases executed after 1881; and as to conditions already broken, see Conveyancing Act, 1911, s. 2. The Law of Property Act, 1925, ss. 141 and 142, reproduces with amendments 32 Hen. 8, c. 34, ss. 10 and 11 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, and s. 2 of the Act of 1911, as to conditions irrespective of the date of the lease. A further extension creating a new right upon severance is to be found in s. 140 of the 1925 Act. Assignees of a part of a reversion may give notice to quit that part and the lessee has the right to give a counter notice as to the rest of the land demised. As to agricultural holdings, see L. P. Amendment Act, 1926. The Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 119, provides for an apportionment of rent where part only of lands subject to a lease is taken under the Act.

Rentcharges.—A rentcharge issues out of every part of the land charged and, as a rule, the burden is not apportionable unless the owner of the charge consents, or is a party to the proceedings for apportionment, and until the Law of Property Amendment Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35) s. 10, was passed, a release of part of the land released the whole charge. See now the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 70, which releases the part discharged only. To obviate these difficulties it became usual to insert mutual covenants and cross powers of distress and entry upon severance of land subject to an entire rent charge. These powers have now become statutory and certain covenants are implied in a conveyance (other than a mortgage) or lease (other than a mortgage) of the land charged with or without legal apportionment of which the rent has or has not been legally apportioned. See Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 77 and s. 190; and TITHE RENT CHARGE.

Apportum, the revenue or profit which a thing brings to the owner. It is commonly applied to a corody or pension.—Blount.

Apposal of Sheriffs, charging them with money received upon the account of the Exchequer.—22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 22, repealed by Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1863, except s. 5, which penalises officers of Courts withholding or concealing or miscertifying fines.

Apposer, an officer of the Exchequer.

Apposition. A word is said to be used in apposition to another in contradistinction to be used disjunctively; thus, if two nouns occur with the word 'or' between them, if the word 'or' be taken to mean 'otherwise called' the second noun is used in apposition. But if it be taken to show that the two words mean two different things, the words are said to be used disjunctively.

Appostille [Fr.], an addition or annotation to a document.

Appraisement [fr. apprécier prix, Fr., pretium, Lat.], the act of valuing property, goods, furniture, etc. As to appraisement, if required by tenant or by owner of the goods, before selling under a distress for rent, see DISTRESS. Appraisement of a ship is sometimes ordered by the Admiralty Division of the High Court, see R. S. C. Ord. LI., Part III., and also generally before sale of any property by order of the Court.

Appraiser [fr. appréciateurs, Fr.], persons employed to value goods, repairs, labour, etc. By 46 Geo. 3, c. 43, and 8 & 9 Vict. c. 76, they are required to take out an annual license. According to an old statute, 11 Edw. 1, stat. Acton Burnel, appraisers valuing goods too highly were compelled to take them at their own valuation.

Apprehension [fr. appréhendere, Lat., to seize], the capture of a person upon a criminal charge. See ARREST.

Apprendre [Fr.]. A fee or profit apprendre is fee or profit to be taken or received, such as exercising the right of common. Jac. Law Dict.

Apprentice [fr. apprendre, Fr., to learn], a person bound by indentures of apprenticeship to a tradesman or artificer, who covenants to teach him his trade or mystery. The master is bound to instruct his apprentice, and to make him master of the art so far as his capacity to learn will permit. If the master die, or become bankrupt, or abandon the trade, the obligation of the apprentice is at an end. Conversely, that the apprentice has done anything incompatible with faithful service, is a just cause of dismissal (Pearce v. Foster, (1886) 17 Q. B. D. 536—C. A., and see Learoyd v. Brooks, 1891, 1 Q. B. 431). An infant can bind himself by a deed of apprenticeship (Green v. Thompson, 1899, 2 Q. B. 1). With regard to apprentices for the mercantile marine, see The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60). Apprentices are within the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, ss. 3 and 35. Justices of the peace have jurisdiction in many questions between master and apprentice. For instance, the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875, s. 6, makes it an offence, punishable on summary conviction by fine or imprisonment with or without hard labour, for a master to neglect to provide food, etc., for his apprentice. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Master and Servant' and 'Poor (Apprentices).'

Apprenticeships were altogether unknown to the ancients. The Roman Law is perfectly silent with regard to them.

Apprentice en la ley. See last title.

Apprenticell ad legem. Apprentices to the law—i.e., not servientes ad legem (serjeants-at-law)—barristers. See Fleta, lib. ii. c. 37.

Approbate or Reprobate. A person is said to approve and reprobate where he takes advantage of one part of a document and rejects the rest.—Scots Law. The maxim runs, Qui approbat non reprobat: One who approves cannot reprobate. The doctrine is the same as the English law of election (Douglas-Menzies v. Umphelby, 1908, A. C. 224). See ELECTION.

Appropriare communiam, to discommon and enclose any parcel of land which was before open common.—Paroch. Antiq. 336.

Appropriation, the annexing of some ecclesiastical benefice to the proper and perpetual use of some religious house, etc., just as impropriation is the annexing a benefice to the use of a lay person or corporation. Appropriation may be severed and the church become disappropriate, if a patron or appropriator present a clerk who is properly instituted and inducted, for he would then become complete parson; also, if a corporation possessing the benefice is dissolved, the parsonage becomes disappropriate at Common Law.—Phill. Eccl. Law.

Appropriation, Powers of. The Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 41, has conferred on personal representatives a general power to appropriate any part of the real or personal estate (including things in action) of the deceased in its actual condition or state of investment at the time of appropriation in or towards satisfaction of any legacy or interest or share in his property as to the personal representative may seem just or reasonable having regard to the rights of the persons interested in that property subject to the consent of the person entitled to that part, or to the income (if the share is settled), or of his parent, guardian, committee or receiver if he is under incapacity owing to infancy or otherwise. No other consents are required and provision is made for dispensing with any consent. Any property when duly appropriated is to be treated as an authorized investment. An appropriation with consent under this Act is subjected to an ad valorem duty as a conveyance. Aliter if the consent is dispensed with by the will.

Appropriation Act. An Act so named is passed every year for the purpose of applying sums out of the Consolidated Fund (see that title) to the service of the year, and for appropriating the supplies granted by Parliament.

Appropriation of Goods. Upon a contract for sale of unascertained or future goods is an act identifying goods specifically with the contract. The appropriation may be made by either party with the express or implied consent of the other absolutely or conditionally or revocably. delivery to the buyer or a bailee without any reservation of the right of disposal transfers the property. See Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71) s. 21.

Appropriation of Payments, the application to one of several debts of a sum of money paid by a debtor on a general account. The general rule as to appropriation of payments is this : The debtor may in the first instance appropriate the payment, solvitur in modum solventis ; if he omit to do so, the creditor may make the appropriation, recipitur in modum recipientis ; if neither debtor nor creditor make any appropriation, the law appropriates the payment upon equitable principles and primâ facie to the earlier debt (Mills v. Fowkes, (1839) 5 Bing. N. C. 461 ; Clayton's Case, (1816) 1 Mer. 605 ; The Mecca, 1897, A. C. 286). A creditor can appropriate a general payment to a statute-barred debt, but he cannot appropriate such a payment made before judgment, after a judgment deciding that such a debt is statute barred (Smith v. Betty, 1903, 2 K. B. 317). See CLAYTON'S CASE.

Appropriator, a spiritual corporation entitled to the profits of a benefice.

Approve, to augment a thing to the utmost.—2 Inst. 474.

Approved Schools. These schools are schools intended for the education and training of persons to be sent there in pursuance of the Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (see s. 79 (1)) and approved by the Secretary of State. They are regulated by ss. 79–83 of that Act. Local authorities may under certain circumstances undertake the purchase, establishment, building, alteration, enlargement, rebuilding or management of an approved school (s. 80). The Secretary of State may classify approved schools as he thinks best calculated to secure that a person sent to an approved school is sent to the school appropriate to his case. With certain exceptions the managers of an approved school are bound to accept any person sent there in pursuance of the Act (s. 81). The expression 'approved school' was first used in the Children and Young Persons Act, 1932, which was declared to apply in relation to a school which at the commencement of this Act is a certified reformatory school or a certified industrial school as if the certificate for the school were a certificate of approval issued under this Act.

Approved Society. Any body of persons, corporate or unincorporate (not being a branch of another such body), registered or established under any Act of Parliament, or by Royal Charter, or having a certain 'prescribed' character, which complies with the provisions of the National Insurance Act, 1936 (a consolidating and amending Act), and has been approved by the Minister of Health under s. 73 of the National Insurance Act, 1936 ; and see NATIONAL HEALTH INSURANCE.

Approvement, improvement, as where there exists a right of common of pasture on a lord's waste, and the lord encloses part of such waste, leaving sufficient common of pasture, as he is bound to do by the Statute of Merton, 20 Hen. 3, c. 4, which prescribes in what cases lords may 'approve' against tenants ; and see 13 Edw. 1, st. 2, c. 46 ; and INCLOSURE.

Approver, or Prover [fr. approver, Fr., to consent unto], an accomplice in crime who accuses others of the same offence, and is admitted as a witness at the discretion of the Court to give evidence against his companions in guilt. He is vulgarly called 'King's evidence.' This testimony must necessarily be of an unsatisfactory nature, and the practice is for judges to leave it to juries with the direction not to believe it unless corroborated in some material particular by independent untainted testimony (In re Meunier, 1894, 2 Q. B. 415).

Approvers, bailiffs of lords in their franchises. Sheriffs were called the king's approvers in 1 Edw. 3, st. 1, c. 1.—Termes de la Ley.

Appruare, to take to one's use or profit. 'Appruare se possint' in 13 Edw. 1, st. 1, c. 46, is translated 'may make approuement.'

Appurtenances, belonging to another thing, as hamlets to a manor, and common of pasture, turbary, etc. ; liberties and services, outhouses, yards, orchards, and gardens are appurtenant to a messuage, but lands cannot properly be said to be appurtenant to a messuage.—Com. Dig., tit. 'Appendant and Appurtenant.' The word 'appurtenances' will be construed strictly (Re Peck, 1893, 2 Ch. 315), but it has a secondary meaning equivalent to 'usually occupied with' ; see Roe v. Siddons, (1888) 22 Q. B. D., at p. 236, per Fry, L.J.

A right of common 'appurtenant' must be the subject of a grant, express or implied by prescription; 'appendant,' is a right by common law incident to certain grants made before the Statute 'Quia Emptores' 1290 (18 Edw. 1, c. 1).

The right to compensation upon extinguishment of manorial incidents is a right appertaining to a manor; L. P. Act, 1925, s. 52, replacing and extending the Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 6.

Appurtenant, pertaining or belonging to. See APPENDANT.

A priori. All arguments may be divided, according to the relation of the subject-matter of the premises to that of the conclusion, into (a) a priori (from the antecedent to the consequence), or those of such a nature that the premises would account for the conclusion, were that conclusion granted, which is the Aristotelian method of reasoning; and (B) a posteriori (from the consequence to the antecedent), or those whose premises could not have been used to account for the conclusion, which is the Baconian method of reasoning. The former class is manifestly argument from cause to effect, since to account for anything signifies to assign the cause of it. The latter class comprehends all other arguments.

Apta viro (of a woman), marriageable, i.e., in strict law at 12 years of age. Also used in the sense of ability on the part of the woman to consummate the marriage.

Apt Words, words proper to produce the legal effect for which they are intended; sound technical phrases.

Aqua pontana, Bridgewater in Somersetshire.

Aquatic Rights, those exercisable in running or still water. See WATERCOURSE.

Aquæ Calidæ, Aquæ Solis, Akemanoester, Bath in Somersetshire.

Aquæ ductus, a right to carry a watercourse through another's ground.—Civil Law.

Aquæ haustus, a servitude which consists in the right to draw water from the fountain, pool, or spring of another.—Civil Law.

Aquæ immittendæ, a servitude which the owner of a house, surrounded by other buildings, so that it has no outlet for its waters, has, to allow them to run upon and over his neighbour's land.—Civil Law.

Aquage, or Aquagium, a watercourse, or toll paid for water carriage.—Blount.

Aquilædunum, Hoxton.

Aquitania, Aquitain, afterwards containing Guienne and Gascony.

A.R., anno regni, the year of the reign, as A. R. V. R. 22 (Anno Regni Victoria Regina vicesimo secundo); in the twenty-second year of the reign of Queen Victoria.

Arabant, applied to those who held by the tenure of ploughing and tilling the lord's lands within the manor.—Cowel.

Arable Land. The Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923 (13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 9), s. 30, allows freedom of cropping of arable land, which expression 'shall not include land in grass, which by the terms of any contract of tenancy is to be retained in the same condition throughout the tenancy.'

Arace, to raise or erase.—Blount.

Araho, to make oath in the church or some other holy place. All oaths were made in the church upon the relics of saints, according to the Riparian Laws.—Spelm; Blount.

Aralia, arable grounds.—Blount; Cowel.

Aratrum terræ, as much land as can be tilled by one plough. A term applied to a service rendered by a tenant to his lord.—Blount.

Arbela, Ireby in Cumberland.

Arbiter, a private extrajudicial judge; an arbitrator or referee; a witness. See ARBITRATOR.

Arbitrament, the award or decision of arbitrators upon a matter of dispute, which has been submitted to them.—Termes de la Ley.

Arbitrary Punishment, such as is left entirely to the discretion of a judge.

Arbitration, the determination of a matter in dispute by the judgment of one or more persons, called arbitrators, who in case of difference usually call in an 'umpire' to decide between them.

An arbitrator is a disinterested person, to whose judgment and decision matters in dispute are referred.—Termes de la Ley.

The civilians make a difference between arbiter and arbitrator, though both found their power in the compromise of the parties; the former being obliged to judge according to the customs of the law: whereas the latter is at liberty to use his own discretion, and accommodate the difference in that manner which appears most just and equitable.

An arbitrator ought to be an indifferent person between the disputants, and should be incorrupt and impartial.

Generally speaking, almost all matters in dispute, not being of a criminal nature, may be referred to arbitration; but at Common Law there was no mode of making the award binding.

This defect was first cured by the statute

9 & 10 Wm. 3, c. 15, which enabled parties to agree that a submission to arbitration might be made a rule of Court, and consequently binding. This and five subsequent amending enactments were further amended by the Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49).

By s. 1 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, a "submission" (which term by s. 27, ibid., means a written agreement to submit present or future differences to arbitration, whether an arbitrator is named therein or not), 'unless a contrary intention is expressed, shall be irrevocable, except by leave of the Court or a judge, and shall have the same effect in all respects, as if it had been made an order of Court.' By s. 2 certain scheduled provisions as to appointment of umpire, time for making award, etc., are primâ facie included in every submission, and by s. 4 if any party to a submission (including an agreement to refer disputes to a foreign tribunal, Kirchner v. Gruban, 1909, 1 Ch. 413), commences any legal proceedings (including those by counterclaim, Chappell v. North, 1891, 2 Q. B. 225), against any other party to the submission, in respect of any matter agreed to be referred, any party to such legal proceedings may at any time after appearance, and before taking any step in the proceedings (e.g., attending a summons for directions, Ochs v. Ochs Brothers, 1909, 2 Ch. 121; see also Ives & Barker v. Williams, 1894, 2 Ch. 484), apply to that Court to stay the proceedings, and that Court (including a County Court, Morrison Tinplate Co. v. Brooker, 1908, 1 K. B. 403), if satisfied that there is no sufficient reason why the matter should not be referred and that the applicant was and is ready and willing to do all things necessary to the proper conduct of the arbitration, may make an order staying the proceedings.

The Act applies (s. 24), unless excluded, to every arbitration under any Act passed before or after its commencement as if the arbitration were pursuant to a submission, 'except in so far as this Act is inconsistent with the Act regulating the arbitration or with any rules or procedure authorized or recognized by that Act.'

The chief amendments of the Arbitration Act, 1934, relate to the effect of the death or bankruptcy of a party to the arbitration agreement (ss. 1 and 2), the appointment of an umpire (s. 5), the powers of arbitrators and of the Court (s. 8), the statement of a special case (s. 9). Arbitrators have power to order specific performance (s. 7), an amount will carry interest at the same rate as a judgment debt (s. 11), and an agreement that parties shall pay their own costs in any event is void (s. 12). The Statutes of Limitation apply to arbitration (s. 16), and a charging order for solicitors' costs can be obtained (s. 17). Certain provisions are excluded in the case of statutory arbitrations (s. 20).

Various statutes specifically incorporate the Arbitration Act, others both necessitate arbitration and specify the procedure excluding the Arbitration Act, e.g., Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923; the Industrial Courts Act, 1919; and the Workmen's Compensation Acts, which provide for arbitration in accordance with Sched. II. of the Act of 1906 as amended by the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925.

Reference by Order of the Court. - The Court can refer matters to arbitration within certain limits for decision or for report. See ss. 13 and 14 of the Act of 1889 as amended.

An arbitrator's powers and duties are conferred and imposed by the submission, or the Arbitration Act, 1889 as amended. He is generally the final judge of law and facts; he is bound by the rules of law, and occupies a judicial position (Re Enoch, 1910, 1 K. B. 327), and cannot award anything contrary thereto. It is, however, the recognized practice in commercial arbitrations, where an umpire is appointed, for the arbitrators on either side to act, in effect, as advocates, unless the parties otherwise desire (French Government v. Tsurushima Maru, (1921) 37 T. L. R. 961). By s. 9 of the 1889 Act, any arbitrator or umpire may at any stage of the proceedings, and shall, if so directed by the Court, state in the form of a special case for the opinion of the Court any question of law arising in the course of the reference. See Tabernacle Building Society v. Knight, 1892, A. C. 298. There is no appeal from the Court's decision thereon (Cogstad v. Newsum, 1921, 2 A. C. 528). By s. 7 of the Act of 1889, the arbitrator may make his award in the form of a special case for the decision of the Court. In which event, having made his award, his duties are at an end. An appeal lies from the Court's decision on an award in the form of a special case under this section, and see s. 9 of the Act of 1934. Cases under either section may be remitted to the arbitrator for further findings of fact.

The submission determines the matters which are within an arbitrator's authority (Re North-Western Rubber Co., 1908, 2 K. B. 907). His authority commences from the time of the agreement to refer being signed by all the parties.

As soon as the award is published, the arbitrator's authority is at an end.

An arbitrator may be removed for misconduct, e.g., for refusing to state a case for the High Court (Palmer v. Hosken, 1898, 1 Q. B. 131), and his award may be set aside for misconduct, which may be either actual or technical, or because an error in law appears on the face of the award (see that title). An award cannot be set aside for being against the weight of evidence or, generally, for misreception of evidence. An award may always be enforced by action or in certain cases summarily.

Arbitrators under the Judicature Acts are called 'referees.'

Various Chambers of Commerce and professional and trade bodies have instituted courts of arbitration for dealing with disputes arising in connection with their trade or business.

Submissions to arbitration and awards require to be stamped with 6d. and 10s. stamps respectively.

See AWARD; CONCILIATION; REFEREES, and consult Russell on Arbitration.

Arbor consanguinitatis, a tree-shaped table, showing the genealogy of a family.—See the Arbor civilis of the civilians and canonists, Hale's Com. Law, 335.

Arca cyrographica, a common chest with three locks and keys, kept by certain Christians and Jews, wherein all the contracts, mortgages, and obligations belonging to the Jews were preserved to prevent fraud, by order of Richard I.—Hov. Ann. 705.

Archalonomia, a collection of Saxon laws, published during the reign of Queen Elizabeth, in the Saxon language, with a Latin version by Lambard.

Archbishop [fr. ἀρχιεπίσκοπος, Gk., fr. ἀρχων, chief, and ἐπίσκοπος, bishop], the chief of the clergy in his province; he has supreme power under the king in all ecclesiastical causes, and superintends the conduct of other bishops, his suffragans. The archbishops are said to be enthroned when they are vested in the archbishopric, whereas bishops are said to be installed. An archbishop, if promoted from a bishopric, as is usually the case, does not require any further consecration, but all archbishops require both election and confirmation, similarly to bishops. England has two archbishops, Canterbury and York. The Archbishop of Canterbury, in granting licenses and dispensations, has taken the place of the Pope before 25 Hen. 8, c. 21, by virtue of s. 3 of that Act. He is styled Primate of all England, the Archbishop of York being styled Primate of England. And see BISHOP; CONFIRMATION.

Archdeacon [fr. ἀρχων, chief, and διακονέω, Gk., to minister], a substitute for the bishop, having ecclesiastical dignity and jurisdiction over the clergy and laity next after the bishop, either throughout the diocese or in some part of it only. He visits his jurisdiction once every year, and has a Court where he may hear ecclesiastical causes, subject to an appeal to the bishop, by 24 Hen. 8, c. 12, commonly called the Act of Appeals. He examines candidates for holy orders, and inducts clerks upon receipt of the bishop's mandate.—Wood's Inst. 30. The Law styles him the bishop's vicar or vicegerent.

Archdeaconry, a division of a diocese, and the circuit of an archdeacon's jurisdiction. The Act 37 & 38 Vict. c. 63 facilitates the re-arrangement of the boundaries of archdeacons and rural deaneries.

Archery, a service of keeping a bow for the lord's use in the defence of his castle.—Co. Litt. 157.

Arches, Court of [fr. curia de arcubus, Lat.], a court of appeal belonging to the Archbishop of Canterbury, the judge of which is called the Dean of the Arches, because his Court was anciently held in the church of Saint Mary-le-Bow (Sancta Maria de arcubus), so named from the steeple, which is raised upon pillars, built archwise. It was formerly held, as also were the other principal Spiritual Courts, in the hall belonging to the College of Civilians, commonly called Doctors' Commons. It is now held at the Church House, Westminster. Its proper jurisdiction is only over the 13 peculiar parishes belonging to the Archbishop in London, but the office of Dean of the Arches having been for a long time united to that of the Archbishop's Official Principal, the Dean of the Arches, in right of such added office, receives and determines appeals from the sentences of all Inferior Ecclesiastical Courts within the province. There was formerly an appeal to the king in Chancery, or to a Court of Delegates, appointed under the Great Seal by 25 Hen. 8, c. 19, as supreme head of the English Church, instead of to the Bishop of Rome, who originally exercised the jurisdiction; but the Judicial Committee Acts of 1832 and 1833 (2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 92, and 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 41), Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Privy Council,' provided that the appeal should be to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council (Wakeford v. Bishop of Lincoln, 1921, 1 A. C. 813). Consult Phillimore's Ecclesiastical Law; Wheeler's Privy Council Law. The jurisdiction of the Court in testamentary matters was transferred to the Court of Probate (now the Probate Division) by the Court of Probate Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77). The Judicature Act, 1925, s. 20, vests the jurisdiction of 1857 in the present Court.

By the Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 85), provision was made for the appointment of 'a judge of the Provincial Courts of Canterbury and York,' and it was further provided that whenever a vacancy should occur in the office of Official Principal of the Arches Court of Canterbury, this new judge should become ex-officio such Official Principal, and all proceedings thereafter taken before the judge in relation to matters arising within the province of Canterbury should be deemed to be taken (see Dale's Case, (1881) 6 Q. B. D. 376) in the Arches Court of Canterbury. See PUBLIC WORSHIP REGULATION ACT, 1874.

Archetype, the original copy.

Archigrapher, a chief secretary.

Archilowe, of unknown derivation, signifies a peace-offering.

Architect, a person who is skilled in the study of architecture, or more generally a person who prepares designs or plans of a building and supervises its erection. The plans of an architect cease to be his property as soon as he has been paid for his work upon them (Gibbon v. Pease, 1905, 1 K. B. 810). As to the liability of an architect for negligence, see Columbus Co. v. Clowes, 1903, 1 K. B. 244, and Chambers v. Goldthorpe, 1901, 1 K. B. 624; with regard to an architect's certificate, see the last-cited case and Eaglesham v. McMaster, 1920, 2 K. B. 169, also Hudson on Building Contracts, 6th ed. 'Architectural works of art,' as defined by the Act, are protected by the Copyright Act, 1911, see s. 35. The Architects (Registration) Act, 1931 (21 & 22 Geo. 5, c. 33), provides for the Registration of Architects.

Archives [fr. arca, Lat., a chest; or ἀρχεῖον, Gk., a council-house], a chamber or place where ancient records, charters, and evidences are kept. It is sometimes used for the writings themselves—thus we say the archives of a college, a monastery, etc.

Archivist, a keeper of archives.

Area [Lat., a threshing-floor], (1) an enclosed yard or open place connected with a house; (2) a district for particular purposes, as a school board area, a parliamentary electoral area, a local government district (see Part viii of the Public Health Act, 1875), a Poor Law Union of parishes, as to which, see UNION; (3) Metaphor, the region of discussion; (4) In the London Building Act, 1930, s. 5, contains this definition: 'area' in relation to a building means the superficies of a horizontal section thereof made at the point of its greatest surface inclusive of the external walls and of such portions of the party walls as belong to the building.

Arendre [Fr., to render or yield], such as rents and services.

Arentare, to rent or let out at a certain rent.—Cowel.

Areppennis or Arpennis, probably an acre or furlong of ground; see Spelm; Ellis's Introduction to Domesday Book, vol. i., p. 117.

Arerelsment, hindrance, surprise, affrightment.—Rot. Parl. 21 Edw. 3.

A rescriptis valet argumentum, Co. Litt. 11.—(An argument drawn from rescripts is sound.) A rescript is a decision of the Pope or Emperor on a doubtful point of law.

Argadia, or Argathalla, Argyleshire, in Scotland.

Argent, silver, sometimes called Luna in the arms of princes, and Pearl in those of peers. As silver soon becomes tarnished it is generally represented in painting by white. In engraving it is known by the natural colour of the paper.—Herald. Term.

Argentarius, a money-dealer or banker.

Argentum album, white money, silver coin, or pieces of bullion which anciently passed for money.—Spelm.

Argentum Del, God's money, i.e., money given in earnest upon the making of any bargain, hence arles, earnest.—Blount.

Argil, or Argoll [fr. argilla, Lat.], clay, lime, and sometimes gravel, also the lees of wine gathered to a certain hardness.—Law Fr.

Arguendo, in the course of the argument.

Argument. In reasoning, Locke observes that men ordinarily use four sorts of arguments. The first is to allege the opinions of men, whose parts and learning, eminency, power, or some other cause, have gained a name, and settled their reputation in the common esteem, with some kind of authority; this may be called argumentum ad verecundiam. The second is to require the adversary to admit what they allege as a proof, or to require a better; this he calls argumentum ad ignorantiam. The third is to press a man with consequences drawn from his own principles, concessions, or actions; this is known by the name of argumentum ad hominem. The fourth the using proofs drawn from any of the foundations of knowledge or probability; this he calls argumentum ad judicium, and he observes that it is the only one of all the four that brings true instruction with it, and advances us in our way to knowledge.

Argumentative. A pleading in which the statement on which the pleader relies is implied instead of being expressed, is argumentative. As if B. be sued for converting goods of A., and B. pleads that 'A. never had any goods,' the proper pleading is, that the goods were not the goods of A., and that it is to be inferred only from the words used. By R. S. C. Ord. XIX., r. 27, where pleadings prejudice, embarrass, or delay fair trial, they may be struck out or amended, and by R. S. C. Ord. XXXVIII., r. 3, the costs of an affidavit unnecessarily setting forth argumentative matter must be paid by the party filing the same.

Argumentum ab auctoritate est fortissimum in lege. Co. Litt. 254.—(An argument from authority is most powerful in Law.)

Argumentum ab impossibili plurimum valet in lege. Co. Litt. 92.—(An argument deduced from an impossibility greatly avails in Law.)

Argumentum ab inconvenienti est validum in lege. Co. Litt. 258.—(An argument from inconvenience has great force in Law.) See Broom's Maxims.

Arleconium, Kenchester, near Hereford.

Arda, Villa de, Drayton, in Shropshire.

Arterban, or Arriere-Ban [according to Casseneuve, ban denotes the convening of the noblesse or vassals, who held fees immediately of the Crown; and arriere, those who only held of the Crown mediately], an edict of the ancient kings of France and Germany, commanding all their vassals, the noblesse, and the vassals' vassals, to enter the army, or forfeit their estates on refusal.—Spelm.

Arietum levatio, an old sporting exercise, supposed to be the same with running at the quintain.—Cowel.

Aristo-democracy, a form of government composed of nobles and commonalty.

Arles, earnest.

Arm of the Sea, a bay, road, creek, cove, port, or river, where the water, whether salt or fresh, ebbs and flows.—5 Rep. 107. In Coulbert v. Troke, (1875) 1 Q. B. D. 1, it was held that the three-mile distance from the place of lodging which qualified a person to be a bonâ fide traveller within the meaning of s. 9 of the Licensing Act, 1874, was rightly calculated across an arm of the sea across which there was a public ferry.

Arma dare, to make a knight. The word 'arma' is here rendered a sword, though a knight was sometimes made by giving him the whole armour.—Cowel.

Arma libera (free arms). When a servant was set free, a sword and lance were usually given to him.—Cowel; Blount.

Arma moluta (arma emolita), sharp weapons that cut, in contradistinction to such as are blunt, which only break or bruise.—Fleta, lib. 1, c. 31, par. 6.

Arma mutare, to change arms, a ceremony observed in confirmation of a league or friendship.—Blount.

Arma reversata, reversed arms, a punishment for a traitor or felon.—Cowel.

Armaria. See ALMARIA.

Arm. fil. Armigeri filius; son of a person bearing arms.

Armiger, an esquire. A title of dignity belonging to gentlemen who bear arms.—Ken. Paroch. Antiq. 576.

Armiscara, an ancient mode of punishment, which was to carry a saddle at the back as a token of subjection.—Spelm.

Armistice, a suspension of hostilities between belligerents.

Armorial bearings, a device depicted on the (now imaginary) shield of one of the nobility, of which gentry is the lowest degree. The criterion of nobility is the bearing of arms, or armorial bearings, received from ancestry. There is nothing, however, to prevent persons assuming arbitrary insignia and armorial bearings; and all persons entitled to bear arms can register their genealogies and families at the Heralds' College, Benet's Hill, London, on payment of a moderate fee, the heralds being the examiners of these matters and the recorders of genealogies. 43 Geo. 3, c. 161, imposed an assessed tax upon armorial bearings, whether borne on plate, carriages, seals, or in any other way. This Act is now replaced by the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 14), s. 19, by which 'armorial bearings' includes any armorial bearing, crest, or ensign, by whatever name called, and whether registered in the College of Arms or not. This Act, by s. 18, fixes the tax as follows:—If such armorial bearings shall be painted, marked, or affixed on a carriage, 2*l.* 2*s.*; and if not so painted, but otherwise worn or used, 1*l.* 1*s.* See Planché's Pursuivant of Arms, and ROYAL ARMS.

Armorum appellationes, non solum scuta et gladii et galeæ, sed et fustes et lapides continentur. Co. Litt. 162.—(Under the name of arms are included, not only shields and swords and helmets, but also clubs and stones.)

Armour and Arms are understood in Law to mean things (see preceding title) which a person wears for defence, or takes in hand, or uses in anger, to strike or cast at another. Arms are also insignia, i.e., ensigns of honour, originally badges assumed by commanders in war and painted on their shields to distinguish them, since they could not be distinguished by the ancient coat of mail which covered the whole body. King Richard I., during his crusade, first made arms hereditary. Every subject in this realm has a right to carry arms for defence suitable to his condition and degree, and allowed by law, and this right is embodied in the Bill of Rights, 1 W. & M. c. 2, s. 2. The Statute of Northampton, 2 Edw. 3, c. 3, prohibits persons going armed under circumstances which may tend to terrify the people or indicate any intention of disturbing the public peace (see R. v. Meade, (1903) 19 T. L. R. 540). The Unlawful Drilling Act, 1819 (60 Geo. 3, c. 1), prohibits the training of persons without lawful authority to the use of arms, and authorizes any justice of the peace to disperse any assembly of persons that he may find engaged in such occupation and to arrest any of the persons present. As to the restriction on carrying and possessing firearms, see Firearms Acts, 1920 and 1934 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 43; 24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 16), and FIREARMS and GUN.

Army [fr. armée, Fr.], the military force of a country. From 1689 to 1879, the army was regulated by Annual Mutiny Acts usually expiring in April, and by the 'Articles of War' which those Acts empowered the sovereign to make. In 1879 the Army Discipline Act (42 & 43 Vict. c. 33) consolidated the provisions of the Mutiny Act with the Articles of War. This Act having been amended by the Army Discipline and Regulation Annual Act, 1881, which substituted 'summary' for corporal punishment, and also by the Regulation of the Forces Act, 1881, a fairly complete military code is now contained in the 'Army Act, 1881' (44 & 45 Vict. c. 58), now styled the 'Army Act' simply, by virtue of s. 4 of the Army (Annual) Act, 1890.

The Army Act requires to be annually renewed by an Act passed for that purpose called the 'Army (Annual) Act.' Such annual Act follows the precedent of the Mutiny Acts in reciting the illegality of a standing army in time of peace without consent of Parliament (as declared by the Bill of Rights, 1 W. & M. c. 2, s. 2), and in specifying the exact number of forces to be employed for the current year; but it is expressly provided that a person subject to military law shall not be exempted from its provisions by reason only that the number of the forces for the time being is either greater or less than that number. The Army Act has been frequently amended, and continues to be amended from year to year. See Army Annual Acts and Army and Air Force Annual Acts.

The Incitement to Disaffection Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 65), makes provision for the prevention and punishment of endeavours to seduce members of His Majesty's Forces from their duty and allegiance. See Chitty's Statutes, also TERRITORIAL ARMY.

The administration of the estates of officers or soldiers dying on service is regulated by the Regimental Debts Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 5), repealing and re-enacting the Regimental Debts Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 57). As to their wills, see Wills Act, 1837, s. 11, and Wills (Soldiers and Sailors) Act, 1918; Re Limond, 1915, 2 Ch. 240; and Navy and Marines (Wills) Acts, 1865 and 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 38). See NUNCUPATIVE WILLS.

Army Brokerage Acts, 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 16; 49 Geo. 3, c. 126, Acts forbidding the purchase of offices; so called by 38 & 39 Vict. c. 16, the Regimental Exchanges Act, 1875.

Army Council. This Council was first established in 1904, when the post of Commander-in-Chief was abolished. The four military members are the Chief of the Staff, the Adjutant-General, the Quarter-Master General, and the Master-General of the Ordnance, and there is also a finance member and a civil member. The respective duties of those members are defined by an Order in Council of 10th August, 1904, and each is responsible to the Secretary of State for War, who is solely responsible to the Crown and Parliament. The Secretary of the War Office acts as secretary to the Army Council. See also the Army (Annual) Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 3), s. 4, as to the powers of the Council.

Arnaldia, a disease that makes the hair fall off, otherwise called alopecia (Gk.), because foxes are subject to it.

Arnalia, arable grounds.—Domesday, tit. 'Essex.'

Aromatarius, a word formerly used for a grocer.—1 Vent. 142.

Arpen, or Arpent, an acre or furlong of ground. According to Domesday Book, 100 perches make an arpent.—Cowel.

Arpentator, a measurer or surveyor of land.—Cowel.

Arquebuss, a short handgun, a caliver or pistol mentioned in some of our ancient statutes.

Arralatio peditum, arraying of foot soldiers.—1 Edw. 2.

Arralers, officers who had the care of the soldiers' armour, and whose business it was to see them duly accoutred. Commissioners were afterwards appointed for the same purpose.—Blount.

Arraign [fr. arraisonner, aresner, aregnir, arraigner, Old Fr., i.e., ad rationem ponere, Lat., to call one to account], to bring a prisoner to the bar of the Court to answer the matter charged upon him in the indictment. The arraignment of a prisoner consists of calling upon him by name, reading to him the indictment, demanding of him whether he be guilty or not guilty, and entering his plea. The pleas upon arraignment are either the general issue, i.e., not guilty, or a plea in abatement or in bar, or the prisoner may demur to the indictment, or he may confess the fact, upon which the Court proceeds immediately to judgment. But if the prisoner 'shall stand mute of malice, or will not answer directly to the indictment or information,' the Court, if it shall so think fit, may 'order the proper officer to enter a plea of "not guilty" on behalf of such a person, and the plea so entered shall have the same force and effect as if the person had so pleaded the same.'—Crim. Law Act, 1827 (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28). If the person stands mute by visitation of God, he can be treated as though insane (R. v. Stafford Prison (Governor), 1909, 2 K. B. 81).

Arraigns, Clerk of, an assistant to the clerk of assize.

Arrameur, an ancient port-officer, whose business was to load and unload vessels.

Arrangements between Debtors and Creditors. The 125th and 126th sections of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, which repealed an Act of 1861, allowed liquidation by arrangement and composition with creditors by resolutions passed at similar representative meetings to take the place of proceedings in bankruptcy. The Bankruptcy Act, 1883, having repealed the Act of 1869 without re-enacting these clauses, arrangements with creditors outside the law of bankruptcy became common, and in order to legalize and regulate these arrangements, the Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1887, was passed and amended in 1890 by 53 & 54 Vict. c. 24. The law has now been consolidated by the Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 47), which repeals the Act of 1887, and also parts of the Bankruptcy and Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1913, and contains practically the whole statute law on the subject. The Act is divided into five parts: (1) defining the deeds of arrangement to which the Act applies; (2) avoiding deeds of arrangement where the statutory provisions have not been complied with; (3) requiring deeds to be registered with the Registrar of Bills of Sale; (4) requiring the trustee of the deed to give security, making provision for auditing his accounts, and prescribing his duties and liabilities generally; (5) making certain general provisions as to Courts, procedure, etc. And see the Deeds of Arrangement Rules, 1925, pursuant to Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1914, and s. 22 of Administration of Trustee Act, 1925.

Arrangements inside the Bankruptcy Act are regulated by s. 16 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, which takes the place of earlier enactments. By this section (which contains 20 sub-sections), 'where a debtor intends to make a proposal for a composition in satisfaction of his debts, or a proposal for a scheme of arrangement of his affairs,' he must lodge a proposal embodying the terms with the official receiver, who is required to hold a meeting of creditors before the public examination is held, and send to each creditor a copy of the proposal with a report thereon. If at the meeting (or by letter received not later than the day before it) a majority in number and three-fourths in value of all the creditors who have proved their debts resolve to accept the proposal, it is deemed to be accepted by the creditors, and when approved by the Court of Bankruptcy it is binding on all the creditors. Deeds of arrangement affecting land must be registered under the Land Charges Act, 1925. See LAND CHARGES.

Railway companies unable to meet their engagements with their creditors may, under the Railway Companies Act, 1867, by schemes of arrangement filed in the Chancery Division of the High Court, assented to by three-fourths in value of their creditors, and confirmed by the Court, reorganize their finances.

Under s. 153 of the Companies Act, 1929, a compromise or arrangement between any company liable to be wound up under that Act and its members or creditors (including a reorganization of capital) may be sanctioned by the Court and bind all concerned, and the same Act provides (s. 288) that regard may be had to the wishes of creditors in a winding-up by the Court. The Companies Act, 1929, s. 288, provides and may direct meetings of creditors or contributories to be held for that purpose; and by s. 251 any arrangement entered into between a company about to be, or in the course of being, wound up voluntarily and its creditors is binding on the creditors under certain conditions, but there is a right of appeal to the Court.

Array [fr. arredare, It., to get ready], to rank or set forth a jury of men impanelled upon a cause. To challenge the array of the pannel is at once to except against all persons arrayed or impanelled, in respect of partiality or some default in the sheriff.—Co. Litt. 156 a. If the sheriff be of affinity to any of the parties, or if any one or more of the jurors are returned at the nomination of either party, or for any other partiality, the array shall be quashed.—See Archbold's Criminal Pleading.

Array, Military Commission of. Previous to the reign of Henry VIII., in order to protect the kingdom from domestic insurrections or foreign invasions, it was usual from time to time for our princes to issue commissions of array, and send into every county officers in whom they could confide, to muster, array, or set in military order the inhabitants of every district. The form of the commission was settled by 5 Hen. 4, so as to prevent the insertion therein of any new penal clauses.—Rushworth, Hist. Coll., vol. iv., pp. 662, 667.

Arrears, or Arrearages, money unpaid at the due time: as rent behind; the remainder due after payment of a part of an account; money in the hands of an accounting party.

Arrectatus, or Rectatus, one suspected or accused.—Spelm.

Arrected, reckoned, considered.—Co. Litt. 173 b, and Harg. note (2).

Arrenatus, arraigned, accused.—Rot. Parl. 21 Edw. 1.

Arrendare, to let lands yearly.

Arrentation [fr. arrendar, Span.], licensing the owner of lands in a forest to enclose them with a low hedge and small ditch according to the assize of the forest, under a yearly rent. Saving the arrentations is reserving a power to give such licenses.—Ordin. Forestæ, 34 Edw. 1, s. 5.

Arrest [fr. restare, Lat.; arrestare, It.; arrester, Fr., to bring one to stand], the restraining of the liberty of a man's person in order to compel obedience to the order of a Court of Justice, or to prevent the commission of a crime, or to ensure that a person charged or suspected of a crime may be forthcoming to answer it. Arrests are either in civil or (see APPREHENSION) criminal cases; civil arrests must be affected, in order to be legal, by virtue of a precept or writ issued out of some Court. The law of civil arrest (see MESNE PROCESS), so far as it still exists, is regulated by the Debtors Act, 1869 (see that title), which abolished imprisonment for debt except in special cases, as where a debtor has the means to pay his debt but refuses to do so, and s. 218 of the Companies Act, 1929, as to the power to arrest an absconding contributory in case of winding up by the Court. See also CONTEMPT OF COURT. The two great statutes for securing the liberty of the subject against unlawful arrests and suits are Magna Charta and the Habeas Corpus Act (31 Car. 2, c. 2), which is amended and enforced by 56 Geo. 3, c. 100. A person is privileged from civil arrest whilst in or whilst going to or from a Court of Law on business.

Powers of Arrest under Criminal Process—apart from arrest under a warrant from a magistrate—are as follows:—

1. At Common Law.—A peace officer, i.e., a sheriff, coroner, constable, or any justice of the peace, may arrest for felony, attempted felony, or on reasonable suspicion of felony, or for breach of the peace committed in his presence, or on reasonable belief that an affray is about to be renewed. A private person is not only able but bound to arrest any one who commits a felony in his presence or dangerously wounds another. He may arrest any one taking part in an affray while it is continuing or, if he reasonably apprehends its renewal. He may arrest for felony provided a felony has been committed and he has reasonable grounds for believing that the man arrested has committed that felony.

2. By Statute.—Any person found committing an offence under the Larceny Act, 1916 (except against s. 31), or against the Malicious Damage Act, 1861, may be arrested without a warrant. There is a similar provision in respect of s. 6 of the Vagrancy Act, 1824, and also with regard to a constable in respect of certain minor offences on the highway (s. 78, Highways Act; s. 28, Town Police Clauses Act; s. 74 (2), Public Health Act, 1925 (Geo. 5, c. 71).) For further statutes and for arrest generally see Archbold's Criminal Pleading, Evidence and Practice. The Criminal Law Act, 1826, ss. 28 and 30, and the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1851, s. 8, provide compensation to persons apprehending certain offenders in certain cases.

Arrest of Inquest, pleading in arrest of taking the inquest upon a former issue, and showing cause why an inquest should not be taken.—Bro. Ab., tit. 'Repleader.'

Arrest of Judgment. Formerly an unsuccessful defendant might move that the judgment for the plaintiff be arrested or withheld, notwithstanding a verdict given, on the ground that there was some substantial error appearing on the face of the record which vitiated the proceedings. (See now R. S. C. Ord. XXVII. and XXXIX.) Judgment may be arrested for good cause in criminal cases, if the indictment be insufficient. See Archbold's Criminal Pleading.

Arrest of Ship. The arrest of a ship is the method employed for enforcing an Admiralty process in rem. The ship can be released by giving bail to the extent of the claim and costs. See SHIPOWNER, R. S. C. Ord. V., rr. 15 and 16, and Roscoe's Admiralty Practice. When the arrest is malicious, an action will lie without proof of actual damage (The 'Walter D. Wallett,' 1893, P. 202).

Arrest on Mesne Process. See MESNE PROCESS.

Arrestandis bonis ne dissipentur, a writ which lay for a person whose cattle or goods were taken by another, who during a contest was likely to make away with them, and who had not the ability to render satisfaction.—Reg. Brev. 126.

Arrestando ipsum qui pecuniam recepit, a writ which issued for apprehending a person who had taken the king's prest money to serve in the wars, and then hid himself in order to avoid going.—Ibid. 24.

Arrestee, the person in whose possession a debt of property has been attached by arrestment.—Scots Law.

Arrester, the person who procures an arrestment.—Ibid.

Arrestment, a process of attachment prohibiting a person, in whose hands a debtor's movables are, to pay or deliver up the same to such debtor, till a creditor, who has procured an arrestment to be laid on, be satisfied either by caution, i.e., security, or payment according to the grounds of arrestment.—Ibid.

Arrestment jurisdictionis fundandæ causa. In Scotland, if a non-Scots Defender is not subject to the jurisdiction of the Court in any other way, but has some moveable property, corporeal or incorporeal, in the hands of a third party within the jurisdiction, that property may be arrested by this process, and then the Defender is subject to the Court's jurisdiction. The value of the property, so long as it has some merchantable value, is immaterial. This process does not prevent the third party from disposing of the property.

Arresto facto super bonis mercatorum alienigenorum, a writ against the goods of aliens found within this kingdom, in recompense of goods taken from a denizen in a foreign country after denial of restitution.—Reg. Brev. 129. The ancient civilians called it clarigatio, but by the moderns it is termed reprisalia.

Arret [Fr.], a judgment, decree or sentence.

Arretted, charged. The convening a person charged with a crime before a judge.—Stauf. Pl. Cr. 45. It is used sometimes for imputed or laid unto: as no folly may be arretted to one under age.—Cowel.

Arrha, short for arrhabo [fr. ἀρράβων, Gk.], earnest, pledge, evidence of a completed bargain.

Arriage and Carriage, indefinite services formerly demandable from tenants in Scotland, abolished by the Tenures Abolition Act, 1746 (20 Geo. 2, c. 50), ss. 21, 22.

Arriere Fee, or Fief, a fee dependent on a superior fee. These fees originated when dukes and counts, rendering their governments hereditary, distributed to their officers parts of the domain, and permitted those officers to gratify the soldiers under them in the same manner.

Arriere Vassal, the vassal of a vassal.

Arrogatio, a form of adoption in Civil Law. It could not be effected by a mere private juristic act like adoptio, but only by a decree of the comitia curiata or later by imperial rescript. Arrogatio was the form of adopting a paterfamilias or homo sui juris, and effected like the adoptio capitis diminutio minima of the arrogatus. As a rule there could be no arrogatio of an impubes or a woman, but on certain conditions arrogatio of an impubes was permitted, and since it could be effected by imperial rescript, women also might be arrogated.

Arrura [fr. ἀρoura, Gk.], a day's ploughing.—Paroch. Antiq. Gloss.

Arsenals [fr. arzana, darzena, tarzana, It.], dockyards, magazines, and other military stores. It is a felony punishable by death to burn or otherwise destroy a royal arsenal (The Dockyards, etc. Protection Act, 1772, (12 Geo. 3, c. 24) ); a felony punishable with penal servitude to be guilty of spying there ; and a misdemeanour to disclose official information as to a royal arsenal (Official Secrets Acts, 1911 and 1920).

Arsenic. See POISON.

Arser in le main, burning in the hand. The punishment of criminals who had the benefit of clergy, which benefit was abolished by the Criminal Law Act, 1827 (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28).—Termes de la Ley.

Arson [fr. ardeo, Lat., to burn], the malicious firing of a house or other building. The law upon this subject is to be found in the Malicious Damage Act, 1861, ss. 1-8. As to maliciously setting fire to ships, see ss. 42-44 ; to crops, etc., ss. 16-18 ; to coal-mines, s. 26.

Arsura, the trial of money by fire, after it was coined.

Art and Part, a term in Scots Law. Signifies the aiding or abetting in the perpetration of a crime.

Art Unions, ' voluntary associations for the purchase of paintings, drawings, and other works of art to be distributed by chance or otherwise amongst the members.' So defined by the Art Union Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 48), which legalizes the distribution by chance (provided a royal charter incorporating the association shall have been obtained), which would otherwise be illegal under the Lottery Act. As to the rules of the Art Union of London, see Savoy Overseers v. The Art Union of London, 1896, A. C. 296.

Art, Words of, words used in a technical sense ; words scientifically fit to carry the sense assigned to them.

Art, Works of. Copyright in works of art now depends on the Copyright Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 46), which, subject to the provisions of the Act, makes the term of protection the life of the author and fifty years after his death. By s. 35 ' artistic work ' includes works of painting, drawing, sculpture and artistic craftsmanship, and architectural work of art and engravings and photographs.

Arthel, Ardhel, or Arddello, to avouch, as if a man were taken with stolen goods in his possession he was allowed a lawful arthel, i.e., vouchee, to clear him of the felony, but provision was made against it by 28 Hen. 8, c. 6.

Article [articulus, Lat.], a complaint exhibited in the Ecclesiastical Court by way of libel. The different parts of a libel, responsive allegation, or counter allegation in the Ecclesiastical Courts.

Articled Clerk, a pupil of a solicitor, who undertakes, by articles of clerkship, containing covenants, mutually binding, to instruct him in the principles and practice of the profession. See SOLICITOR.

Articles, divisions and paragraphs of a document or agreement. It is a common practice for persons to enter into articles of agreement, preparatory to the execution of a formal deed, whereby it is stipulated that one of the parties shall convey to the other certain lands, or release his right to them, or execute some other disposition of them.

Articles are therefore considered as a memorandum or minute of an agreement to make some future disposition or modification of property. Such an instrument will create a trust or equitable estate, and a specific performance of it will be decreed in equity.

Articles are usually entered into for the purchase and sale of lands, for the taking and granting of leases, for making settlements on marriage, and for forming partnerships. And see ASSOCIATION.

And see IMPEACHMENT.

Articles, Marriage. An agreement made in consideration of marriage, generally to secure a provision by conveyance or settlement for the spouses or one of them and the children of the marriage, must, under the Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 4, be in writing and will not be enforced unless evidenced in writing, see Montacute v. Maxwell, 1 P. Wms. 618, and Butterfield v. Heath, (1852) 15 Beav. 408. In equity the articles are considered as minutes of agreement and to create executory trusts, and the Court will give effect to the intention accordingly without strict or any regard to an improper or informal use of words, see Stansford v. Hobart, (1710) 3 Br. P. C. (Tomk. Ed.) 31, and Blandford v. Marlborough, (1743) 2 Atk. 542, and therefore the rule in Shelley's Case (now abolished in regard to instruments coming into operation after 1925, see Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 131) was not applied in construing or executing the articles. See Norton on Deeds.

Articles, Lords of the, a committee of the Scottish Parliament, which in the mode of its election, and by the nature of its powers, was calculated to increase the influence of the Crown, and to confer upon it a power equivalent to that of a negative before debate. This system appeared inconsistent with the freedom of Parliament, and at the Revolution, the Convention of Estates declared it a grievance, and accordingly it was suppressed by the Act of 1690, c. 3. See Burnet's Hist. of his Own Times.

Articles of Association. See ASSOCIATION, ARTICLES OF.

Articles of Religion, commonly called the Thirty-nine Articles, a body of divinity drawn up by the convocation in 1562, required of the clergy to be subscribed to by 13 Eliz. c. 12, and confirmed by James I. Consult Burnet's 'Exposition of the Thirty-nine Articles'. The Oxford University Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 81), ss. 43, 44, has rendered unnecessary subscription to these articles, or any oath, on matriculating or on taking a degree in the University of Oxford; and the Cambridge University Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 88), ss. 45, 46, contains a similar enactment in regard to the University of Cambridge; a declaration of assent to them is required by the Clerical Subscription Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 122) (see CLERICAL SUBSCRIPTION), to be subscribed by every deacon or priest before ordination, and also by every person about to be instituted to a benefice, or licensed to a perpetual curacy; every such person being also required to read the articles publicly in church on the first Sunday on which he officiates, and again to make the declaration of assent.

The articles are to be construed liberally, as is shown by the Gorham case in 1850, the Wilson case in 1864, and the Bennett case in 1871; but in order to convict a clergyman for impugning them, it is not necessary that they should have been contradicted in so many words, if the opinions promulgated by him were inconsistent with their clear construction or repugnant to it (Voysey v. Noble, (1871) L. R. 3 P. C. 357).

Articles of Roup, the conditions under which property is exposed to sale by auction.—Scots Law.

Articles of the Peace, a complaint exhibited either in the King's Bench Division of the High Court, Court of Oyer and Terminer, or Court of Summary Jurisdiction, when any one has just cause to fear that some one will burn his house, do him some corporal hurt, or procure a third person to perpetrate it. Upon articles setting forth the fact being sworn to by the complainant, sureties of the peace are taken for such a length of time as the Court shall think necessary, not being confined to a twelvemonth. See ss. 25, 26 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, and PEACE, and for the procedure to exhibit articles of the peace in the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice, see Rules 246-56 of the Crown Office Rules of 1906, and Short and Mellor on Crown Office Practice.

Articles of War, a code of laws for the regulation of the land forces, made prior to 1879, in pursuance of the several annual Acts against mutiny and desertion. See ARMY. Formerly there were also Articles of the Navy, embodied in 22 Geo. 2, c. 33; but that statute and others amending it were repealed by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 123.

Articuli cleri, statutes containing certain articles relating to the church, clergy, and causes ecclesiastical, made at Lincoln.—9 Edw. 2, st. 1; 1 Reeves, c. xii. 290.

Articuli super chartas, the 28 Edw. 1, st. 3, s. 2; Reeves, c. xi. 136.

Articulus cleri. A resolution of convocation.

Artificers, persons who are masters of their art, and whose employment consists chiefly in manual labour. See Truck Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 37).

Artificial Person, a corporation (q.v.)

Artisans, artificers. The Artisans and Labourers' Dwellings Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 130), repealed and re-enacted with amendments by the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890 (since extended and amended), made provision for taking down or improving dwellings occupied by working men and their families, which were unfit for human habitation, and for the building and maintenance of better dwellings for them instead. As amended in 1874, the Act applied to the Metropolis except the City, to municipal boroughs, and urban sanitary districts. See HOUSING OF THE WORKING CLASSES.

A rubro ad nigrum, to proceed to the sense of the text in a statute by looking at the title; the title was written in red, the text in black.

Arundinetum [fr. arundo, Lat.], a ground or place where reeds grow.

Arundinis Vadum, the ancient name of Redbridge, in Hampshire.

Aruntina Vallis, the ancient name of Arundel, in Sussex.

Arvil-supper, a feast or entertainment made at a funeral in the north of England; arvil bread is bread delivered to the poor at funeral solemnities, and arvil, arval, or arfal the burial or funeral rites.—Cowel.

Arvonica, the ancient name of Carnarvonshire.

As, a pound weight, a unit, the whole of an inheritance. For its divisions, see Sand. Just., 9th ed. 193; Cum. C. L. 139 n. (1), and Tayl. C. L. 491.

As against, as between: these words contrast the relative position of two persons with a tacit reference to a different relationship between one of them and a third person. For instance, the temporary bailee of a chattel is entitled to it, as between himself and a stranger, or as against a stranger; reference being made by this form of words to the rights of the bailor.

Ascendants, the progenitors of a family.

Asceterium, a monastery.—Du Cange.

Ashbourne Act, the Purchase of Land (Ireland) Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 73), to provide greater facilities than those given by part five of the Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881, for the sale of land to occupying tenants in Ireland; introduced in the House of Commons by Mr. Gibson as Attorney-General for Ireland, afterwards Lord Ashbourne. Amended by numerous amending acts cited together as the Land Purchase Acts, see Northern Ireland Land Act, 1929. (19 Geo. 5, c. 14), s. 8, and see also Prospective Operation of Northern Ireland Land Purchase (Winding Up) Act, 1935 (25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 21).

Ashpit. The Public Health Act, 1936, contains provisions as to ashpits and the cleansing of them (see ss. 72 et seq.). Section 11 (1) of the (adoptive) Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59) (repealed by the P. H. Act, 1936), declared that 'the expression "ashpit" in the Public Health Acts should, for the purpose of those Acts, include any ash tub or other receptacle for the deposit of ashes, fæcal matter, or refuse.'

Asphyxia [fr. ἀ not, and σφύζω, Gk., pulse], suspended animation, produced by the non-conversion of the venous blood of the lungs into arterial.—Dunglison.

Asportation, carrying away or removing goods. In all larcenies there must be both a taking and a carrying away (cepit et asportavit).

Assach, or Assath, a custom of purgation formerly used in Wales, by which an accused party cleared or purged himself of the accusation by the oaths of 300 men. Abolished by 1 Hen. 5, c. 6.—Spelman.

Assart, or Essart [fr. assartum, Lat.], an offence committed in the forest by pulling up by the roots trees that are thickets and coverts for deer, and making the ground plain as arable land. It differs from waste in that waste is the cutting down of coverts which may grow again, whereas assart is the plucking them up by the roots and utterly destroying them, so that they can never afterwards grow. This is not an offence if done with licence to convert forest into tillage ground. Consult Manwood's Forest Laws, ch. 9, s. 1; Williams on Rights of Common, p. 231.

Assassination, murdering a person by lying in wait. In modern times the term is frequently applied to the open murder of great personages from political motives, as of the King of Italy by Brescia in 1900, and of the President of the United States of America by Czolgosz in 1901. The Offences against the Person Act, 1861, s. 4, makes it a misdemeanour punishable by penal servitude for not more than ten years to solicit any person to murder any other person, whether a subject of the king or not, and whether within the king's dominions or not: and in Reg. v. Most, (1881) 7 Q. B. D. 244, this enactment was held by the Court for Crown Cases Reserved, constituted under the Crown Cases Act, 1848, to apply to the publication of a newspaper containing an article exulting over the assassination of the Emperor of Russia in 1881, and hoping that it was not the last.

Assault [fr. salire, Lat., to leap; saillir, assaillir, Fr., to assail; insultus, Lat.], an attempt to offer, with force and violence, to do a corporal hurt to another, as by striking at him with or without a weapon. No words, how provoking soever they be, will amount to an assault. Assault does not always necessarily imply a hitting or blow; because, in trespass for assault and battery, a person may be found guilty of the assault, but not guilty of the battery. But battery always includes an assault.—1 Hawk. P. C. c. lxii., s. 1.

The various kinds of assault are successively dealt with and made punishable by ss. 36-47 and ss. 52 and 62 (indecent assaults) of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861. By s. 47 an assault occasioning actual bodily harm is punishable on indictment by penal servitude for not less than three, or imprisonment for not more than two years, and a common assault by imprisonment for not more than one year; but by s. 42 common assaults are summarily triable by two justices, and by them punishable by not more than two months' imprisonment or by not more than 5*l.* fine. As to 'aggravated' assault on a boy under 14 or any woman, see AGGRAVATED ASSAULTS, and see generally Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Criminal Law (Offences against Person),' and notes.

Assay [fr. exigere, Lat., to test] of weights and measures, examining weights and measures by clerks of markets, etc.—Blount. Also the testing and proving of coins, metals, etc. By the Gold and Silver Wares Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 22), s. 2, partly repealed by the Forgery Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 27), it is felony to forge or counterfeit any assay mark. As to assay of foreign imported plate, see 46 & 47 Vict. c. 55, s. 10; 4 Edw. 7, c. 6; and 7 Edw. 7, c. 13, s. 5. See PLATE.

Assayer of the King, an officer of the Mint, who tried the silver; he was appointed by the Master of the Mint and the merchants who carried silver thither for exchange.—Blount.

Assaysiare, to associate or take as fellow-judges; used in old charters.—Cowel.

Assacurate, to secure by pledges, a solemn interposition of faith.—Hov. 1174.

Assembly, Church. See NATIONAL ASSEMBLY OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Assembly, General (fr. simul, Lat., together; hence ensemble, assembler, Fr., to draw together), the highest ecclesiastical court in Scotland, composed of a representation of the ministers and elders of the church. Consult Encyc. of Scots Law.

Assembly, Unlawful, a meeting of three or more persons to do an unlawful Act.—3 Inst. 9; 1 Hawk. 155. See OFFENCE; RIOT; ROUT.

Assent, or Consent, agreeing to or recognizing a matter, as an executor's assent to a legacy, or the assent of a corporation to bylaws, etc. See ROYAL ASSENT.

Assent of Personal Representatives. At Common Law the personal estate passing by the will of a deceased person, including chattels real vested in the executor, virtute officii. The property passed to the legatee as soon as the executors assented to the bequest. The transfer was made not by the mere force of the assent but by virtue of the will (Attenborough v. Solomon, 1912, A. C. 76), and the assent might be given to one executor. No formalities were required. The assent might be implied, for instance, in the case of leaseholds, by letting the person entitled into possession or the receipt of rent and profits, but the assent was required to be definite and unambiguous.

When given it related back to the date of death and as a rule it could not be withdrawn (but see Whittaker v. Kershaw (1890), 45 C. D. 320). This is still the law in regard to pure personality, excluding chattels real. Before the Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65) real estate passed to the heir-at-law of the deceased or to the person entitled in reversion or remainder subject to the personal representatives' legal or equitable powers of sale (if any) and the A. E. Act, 1925, in furtherance of the Property legislation of 1925, and extending the Land Transfer Act, 1897, introduced an important change in the meaning of a personal representative's assent. Under s. 36 of the A. E. Act, 1925, the legal estate which was vested in the deceased in real estate, including chattels real, cannot pass to the person entitled under his will or intestacy unless the personal representative has given his assent in writing (a deed is not required), naming the person in whose favour the assent is given and signed by all the personal representatives, or representatives who have proved the will (s. 2 (2), ibid.), or to whom letters of administration have been granted, and since the will of itself can only pass or affect equitable interests an assent which satisfies the requirements referred to or a conveyance to the like effect by the personal representative now forms an essential link in the devolution, after death after 1925, of title to legal estate, the probate or grant of letters of administration (and not the will) being the only relevant link in the chain of title, although persons affected by equitable interests in the land are of course still bound by the terms of the will or of any other instrument creating or affecting the equities. Notice of the assent or conveyance may be required by the transferee thereunder to be stated or annexed to the probate or letters of administration (s. 36 (6), ibid.), and the same section provides for the protection of purchasers. Consult Wolst. and Ch. Conv. Acts, and Wms. on Executors, and see VESTING ASSENT.

Assertory Covenant, an affirming promise under seal.

Assess [fr. assessum, Lat., setting a tax], to rate or ascertain.

Assessed Taxes, properly duties varying with the value of the property on which they are charged, as the property tax, house tax, or land tax; but the term is also applied to the duties charged upon persons in respect of articles in their use or keeping, as servants, carriages, or armorial bearings.

Assessment Committee. This is a statutory committee for the purpose of making out the valuation list on which the poor rate is based. See VALUATION LIST and POOR LAWS. The committee is appointed and acts by virtue of the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 90). See s. 17 and First Sched. When the valuation list has been published, objection may be taken and relief asked for from the committee. The notice of objection must be in writing and give the general grounds relied on (R. v. London Justices, 1897, 1 Q. B. 433; R. v. Essex Justices, 1902, 1 K. B. 180). The committee has no power to administer an oath or to order costs. An appeal lies from the committee to the local Quarter Sessions (Imperial and Grand Hotels Co. v. Christchurch Union, 1905, 2 K. B. 239).

Assessors, literally those who sit by the side of another: persons appointed to ascertain and fix the value of taxes, rates, etc. Also persons sometimes associated with judges of courts to advise and direct the decisions of such judges.

By the Judicature Act, 1925, s. 98, replacing the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 56, the High Court or the Court of Appeal may, when it may think it expedient other than in a criminal proceeding by the Crown, call in the aid of one or more assessors specially qualified, and try and hear the matter in question wholly or partially with the assistance of such assessors. By the County Courts Act, 1934, s. 88, replacing the County Court Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, s. 14, provision is made for the appointment of assessors of 'nautical skill and experience' in Admiralty actions, and such assessors frequently sit in county courts under the powers of this Act.

Schedule II. of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, gives a county court judge power to summon a medical referee to sit with him as an assessor upon the hearing of an arbitration under that Act. By virtue of s. 31 of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907, the Court, in an action for infringement or revocation of a patent, 'may, if it think fit, and shall on the request of either of the parties' call in the aid of an assessor specially qualified. The remuneration of assessors in the above instances has not to be borne by either litigant.

Assets [fr. assetz, Nor.-Fr., i.e., satis, Lat.; assez, Fr., sufficient; in Old English it was commonly written aseth], the property of a deceased person, which is chargeable with, and applicable to the payment of, his debts and legacies; the property of any person, with reference to bankruptcy, available for division amongst his creditors; the whole property of a person, without any such reference. For purposes of the administration of the estate of a deceased person assets were, before 1925, divided into two classes, legal and equitable. Legal assets comprised all property to which the personal representative became entitled virtute officii and for which he would have been answerable in an action at common law brought against him by a creditor; they were administered in accordance with certain rules of priority. Equitable assets, on the other hand, were those which would only be made available for the payment of debts through the operation of a decree or order of a Court of Equity; they were treated as a trust fund, and on the principle of equality being equity are divided pari passu among the creditors without regard to the order of priority which obtained in the case of legal assets. It was the remedy of the creditor, therefore, whether legal or equitable, and not the remedy of the executor, or the legal or equitable nature of the property, which determined whether assets were legal or equitable. See ADMINISTRATION.

Sections 32 (1) and 34 of the A. E. Act, 1925, have abolished the distinction and the priorities for debts including Crown debts formerly payable out of legal assets.

Asseveration [fr. assevero, Lat., to affirm earnestly, fr. severus, serious], positive affirmation or assertion, solemn declaration.

Assewlare, to draw or drain water from marsh grounds.—Cowel.

Assidere, or Assedare, to tax equally. Sometimes used in the sense of assigning an annual rent to be paid out of a particular farm, etc.—Mat. Paris, anno 1232.

Assign, variously applied; generally to transfer property, especially personal estate, or set over a right to another, or appoint a deputy; to set forth, as to assign error, false judgment; to new assign was, under the old practice, a pleading by the plaintiff following the defendant's plea, wherein the plaintiff pointed out the exact grievance meant to be complained of in his declaration, and not met by the defendant in his plea. The judges are said to be assigned to take assizes. See ASSIGNMENT.

Assignment, assignment.—Scots Law. Assignatus utitur jure auctoris. Halk. 14.—(The assignee makes use of the right of his assignor.) See Broom's Leg. Max.

Assignee, or Assign, a person appointed by another to do any act or perform any business; also a person who takes some right, title, or interest in things by an assignment from an assignor. They are divided into: (1) assignees by deed, as when a lessee of a term assigns it to another; and (2) assignees by law, as when property devolves upon an executor merely in virtue of his appointment as such. Assignees in bankruptcy (now called trustees, see BANKRUPTCY) are those persons in whom the property of a bankrupt vests by virtue of their appointment.

Assignment, a transfer of an estate or interest in property. The usual operative verb is 'assign,' but any other word indicating an intention to make a complete transfer, e.g., 'convey,' will amount to an assignment.

Assignment by Lessor or Lessee, Effect of. A lessor, notwithstanding assignment of his reversion, continues liable to his lessee on covenants running with the land (Stuart v. Joy, 1904, 1 K. B. 362), and so does a lessee to his lessor, notwithstanding assignment of his term (Barnard v. Godscall, (1613) Cro. Jac. 309). The assignee of a term is liable equally with the lessee (though the lessor cannot recover against both) during his possession, but unless restrained by covenant he can assign over to a pauper or other man of straw (Fagg v. Dobie, (1838) 3 Y. & C. 96), and thus escape liability on the covenants in the lease, though he is usually made liable, on a covenant of indemnity in the deed of assignment, to his own assignor. As to the liability of the parties in the case of successive assignments of a lease, see Moule v. Garrett, (1872) L. R. 7 Ex. 101. An assignor of a term remains liable to his lessor for rent, even after an assignment, if he expressly covenanted to pay rent (Auriol v. Mills, 4 Term Rep. 94, and Betts v. Price, (1924) 40 T. L. R. 589). Assignments of leases and terms of years must be by deed, see Harris v. Goodwyn, (1841) 9 Dowl. 409, and the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 52, replacing the Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 4, and Real Property Act, 1845, s. 3, and by s. 40 of the L. P. Act, 1925, all contracts for assignments of such leases and terms must be in writing and signed by the party to be charged or his agent. An assignment of a term must be of the whole term: the grant or conveyance of any lesser term is an underlease, but an underlease for the whole term is in effect an assignment.—Woodfall, L. & T., 23rd ed. p. 320. As to assignment of choses in action, see CHOSE.

Assignment by Tenant for Life.—For a special meaning of the word, see Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 104.

Assignment of Dower, the ascertaining and setting out by metes and bounds of a widow's portion of her deceased husband's realty for her thirds or dower. As to the rights of the widow until 1926, see Williams v. Thomas, 1909, 1 Ch. 713, and as to the widow's rights where dower has been assigned by metes and bounds, see Settled Land Act, 1925, ss. 1 (1) (3) and 19 (1). Dower in respect of the real estate of persons dying after 1925 has been abolished, see s. 45 of the A. E. Act, 1925. See DOWER.

Assignment of Errors, the formal statement of the objection or error in the record complained of. See ERROR.

Assignor, a person who transfers or makes over property to another.

Assigns. In regard to land and interests in land this word generally means assigns and all successive assigns (Spencer's Case, 1 Sm. L. C.; 13 Ex. 51; and see s. 79 of the L. P. Act, 1925).

Assimulare, to connect highways.—Leg. Hen. I. c. 8.

Assisa, a law.—1 Reeves, c. iv. 228.

Assisa cadere, to be nonsuited, as when there is such a plain and legal insufficiency in an action that the plaintiff cannot successfully proceed any further in it.—Fleta, lib. 4, c. 15; Bracton, lib. 2, c. vii.

Assisa cadit in juratum, the controversy is submitted to trial by jury.—Ibid.

Assisa continuanda, an ancient writ addressed to the justices of assize for the continuation of a cause, when certain facts put in issue could not have been proved in time by the party alleging them.—Reg. Brev. 217; and Termes de la Ley, 'Continuance.'

Assisa panis et cerevisiæ, the power or privilege of assizing or adjusting the weight and measure of bread and beer.—Cowel's Law Dict. Repealed by 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 37.

Assisa proroganda, an obsolete writ, which was directed to the judges assigned to take assizes, to stay proceedings, by reason of a party to them being employed in the king's business.—Reg. Brev. 208.

Assisa Utrum. See ASSISE DE UTRUM.

Assise de Utrum, an obsolete writ, which lay for the parson of a church whose predecessor had alienated the land and rents of it.—Fitz. N. B. 48.

Assise. See ASSIZE.

Assise of Arms, 27 Hen. 2, A.D. 1181.

Assise of Bread, the fixed rate for the sale of bread. Long obsolete.

Assise of Darrein Presentment, or last presentation; it lay when a person, or his ancestors, under whom he claims, had presented a clerk to a benefice who was duly instituted, and afterwards, upon the next avoidance, a stranger presents a clerk, thus disturbing the right of the lawful patron; upon this, the patron issued this writ, directed to the sheriff to summon an assize or jury, to inquire who was the last patron that presented to the church now vacant, of which the plaintiff complains that he is deformed by the defendant.—Termes de la Ley. It was, however, abolished, and recourse had to the action of quare impedit (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27). But since the C. L. P. Act, 1860, s. 26, quare impedit cannot be brought, an action in the King's Bench (formerly Common Pleas) Division of the High Court of Justice being substituted for it.

Assise of Mort d'Ancestor, a writ which lay where a person's father, mother, brother, sister, uncle, aunt, etc., died, seised of land, and a stranger abated. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27.

Assise of Novel Disselsin, an action to recover property of which a party had been disseised, i.e., dispossessed, after the last circuit of the judges. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27.

Assise of the Forest, a statute touching orders to be observed in the king's forest.—Manwood, 35. See Com. Dig., tit. 'Assise.'

Assiser, an officer who has the care and oversight of weights and measures.

Assises de Jerusalem, a monument of feudal jurisprudence, compiled by Gottfried or Godfrey of Bouillon, for the government of the Holy City after its conquest by the Crusaders. It was revised in the 13th and 14th centuries for the use of the Latin Kingdom of Cyprus.—1 Colq. R. C. L. s. 80, p. 86.

Assistance, Writ of, appears to have been first employed by the Court of Chancery in the reign of James I. It was provided for by the repealed Consolid. Ord. XXIX., r. 5, but has not reappeared in the Rules of the Supreme Court. Writ of possession is in practice substituted for it. R. S. C. Ord. XLVII., r. 2.

Assistant Judge of Middlesex Sessions, appointed by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 71; may appoint a deputy.—14 & 15 Vict. c. 55, s. 14. See 22 & 23 Vict. c. 4.

Assistant Overseers, appointed by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 84, and 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, ss. 61, 62. The office of Overseers was abolished and their functions transferred to the Rating Authority (except in the Scilly Isles), by the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 90).

Assisus, rented or farmed out for such an assize or certain assessed rent in money or provisions.—Jac. Law Dict.

Assithment [fr. ad and sihe, Sax., vice], a weregeld or compensation by a pecuniary mulct.—Cowel.

Assize, or Assise [fr. assideo, Lat., to sit together; whence assire, O. Fr., to set, assis, set, seated, sealed], anciently a statute or ordinance, e.g., Assize of Clarendon; also a jury, who sit together for the purpose of trying a cause, or rather a Court of jurisdiction which summons a jury by a commission of assize to take the assizes. Hence the judicial assemblies, held by the king's commission in every county as well to take indictments as to try causes at Nisi Prius, are commonly termed the assizes. There are two commissions. (I.) General, which is issued twice a year to the judges of the High Court of Justice, two judges being usually assigned to every circuit. See Circuits. The judges have four several commissions: (1) of oyer and terminer, directed to them and many other gentlemen of the county, by which they are empowered to try treasons, felonies, etc. This is the largest commission. (2) Of gaol delivery, directed to the judges and the clerk of assize or associate, empowering them to try every prisoner in the gaol committed for any offence whatsoever, so as to clear the prisons. (3) Of Nisi Prius, directed to the judges, the clerks of assize, and others, by which civil causes, in which issue has been joined in one of the Divisions of the High Court of Justice, are tried on circuit by a jury of twelve men of the county in which the venue is laid. See NISI PRIUS. (4) A commission of the peace, by which all justices are bound to be present at their county assizes, besides the sheriffs, to give attendance to the judges or else suffer a fine. There used to be another commission—that of assize, directed to the judges and clerk of assize, to take assizes and do right upon writs of assize brought before them, by such as were wrongfully thrust out of their possessions. These writs are abolished, and recourse is had to an action of ejectment, tried at Nisi Prius. (II.) The other division of commissions is special, granted to certain judges to try certain causes and crimes.—Bracton, lib. 3. See now the Judicature Act, 1925, ss. 70 et seq., under which, however, no very material alteration is made in the manner of holding the assizes. Section 70 (5) gives power to any commissioner acting under a commission of assize or any other commission issued under this section, to try and determine matrimonial causes of any class prescribed by the Lord Chancellor with the concurrence of the Lord Chief Justice and the President of the Probate Division. The commissioner has all the powers and duties which are vested in the Probate Division in respect of such causes. Undefended causes and certain others brought or defended by poor persons may be tried at certain circuit towns. See R. S. C., Ord. XXXVIA., r. 8.

The holding of Winter and Spring Assizes is regulated by Orders in Council issued from time to time under Winter and Spring Judicature Act, 1925, s. 72; but if there is no business to be transacted, the holding of assizes may be dispensed with, by virtue of s. 78. Winter Assizes means any court of assize held in September, October, November, December or January.

Spring Assizes means any court of assize held in March, April or May, s. 225.

In the practice of the criminal courts of Scotland, the fifteen men who decide on the conviction or acquittal of an accused person are called the assize, though in popular language, and even in statutes, they are called the jury.

Assizes Relief Act, 1890 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 12), to relieve the Court of Assize from the trial of persons charged with offences triable at Quarter Sessions—by which Act justices of the peace are directed to bind over prosecutors to appear at the next practicable Court of Quarter Sessions, in case of the prisoner being committed on a charge there triable, unless such justices think fit for special reasons otherwise to direct, see Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 86), s. 14 (for power to commit to convenient assizes).

Associate, was an officer in each of the Courts of Common Law, appointed by the chief judge of the Court, and holding his office dum bene se gesserit (15 & 16 Vict. c. 73); his duties being to superintend the entry of causes; to attend the sittings of Nisi Prius, and there receive and enter verdicts; to draw up the *postea*s (the indorsement of the result on the record), and any orders of Nisi Prius. The associates were made officers of the Supreme Court by the Judicature Act, 1873, and were given the title of 'Masters of the Supreme Court' by the Judicature (Officers) Act, 1879. This latter provision has been repealed. Clerks of the Associates Department of the Crown

Office Department of the Central Office of the Supreme Court now perform these duties. See CLERK OF ASSIZE.

Association, a writ or patent sent by the Crown to the justices appointed to take assizes to have others associated with them; it is usual where a judge becomes unable to attend to his circuit duties, or dies.—Reg. Brev. 201. Also a company or partnership, q.v., and see SOCIETY.

Association, Articles of (see Companies Act, 1929, ss. 6, 11 and 380). This is the formal contract of the members of a company with each other and with the company embodying its regulations for the conduct of the company and its affairs according to its constitution under the Memorandum of Association. In case of conflict the Memorandum is to prevail (Ashbury Railway Carriage Co. v. Riche, (1875) 7 H. L. 653). The Articles may be altered or added to by special resolution, Companies Act, 1929, s. 10, but not so as to increase a member's liability without his consent in writing to take more shares than subscribed for by him, or to contribute to the share capital, or to pay money to the company, s. 22. Every member is entitled to a copy of the Memorandum and Articles of the company on payment of one shilling or smaller agreed sum. The Memorandum and Articles must be delivered to and retained and registered by the Registrar of Companies, s. 12, and when registered they bind the company and its members to the same extent as if they respectively had been signed and sealed by each member (s. 20).

The Act (Schedule I.) provides a model set of Articles of Association for a company limited by shares. This is styled 'Table A.' A company is free to make its own articles or it may adopt all or any of the regulations of Table A. and so far as that Table is not excluded or modified it is to apply in the case of companies limited by shares and registered after the 28th November, 1929 (s. 8). Before that date Table A. was given merely by way of sample and was not in any way obligatory, see s. 10 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908.

Association, Memorandum of. A statement in writing to be stamped as if it were a deed, bearing the attested signatures of not less than seven persons or, if it is a private company, of not less than two persons, each taking at least one share in the company which is the subject of the memorandum, Companies Act, 1929, ss. 1 and 2. The memorandum defines the nature and objects of the company. It constitutes the charter of the company and is incapable of alteration, (Ashbury Railway & Co. v. Riche, (1875) L. R. 7 H. L. 653), except under the special provisions of the Act of 1929 (see s. 4). In particular the objects may not be altered unless the alteration has been confirmed by the court (s. 5), and see ss. 19, 49, 50, 53, 55, 147 and 153, and ASSOCIATION, ARTICLES OF. Consult Palmer's Company Law or Hemmant's Company Law.

Association not for Profit. By s. 18 of the Companies Act, 1929, an association for promoting commerce and science, religion, charity or other useful object without distributing any dividend to its members may be registered as a company with limited liability by licence by the Board of Trade without the addition of the word 'limited.' The association will then enjoy the privileges and be subject to practically all the obligations of a limited company.

Associations, Unlawful. See SOCIETIES.

Assolle [fr. absolvere, Lat.; absolver, absoiller, assoiler, O. Fr.], to deliver from excommunication: to acquit or absolve.—Stauf. Pl. Cr. 72 a.

Assolzie, to acquit a defendant, or to find a person not guilty of a crime.—Scots Law.

As soon as possible. Within a reasonable time, the shortest practicable; see Hydraulic Engineering Co. v. McHaffie, (1878) 4 Q. B. D. p. 673.

Assuetude, custom.

Assumpsit [he undertook] (to pay or perform) as set forth of the defendant by the plaintiff in the ancient pleading. The action of assumpsit (which, as a technical name, fell into desuetude with the passing of the Judicature Acts, 1873 and 1875, and is now generally superseded by the term 'action for breach of contract') was an action on the case, grounded originally on damages for breach of a promise; it lies for the recovery of damages for loss or injuries sustained by reason of the breach or non-performance of a promise, either express or implied, not under seal, but founded on a proper consideration. See PLEADING.

The ordinary division of this action was into (1) common or indebitatus assumpsit, brought for the most part on an implied promise; and (2) special assumpsit, founded on an express promise.—Steph. Plead., 7th ed., 11, 13.

Assurance, a term used exclusively in respect of a risk on the life of a human being. See INSURANCE.

Assurances. The legal evidences of the transfer of property are called the common assurances of the kingdom, whereby every man's estate is assured to him, and all controversies, doubts, and difficulties are either prevented or removed.—2 Bl. Com. 294. The term, which is usually confined to transfers of land, is defined in the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1888, which regulates assurances of land to charitable uses, as including 'a gift, conveyance, appointment, lease, transfer, settlement, mortgage charge, incumbrance devise, bequest, and every other assurance by deed, will, or other instrument.' For other definitions see Law of Property Act, 1922, s. 129 (9) and Law of Property Act, 1925, ss. 133 and 205 (1) (ii).

Assured, a person assured and indemnified against certain events. See INSURANCE.

Assurer, an insurer against certain perils and dangers: an underwriter: an indemnifier.

Assythment is an indemnification due to the heirs of a person murdered from the person guilty of the crime. See Bell's Dict. of the Law of Scotland.

Aster, or homo aster, a resident.—Brit. 151.

Astipulation [fr. astipulor, Lat.], a mutual agreement, assent, and consent between parties; also a witness or record.

Astrarius hæres [fr. astre, Fr., the hearth of a chimney], an heir apparent who has been placed, by conveyance, in possession of his ancestor's estate during such ancestor's lifetime.—Co. Litt. 8.

Astriction [fr. astrictio, Lat.] to a mill, a servitude by which grain growing on certain lands, or brought within them, must be carried to a certain mill to be ground, a certain culture or price being paid for the same.—Tomlins' Law Dict.

Astrum, a house or place of habitation.—Cowel.

Asyle, a sanctuary or place of refuge for offenders to fly to.

Asylum [fr. ασυλον, Gk., a place free from violence], (1) a sanctuary of refuge; (2) (in an obsolete sense) a place set apart for the treatment and habitation of persons of unsound mind. See Lunacy Act, 1890 to 1922, where the term meant an asylum provided by any local authority under those Acts, but by s. 20 of the Mental Treatment Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 23), these asylums are to be called MENTAL HOSPITALS and for any references in any public or local act, order, regulation or other document to 'asylums' references to Mental Hospitals are to be substituted, and see also the Army and Air Force Act, 1931 (21 Geo. 5, c. 14), s. 5.

Criminal Lunatics Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 64), deals with detention, etc. of criminal lunatics, e.g., the Broadmoor Criminal Lunatic Asylum.

The Asylum (now the Mental Hospital) Officers Superannuation Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 48), makes provision for superannuation allowances for officers and servants, and see the Asylums and Certified Institutions (Officers Pensions) Act, 1918 (8 & 9 Geo. 5, c. 33).

Asylums Board. The Metropolitan Asylums Board, constituted under the Metropolitan Poor Act, 1867, dealt with the administration relating to cases of insanity (inter alia) among the poor in London. The Lancashire Asylums Board, established by the Lancashire County Council under statutory powers, carried out similar duties in Lancashire. These boards and their powers were transferred to the London County Council or the respective local authorities by the Local Government Act, 1928 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 17).

Atavla, the mother of a great-great-grandfather or great-great-grandmother.

Atavus, the father of a great-great-grandfather or great-great-grandmother. The ascending line of lineal ancestry runs thus:—Pater, Avus, Proavus, Avabus, Atavus, Tritavus, the seventh generation in the ascending scale will be Tritavi-pater, and the next above it, Proavi-atavus.—Juv. Sat. iii. 312.

A tempore cujus contrarii memoria non existet. (From time of which there exists not memory to the contrary.) See Prescription Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 71), s. 5.

Athanation, the ancient name of the island of Thanet, in Kent.

Athe, Atha, or Ath [Sax.], an oath.—Bl. Cowel.

Athe, or Adda, a privilege of administering an oath in cases of right and property.—Cowel.

Athelism, disbelief in a God. See OATHS.

Atheling. See ÆTHELING.

Athesis fluvium, the ancient name of the river Tees, in Cumberland.

Atia, illwill. See DE ODIO ET ATIA.

Atilla, utensils, or country implements.—Blount.

Atonement, an agreement, union, or reconciliation. The word has been said to be compounded of at and one, as it were a making at one, and thence to have acquired the meaning of suffering the pains of whatever sacrifice is necessary to bring about a reconciliation.

Atrium, a court before a house, or a churchyard.—Blount.

Ats., an abbreviation denoting 'at the suit of.' It is used by a defendant in entitling the cause against him; thus C. D. (defendant), ats. A. B. (plaintiff).

Attach [fr. attaccare, It., to fasten], to take or apprehend by commandment or a writ or precept. It differs from arrest, because it takes not only the body, but sometimes the goods, whereas an arrest is only against the person; besides, he who attaches keeps the party attached in order to produce him in court on the day named, but he who arrests lodges the person arrested in the custody of a higher power, to be forthwith disposed of.—Fleta, lib. 5, c. xxiv. See ATTACHMENT.

Attaché, a person associated with a foreign legation. The privilege of an attaché extends to prevent a distress being levied on his furniture for non-payment of rates (Macartney v. Garbutt, (1890) 24 Q. B. D. 368).

Attachamenta bonorum, a distress formerly taken upon goods and chattels, by the legal attachiators or bailiffs, as security to answer an action for personal estate or debt.—Cowel.

Attachamenta de spinis et boscis, a privilege granted to the officers of a forest to take to their own use thorns, brush, and windfalls, within their precincts.—Kenn. Par. Antig. 209.

Attachment, a process from a Court of Record, awarded by the judges at their discretion on a bare suggestion, or on their own knowledge, against a person guilty of a contempt, who is punishable in a summary manner. Contempts may be thus classed: (1) Disobedience to the King's writs; (2) Contempt in the face of a Court; (3) Contemptuous words or writings concerning a Court; (4) Refusing to comply with the rules and awards of a Court; (5) Abuse of the process of a Court; and (6) Forgery of writs, or any other deceit tending to impose on a Court.—Leach's Hawk. P. Cr., c. 22, s. 33. The issue of writs of attachment in the High Court is now governed by the provisions of Ord. XLIV., R. S. C. As to the difference between attachment and committal, see Re Evans, 1893, 1 Ch. 259 (n.); D. v. A. & Co., 1900, 1 Ch. 484. As the liberty of the subject is involved the precise course pointed out by the rules must be strictly followed; 'every subject has a right to say that he ought not to be put in prison unless every iota of the rules has been

Attachment of Debts. By R. S. C. 1883, Order XLV., as amended by R. S. C. July, 1902, r. 12, and R. S. C. July, 1905, r. 8, a judgment creditor may apply ex parte to the Court or a judge (r. 1), either before or after any oral examination of the debtor, for an order nisi (see Norton v. Yates, 1906, 1 K. B. 112) attaching debts owing or accruing to the debtor in the hands of the parties owing the same who are called garnishees; and by the same or any subsequent order the garnishee may be required to appear before the Court, or a judge, or an officer of the Court, to show cause why he should not pay to the judgment creditor the debt due from him (the garnishee) to the judgment debtor, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to satisfy the judgment debt. See County Court Rules, 1936, Ord. XXVII.

Attachment, Foreign, a process under which the goods of foreigners found in some liberty are taken to satisfy creditors.—Com. Dig., tit. 'Attachment, Foreign.' Also a judicial proceeding, by means of which a creditor may obtain the security of the moneys, goods, or other personal property of his debtor, in the hands of a third person, for the purpose, in the first instance, of enforcing the appearance of the debtor to answer an action; and afterwards, upon his continued default, of obtaining the goods or property in satisfaction of the demand. It is also called garnishment. As to the custom prevailing in the City of London, see FOREIGN ATTACHMENT and consult Brandon on For. Attach.

Attachment of the Forest, one of the three Courts formerly held in forests. The highest Court was called Justice in Eyre's seat; the middle, the Swainmote; and the lowest, the Attachment.—Manwood, 90, 99.

Attachment of Privilege, is where a man by virtue of his privilege, calls another to that Court, whereto he himself belongs, and in respect thereof is privileged, there to answer some action. It is also a power to apprehend a person in a privileged place.—Jac. Law Dict.; 2 Wm. 4, c. 39 (commonly called the Uniformity of Process Act), virtually abolished this proceeding, and 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, enacted that all personal actions in any of the Superior Courts of Common Law at Westminster should be commenced by writ of summons.

Attainder [fr. attaindre, Fr. (attainder, O. F.—Roques)]; attingo, Lat., which signifies the apprehension of the object of a chase], the stain or corruption of the blood of a criminal capitally condemned: it is the immediate inseparable consequence, by the Common Law, of sentence of death being pronounced, or of outlawry for a capital offence. The criminal then becomes dead in law, technically called civiliter mortuus. It differs from conviction in that it is after judgment, whereas conviction is upon the verdict of guilty but before judgment pronounced, and may be quashed upon some point of law reserved, or judgment may be arrested. See Co. Litt. 390 b, 391 a.

A descendant may now trace descent through an attainted ancestor by virtue of the Inheritance Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 106), s. 10; and by the Forfeiture Act, 1870 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 23), it is now provided that no conviction for treason or felony shall cause attainder or forfeiture. See BILL OF ATTAINDER.

Attaindre le meffait, to fix the charge of a crime upon one, to prove a crime.—Wedgwood's Eng. Etym.

Attains du fet [Fr.], convicted of the fact, caught by it, having it brought home to one.—Wedg.

Attaint, Writ of, issued to inquire whether a jury of twelve men gave a false verdict, so that the judgment following thereupon might be reversed. This writ was abolished by the County Juries Act, 1825 (6 Geo. 4, c. 50), ss. 60, 61. A corrupt juror is punishable by fine and imprisonment, upon an indictment or information.

Attainture, legal censure.

Attal Sarisin [i.e., the leavings of the Sarasins, Sassins, or Saxons], an old deserted mine, so called by the Cornish miners.—Cowel.

Attiglia, a little house.—Jac. Law Dict.

Attempt [fr. tentare, Lat.; tenter, temter, tempter, O. Fr. to try], an endeavour to commit a crime or unlawful act. Persons indicted for a felony or misdemeanour may be found guilty only of an attempt to commit the same (Criminal Procedure Act, 1851, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 9).

Attendant, one who owes a duty or service to another, or depends upon another.—Termes de la Ley.

Attendant Term. Terms for years in real property are created for many purposes, e.g., to furnish money for the payment of debts, to secure rent charges or jointures, to raise portions for younger children, daughters, etc. Now, although the purpose for which the term was originally created has been satisfied or has failed, yet, not being surrendered, it continued to exist, the legal interest remaining in the trustees, to whom it was at its creation limited, or, if deceased, in their personal representatives; but the person entitled to the inheritance then became, according to equitable principle, entitled to the beneficial interest in such term, and the termor was held to be such person's trustee. This beneficial interest was subordinate to and merely attendant upon the higher estate possessed by the owner of the inheritance, and yet completely consolidated with it, following the inheritance in all the various modifications and changes to which it might be subjected by act of law or arrangements of the owner. The advantage of preserving these terms and assigning them to trustees (thus preventing the legal presumption of surrender), with an express declaration that they shall attend upon the inheritance, was this: If it had at any time appeared that prior to the purchase or mortgage, but posterior to the creation of the term, there had been an intermediate alienation or incumbrance of the fee in favour of another person, to which the then trustee of the term had not been a party, and of which the purchaser or mortgagee of the freehold had had no notice when he paid the purchase or mortgage money, he would be protected against it, through the medium of the term so assigned, which being the elder title would have taken the priority in point of legal effect. Hence the expression 'protecting against mesne (middle) incumbrances.'

Consult Sugden's Vendors and Purchasers, tit. 'Assignment of Terms.'

By the Satisfied Terms Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 112), as replaced and extended by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 5, and 1st Schedule, Part II., par. 1, attendant terms out of freehold land which have or may become satisfied at any date will merge in the freehold reversion and come to an end, and similar terms out of leasehold land are to merge in the leasehold reversion and cease, but where attendant terms with a leasehold reversion were satisfied on the 1st January, 1926, and were also vested in the owner of the reversion, the merger is not to affect any protection which the owner of the reversion might have had if the term had remained outstanding, and these provisions apply to parts of land comprised in a term which has been satisfied in part.

Attentates, proceedings in a Court of judicature, pending suit, and after an inhibition is decreed and gone out. Those things which are done after an extra-judicial appeal may be styled Attentates.—Ayliffe.

Attermining, granting time for payment of a debt.—Blount.

Attestation, the signing by a witness to the signature of another of a statement that a document was signed in the presence of the witness. The Criminal Procedure Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 18), s. 7 (applicable both to civil and criminal cases), renders it unnecessary to prove by the attesting witness any instrument to the validity of which attestation is not requisite, and such instrument may now be proved by admission, or otherwise, as if there had been no attesting witness. Wills and codicils (1 Vict. c. 26), warrants of attorney and cognovits (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110), agreements with crews of 'foreign-going' ships (Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 115), and bills of sale (see BILL OF SALE) require attestation.

As to the attestation of deeds in execution of certain powers of appointment, see Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 159, replacing Law of Property Amendment Act, 1859, s. 12.

As to attestation by a justice of the peace of the enlistment of a recruit, the attestation paper to be delivered to the recruiter, and the certified copy thereof to be furnished to a recruit at his request, see s. 80 of the Army Act (44 & 45 Vict. c. 58), Chit. Stat., tit. 'Army.'

Attestation Clause, the sentence subscribed to a written instrument signed by the witnesses to its execution, stating that they have witnessed it. Such a clause (in very precise terms) is always appended to a will formally prepared, the most common form being as follows:—

Signed by the above-named _____ and acknowledged by him as his will in the presence of us present at the same time, who at his request and in his presence and in the presence of each other, now subscribe our names as witnesses.

It is expressly provided by s. 9 of the Wills Act, 1837 (1 Vict. c. 26), that the signature of the testator, or of some other person by his direction, 'shall be made or acknowledged by the testator in the presence of two or more witnesses present at the same time,' and that 'such witnesses shall attest and shall subscribe the will in the presence of the testator'; but it is added that 'no form of attestation shall be necessary.' By Rule 4 of the Probate (Non-Contentious) Rules, 1925, however, it is provided, that 'if there be no attestation clause to a will or codicil presented for probate, or if the attestation clause thereto be insufficient, the registrars must require an affidavit from at least one of the subscribing witnesses, if these or either of them be living, to prove that the provisions of 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 9, and 15 Vict. c. 24, in reference to the execution, were in fact complied with.'

A legacy to an attesting witness or the husband or wife of such is void, but a will containing such a legacy is otherwise good.—Wills Act, 1837, s. 15.

Attested Copy, a verified transcript of a document.

Attesting Witness, a person who has seen a party execute a deed, or sign a written document. He then subscribes his signature for the purpose of identification and proof at any future period. See ATTESTATION.

Attile, Attillamentum, the rigging or furniture of a ship.—Fleta, lib. 1, c. xxv., s. 9.

Attinctus, attained.

Attorn, to make attornment. See ATTORNMENT.

Attornare rem, to turn over money or goods, i.e., to assign or appropriate them to some particular use or service.—Ken. Par. Antiq. 283.

Attornato faciendo vel recipiendo, an obsolete writ, which commanded a sheriff or steward of a county court or hundred court to receive and admit an attorney to appear for the person who owed suit of court.—Fitz. N. B. 156.

Attorney [fr. tourné, Fr., or fr. attornatus, Medieval Lat., substituted], one who is appointed by another to do something in his absence, and who has authority to act in the place and turn of him by whom he is delegated. He is of two kinds.

(1) Attorney at Law was a public officer belonging to the Superior Courts of Common Law at Westminster, who conducted legal proceedings on behalf of others, called his clients, by whom he was retained: he answered to the Solicitor in the Courts of Chancery, and the Proctor of the Admiralty, Ecclesiastical, Probate, and Divorce Courts. An attorney was almost invariably also a solicitor. The name 'Solicitor' was provided by the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 87. The Judicature Act, 1925, s. 215 (2) provides that references in any enactment to solicitors, attorneys or proctors shall be construed as references to solicitors of the Supreme Court. See SOLICITORS.

(2) Attorney in Fact, including all agents employed in any business or to do any act in pais for another; also a person acting under a special agency, whose authority must be expressed by deed, commonly called a power of attorney.—1 Bac. Abr., tit. 'Attorney.' See POWER OF ATTORNEY.

Attorney-General, a great officer of state appointed by letters-patent, and the legal representative of the Crown in the Supreme Court. He is also ex-officio head of the bar for the time being. He exhibits informations, prosecutes for the Crown in criminal matters and in revenue causes, and used to grant fiats for writs of error until they were abolished by s. 20 of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907. His fiat or consent is required before certain proceedings or prosecutions can be commenced (see, e.g., Public Bodies Corrupt Practices Act, 1889, and Prevention of Corruption Act, 1906). In many cases also (see e.g., Lunacy Act, 1890, s. 325; Public Health Act, 1936, s. 298; Public Health (Officers) Act, 1884; Public Health (Members and Officers) Act, 1885; Official Secrets Act, 1911, s. 8), his consent is necessary before penalties can be recovered. His fiat is necessary for certain appeals to the House of Lords. See Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1876 (c. 59), s. 10. When the House of Lords sits in a committee of privileges, it is the duty of the Attorney-General to attend at the bar in a judicial capacity and report on the claim. As a law officer he can hear applications for and make grants of patents on appeal from the Comptroller, though in practice this work is more usually undertaken by the Solicitor-General (q.v.). See LETTERS-PATENT. The Attorney-General is almost invariably a member of the House of Commons, and is appointed on the advice of the Government, with which he goes out of office. He has charge in the 'House' of Government legal measures, and deals with legal questions there on behalf of the Government. Consult Termes de la Ley; Norton-Kyshe's Attorney-General and Solicitor-General of England; Mews's Digest, tit. 'Crown Office (Law Officers).' The Prince of Wales appoints his own Attorney-General.

Attorney of the Wards and Liveries was the third officer of the Duchy Court.—1 Bac. Abr., tit. 'Attorney.'

Attorneyship, the office of an agent or attorney.—4 Reeves, c. xxxii., p. 574.

Attornment [fr. tourner, Fr., to turn], the acknowledgment of a new lord on the alienation of land, and the assent or agreement of the tenant to attorn, as 'I become tenant to the purchaser.'—Co. Litt. 309. By s. 151 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, replacing 4 Anne, c. 16, ss. 9, 10, all grants and conveyances of lands, rents, reversions, etc., are good without the attornment of the tenants, but notice of the grants must be given to the tenants, before which they are not prejudiced by the payment of any rent to the grantor, or breach of the condition for non-payment, and by the same section of the Act of 1925, replacing the Distress for Rent Act, 1737 (11 Geo. 2, c. 19), s. 11, attornments made by tenants to strangers claiming title to the estate of their landlord are null and void, and their landlord's possession is not affected thereby, except as provided by s. 151, ibid.

The 'Attornment Clause' in a deed of mortgage is a clause whereby, for better securing the payment of the interest on the mortgage, the mortgagor attorns tenant to the mortgagee at a yearly rent equal to the interest on the mortgage, thus giving the mortgagee the right to distrain (see DISTRESS) for the interest, but such attornment clauses, inasmuch as they require registration as bills of sale under the Bills of Sale Act, 1882, s. 6, are generally considered unsatisfactory.

Attrappe, taken or seized.

Attreballi, the ancient name of the inhabitants of Berkshire.

Aubaine. See DROIT D'AUBAINE.

Au besoin (in case of need).

Auction, signifies generally an increasing, an enhancement, and hence is applied to a public sale of property usually conducted by biddings, which augment the price. A spear used to be raised by the Romans, as the sign of a public auction.—Livy, xxiii. 37; Smith's Dict. of Antiq. The Sale of Land by Auction Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 48), by s. 5 enacts that the particulars of sale of land by auction 'shall state whether such land will be sold without reserve, or subject to a reserved price, or whether a right to bid is reserved,' and that 'if it is stated that such land will be sold without reserve, it shall not be lawful for the seller to employ any person to bid at such sale, or for the auctioneer to take knowingly any bidding from any such person.' As to auction without reserve, see Rainbow v. Hawkins, 1904, 2 K. B. 322. See DUTCH AUCTION; KNOCK-OUTS.

The Auctions (Bidding Agreements) Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 12), was designed to make it illegal for a dealer to give any consideration or reward to any person, whether a dealer or not, for abstaining or having abstained from bidding at an auction. Such an agreement was not illegal before the Act. See Cohen v. Roche, 1927, 1 K. B. 169. By s. 2 when such a transaction has been the subject of a prosecution and conviction, the sale may, as against a purchaser who has been party to the transaction, be treated by the vendor as a sale induced by fraud; provided that notice that the vendor intends to exercise such power in relation to any sale at the auction shall not affect the obligation of the auctioneer to deliver the goods to the purchaser. By s. 3 a copy of the Act must be exhibited at sale. See also Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 53.

Auctionariæ, catalogues of goods for public sale or auction.

Auctionarii, sellers, retailers, brokers.

Auctioneers, licensed agents appointed to sell property and to conduct sales or auctions. They differ from brokers, in that the latter may both buy and sell, whereas auctioneers can only sell; also brokers sell by private contract, and auctioneers by public auction.

An auctioneer is deemed the agent of both parties; he can bind virtute officii the seller and the purchaser of realty by his memorandum of the sale under s. 40 of the L. P. Act, 1925, replacing in part s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds; but he is only the agent of the seller before the fall of the hammer at the sale. He may sue the purchaser in his own name. An auctioneer is generally remunerated by a commission on the amount realised by the sale, or, if no sale has been effected, on the reserve.

As to the right to specific performance when a mistake has been made by the auctioneer, see Re Hare and O'Moore's Contract, 1901, 1 Ch. 93; McManus v. Fortescue, 1907, 2 K. B. 1. It has been held in Scotland that an auctioneer warrants his authority to sell (Anderson v. Croall, (1904) 6 F. 153). An auctioneer requires an annual licence (Auctioneers Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 15), ss. 2 and 4), and see the Sale of Land by Auction Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 48), and Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 58.

Auctor, a seller, or vendor.

Audi alteram partem. (Hear the other side—i.e., no man should be condemned unheard.)—See Cooper v. Wandsworth Board of Works, (1863) 32 L. J. C. P. 185, and the reference therein, at p. 188, by Byles, J., to Dr. Bentley's case, (1723) 1 Str. 557, and Mr. Justice Fortescue's quaint reason for the Common Law supplying the omission in a statute to direct a hearing; Hopkins v. Smethwick Local Board, (1890) 24 Q. B. D. 712; Broom's Leg. Max.

Similarly, Qui aliquid statuerit parte inaudita alterâ, æquum licet dixerit, hæud æquum fecerit—6 Rep. 52 (taken from Seneca's Medea). (He who shall decide anything without the other side having been heard, although he may have said what is right, will not have done what is right).

Audience, a hearing; an interview.

Audience Court, belonging to the Archbishop of Canterbury, having the same authority with the Court of Arches, but inferior to it in dignity and antiquity. The Dean of the Arches is the official auditor of the Audience. The Archbishop of York has also his Audience Court.—Termes de la Ley.

Audiendo et terminando, a writ or commission to certain persons to appease and punish any insurrection or great riot.—Fitz. N. B. 110.

Audit, an examining of accounts. An audit may be either detailed or administrative, and is usually both. A detailed audit is a comparison of vouchers with entries of payment, in order that the party whose accounts are audited may not debit his employer with payments not in fact made. An administrative audit is a comparison of payments with authorities to pay, in order that the party whose accounts are audited may not debit his employer with payments not authorized. If in either branch of audit an improper entry is discovered, the auditor surcharges the party whose accounts are audited; whereby the payment must be made by such party out of his own pocket. Where no fraud is suspected, however, and when there has been no negligence, it is common for the surcharge to be remitted (see, e.g., Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), s. 230), especially where the party whose accounts are audited has given his service gratuitously.

The public accounts are audited under the Exchequer and Audit Act, 1866 (repealing twenty-two prior Acts).

The most important of the many enactments as to audit of accounts of local authorities were the Poor Law Audit Act, 1848; District Auditors Act, 1879; Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, s. 25; and the Public Health Act, 1875, ss. 246, 247. These have been repealed and the Local Government Act, 1933, ss. 219 et seq. now govern the subject.

The Court can, however, review the auditor's findings on fact as well as law (R. v. Roberts, 1907, 2 K. B. 878).

The accounts of public companies incorporated by special Act of Parliament are audited under ss. 101–108 of the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 16), the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868

(31 & 32 Vict. c. 119), by s. 11 dispensing in the case of a railway company with the necessity, under s. 101 of the Act of 1845, of the auditors being shareholders, and by s. 12 providing for the appointment of an auditor by the Board of Trade, upon application made in pursuance of a resolution passed at a meeting of the directors or at a general meeting. The principle of compulsory audit was first applied to companies generally by the Companies Act, 1900, although certain companies, e.g., banking companies, had been the subject of similar legislation for many years. The Companies Act, 1929, ss. 132 to 134 now provide for annual appointment of auditors and sets out their duties. Sections 122–131 contain express provisions for compulsory annual accounts, whereas in the 1908 Act no express provision was made for it, but such an annual audit was by implication required (Newton v. Birmingham Small Arms Co., 1906, 2 Ch. 378). By s. 34 of the Companies Act, 1929, auditors must make a report on the accounts submitted to them and on every balance sheet laid before the company in general meeting. In Re City Equitable Fire Insurance Co., Ltd., 1925, Ch. 407, the duties of auditors were fully discussed, though this case has been overruled in part by s. 152. Auditors may not be protected by articles against liability for loss except by their own default.

As to an auditor's personal liability for failure of duty, see Leeds Estate Building & Investment Co. v. Shepherd, (1887) 36 C. D. 787; Re Republic of Bolivia, etc., Ltd., 1914, 1 Ch. 139; and as to setting aside his certificate, Thacker v. Elder, 1899, A. C. 451. See COMPANY.

The accounts of friendly societies are audited under the Friendly Societies Act, 1896, s. 26, and these regulations are applied to shop clubs by the Shop Clubs Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7, c. 21); those of industrial societies are audited under the Industrial Societies Act, 1893, s. 13; the accounts of incorporated building societies under the Building Societies Act, 1874, as amended by the Building Societies Act, 1894, which requires that one at least of the auditors shall be 'a person who publicly carries on the business of an accountant'; those of unincorporated building societies under s. 33 of the Friendly Societies Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 56); and those of Savings Banks under s. 4, par. 6, of the Trustee Savings Banks Act, 1863, and s. 1 of the Savings Banks Act, 1904.

By s. 13 of the Public Trustee Act, 1906, the accounts of any trust may be audited by the Public Trustee or some person appointed by him; as to such an audit and the costs of it, see Re Oddy, 1911, 1 Ch. 532.

By s. 22 (4), Trustee Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 19), trustees may, but not more than once in three years unless special circumstances arise, cause the accounts of the trust property to be audited by an independent accountant. Consult Pirley on Auditors; Dicksee on Auditing.

Auditā querelā [defendentis] [Lat.] (so called because a plaintiff cannot have it) was an equitable action which lay for a person against whom judgment had been given, and who was therefore in danger of execution, or perhaps actually in execution, when he had matter to show that such execution ought not to have issued or should not issue against him. It was invented lest, in any case, there should be an oppressive defect of justice, where the party had a good defence, but had not any other means to take advantage of it. By the indulgence of the Courts, a summary relief upon motion has in most cases of evident oppression been granted, and this occasioned the remedy by auditā querelā to be seldom resorted to.—By Rules H. T. 1853, r. 79, no writ of auditā querelā was allowed unless by Rule of Court or order of a judge, and the Rules of Court under the Judicature Acts have abolished this form of proceeding altogether, R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XLII., r. 27.

Auditor [Lat.], one who examines accounts and evidences of expenditure. See AUDIT.

Auditor of the Receipts, an officer of the Exchequer.—4 Inst. 107; 46 Geo. 3, c. 1 (repealed by 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 15, s. 36).

Auditors of the Imprest, officers of the Exchequer, who formerly had the charge of auditing the accounts of the customs, naval and military expenses, etc., now performed by the commissioners for auditing public accounts.—Jac. Law Dict.

Augea, a cistern for water.—Cowel.

Augmentation, the name of a court (now abolished) erected by 27 Hen. 8, c. 27, to determine suits and controversies relating to monasteries and abbey-lands.—Termes de la Ley.

Augusta, the ancient name of London.

Augusta legibus soluta non est.—(The wife of the emperor is not exempted from the laws.) The queen is the king's subject and not his equal, and as a general rule is on the same footing with other subjects.—1 Bl. Com. 219.

Aula, a Court Baron.

Aula ecclesiæ, a nave or body of a church where temporal courts were anciently held.—Eadm. lib. 6, p. 141.

Aula Regis, or Regia, a court established by William the Conqueror in his own hall; it was composed of the great officers of state resident in the palace, and followed the king's household in all his expeditions. The trial of common causes in it was, on this account, very burdensome to the people, and accordingly the 11th chapter of Magna Charta thus enacted:—'communia placita non sequantur curiam nostram sed teneantur in aliquo loco certo.' This 'certain place' was established in Westminster Hall, where until the Judicature Act it continued under the name of the Court of Common Pleas, or Common Bench.—Brac. L. 3, tr. 1, c. 7. See ROYAL COURTS OF JUSTICE.

Aulnager [fr. ulna, Lat., an ell], an ancient officer appointed by the king, whose business it was to measure all woollen-cloth made for sale, that the Crown might not be defrauded of customs and duties.—Termes de la Ley; 2 Steph. Com.

Aumbry, Aumber [fr. armoire, Fr.; armario, almario, Sp.; almer, Germ.; armaria, almaria, M. Lat.; a cupboard], a place where the arms, plates, vessels, and everything belonging to housekeeping were kept.

Aumeen, trustee, commissioner; a temporary collector or supervisor, appointed to the charge of a country on the removal of a zemindar, or for any other particular purpose of local investigation of arrangement.—Indian.

Aumil, agent, officer, native collector of revenue; superintendent of a district or division of a country, either on the part of the government zemindar or renter.—Ibid.

Aumildar, agent, the holder of an office; an intendant and collector of the revenue, uniting civil, military, and financial powers under the Mohammedan government.—Ibid.

Aumone, Tenure in, where lands are given in alms to some church or religious house, upon condition that a service or prayers shall be offered at certain times for the repose of the donor's soul.—Brit. 164.

Auncel weight, an ancient manner of weighing by the hanging of scales or hooks at either end of a beam or staff. See ANSEL. What were called stilliards, a sort of hand-weighing among butchers, which show the pounds by certain notches on a beam, were similar to the auncel weight.—Jac. Law Dict.

Aunculatus, antiquated.—Blount.

Auncient Demesn. See ANCIENT DEMESNE.

Aureney, Aurney, Aurigny, the ancient name of Alderney.

Aureo Vado, de, the ancient name of Guldeford, or Guildford, in Surrey.

Aures, a Saxon punishment by cutting off the ears, inflicted on those who robbed churches, or were guilty of any other theft.—Fleta, lib. 1, c. xxxviii., par. 10.

Auricular Confession. Confession to the private ear of a priest, as distinguished from public confession to a congregation. As to its privilege in a Court of Law, see CONFESION TO A PRIEST.

Auricularius, a secretary.—Dugd. Mon. 10.

Aurum Reginæ, queen-gold. A royal revenue belonging to every queen consort during her marriage with the king, and due from every person who has made a voluntary offering or fine to the king amounting to ten marks or upwards, for and in consideration of any privileges, grants, licenses, pardons, or other matters of royal favour conferred upon him by the king. It is due in the proportion of one-tenth part more, over and above the entire offering or fine made to the king, and becomes an actual debt of record to the queen's majesty by the mere recording of the fine.—1 Bl. Com. 214.

Australasia, the inclusive name given to Australia, Tasmania (or Van Diemen's Land), New Zealand, Fiji, and other islands in the Pacific Ocean forming part of the British Dominions. The Federal Council of Australasia Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 60) (repealed by Commonwealth of Australia Constitution Act, 1900 (c. 12)), constituted a Federal Council of Australasia 'for the purpose' (as set forth in the preamble) 'of dealing with such matters of common Australasian interest in respect to which united action is desirable.' See next title.

Australia, an island in the British Dominions, consisting before the Commonwealth of Australia Constitution Act of 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 12), of the separately governed (see, e.g., the New South Wales Constitution Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 54), and the Victoria Constitution Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 55)) colonies of New South Wales, Victoria, Queensland, Western Australia, and South Australia. See next title.

Australia, Commonwealth of. The association of the people of New South Wales, Victoria, South Australia, Queensland, Tasmania, and Western Australia in a federal Commonwealth comprising also Papua, the Northern Territory, and Norfolk, Ashmore and Cantier Islands in the Pacific (and see MANDATED TERRITORIES), with a Constitution enabling its Parliament, consisting of the Sovereign of the British Empire, a Senate, and a House of Representatives, to legislate for the whole of Australia. The legislative powers of the Parliament, which may be found under 39 heads in the 51st paragraph of the Constitution, extend to trade, taxation, defence, coinage, bankruptcy, copyright, marriage, 'the people of any race other than certain aborigines,' immigrants and emigration, 'external affairs,' railway construction, and other matters too numerous to particularize; see Commonwealth of Australia Constitution Act, 1900 (Imperial, 63 & 64 Vict. c. 12); A.-G. for Commonwealth of Australia v. Colonial Sugar Refining Co., 1914, A. C. 237.

The judicial powers of the Commonwealth are vested in a High Court of Australia, consisting of a Chief Justice and not less than two puisne Judges (no qualification being named), appointed by the Governor-General in Council, and removable by him only on an address from both the Senate and the House of Representatives, in the same session. To this High Court there is an appeal, concurrent with that to the Privy Council, from the Supreme Court of every Australian State (Webb v. Outrim, 1907, A. C. 81); and from this High Court there is an appeal by its leave (but not otherwise) on any constitutional questions between the States themselves, or between the States and the Commonwealth, to the Privy Council, and, on other questions, an appeal to the Privy Council by special leave of the Sovereign. By the Statute of Westminster, 1931 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 4) (q.v.), the Commonwealth of Australia became a Dominion; the powers of the Dominion Parliament were increased and those of the Imperial Parliament at Westminster were defined and restricted. But by s. 10 certain sections are not to apply unless adopted. See the Act.

Austureus and Ostureus, a goshawk, whence a falconer keeping such kind of hawks is called ostringer. Unus austureus used to be reserved as a rent to the lord, as may be seen in some ancient deeds.—Blount.

Auter, or Autre. Of another. See AUTRE.

Auterfois. See AUTREFOIS.

Authentic, an undoubted original.

Authentic Act, that which has been executed before a notary or other public officer, duly authorized, or which is testified by a public seal, or has been rendered public by the authority of a competent magistrate, or which is certified as being a copy of a public register.—Civil Law.

Authentication, an attestation made by a proper officer by which he certifies that a record is in due form of law, and that the person who certifies it is the officer appointed so to do.

Authentics, a collection of the Novels of Justinian, made by an anonymous author. So called on account of its authority.—Civil Law.

There is another collection so called, compiled by Irnier, of incorrect extracts from the Novels and inserted by him in the Code, in the places to which they refer.

Author. This word has not been defined by statute, though the Copyright Act, 1911, says (s. 24 (2)), that for the purposes of that section the word shall include the personal representatives of a deceased author. A translator of a literary work is the 'author' of his translation (Byrne v. Statist Co., 1914, 1 K. B. 622). As to who is the 'author' of the report of a speech, see Walter v. Lane, 1900, A. C. 539. The agreement between an author and his publisher is a personal one and is not assignable (Griffith v. Tower Publishing Co., 1897, 1 Ch. 21). See Nisbet & Co. v. Golf Agency, (1907), 23 T. L. R. 370, and Evans v. Hulton & Co., (1924), 121 L. T. 534.

Authorities, the citations which are made of laws, acts of the legislature, precedents, decided cases, and opinions of text writers. See PRECEDENT.

Authority, a right; an official or judicial command; also a legal power to do an act given by one man to another. Consult Vin. Abr., tit. 'Authority,' and Stugden on Powers, and see WARRANTY.

Autocracy, an irresponsible monarchy.

Autograph, the handwriting of any one.

Automobile. See MOTOR CAR.

Autonomy, political independence of a nation.

Autrefois acquit (formerly acquitted), a plea in criminal cases; when a person is indicted for an offence and acquitted, he cannot be afterwards indicted for the same offence, provided the first indictment were such that he could have been lawfully convicted on it; and if he be thus indicted a second time, he may plead autrefois acquit, which will be a good bar to the indictment.

The true test, whether such a plea is a sufficient bar, is, whether the evidence necessary to support the second indictment would have been sufficient to procure a legal conviction upon the first.—R. v. Emden, (1808) 9 East, 437; R. v. King, 1897, 1 Q. B. 214, explained and distinguished in Rez v. Barron, 1914, 2 K. B. 570; Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 100), s. 28; and the Evidence Act, 1851 (c. 99), s. 13.

Autrefois attainé (formerly attainted), an ancient plea in criminal cases (as to which see Criminal Law Act, 1827 (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28), s. 4), obsolete after the Forfeiture Act, 1870, see ATTAINDER.

Autrefois convict (formerly convicted), plea of. The defence of a person charged with any crime that he has been already convicted of the same crime, entitling the party proving it to a discharge on the ground that nemo debet bis vexari pro una et eadem causa. See the principle recognized in s. 33 of the Interpretation Act, 1889; R. v. Sheridan and R. v. Grant, 155 L. T. 207 and 209, and for form of the plea, see s. 28 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 100).

Autre vie, Estate pur, a tenancy of land for the life of another who is called the cestui-que vie. The lowest estate of freehold which the law allowed before 1926. After 1925 the estate has become an equitable interest, Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 1. If limited to the grantee and his heirs, it passed to the grantee's heirs or special occupants; if granted to executors or administrators, they took, as special occupants, if in that case or if there was no special occupant the estate went to the executors or administrators of the grantee. (Wills Act, 1837 (1 Vict. c. 26), s. 6, superseding the Statute of Frauds, s. 3, and 14 Geo. 2, c. 20, s. 9). By s. 3 of the Wills Act, 1837, the estate was declared to be disposable of by will. The estate could be assigned inter vivos. It could not be the subject of entail, see Carson's Real Property Statutes; Notes to s. 1 of the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74). It was not subject to dower or curtesy. See Mountcashell (Earl of) v. Moore-Smyth, 1896, A. C. 158. Estates pur autre vie now devolve on the personal representative (Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 11), and are assets for the payment of debts (s. 32, ibid.). A tenant pur autre vie appears to be a 'limited owner' for the purposes of s. 20 of the Settled Land Act, 1925, see sub-s. 1 (v). See SPECIAL OCCUPANT.

Auxesis [fr. αὐξήσις, Gk.], a figure in rhetoric, by which anything is magnified.

Auxilium ad filium militem faciendum et filium maritandum, an ancient writ which was addressed to the sheriff to levy compulsorily an aid towards the knighting of a son and the marrying of a daughter of the tenants in capite of the Crown.—Abolished.

Auxilium curiæ, a precept or order of Court citing and convening a party, at the suit and request of another, to warrant something.—Ken. Paroch. Antiq. 477.

Auxilium facere alleui in curiâ regis, to become another's friend and solicitor in the King's Courts, an office undertaken for and granted by some courtiers to their dependants in the country.—Ibid. 126.

Auxilium regis, the king's aid or money levied for the royal use and the public service, as taxes granted by Parliament.—1 Bl. Com. c. viii.

Auxilium vicecomiti, a customary aid or duty anciently payable to sheriffs out of certain manors, for the better support of their offices.—Dugd. Mon. tom. 2, p. 245.

Avage, or Avisage, a rent or payment by tenants of the manor of Writtle, in Essex, upon St. Leonard's Day, 6th of November, for the privilege of panning in the lord's woods.—Blount.

Avall [fr. valoir, Fr.; valere, Lat., to be worth], profit of land.

Avall of Marriage [fr. valor maritaggi, Lat.], the right of marriage, which the lord or guardian in chivalry had of disposing of his infant ward in matrimony. A guardian in socage had also the same right, but not attended with the same advantage.—2 Bl. Com. 70 and 89.

Avalls, profits or proceeds.

Aval [Fr.], surety for payment.

Avalonia, the ancient name of Glastonbury in Somersetshire.

Avalum, a written guarantee.

Avenage, a certain quantity of oats paid by a tenant to his landlord as rent, or in lieu of some other duties.—Blount.

Avenor, an officer belonging to the royal stables, who provided oats for the horses.—13 Car. 2, c. 8, rep. by Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1863.

Adventure, adventures or trials of skill at arms, military exercises on horseback.—Cowel.

Adventure, or Adventure, a mischance causing the death of a man, as where a person is suddenly drowned or killed by any accident, without felony.—Jac. Law Dict.

Aver [fr. avoir, Fr.; habere, Lat., to have ; or haber, Sp.], a beast of the plough ; money.

Aver (to) [fr. avérer, Fr.; fr. verus, Lat.], to maintain as true.

Avera, a day's work of a ploughman, formerly valued at 8d.—Domesday : 4 Inst. 269.

Average, a medium, a mean proportion, used in various senses :—

(1) A service which a tenant owes to his lord by doing work with his avers.

(2) A shipping or insurance term. (a) Average, or more fully general average, is where any damage or loss has been properly and voluntarily incurred in respect of a ship or cargo for its safety, e.g., goods thrown overboard in a storm to lighten the ship. Such loss by maritime law is shared proportionately between the shipowners and the owners of the cargo, according to value. This risk is almost always covered by insurance. An Average Bond is a bond entered into by the consignees of a cargo with the shipowners, when a general average loss has been sustained by the ship, binding the former to pay their proportion as soon as ascertained. (b) Particular average is damage, or loss to a ship, or cargo, other than a general average loss. Such a loss rests where it falls, that is to say, is borne by the owner of the thing lost or damaged, or by his insurer, who compensates the insured in the proportion which the average loss bears to the whole insurance, and see the Marine Insurance Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 41), s. 76, as the meaning of 'warranted free from particular average in marine insurance policies.' As to salvage loss and generally, see tit. 'ADJUSTMENT,' 'INSURANCE' and 'CONSTRUCTIVE TOTAL LOSS,' and consult Arnould's Marine Insurance and Carver's Carriage by Sea.

(3) Also a small duty paid to masters of ships, when goods are sent in another man's ship, for their care of the goods over and above the freight.

(4) Stubble, or remainder of straw and grass left in cornfields after harvest. In Kent it is called gratten, and in other parts roughings.

(5) Average prices, such as are computed on all the prices of any articles sold within a certain period or district. See, e.g., Corn Returns Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 37), s. 9.

Average Weekly Earnings. See WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT.

A verbis legis non est recedendum. 5 Co. 118.—(From the words of the law there should not be any departure.) This maxim directs the construction to be put upon Acts of Parliament, against the express letter of which the Courts will not sanction any interpretation, for the meaning of the Legislature cannot be so well explained as by its own direct words, since index animi sermo (language conveys the intention of the mind), and maledicta expositio quæ corrumpit textum (an exposition which corrupts the text is bad).—4 Rep. 35; Sussex Peerage Case, (1844) 11 Cl. & F. 143.

Aver-corn, a reserved rent in corn paid to religious houses.—Cowel.

Averia, cattle, which were the principal possession in early times.—Spelman. Also chattels generally.

Averia carrucæ, beasts of the plough exempt from distress, if other sufficient goods can be found to be distrained upon.—See DISTRESS.

Averia elongata, cattle eloiigned, i.e., carried off.

Averilis captis in withernam, a writ granted to one whose cattle were unlawfully distrained by another and driven out of the county in which they were taken, so that they could not be replevied by the sheriff.—Reg. Brev. 82.

Averium, the best live beast due to the lord as a heriot on his tenant's death.—2 Bl. Com. 424.

Aver-land, that which tenants ploughed and manured for the proper use of a monastery or the lords of the soil.—Cowel.

Averment [fr. verificatio, Lat.], an advancement or affirmation of any matter in a pleading, and when new matter was introduced the pleading concluded with a verification, except in the anomalous case of the general plea of bankruptcy under the repealed 6 Geo. 4, c. 16. Verifications or averments were of two kinds: common and special. Common were applied to ordinary cases, and were in the following form:—‘And this the plaintiff (or defendant) is ready to verify.’ Special were used where the matter pleaded was intended to be tried by record or by some other method than a jury. They were in the following forms:—‘And this the plaintiff (or defendant) is ready to verify, by the said record,’ or, ‘And this the plaintiff (or defendant) is ready to verify, when, where, and in such manner as the Court here shall order, direct, or appoint.’

Aver-penny or Average Penny, money paid towards the king's averages or carriages, and so to be freed thereof.—Cowel.

Averrare, a duty required from some customary tenants, to carry goods in a waggon or upon loaded horses.—Jacob.

Avers, draught cattle; cart-horses.

Aver-silver, a customary rent; see Cowel's Law Dict.

Aviation. See AERIAL NAVIGATION, AIR FORCE.

A vinculo matrimonii (from the bond of wedlock). It was a total divorce obtained from the Ecclesiastical Court on some canonical impediment existing before marriage and not arising afterwards, for the marriage was declared void, as having been absolutely unlawful ab initio, and the parties were therefore separated pro salute animarum (for the safety of their souls), the issue (if any) were illegitimate, and the parties might contract another marriage.

Though this divorce could not have been obtained from the Ecclesiastical Court where the marriage was not void ab initio, yet it was frequently granted before the establishment of the ‘Divorce Court’ in 1857, on the ground of adultery, by private Act of Parliament. See ADULTERY: DIVORCE.—Cowel.

Avisamentum, advice or counsel.—Cowel.

Avita, a grandmother.

Avizandum. In the Scotch Courts the judges are said to ‘make avizandum’ with a case when time is taken to consider judgment.

Avocat, a French barrister, or advocate.

Avoidance [fr. vuide, vide, Fr., empty, void, free from], when a benefice is void of an incumbent, in which sense it is opposed to plenarty.—Jac. Law Dict. Also the meeting, by new matter, of an opponent's pleading. See CONFESSION and AVOIDANCE.

Avoidance of a Deed. The rendering void or of no effect of a deed, either on account of defective execution, disclaimer, fraud, or otherwise.

Avoidrupois, Avoirs-de-pois, or Aver-dupois [O. Fr.] (to have weight), a method of weighing goods, allowing 16 ounces to the pound, whilst Troy weight allows but 12. See Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49); and Troy.

Avona, the ancient name of Bungay in Suffolk, and Hampton Court.

Avonæ Valls, the ancient name of Avondale, or Oundle, in Northamptonshire.

Avoucher, the calling upon a warrantor to fulfil his undertaking.

Avoué, a French attorney.

Avow. See ADVOW.

Avowant, one who makes an avowry.

Avowee. See ADVOUEE.

Avowry, or Advowry, was a pleading in the action of replevin (see that title), which stated the nature and merits of the defence, and justified or avowed taking the distress in his (the defendant's) own right, which, if established, would entitle him to a judgment de retorno habendo. An avowry was in the nature of a declaration. See Distress for Rent Act, 1737 (11 Geo. 2, c. 19), s. 22.

Avowterer, Advowterer, an adulterer. The crime being called Avowtry.—Termes de la Ley.

Avulsion [fr. avulsio, Lat.], lands torn off by an inundation or current from property to which they originally belonged, and gained to the estate of another; or where a river changes its course, and instead of continuing to flow between two properties, cuts off part of one and joins it to the other. The property of the part thus separated continues in the original proprietor, in which respect avulsion differs from alluvion, i.e., where an addition is insensibly made to a property by the gradual washing down of the river, for such an addition becomes the property of the owner of the lands to which it is made. Consult Coulson and Forbes' Law of Waters.

Avunculus, an uncle by the mother's side.

Avunculus magnus, a great-uncle.

Avus, a grandfather.

Await [fr. awaiti, Wall., to watch, waiti, to look], the lying in wait to execute some mischief.—See 13 Ric. 2, st. 2, by which no pardon is allowed for the death of a man slain by await.

Award [the primitive sense of ward is shown in the It. guardare, Fr. regarder, to look. Hence, Prov. Fr. eswarder (answering in form to award), to inspect goods, and, incidentally, to pronounce them good and marketable; eswardeur, an inspector.—Hecart. An award is accordingly, in the first place, the taking a matter into consideration and pronouncing judgment upon it; but in later times the designation has been transferred exclusively to the consequent judgment.—Wedgw.], a document containing the determination of commissioners, under an Inclosure Act or other public statute; also an instrument embodying an arbitrator's decision on a matter submitted to him. It must follow the submission, but need not necessarily be in writing, unless so prescribed. An award is generally considered as published as soon as the arbitrator has done some act whereby he becomes functus officio, and has declared, and can no longer change, his final mind. As soon as the award is executed, notice thereof should be given to all the parties that it is made and ready to be delivered; and if the submission direct that it be delivered to the parties by a certain day, in order to be valid it must be so delivered accordingly. It is usual for an arbitrator to keep the award until his costs are paid. The award must be stamped with a 10s. stamp.

Any words expressive of a decision are an award. Recitals are unnecessary. The award must be entire, final, on all the matters referred, or it will be void in toto; unconditional, but it may be alternative, without reservation or delegation, except as to ministerial acts, certain, mutual, possible, and consistent, without palpable mistake; when partly good and partly bad, the good part, if separable from the bad, will be valid.

A valid award is ordinarily final and conclusive on all matters referred by the submission, but it may be stated in the form of a case for the High Court, unless the submission exclude such power. The arbitrator himself may correct any clerical error or omission in his award.

An award may be set aside when :—

(1) An arbitrator or umpire has misconducted himself (for example of technical misconduct see Williams v. Wallis and Cox, 1914, 2 K. B. 478), or the arbitration or award has been improperly procured (Arbitration Act, 1889, s. 11);

(2) The award discloses a manifestly mistaken decision in law or fact;

(3) The award is a nullity, e.g., made after time has expired or the submission has been revoked;

(4) It is not final;

(5) It is uncertain;

(6) The arbitrator has exceeded his authority;

(7) The arbitrator has failed to use reasonable despatch in making the award.

When new and material evidence has been subsequently discovered, the award may be remitted to the arbitrator for reconsideration.

An interim award may be made and a special case may be stated on any question of law arising thereunder.

The sum awarded carries interest unless otherwise directed.

See the Arbitration Acts, 1889–1934, ARBITRATION; REFEREE; and Russell on Arbitration.

An appeal from an application to enforce an award lies to the Court of Appeal, and not to the Divisional Court (Re Colman and Watson, 1908, 1 K. B. 47).

Away-going, or Way-going Crops, crops sown during the last year of a tenancy, but not ripe until after its expiration. The right which an out-going tenant has to take an away-going crop is sometimes given to him by the express terms of the contract, but, where that is not the case, he is generally entitled to do so by local custom or usage; such custom or usage has been held to be reasonable and valid (see Wigglesworth v. Dallison, 1 Sm. L. C., decided by Lord Mansfield in 1799), and to apply to tenants by parol agreement as well as by deed or written contract of demise, and this for the benefit and encouragement of agriculture; but modern farming agreements frequently bar any claim under it, and substitute a claim to compensation as found due by valuers.

Awm, Aums, or Awame, a measure of Rhenish wine containing 40 gallons, mentioned in some old statutes.—Blount.

Awnhinde. See THIRD-NIGHT-AWNHINDE.

Axelodunum, the ancient name of Hexham.

Axiom, an indisputable truth.

Ayant cause, a receiver; also a successor; or one to whom a right has been assigned, either by will, gift, sale, exchange or the like.—French Law.

Aye, an affirmative particle synonymous with yea or yes.

Ayle, a grandfather. See AIEL.

Azalus, a poor horse or jade.—Cowel.

B.

'B' List. See CONTRIBUTORY.

Bacelnium, or Bacina, a basin or vessel to hold water for washing the hands. There was formerly a service of holding the basin, or waiting at the basin, on the day of the king's coronation.—Jac. Law Dict.

Bachelacanæ Sylvæ, the woods of Bagley.

Bachelor, commonalty or yeomanry, in contradistinction to baronage.—Old Records.

Bachelor [Fr. bachelier, Lat. baccalarius], one who takes the degree of apprentice or student of arts (B.A.), preliminary to that of master (M.A.), at the universities. Also, an unmarried man. Knight bachelor, a man who has been knighted without being made a member of any order of knighthood, as the Bath.

Backberinde, Backverinde, or Backberend, bearing upon the back, or about a man.

Where a thief is apprehended with the things stolen in his possession, also called being taken with the mainour, as having the goods in his hand.—2 Inst. 188. It was one of the four circumstances wherein a forester might have arrested the body of a trespasser in a forest; viz., dog-draw, i.e., drawing after a deer that he has hurt; stable-stand, i.e., at his standing with a knife, gun, bow, or greyhound, ready to shoot or course; backberend, i.e., carrying away upon his back the deer which he had killed; bloody-handed (red handed), i.e., when he had shot or coursed, and was imbrued with blood.—4 Inst. 294.

Back-bond, a deed, which, in conjunction with an absolute disposition, constitutes a trust. It expresses the nature of the right actually held by a person to whom the disposition is made. It is equivalent to the English deed of trust.—Scots Law.

Back-freight. The freight payable by an owner of goods when the shipowner is unable to deliver them at their destination.

Backgammon, a lawful game, although with dice.—See Gaming Act, 1739 (13 Geo. 2, c. 19), s. 9, by which passage and all other games with dice ('backgammon and the other games now played with the backgammon tables only excepted') are prohibited. See DICE.

Backing a warrant of a justice of the peace. Formerly, where a warrant which had been granted in one jurisdiction was required to be executed in another, as where a felony had been committed in one county and the offender was lurking in another county, then, on proof of the handwriting of the justice who granted the warrant, a justice in such other county endorsed his name on the back of it, and thus gave authority to execute the warrant in such other county. See Indictable Offences Act, 1848, ss. 11–15, and later Acts. Now by the Criminal Justice Act, 1925, a warrant lawfully issued by a justice of the peace may be executed anywhere in England and Wales.

A warrant issued by a metropolitan police magistrate in respect of an offence committed within the metropolitan police district may be executed in England and Wales by any constable to whom it is addressed without backing (2 & 3 Vict. c. 71, s. 17). See METROPOLITAN POLICE MAGISTRATES.

Backside, a term formerly used in conveyances and even in pleading; it imports a yard at the back part of or behind a house and belonging thereto.

Backwardation. See CARRY OVER.

Baco, a bacon hog, used in old charters.

Bactile, a candlestick.

Bad (in substance). The technical word for unsoundness in pleading.

Badger [fr. baggage, Fr., a bundle, or fr. bladier, Fr., a corn-dealer.—Wedgw.], a person who buys corn or victuals in one place, and carries them to another to sell and make profit by them. 5 Eliz. c. 12 empowered magistrates to license badgers for one year, upon their entering into certain recognizances. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 24 abolished the offence of badgering, and repealed the statutes passed in relation to it, as being pernicious and in restraint of trade.

Badiza, an ancient name of Bath, in Somersetshire.

Badonious mons, an ancient name of Barnes Down, near Bath.

Baga, a bag or purse. See PETTY BAG OFFICE.

Bagatelle. A game played with balls and a cue on a bagatelle board. A billiard license is required for a public bagatelle board, by the Gaming Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 109), s. 11. See BILLIARDS.

Bagavel. Edward I. granted to the citizens of Exeter, by charter, the collection of a certain tribute or toll upon all wares brought to that city to be sold, to be applied towards the paving of the streets, repairing the walls, and maintaining the city, which was commonly called, in Old English, bagavel, bethugavel and chipping-gavel.—Antiq. of Exeter.

Bahadum, a chest or coffer.—Fleta, lib. 2, c. xxi.

Bail [fr. bailler, Fr., to hand over], to set at liberty a person arrested or imprisoned, on security being taken for his appearance on a day and at a place certain, which security is called bail, because the party arrested or imprisoned is delivered into the hands of those who bind themselves or become bail for his due appearance when required, in order that he may be safely protected from prison, to which they have, if they fear his escape, etc., the legal power to deliver him.

Bail may be given either in civil or criminal cases.

In civil cases there were, before the abolition of arrest on mesne process by the Debtors Act, 1869 :—

(1) Common bail, or bail below, given to the sheriff, after arresting a person, on a bail bond, entered into by two sureties, on condition that the defendant appear at the day and in such place as the arresting process commands (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 4).

(2) Special bail, or bail above, or bail to the action. This was bail given by persons who undertook generally, after appearance of a defendant, that if he should be condemned in the action, he should satisfy the debt costs and damages, or render himself to prison, or that they would do it for him.

Since the abolition of arrest on mesne process bail in civil cases is virtually extinct, but it may still be required in actions of ejectment brought by landlords. See Common Law Procedure Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), ss. 213, 215, and 216.

Bail in criminal cases is given for the appearance of the party bailed to take his trial to attend a further examination of a charge against him.

In all cases of felony, and in certain misdemeanours, the justices of the peace may take bail at the time of the examination; and in all cases where a person charged with an indictable offence is committed to prison to take his trial for the same, it is lawful at any time afterwards, and before the first day of the sessions or assizes at which he is to be tried, for the justice who signed the warrant for his commitment to admit him to bail. The justices, however, have no power to admit any person to bail for treason, nor may bail in that case be allowed, except by order of a Secretary of State or by the King's Bench Division of the High Court, or a judge thereof in vacation; while, on the other hand, they are bound to admit to bail in all cases of misdemeanour, except such as the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 42), s. 23, particularly enumerates (being perjury, obtaining property under false pretences, and other misdemeanours, the costs of prosecuting which are allowed out of the county rate); and as to all felonies, as well as to the misdemeanours so enumerated, they have a discretionary power either to admit to bail, or to commit to prison.

The Bail Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 7), allows a justice, in cases within the 23rd section of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848, above mentioned, to dispense with sureties 'if in his opinion the so dispensing will not tend to defeat the ends of justice.'

The law as to bail and remand has been amended in several respects by the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914, ss. 19-24, and 1925, s. 45.

The Bill of Rights, 1 W. & M. sess. 2, c. 2, expressly enacts that excessive bail ought not to be required.

By s. 5, sub-s. 2, of the Coroners Act, 1887, coroners may admit to bail persons charged with manslaughter upon an inquisition before them, and by the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, s. 227, a borough constable may admit to bail persons charged with petty misdemeanours and brought into his custody, if a justice of the peace be not sitting.

The King's Bench Division of the High Court, or any judge in time of vacation, may admit to bail for any crime whatever; and by Rule 111 of the Crown Office Rules of 1906 applications for bail in felony or misdemeanour, where the party is in custody, must in the first instance be by summons at chambers for a writ of habeas corpus or to show cause why the defendant should not be admitted to bail either before a judge at chambers or before a justice of the peace, in such an amount as the judge may direct.

If unsuccessful the applicant can apply to another judge or renew his application to the Divisional Court, but cannot, it is submitted, appeal to the Court of Criminal Appeal: see R. v. Foote, (1883) 10 Q. B. D. 379; Ex parte Pulbrook, 1892, 1 Q. B. 86. It is a criminal offence to agree to indemnify any one who goes bail (R. v. Porter, 1910, 1 K. B. 369).

A shipowner is entitled to have his ship released from arrest upon giving bail. An undertaking by his solicitor will suffice, so that the bail-bond, if broken, will be forfeited (The Cawdor, 1900, P. 47), and see R. S. C., Ord. XXIX., rr. 5 and 6.

Bailable. An arresting process is said to be bailable when bail can be given, and the person arrested may obtain his liberty in consequence. See BAIL.

Bail-bond, an instrument prepared in the sheriff's office after an arrest, executed by two sufficient sureties and the person arrested, and conditioned for his causing special bail to be put in for him in the court out of which the arresting process issued, and in Admiralty Proceedings, see R. S. C. Orders, XII. and XXIX.

Bail Court, sometimes called the Practice Court, was an auxiliary of the Court of Queen's Bench. It heard and determined ordinary matters, and disposed of common motions.—Consult Chit. Arch. Prac.

Bailee, a person to whom goods are entrusted for a specific purpose. See BAILMENT; as to Larceny by Bailee, see Larceny Act, 1916, ss. 1 and 2.

Bailies, magistrates in Scotland.

Bailiff, a keeper or protector, an officer who puts in force an arresting process, or who is employed to distrain for rent, for which employment the certificate of a county court judge is required under the Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1888.

Bailiffs to execute county court processes are appointed under s. 28 of the County Courts Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 53), to assist one or more 'high bailiffs' for each court. Also, land-steward. There are several kinds of bailiffs, whose offices and employments greatly differ from one another, yet they agree in that the keeping or protection of something belongs to them all.

Bailiff-errant, a bailiff's deputy. See OUTRIDERS.

Bailiwick [fr. balli, Fr., and wic, Sax.], the jurisdiction of a bailiff. A county, in respect of the sheriff's jurisdiction therein. A liberty exempted from a sheriff, over which a bailiff is appointed by the lord of the liberty or franchise, with such powers within his precinct as an under-sheriff exercises under a sheriff.

Bailment [fr. bailler, Fr., to deliver], a compendious expression to signify a contract resulting from delivery; perhaps best defined as a 'delivery of a thing in trust for some special object or person, and upon a contract express or implied, to conform to the object or purpose of the trust.'

In the celebrated case of Coggs v. Bernard, (1704) Ld. Raym. 909; 1 Sm. L. C., Lord Holt delivered bailments thus:—

(1) Depositum, or a naked bailment of goods, to be kept for the use of the bailor.

A restaurant keeper has been held liable for loss of an overcoat entrusted by a customer to a waiter (Ulzen v. Nicols, 1894, 1 Q. B. 92; Orchard v. Bush & Co., 1898, 2 Q. B. 284).

(2) Commodatum. Where goods or chattels that are useful are lent to the bailee gratis, to be used by him. See Coughlin v. Gillison, 1899, 1 Q. B. 145.

(3) Locatio rei. Where goods are lent to the bailee to be used by him for hire.

(4) Vadium. Pawn or pledge.

(5) Locatio operis faciendi. Where goods are delivered to be carried, or something is to be done about them, for reward to be paid to the bailee. For the history of the liability of carriers, see Nugent v. Smith, (1876) 1 C. P. D. 423, and for an explanation of the duty of private bailees of this class, Brabant v. King, 1895, A. C. 632. As to the liability of a bailee for the acts of his servants, see Cheshire v. Bailey, 1905, 1 K. B. 237. See CARRIER.

(6) Mandatum. A delivery of goods to somebody, who is to carry them, or do something about them, gratis.

Consult Wyatt Paine on Bailments ; Chitty on Contracts.

Bailor, or Baller, a person who commits goods to another person (the bailee) in trust for a specific purpose.

Bail-piece, a piece of parchment containing the names of special bail, with other particulars, which, being signed by a judge, was filed in the court in which the action was pending, and notice of the bail having justified was then given to the opposite party.

Bairam, Belram. The names of two Mohammedan festivals, one held at the close of the fast Ramazan, the other 70 days after.

Bair-man, a poor insolvent debtor, left bare and naked, who was obliged to swear in court that he was not worth more than five shillings and fivepence.—Obsolete.

Bairns' part, a third part of a deceased's free movables, debt deducted, if his wife survive, and a half if she do not, due to his children.—Scots Law. See LEGITIM and REASONABLE PARTS.

Baiting Animals. The fighting or baiting of any animal, or being concerned therein in any way, is punishable as 'cruelty,' under s. 1 (1) c. of the Protection of Animals Act, 1911, and the Protection of Animals Act (1911) Amendment Act, 1912, by fine, or imprisonment for not exceeding three months, or both.

Bajardour, a bearer of any weight or burden.—Old Records.

Bakehouse. Any place in which are baked bread, biscuits, or confectionery from the baking or selling of which a profit is derived. Sections 97–102 of the consolidating Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 22), contain various sanitary provisions for the regulation of bakehouses, as defined above in Part II. of Sched. VI. of the Act. Section 98 enables a Court of Summary Jurisdiction to fine the occupiers of insanitary bakehouses and to order them to remove the ground of complaint of an inspector or district council. Limewashing, painting or varnishing are prescribed by s. 99, sleeping-places must be specially constructed as required by s. 100. By s. 101 underground bakehouses may not be used without a district council certificate, and by s. 102 it is for the district council to enforce these provisions as to retail bakehouses.

Balance, the amount required to equalize the two sides of an account.

Balance Order, a method of enforcing payment of a call from contributories under s. 206 of the Companies Act, 1929, and Companies Winding-up Rules, 1929, rr. 84–88. The order is not a judgment and does not preclude an action for the call (Westmoreland Slate Co. v. Fielden, 1891, 3 Ch. 15).

Balance-sheet, a statement shewing the assets and liabilities of a trading concern.

Balance of Trade, the difference between the value of the exports from and imports into a country.—McCull. Comm. Dict.

Balkanifer, or Baldakinifer [fr. baldanum, Low. Lat.], the standard-bearer of the Knights Templars.

Balconies [fr. bala khaneh, Pers., an upper chamber], small galleries of wood, iron or stone on the outside of houses. The erection of them is regulated in London by s. 73 of the London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 213), and by the London Building Act, 1930 (21 Geo. 5, c. 158), s. 79, Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Metropolis,' which directs that they must be of fireproof material.

Bale [fr. bal, Sw.; balla, Ital.; balle, bal, Fr.], a pack or certain quantity of goods or merchandise, wrapped or packed up in cloth and tightly corded round, marked with figures corresponding to those in the bills of lading for the purpose of identification.

Balenga, a territory or precinct.

Balenger, a barge or water-vessel, a man-of-war.

Balk [fr. valicare, Ital., to pass over.—Skinner], a ridge of land left unploughed between the furrows, or at the end of a field.

Ballare, to dance.—Spelm.; Fl. l. 2, c. 87.

Ballast. Heavy matter, as water, sand, stone, or iron, carried in the bottom of a ship to increase its weight and prevent its being readily over-set, a vessel being said to be 'in ballast' when she sails without a cargo. For penalty for taking from shore of harbour, etc., see Harbours Act, 1814 (54 Geo. 3, c. 15); and for penalty for throwing it into harbour or dock, Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 27), s. 73; and see Weights and Measures Act, 1936.

Ballastage, a toll paid for the privilege of taking up ballast from the bottom of a port or harbour.

Balliers (inutilis sarcina), or bail-load (baglass, Prov. Dan.), persons who, standing on a balk or ridge of ground, give notice of something to others.

Balliva, a bailiwick or jurisdiction.—Old Records. See BAILLICK.

Ballivo amovendo, an ancient writ to remove a bailiff from office for want of sufficient land in the bailiwick.—Reg. Brev. 78.

Ballot [fr. balla, Ital.; balle, Fr.], a little ball or ticket used in giving votes.

Ballot, to vote a person into an office or society by means of little balls which are put into either side of a box privately, according to the inclination of the voter, or by writing the names of the candidates upon small pieces of paper and rolling them up, so that they cannot be read, which are put into a box, and, when the time limited for the voting is over, are taken out one by one by an impartial person. As to ballots for the militia (now abolished), see MILITIA.

By the Ballot Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 33), Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Parliament,' secret voting by ballot papers (see s. 2 of the Act), showing the names and description of the candidates, each ballot paper having a number printed on the back, and having attached a counterfoil with the same number printed on the face. At the time of voting the ballot paper 'shall be marked on both sides with an official mark, and delivered to the voter within the polling station, and the number of each voter on the register is marked on the counterfoil.' The absence of the official mark from the face does not avoid the ballot paper (Jckers v. Howard, (1886) 16 Q. B. D. 739), though entire absence renders the presiding officer liable to an action for election lost (Pickering v. James, (1873) L. R. 8 C. P. 489). The system thus introduced into Parliamentary and Municipal Elections was applied to School Board Elections, County Council, District Council, and Parish Council Elections by various subsequent Acts. The form of voting is by making a cross opposite the name of that one of the candidates whom the voter votes for, the names of all the candidates being printed in alphabetical order. See Woodward v. Sarsons, (1875) L. R. 10 C. P. 733, in which, on a case stated by Lush, J., after hearing the Birmingham Municipal Election Petition, the mode of marking various disputed ballot papers was reviewed by the court.

The Act was originally limited to expire in 1880, but was continued annually until 1918, when it was made permanent by the Representation of the People Act, 1918.

By s. 31 (1) (c) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), before a scheme in substitution for the provisions of that Act can be certified, a ballot of the workmen to whom the scheme is applicable must be taken.

Ballot and Sale Society, a building society in which the right to have an advance from the funds of the society free of interest is determined alternately by a ballot among the members and by putting up the right to a sort of auction, the members bidding against each other for the right to the advance and the one who bids the highest obtaining it; see Building Societies Act, 1894, s. 12, prohibiting balloting in the case of societies established since the Act.

Balnearii, stealers of the clothes of persons bathing in the public baths.—Civil Law.

Ban, or Bann [Teut.], a proclamation or public notice, or summons or edict, whereby a thing is commanded or forbidden. It is most especially used to signify the publication of intended marriages. See BANNS.

Banc (or Banco), Sittings in [fr. bancus, Lat., a seat or bench of justice. Thus Bancus Reginae or Bank la Reine is the Queen's Bench; Bancus communium Placitorum, or Bench le Common Pleas, is the Court of Common Pleas, or the Common Bench], the sittings of a Superior Court of Common Law as a full court as distinguished from the sittings of the judges at Nisi Prius or on circuit. Such sittings might be held out of term as well as in term (1 & 2 Vict. c. 32, s. 2, and C. L. P. Act, 1854, s. 95). The business of the courts in banc was transferred to Divisional Courts of the High Court of Justice (Jud. Act, 1873, ss. 40, 41). See now Judicature Act, 1925, s. 63. See DIVISIONAL COURT.

Bancale, a covering of ease or ornament for the bench or other seat.

Banco [Ital.]. See BANC. A seat or bench of justice; also, in commerce, a word of Italian origin signifying a bank.

Bancus Superior, abbrev. Banc. Sup. [Lat.], the Upper Bench; the King's Bench was so called during the Protectorate.

Bandit, a man outlawed, put under the ban (see that title) of the law.

Baneret, or Banneret [Fr.], a knight made in the field, by the ceremony of cutting off the point of his standard, and making it, as it were, a banner. Knights so made are accounted so honourable that they are allowed to display their arms in the royal army, as barons do, and may bear arms with supporters. They rank next to barons, and were sometimes called vezillarii.—Jac. Law Dict.

Bani, deodands; see that title.

Banishment, an expulsion from the realm. For instances of it in English Law, see, e.g., Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7), s. 34, banishing monks and Jesuits, and the Alien Act of 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 20), revived for three years by the Prevention of Crime (Ireland) Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 25), s. 15. See ALIEN ; TRANSPORTATION.

Bank. Commercially it is a place where money is deposited for the purpose of being lent out at interest, returned by exchange, disposed of to profit, or to be drawn out again as the owner shall call for it. Special provisions are contained in the Companies Act, 1929, relating to Banks. By s. 358, no company, association or partnership consisting of more than ten members shall be formed for the purpose of carrying on a banking business unless it is registered under the Act or formed in pursuance of an Act of Parliament or of letters patent. By s. 360, the liability of the members of a banking limited company remains unlimited in respect of the bank's liability for bank-notes issued by it. As to signature of balance sheets, see s. 129 and ANNUAL RETURNS, ss. 108 and 361. See also JOINT STOCK BANKS and LIMITED LIABILITY, and consult Grant, Paget, or Walker on Banking, Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Bank.'

The national banks are now: (1) the Bank of England, regulated by the Bank Charter Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 32), and other statutes, which conducts the whole banking business of the British Government, acting not only as an ordinary bank, but as a great engine of state. As to the position and functions of the bank in modern times, consult Bagehot's 'Lombard Street.' As to its origin, see Macaulay's Hist. of England, ch. xx.; Hall. Const. Hist., ch. xv.; and for the original Charter, see Pulling's Statutory Rules and Orders, vol. i., tit. 'Bank.' (2) The Bank of Scotland, established by Wm. 3, Parl. 1, s. 5; 44 Geo. 3, c. 23; 9 Geo. 4, c. 65.

Bank-book, a small book kept by a bank for a customer, showing the state of his account with it; otherwise termed a 'Pass-Book.' A pass-book passing to and fro between the bank and a customer is evidence of a stated and settled account (Cunliffe Brooks & Co. v. Blackburn Building Society, (1882) 22 Ch. D. 61; 9 App. Cas. 857).

Bank-credits, accommodations allowed to a person generally on security given to a bank, upon which to draw money to an extent agreed upon.

Banker, one who receives money to be drawn out again as the owner has occasion for it, the customer being lender, and the banker borrower, with the superadded obligation of honouring the customer's cheques up to the amount of the money received and still in the banker's hands.

A customer's money may become irrecoverable if six years have elapsed without payment by the banker of principal or interest after demand. The relation of banker and customer is merely that of debtor and creditor, with a superadded obligation on the banker to honour the customer's cheques, so that the Limitations Act, 1623, (21 Jac. 1, c. 16), runs against the customer. See UNCLAIMED PROPERTY.

A cheque is not an assignment to the payee of the customer's balance, so that if a customer having a balance of 99l. give a cheque for 100l., the banker is legally justified in dishonouring it by refusing payment altogether (Schroeder v. Central Bank of London, (1876) 34 L. T. 735). If a customer overdraws his account, this amounts to a request for a loan (Cuthbert v. Roberts & Co., 1909, 2 Ch. 226).

A banker may not disclose to a third person, without the consent of the customer express or implied, either the state of the customer's account or any of his transactions with the bank, or any information relating to the customer acquired through the keeping of his account, unless the banker is compelled to do so by order of the court or in certain circumstances when the protection of the banker's own interests require it (Tournier v. National Provincial and Union Bank of England, 1924, 1 K. B. 461); but see next title.

As to frauds by bankers, see Larceny Act, 1916, s. 20 (1) iv. A banker is not a 'money-lender' within the meaning of the Money-Lenders Act, 1900; and a money-lender may not be registered as a 'banker,' see Money-Lenders Act, 1911, s. 2.

Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 11), whereby a copy of an entry in a banker's book is made prima facie evidence of the entry, upon proof that the copy has been checked by comparison with the entry.

There is power under s. 7 for a magistrate to make an order in criminal proceedings before him for the prosecutor to inspect and take copies of entries in the books of a bank at which the defendant keeps an account (R. v. Kinghorn, 1908, 2 K. B. 949).

Bankers' Cash Notes, formerly called goldsmiths' notes, because bankers were originally goldsmiths. Written promises given by bankers to their customers as acknowledgments of having received money for their use, payable to bearer on demand and considered as money, and transferable from one person to another by delivery. Now seldom if ever made, their use having been superseded by the introduction of cheques.

Banker's Draft. A banker's draft is defined by s. 1 of the Bills of Exchange Act (1882) Amendment Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 44), as 'a draft payable on demand drawn by or on behalf of a bank upon itself whether payable at the head office or some other office of the bank.' This Act makes ss. 76 and 82 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), applicable to a banker's draft as if it were a cheque.

Bank Holidays. Easter Monday, Whit Monday, the first Monday in August, and the 26th December if a weekday, or if it is a Sunday the 27th, or any day appointed by Order in Council in place of one of these, and any day appointed by Royal Proclamation in addition to these, is a statutory bank holiday in England, 34 & 35 Vict. c. 17; 38 & 39 Vict. c. 13; 45 & 46 Vict. c. 61. R. S. C. 1883, Ord. LXIV. In 1914 on the occasion of the outbreak of the war with Germany the August Bank Holiday was extended by Proclamation to four days. See HOLIDAY.

Bank of England. See BANK.

Bank-notes, or Bank-bills, written or printed promises for money, to be paid by a banking company. They are uniformly made payable on demand. They are not like bills of exchange, mere securities or documents for debt, nor are they so esteemed, but are treated as money in the ordinary course and transactions of business by the general consent of mankind, and, on payment of them, whenever a receipt is required, it is always given as for money, not as for securities or notes. Per Lord Mansfield, Miller v. Race, (1758) 1 Burr. at p. 457. Bank of England notes were made a legal tender by the 5th section of the Bank of England Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 98), as amended, everywhere except at the Bank and its branches.

One-pound notes and ten-shilling notes are now issued by the Bank of England, under the authority of the Currency and Bank Notes (Amendment) Act, 1928, and made a legal tender for a payment of any amount. The notes first issued were found to be easy to forge, and they were accordingly called in after a short time and others issued instead—1918.

As to half-notes, to remit them is not payment (Smith v. Mundy, (1860) 29 L. J. Q. B. 172), but they are payable by a Bank upon indemnity (Redmayne v. Barton Lloyd & Co., (1860) 2 L. T. 324).

As to forgery of bank notes and the offence of merely being in possession of paper or implements to be used for purposes of forgery, see the Forgery Act, 1913, ss. 2, 9. As to liability of shareholders in banks issuing bank notes see ante BANK.

Bank Rate. The minimum rate of discount charged for the time being by the Bank of England for discounting, cashing before due date the bills of certain approved mercantile houses. The bank rate is declared usually once a week.

Bankrupt [fr. bancus, or banque, the table or counter of a tradesman, and ruptus, Lat., broken, denoting thereby one whose shop or place of trade is broken or gone]. A debtor who does certain acts, tending to defeat or delay his creditors, may be adjudged bankrupt, and so made liable to the bankruptcy laws. Before the Bankruptcy Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 134), 'traders' only were liable to be made bankrupts, other insolvent debtors being dealt with by a succession of Relief of Insolvent Debtors Acts. See INSOLVENCY.

The Bankrupt Law is distinguished from the ordinary law between debtor and creditor as involving these three general principles:—(1) a summary and immediate seizure of all the debtor's property; (2) a distribution of it among the creditors in general, instead of merely applying a portion of it to the payment of the individual complainant; and (3) the discharge of the debtor from future liability for the debts then existing.

The law of bankruptcy, which dates from 34 & 35 Hen. 8, c. 4, after having been materially extended and altered by numerous statutes of early date, and more recently by statutes of 1831, 1849, 1861, 1869, 1883, 1890, and 1913, is now mostly contained in the Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59), and 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 7), and the General Rules and Deeds of Arrangement Rules, 1925, though parts of the Act of 1883 and of the subsequent statutes are left standing—a most inconvenient method of legislation. The petition of bankruptcy should be registered as a 'lis pendens' and the receiving order and adjudication as 'orders' in the Land Charges Register under the Land Charges Act, 1925. As to the effect of Bankruptcy of a proprietor of land registered under the Land Registration Act, 1925, see ss. 41–45 of that Act, and Fortescue Brickdale and Stewart Wallace on the Land Registration Act on s. 40. See ACT OR

BANKRUPTCY, and Wace, Williams, or Baldwin on Bankruptcy, and PREFERENTIAL PAYMENTS.

Bankrupt Solicitors.—The Law Society as Registrar of Solicitors may, by the Solicitors Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 37), replacing the Solicitors Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 24), refuse to issue certificates (without which a solicitor cannot practise) to bankrupt solicitors.

Clergyman.—Where the bankrupt is a beneficed clergyman the trustee may apply for a sequestration of the profits of the benefice (Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 50). Peers and Members of Parliament are disqualified by bankruptcy from sitting or voting (Bankruptcy Act, 1883, s. 32), and in the case of the latter the seat is vacated unless the disqualification is removed within six months (s. 33).

Married Women.—A married woman who carries on a trade or business, whether separately from her husband or not, was subject to the bankruptcy laws as if she were a feme sole; see Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59), s. 125; Re Clark, 1914, 3 K. B. 1095, but now by the Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935 (c. 30), any married woman (trading or not) is made subject to the Bankruptcy Laws as if she were a feme sole, but if she was not carrying on a trade or business before the 2nd August, 1935, she cannot be made bankrupt in respect of her obligations incurred before that date.

Bankruptcy, Court of. The Bankruptcy Act, 1914, ss. 96 et seq., gives jurisdiction in bankruptcy to the High Court and the county courts, the jurisdiction of the High Court being exercised by one of the judges assigned for that purpose by the Lord Chancellor, who is also empowered to exclude any county court and attach its district to the High Court.

Bankruptcy (Scotland). See the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 20), repealing a number of earlier enactments and consolidating the law.

Bankruptcy Notice, a notice (taking the place of the 'debtor's summons' (see that title) under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869) to pay a judgment debt for any amount, non-compliance with which notice within a limited time amounts, by s. 1 (1) (g) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, to an 'act of bankruptcy.' The notice may be given by any creditor who has obtained a 'final judgment' or 'final order,' and if the debtor does not within seven days of service of the notice, if served in England, either comply with its requirements or satisfy the Court that he has a cross demand equalling or exceeding the judgment debt, and which he could not set up in the action in which judgment was obtained, he commits an 'act of bankruptcy' (see that title). Two or more debts cannot be included in one notice. A substantial defect in the notice cannot be amended (Re a Debtor, 1908, 2 K. B. 684).

Banneret. See BANERET.

Banning, an exclamation against, or cursing of, another.

Bannire ad placita, ad molendinum, to summon tenants to serve at the lord's courts, to bring corn to be ground at his mill.

Bannitus, or Banniatius, an outlaw; a banished man.

Bannock, a thick cake of oatmeal, being a perquisite of a mill-servant in thirlage.

Banns of Marriage. 'Banns' is the plural of 'Bann' or 'Ban,' an edict or prohibition. The Prayer Book of 1662 directed banns of marriage to be published in church 'three several Sundays or Holy Days immediately before the sentences for the offertory' (this was in the Rubric prefixed to the Form of Solemnization), but also after the Nicene Creed, together with many other notices separated from those sentences by the sermon (this direction was in the Rubric following the Nicene Creed, and the two directions do not seem quite consistent). In 1753 Lord Hardwicke's Act (26 Geo. 2, c. 33), directed publication during morning service, or evening service if there be no morning service, immediately after the Second Lesson; and about 1809 the Rubrics were altered by the king's printers of their own motion to bring them into agreement with Lord Hardwicke's Act, which, however, may possibly have referred in its alteration to the evening service only. The Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), while repealing Lord Hardwicke's Act, by s. 2 re-enacted that part of it which related to the publication of banns, enacting that they should be published in an audible manner in the parish church of the parish wherein the persons to be married should dwell, according to the form of words prescribed by the Rubric prefixed to the office of matrimony in the Book of Common Prayer, upon three Sundays preceding the solemnization of marriage during the time of morning service, or of evening service (if there should be no morning service in such church . . . upon the Sunday upon which such banns should be published) immediately after the Second Lesson; adding (1) that where the parties should reside in different parishes, the banns should be published in each parish; (2) that the Rubrics, except as altered, should be duly observed; and (3) that 'in all cases where banns shall have been published, the marriage shall be solemnized in one of the parish churches or chapels where such banns shall have been published, and in no other place whatsoever.' But by the Marriage Measure, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, No. 3), banns may also be published in a parish church which is the 'usual place of worship' of either party; though neither resides in that parish and the marriage may be solemnized there. The publication of banns may be dispensed with by special license of the Archbishop of Canterbury or by the license of any archbishop or bishop. As to the publication of banns on His Majesty's ships, see the Naval Marriages Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 26). See MARRIAGE.

Bannum, or Banleuga, the utmost bounds of a manor or town.—Seld. Hist. of Tithes, 75.

Baptism [fr. βάπτισμα, Gk., to dip]. One of the two Sacraments of the Church of England, the other being the Supper of the Lord (Art. xxv.). By the Baptismal Fees Abolition Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 36), it is rendered unlawful to demand any fee for the celebration or registration of baptism. See Canons, 68–70.

Bar, (1) a partition running across the courts of law, behind which all outer-barristers and every member of the public must sit or stand. Solicitors, being officers of the court, are admitted within it, as are also King's Counsel, barristers with patents of precedence, and sergeants, in virtue of their ranks. Parties who appear in person also are placed within the bar on the floor of the court. (2) The profession of barrister, who is said to be 'called to the Bar.' See BARRISTER.

Bar Committee. An elected body formed in 1883 'to collect and express the opinions of the members of the Bar on matters affecting the profession, and to take such action thereon as may be deemed expedient.' The members were elected for three years, one-third retiring annually. The Committee issued numerous reports, which were sent to subscribers only. It was dissolved in 1894 and succeeded by the BAR COUNCIL. See below.

Bar Council. A body more formally known as 'The General Council of the Bar,' which is the accredited representative of the Bar, and has imposed upon it the duty of dealing with all matters affecting the profession. Although established neither by charter nor statute, its existence is officially recognised—e.g., Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, s. 18 (2).

The Council consists of (1) Official Members, the Attorney- and Solicitor-General, as well as any former Attorney- or Solicitor-General who is in actual practice; (2) Nominated Members, who are practising barristers, four of whom are nominated by each of the Inns of Court; (3) 48 Elected Members elected by the whole Bar, of whom 12 must be of the Inner Bar and not less than 24 of the Outer Bar, and of these latter six at least must be of less than 10 years' standing; (4) Additional Members, not exceeding six in number, can be appointed from barristers in actual practice.

Of the Elected Members, half go out of office each year, but are eligible for re-election. All barristers are entitled to vote at the election.

The expenses of the Council are paid by contributions from the four Inns of Court.

The present address of the Secretary is—

5, Stone Buildings,
Lincoln's Inn.

The Council issue annual reports expressing their views on subjects of interest to the legal profession, such as bills before Parliament, and on points of etiquette, and communications are invited from members of the Bar on matters which may come to their knowledge touching the interests and well-being of the profession.

Bar-fee. See BARR-FEE.

Bar, Plea in, a pleading showing some ground for barring or defeating an action at Common Law. A plea in bar was therefore distinguished from all pleas of the dilatory class, as impugning the right of action altogether, instead of merely tending to divert the proceedings to another jurisdiction, or suspend them, or abate the particular writ or declaration. It was, in short, a substantial and conclusive answer to the action. It followed from this property, that, in general, it must either deny all, or some essential part of, the averments of fact in the declaration, or, admitting them to be true, allege new facts which obviated or repelled their legal effect. In the first case the defendant was said, in the language of pleading, to traverse the matter of the declaration; in the latter, to confess and avoid it. Pleas in bar were consequently divided into (1) pleas by way of traverse, and (2) pleas by confession and avoidance.

In Equity, a plea in bar was a defence resorted to when there was no defect apparent on the face of the plaintiff's bill, alleging affirmative matter, and reducing the case to a particular point, seeking to displace the plaintiff's equity. See now DEFENCE.

In Scottish criminal practice the expression denotes these preliminary pleas which, if sustained, prevent the trial proceeding. The more important of them are : that the accused is under eight years of age ; that he is presently insane ; that he has ' tholed an Assize,' i.e., that he has already been tried for the same offence ; that the Court has no jurisdiction.

Bar, Trial at, the trial of a cause or prisoner before the Court itself instead of at Nisi Prius. It is confined to cases of great importance, and it is entirely discretionary with the Court to grant it, unless the Crown be interested (see as to this, Dixon v. Farrar, Sec. of Board of Trade, (1886) 18 Q. B. D. 43), when the Attorney-General may demand it as of right. The procedure for obtaining it is regulated by Rules 150-155 of the Crown Office Rules of 1906.

A celebrated trial at bar—of one Arthur Orton for perjury, in swearing that he was Sir Roger Tichborne—took place in 1873 before Cockburn, L.C.J., and Lush and Mellor, JJ. Others since that date are the action by the Attorney-General against Mr. Bradlaugh for penalties under the Parliament Oaths Act (A.-G. v. Bradlaugh, (1885) 14 Q. B. D. 667); the trial of Dr. Jameson and many others (Reg. v. Jameson, 1896, 2 Q. B. 425) for making an incursion into the Transvaal in contravention of the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870 (see that title); and the trial of Arthur Lynch (R. v. Lynch, 1903, 1 K. B. 444), who, whilst a British subject, enlisted and took an oath of allegiance to the South African Republic after an outbreak of war in that country.

In civil matters trials before more judges than one may be held before Divisional Courts, if the Court think them unsuited for trial by a single judge (Judicature Act, 1925, s. 63); but this trial is in practice only of points of law; and, like the trial by two or more judges with a jury under R. S. C. Ord. XXXVI., r. 8, can be held anywhere, whereas a trial at bar takes place only at the Royal Courts of Justice in London.

Barbed-wire. By the Barbed Wire Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 32), s. 2, 'barbed wire' means any wire with spikes or jagged projections; and the expression 'nuisance to a highway,' as applied to it, means barbed wire which may probably be injurious to persons or animals lawfully using such highway. A local authority can require the removal of barbed wire adjoining a highway when it thus constitutes a nuisance; but on lands not adjoining a highway a person is in general under no liability for the use of such wire.

Barbados, a British Colony, administered by a Governor, Executive Committee, Legislative Council, and Assembly. See TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO.

Barber-chirurgeons, a corporation of London instituted by Edward IV. The barbers were separated from the surgeons by 18 Geo. 2, c. 15, and the latter were erected into a Royal College of Surgeons at the commencement of the nineteenth century.

Barbican [fr. barbacana, M. Lat.], a watch-tower or bulwark.

Barbicanage, money given towards the maintenance of a barbican; a tribute for repairing or building a bulwark.

Barcarlum, a sheep-cote; a sheep-walk.

Bare Trustee. A person holding property in trust for another without any beneficial interest in or duty in regard to it except to transfer it to the person entitled. Under the Law of Property Act, 1925, 1st Sched., Part II., par. 3, the legal estate, if any, in a bare trustee (not being a trustee for sale) automatically vested in the person who could call for a conveyance of it. Although this simplified conveyancing where the legal estate in the trustee was only remote, it was found that great inconvenience would be caused in cases where the legal estate in the trustee related to the entirety of the property in question according to its nature, and the Law of Property Amendment Act, 1926, provided that a purchaser for money or money's worth without notice of the trust upon production of the title deeds may accept the conveyance from the trustee or persons deriving title under him. See ACTIVE TRUSTEE.

Bargain and Sale. A contract for the sale of real or personal property of any kind operating under the Statute of Uses as a conveyance of the land, or at Common Law, from early times of goods sold without delivery, the vendor of land being held originally to possess or be seised of the property to the use of the purchaser. In the case of goods the Common Law rule was and is that the property may be transferred by the contract if the parties so intend (see Ogg v.

Shuter, (1875) L. R. 10 C. P. at p. 162; and Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 20). In the case of land a similar result was effected by the Statute of Uses (27 Hen. 8, c. 101), which attached the property to the use and turned it into a legal estate. No formalities were required for a bargain and sale of lands until 27 Hen. 8, c. 16, required that bargains and sales of any estate of inheritance must be by deed enrolled within six months in the records of one of the King's Courts at Westminster. The devise of a lease and release (q. v., post.) was then resorted to, to evade enrolment. For other enactments affecting bargains and sales of land, see the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 4. The method of conveyance by bargain and sale inrolled had been in abeyance for many years before the R. P. Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106), ss. 1 and 2 (replaced by the L. P. Act, 1925, s. 51), declared that all corporeal tenements or hereditaments were to lie in grant as well as delivery, and must be made by deed, and the same section 55 of the Act of 1925 expressly abolished bargain and sale as a mode of conveyance of lands or any interest therein.

Bargainee, a person to whom a bargain and sale is made.

Bargainer, or Bargainor, a person who makes a bargain and sale.

Barkary, a tan-house, or a place to keep bark in for the use of tanners.

Barleycorn, the third of an inch.

Barmote. The Great and Small Barmote Courts or inferior Courts dealing with rights of mining and mineral customs in certain parts of the High Peak, Derbyshire, belonging to the Duchy of Lancaster. There is an official of the Courts who is called the 'Barmaster.' See the High Peak Mining Customs and Mineral Courts Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 94); and Order of the Chancellor of the Duchy of May 30, 1859, Statutory Rules and Orders Revised, 1904, 'Inferior Court,' E., p. 63.

Barnard's Act, 7 Geo. 2, c. 8, repealed by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38. The Act introduced by Sir John Barnard 'to abolish the infamous practice of stock-jobbing.'

Barnard's Inn, an Inn of Chancery. See INNS OF CHANCERY.

Baron [fr. beorn, Sax., noble], the fifth and lowest degree of nobility, next to a viscount, and above that of a knight or baronet. In the Salic Law it signifies free-born. The present barons are—(1) By prescription; for that they and their ancestors have immemorially sat in the Upper House. (2) Barons by patent, having obtained a patent of this dignity to them and their heirs, male or otherwise. (3) Barons by tenure, holding the title as annexed to land; it is said that it is the possession of their ancient landed territories which imparts the barony to the bishops, thereby giving them a place in the Upper House, although they hold by succession, not by inheritance; but it is rather thought that they sit in the Upper House by immemorial usage.

Baron Court. See COURT BARON.

Baron and feme [Fr.], husband and wife. A wife being under the protection and influence of her Baron, lord, or husband, is styled a feme-covert (femina viro cooperta), and her state of marriage is called her coverture. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Baronet [fr. Baron, Fr., and et, diminutive termination], the holder of a dignity of inheritance created by letters-patent, and descendible to the issue male. The order was instituted in 1611 by James I., who conferred the dignity in consideration of the payment of 1,000*l.* to the Crown, the money so raised being applied to pay the troops sent to quell an insurrection in the province of Ulster in Ireland. The number was at first 200, but has since much increased.

By a Royal Warrant (see The Times, Feb. 12, 1910) an official Roll of Baronets is kept, and no one who is not on that roll is received as a baronet or entitled to be addressed as such.

As an incorporeal hereditament a baronetcy is 'land' within the meaning of 'land,' see L. P. Act, 1925, ss. 201 (1) and 130 (2), with the necessary qualifications arising by reason of the inherent nature of a title of honour, and see S. L. Act, 1928, s. 67 (Re Rivett-Carnac, (1885), 30 Ch. D. 136).

Barons of the Exchequer, the judges of the old Court of 'The Exchequer of Pleas' at Westminster. See EXCHEQUER, COURT OF.

Barony, or Baronage, the honour and territory of a baron; also the body of barons and peers.

Barony of Land, a quantity of land amounting to 15 acres. In Ireland, a subdivision of a county.

Barratry. 1. Usually called 'common barratry,' the common moving of suits and quarrels in disturbance of the peace, either in courts or elsewhere.

The punishment is fine and imprisonment; and if the offender belonged to the profession of the law he was disabled from practising for the future, by 12 Geo. 1, c. 29, s. 4, which is unrepealed, though long obsolete.

2. In marine assurance, the commission of any fraud upon the owners or insurers of a ship by the master or crew, as deserting her, sinking her, or doing any act which may subject her to arrest, detention, loss, or forfeiture, etc. It is the practice in most countries to insure against barratry. Many foreign jurists hold that it comprehends every fault which the master and crew can commit, whether it arises from fraud, negligence, unskilfulness, or mere imprudence. But in this country it is ruled that no act of the master or crew shall be deemed barratry, unless it proceed from a criminal or fraudulent motive.—See Arnould, or Chalmers, or Marsden on Marine Insurance, also Scrutton on Charter-parties.

3. In Scotland, it is the crime of a judge who is induced, by bribery, to pronounce a judgment; and it is also applied to the simony of clergymen going abroad to purchase benefices from the see of Rome.

Barrel, a measure of 36 gallons.

Barr-fee, a fee of 20*l.* payable by every prisoner acquitted of felony to the sheriff or gaoler.—Termes de la Ley. (Abolished by Statute 130 years ago.)

Barrister, or Barrastor, a counsellor or advocate learned in the law, admitted to plead at the bar, and there to take upon himself the protection and defence of clients. He is termed jurisconsultus and *licentiatu*s in jure. As to the mode and qualification for obtaining the degree of a barrister, see INNS OF COURT; and consult Marchant on Barristers; Warren's Law Studies; Forsyth's Hortensius; and Chitty on Contracts; also Mew's Digest, tit. 'Barrister.'

Fees.—A barrister can maintain no action for his fees, which are given not as a salary or hire, but as a mere honorarium or gratuity, and even an express promise by a client to pay money to counsel for his advocacy is not binding; see Re Le Brasseur & Oakley, 1896, 2 Ch. 487; Kennedy v. Brown, (1863) 13 C. B. N. S. 677, where the whole law on the subject of counsel's fees is elaborately discussed. He cannot even recover fees from the solicitor to whom the lay client has paid them (Wells v. Wells, 1914, P. 157). Moreover, the payment of a fee does not depend upon the event of a cause; and for the purpose of promoting the honour and integrity of the Bar, it is expected that all their fees should be paid when their briefs are delivered (Morris v. Hunt, (1819) 1 Chitty R. at p. 551). On the other hand, he is not liable to an action for negligence or unskilfulness; or for any words spoken in court, however malicious or irrelevant (Odgers on Libel and Slander, 6th ed., p. 196). For a great number of years it had not been considered requisite that the fee notes signed by counsel to indicate the payment of the fees should be stamped as 'receipts'; but such notes have now been held to be receipts within the meaning of the Stamp Act, 1891 (Council of the Bar v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 1907, 1 K. B. 462).

Intervention of Solicitor.—It is a rule of etiquette, but not a rule of law, that a barrister shall not take instructions except through the intervention of a solicitor. See Doe v. Hale, (1850) 15 Q. B. 171, where it was said that the rule of etiquette was beneficial, and ought to be maintained; and the correspondence between the Attorney-General and Mr. Yerburch, M.P. (Solicitors' Journal, July 7, 1888), where, however, an important distinction is drawn between contentious and non-contentious business; Annual Practice; Annual Statement of the Bar Council for 1904-5 at p. 10. By rule 20 of the Resolutions of the Bar Committee (see Annual Practice), counsel who has drawn pleadings or advised or accepted a brief during the progress of an action is entitled to a brief at the trial. For the obligation resting on solicitors with regard to this rule, see Re Harrison, 1908, 1 Ch. 282.

Barristers have exclusive audience in the Supreme Court, but not in Bankruptcy business or before the Railway and Canal Commission, where, as in the County Courts, they are heard along with solicitors.

For a list of the posts for which barristers are qualified, with the length of standing required, see Chit. Stat. tit. 'Barrister'; Marchant on Barristers.

Barrow [fr. beorg, Sax., a heap of earth], a large mound used as a sepulchre, found in many parts of England.

Barter, to exchange one commodity for another, or truck wares for wares.

Barton, Berton, or Burton [fr. beretun, berteun, bere wic, A.S., a court-yard, corn-farm; from bere, barley, and tun, inclosure, or wic, dwelling. A.S.—Bosw.], demesne lands of a manor, a great farm, a manor-house, out-houses, fold-yards, a court-yard.

In 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 82, barton lands and demesne lands are used as synonymous. Blount says it always signified a farm distinct from a mansion; and bertonarii were farmers or husbandmen, who held bartons at the will of the lord. In the west of England they call a great farm a

Bas-Chevalliers, low or inferior knights by tenure of a base military fee, as distinguished from bannerets, chief or superior knights. Hence we call our simple knights, viz., knights bachelors, bas-chevalliers.—Ken. Par. Antiq.

Base-Court, an inferior court, not of record, as a court-baron, court-leet, etc.

Base-estate, lands held by base-tenants, who performed villeinous services to their lords; but there is a difference between a base estate and villenage, for to hold in pure villenage is to do all that the lord commands; and if a copyholder have but a base estate, he, not holding by the performance of every commandment of his lord, cannot be said to hold in villenage.—Kitch. 41.

Base Fee. A species of inheritable freehold estate which forms part of the class of estates known as conditional freeholds of inheritance. See CONDITIONAL FREEHOLDS OF INHERITANCE. In a more special sense, a base fee was until 1926 a fee simple determinable on the failure of issue of an original donee of the estate in tail. It was limited by the failure of the heirs of the body of that donee to take, and upon that failure the persons next entitled in remainder became entitled to the remainder in tail or in fee simple, as the case might be. As where a tenant-in-tail, with remainder to a stranger, conveys the fee-simple to another in the property entailed upon him, such other takes a qualified fee by legal construction, determinable on the death of the tenant-in-tail and failure of the issue under the entail. Another example of such an estate is when a tenant-in-tail, not being himself entitled to the immediate remainder or reversion in fee, conveys without the consent of the protectors of the settlement; he then transfers a base-fee, determinable on the failure of his issue in tail (Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74), s. 34). See ESTATE TAIL.

From and after 1st January, 1926, these base fees have lost their quality of legal estates and have been reduced to equitable interests by the L. P. Act, 1925, s. 1 (3). Under s. 130 (1) of that Act, the right to bar the entail so as to create an interest equivalent to a base fee has been preserved, and analogous interest may be created as provided by s. 130 in any property, real or personal. If the base fee and the freehold remainder or reversion becomes united in the same person the base fee will become enlarged into a fee-simple estate absolute (Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833, s. 39), and a base fee becomes a fee simple absolute if the person entitled to it has been in possession for twelve years after the original tenant-in-tail might have barred the remainders without consent of any protector of the settlement (Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, s. 6).

Base-infeftment, a disposition of lands by a vassal, to be held of himself.—Scots Law.

Baselard, or Basillard, a weapon, a poignard.—Speight's Chaucer; 12 Rich. 2, c. 6.

Basels, coins abolished by Hen. II., A.D. 1158.

Base-rights, those by which a grantor creates a subinfeudation in favour of a vassal, to be held of himself.—Scots Law.

Basilica, a new body of law, framed A.D. 880 by the Emperor Basilus and published by his successor Leo, surnamed the Philosopher, under the title of βασιλικά, either in honour of his father or as containing the imperial law.—1 Colquhoun's Roman Civil Law, s. 77.

Basket-tenure, lands held by the service of making the king's baskets.

Bass's Act, the Metropolitan Police Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 55), for the better regulation of Street Music within the Metropolitan Police District. See MUSICIAN.

Bassa tenura, a base tenure, was a holding by villenage, or other customary service, opposed to alta tenura, the highest tenure in capite, or by military service.

Basset, an unlawful game, made illegal in the year 1738 by 12 Geo. 2, c. 28.

Bassinet, a skin used by soldiers for coverings; a light helmet.

Bassnetum, a helmet.

Bastard [fornication], one born out of lawful marriage (Age of Marriage Act, 1929 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 36)).

The civil and canon laws did not allow a child to remain a bastard if the parents afterwards intermarried, but a proposal by the bishops to assimilate the law of England to the canon law in this respect was rejected by Parliament in 1235. See MERTON, STATUTE OF. The law of England remained thus for nearly 700 years, until the Legitimacy Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 60), legitimated a child born out of wedlock upon the subsequent marriage of parents if they were domiciled in England or Wales at the date of marriage. See LEGITIMATION. In Scotland, however, and in most other Christian countries, including most, if not all, of the British Dominions, and most, if not all, of the United States of America, legitimization of the children has always followed the intermarriage of the parents.

The mother of a bastard cannot validly contract with another person for the transfer to that person of her rights and liabilities in respect of the child (Humphreys v. Polak and Wife, 1901, 2 K. B. 385), but since the Adoption of Children Act, 1926 (c. 29), an adoption order may be made affecting such child. See ADOPTION.

A person born in wedlock may be declared a bastard by legal sentence if it be proved that the husband of the mother had no access and no opportunity of access to the mother during such period as in the course of nature admitted of his being the father. In the case of persons born in wedlock pater est quem nuptiæ demonstrant (Co. Litt. 123) (he is the father whom marriage designates); the child is legitimate if born, though not begotten, in lawful wedlock, and all the legal rights and privileges of a child attach, however conspicuous and notorious may be the origin of the person, until his status has been legally destroyed. See ACCESS; Mews's Digest, tit. 'Bastard.'

Provision is made by the Age of Marriage Act, 1929 (c. 36), s. 2, to enable a single woman whose marriage is void for non-age under that Act to obtain a summons notwithstanding that the father may not have paid money for the child's maintenance within twelve months of the birth of the child.

As to the obligations of the putative father to the mother of a bastard child, see AFFILIATION.

Until the Legitimacy Act, 1927, was passed, a bastard had no claim to succession to the real or personal property of his parents. By s. 9 that Act provides for the succession of an illegitimate child to the intestate estate of his mother if there are no legitimate issue and of the mother to her illegitimate child, but this is not to affect entailed interests. A child born out of wedlock has no right to any name save such as he acquires.

A bastard has no legal surname by inheritance, though he may acquire one (Co. Litt.).

A bastard may not marry within the prohibited degrees of relationship, it being the natural relationship which is here considered (R. v. Brighton (Inhabitants), 1861, 1 B. & S. 447).

A bastard has no duties towards his natural parents. The mother, whilst unmarried or a widow, must maintain a bastard child up to the age of sixteen (Poor Law Act, 1930 (c. 17)), but see AFFILIATION. The father may be compelled to contribute towards the cost of relief by a Poor Law Authority (Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1873 (c. 9), s. 5).

A bastard is not by reason of illegitimacy prevented from being a 'dependant' within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, s. 13. The definitions of dependants in Lord Campbell's Act (Fatal Accidents Act, 1846) only covered legitimate relatives, but the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934, s. 2, those definitions have been extended to comprise an illegitimate person. See Workmen's Compensation and Adoption of Children Acts, 1934.

In Scotland the Bastards (Scotland) Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 22), enables bastards or natural children domiciled in Scotland to dispose of their movable estates by testament or last will in like manner as other persons belonging to that country may do. In England they have always had and have full disposing power. See Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 178. As to escheat to the Crown of a bastard's property, see ESCHEAT.

Sub-sections (1) and (2) of s. 9 of the Legitimacy Act, 1926, apply to Scotland.

Bastard Eigné, an elder son born before marriage; thus if a man had a natural son, and afterwards married the mother and by her had a legitimate son, the latter was mulier puisné, and the elder son bastard eigné.—Watk. Descent. c. v. See Legitimacy Act, 1926 (c. 60) and LEGITIMATION.

Bastardize. 1. To declare one a bastard, as a Court does. 2. To give evidence to prove one a bastard. A mother (married) cannot bastardize her child. See ACCESS.

Bastardy-bonds, to indemnify parishes as to natural children likely to be born, made void by the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834 (4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76), s. 70. (Repealed by Statute Law Revision Act, 1874.)

Bastart, one born in concubinage, a bastard.

Bas-ville, suburbs of a town.—Fr.

Batable-ground, land that is in controversy, or about the possession of which there is a dispute, as the lands which were situated between England and Scotland before the Union.—Skene.

Bath, Knights of the, a military order of knighthood, instituted by Richard II. The order was newly regulated by notifications in the London Gazette of May 25, 1847, and August 16, 1850. The Most Honourable Order of the Bath ranks fourth of the orders, and is so called from the ceremonial bathing formerly observed before reception into the order.

Bathing, Sea. There is no Common Law right in the public to use the sea-shore for bathing. So held (diss. Best, J.) in Blundell v. Catterall, (1821) 5 B. & Ald. 268, followed by the Court of Appeal in Brinckman v. Matley, 1904, 2 Ch. 313. Local authorities may make regulations as to bathing by virtue of ss. 231-234 of the Public Health Act, 1936.

Baths and Washhouses. The Public Health Act, 1936, ss. 231-234, enables local authorities to provide public baths, wash-houses and bathing places, and make by-laws for these if under their management; also for swimming baths and bathing pools which are not under their management. This Act repeals the Baths and Wash-houses Acts, 1846 to 1899. As to the provision of baths for the use of miners, see Coal Mines Act, 1911, s. 77.

Batta, discount. 'In revenue matters,' says Mr. Wilson in the Indian Glossary, 'the amount added to, or deducted from, any judgment according to the currency in which it is paid as compared with a fixed standard coin.'—Indian.

Battel, Wager of, a form of trial formerly used in military cases, arising in the court of chivalry and honour, in appeals of felony in criminal cases, and in the obsolete real action called a writ of action. The question at issue was decided by the result of a personal combat between the parties, or, in the case of a writ of right, between their champions. See Ashford v. Thornton, (1818) 1 B. & Ald. 405, which quickly led to the practice, which had long been disused, being formally abolished in 1819 by 59 Geo. 3, c. 46.

Battersea Park. See 14 & 15 Vict. c. 77.

Battersea, the ancient name of Battersea, in Surrey.

Battery [batterie, Fr., fr. battre, to beat], beating and wounding. This, in law, includes every touching or laying hold, however trifling, of another's person or clothes, in an angry, revengeful, rude, insolent, or hostile manner. It is a good defence to prove that the alleged battery happened by misadventure, or that it was merely an amicable contest, or that it was the correcting of a child by its parent, or the punishment of a criminal by the proper officer, or that the prosecutor assaulted or beat the defendant first, and that the defendant committed the alleged battery merely in his own defence. As to the criminal proceedings for battery, see Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), ss. 42, 43. See ASSAULT.

Battlings [fr. battellus, Lat., a small measure, fr. batus, measure of allowance], an allowance of money, as 'battles,' or 'battels,' is an allowance of provisions.—Encyc. Londin.

Bawdy-house. See BROTHEL.

Bay, or Pen, a pond-head made of a great height to keep in water for the supply of a mill, etc., so that the wheel of the mill may be turned by the water rushing thence, through a passage or flood-gate.—27 Eliz. c. 19. Also an arm of the sea surrounded by land except by the entrance.

Bazaar—(1) daily market or market-place; (2) a place for the sale of miscellaneous goods for no profits to the sellers but for the purpose of raising funds for some charitable purpose. These sales are exempt from the Shops Acts, 1912 and 1913 (see SHOP), and from the provisions of the Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5), s. 23. See MARKET; LOTTERY.

Beacon—[fr. beacen, A.S., a sign, whence beckon, to nod], a light-house, or sea-mark, formerly used to alarm the country, in case of the approach of an enemy, but now for the guidance of ships at sea. The Trinity House was empowered by 8 Eliz. c. 13 to set up any beacons or sea-marks wherever they should be deemed necessary (see 10 & 11 Vict. c. 27), and has now the superintendence and management of all light-houses, buoys, and beacons, by s. 634 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894.

Beaconage, money paid towards the maintenance of beacons.

Beadle, or Bedel [fr. beodan, bydel, A.S., to bid], a church-servant who is chosen by the vestry, and whose business is to attend the vestry, to give notice of its meetings, to execute its orders, to attend upon inquests, and to assist the constables. A crier or messenger of a court, who cites men to appear and answer; an inferior officer of a parish or liberty. Many other kinds of subordinate officers are so called.

Beam [fr. beam, Sax., tree], the part of a stag's head whence the horns spring like branches out of a tree. A common balance of weight in cities and towns.

Beams, and Balance, instruments for weighing goods and merchandise, mostly used in the city of London.

Bear, a cant term used in the Stock Exchange to denote one who has sold stocks or shares he does not possess in the hope of purchasing them at a lower price before the time arrives for completion of his contract by delivery of the stock. A 'Bear' is therefore one who sells for a fall in price as contrasted with a 'Bull' (q.v.), who buys for a rise in price.

Bearer, a person who carries anything; of a bill of exchange, the person in possession of a bill or note which is payable to bearer. See Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), s. 2.

Bearer Bond. A species of security for money paid or advanced (as opposed to registered bonds), which originated in America, but which may be classified as a negotiable security in English law. See Edelstein v. Schuler & Co., 1902, 2 K. B. 144.

Bearers, persons who oppress others, usually called maintainers: justices of assize had power to inquire into their actions, etc.—4 Edw. 3, c. 11, repealed by the Statute Law Revision and Civil Procedure Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 59).

Bearrocsira, the ancient name of Berkshire.

Beasts of chase [feræ campestris, Lat.]; there are five, viz., the buck, doe, fox, marten, and roe; of the forest are the hart, hind, buck, hare, boar, and wolf, also called beasts of venery; of the warren are the hare, coney, and roe.—Co. Litt. 233 a.

Beau-pleader (to plead fairly), an obsolete writ upon the Statute of Malbridge (52 Hen. 3, c. 11), which enacted that neither in the circuits of the justices, nor in counties, hundreds, or courts-baron, any fines should be taken for fair pleading, i.e., for not pleading fairly or aptly to the purpose; upon this statute, then, this writ was ordained, addressed to the sheriff, bailiff, or him who shall demand such fine, prohibiting him to demand it; an alias, pluries, and attachment followed.—Nat. Br. 596. It used to be had as well in respect of vicious as fair pleading by way of amendment.—2 Inst. 122.

Bebba, the ancient name of Bamburgh, in Northamptonshire.

Beck (fr. becc, Sax.), a small brook.

Bed of Justice [lit de justice, Fr.], the seat or throne upon which the King of France sat when personally present in parliament; hence it signified the parliament itself.

Bedelary, the jurisdiction of a bedel.

Bederepe, or Biderepe, a service which certain tenants were anciently bound to perform, as to reap their landlords' corn at harvest.

Bede-role, or Bead-roll, a long list.

Bedeweri, banditti, profligate and excommunicated persons.—Mat. Paris.

Bedford Level, a tract of fenny land in the counties of Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridge, Huntingdon, Northampton, and Lincoln, drained by the Earl of Bedford in 1649. By the Bedford Level Act (15 Car. 2, c. 17), all conveyances, except leases for seven years, are required to be registered. The practice is to register the instrument at length. The registry does not include wills; but conveyances omitted to be registered are valid for all purposes, except for entitling the grantees to the privileges conferred by the act on the owners of lands within the Level. See also Local Acts and 4 Geo. 4, c. 46.

Beer, a liquor, compounded of malt and hops. The selling of it by retail is regulated by various Acts. The Licensing Act of 1828, which did not allow the sale of beer by retail except in 'alehouses,' etc., requiring a license from justices of the peace—grantable or refusable in their absolute discretion—not being considered to afford sufficient facilities for supplying the public with beer, the Beer Act of 1830 (11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 64), was passed to allow any person to retail beer upon taking out an excise license only.

This Act was amended in 1834 by 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 85, which drew a distinction between houses for the retail of beer to be drunk on the premises where sold—commonly called beerhouses—and houses for the retail of beer not to be drunk on the premises where sold—commonly called beershops, by requiring that the keeper of a beerhouse should obtain as a condition precedent to his excise license a certificate of good character, signed by six ratepayers not engaged in the trade.

The Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 29), by requiring a justices' license—with a saving for vested interests—placed beerhouses, beershops, and alehouses much on the same footing, and the Licensing Acts of 1873 and 1874 have continued this mode of treatment. The Beer Dealers Retail Licenses (Amendment) Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 34), confers on the justices of the peace an absolute discretion to refuse licenses for the sale of beer to be drunk off the premises where sold, repealing pro tanto the Act of 1869, which limited the power to refuse such licenses to cases where the applicant or his house had been proved to bear a bad character or the house to be below a certain rateable value. See now Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 (10 Edw. 7 & 1 Geo. 5, c. 24), which defines 'beerhouse' as premises to which a beer-house license is attached; and Licensing Act, 1921 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 42). The Finance Act, 1910 (10 Edw. 7 & 1 Geo. 5, c. 35), provides that a person shall not be disqualified for receiving a beer retailer's license by reason only that the premises are not a dwelling-house or that he is not the real resident holder or occupier.

The purity of beer is specially safeguarded by the Inland Revenue Act, 1880, and the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1885, s. 8. See also INTOXICATING LIQUORS; ADULTERATION.

Beer Duties. See HEREDITARY DUTIES.

Beerhouse. A house where beer is sold to be drunk either on or off the premises.

Beershop. A house where beer is sold to be drunk off the premises only.

Bees. These are feræ naturæ and the property in them is ratione soli; but a person retains the ownership in a swarm which flies from his land so long as he can keep them in sight and has the power to pursue them, even though the pursuit involve a trespass. If they take refuge on the land of another and he in due course reclaims them, then that person obtains a property in them propter industriam. See 2 Bl. Com. 392. The negligent keeping of bees in unreasonable numbers, at an unreasonable place, and with appreciable danger will render their owner liable for damage which they may cause (O'Gorman v. O'Gorman, 1903, 2 I. R. 573). As to the bee pest in Ireland, see Bee Pest Prevention (Ireland) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 34).

Bega, a land measure used in the East Indies. In Bengal it is equal to about a third part of an acre.

Beggars. Begging in a public place is an offence of an 'idle and disorderly person' within the meaning of the Vagrancy Act, 1824, s. 3 (5), and endeavouring anywhere to obtain alms by exposure of wounds, an offence of a 'rogue and vagabond' within s. 4 (5) of that Act (see VAGRANT). Procuring a child to beg in a public place is an offence against s. 14 of the Children Act, 1908, and see the Children and Young Persons Act, 1932 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 12), s. 4.

Begging the Question. See PETITIO PRINCIPII.

Begin, Right to. See RIGHT TO BEGIN. This right rests with the party on whom is the onus of proving the affirmative. See Best on Evidence, sect. 637.

Begum, a lady, princess, woman of high rank.—Indian.

Behoof [fr. behofian, A.S., to be fit], use, service, profit, advantage, or behalf.

Belgæ, the ancient name of the inhabitants of Somersetshire, Wiltshire, and Hampshire; also of the city of Wells, in Somersetshire. Probably a Celtic tribe. The Romans, whom they resisted for nearly 100 years, included them indifferently among 'Germanic' populations.

Bellsama, the ancient name of Rhibel-mouth, in Somersetshire.

Bell. As to rent by ringing church bells, see Doe d. Edney v. Benham, (1845) 7 Q. B. 976; and for a case of nuisance by bell-ringing, see Soltau v. De Held, (1851) 2 Sim. N. S. 133. As to annoyance in street by ringing doorbell, see Town Police Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 89), s. 28; Metropolitan Police Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 47), s. 54; and STREET OFFENCES.

Belles Lettres, polite literature.

Belligerent. A nation or party of persons waging regular war as recognized by the Law of Nations.

Bellinus sinus, the ancient name of Billingsgate, in the city of London.

Bello campo, de, the ancient name of Beauchamp.

Belloclivum, Bello desertum, Bellus locus, the ancient name of Beaudesert, in Staffordshire.

Bello loco, de, the ancient name of Beaulieu, in Hampshire.

Bellomariscus, the ancient name of Beaumaris, the county town of Anglesey.

Bello Prato, de, the ancient name of Beaupré.

Bench [fr. bance, A.S.], or Banc [Fr.], a tribunal of justice. (1) The judge or the aggregate body of the judges of any given court; (2) the bishops; (3) the benchers of an Inn of Court. See KING'S BENCH.

Benchers, more properly styled Masters of the Bench, seniors in the Inns of Court, usually but not necessarily King's Counsel, elected by co-optation, and having the entire management of the property of their respective Inns. The benchers have also the power of punishing a barrister guilty of misconduct, by either admonishing or rebuking him, by prohibiting him from dining in the hall or using the library, or even by expelling him from the Bar, called disbaring. They may also refuse admission to a student, or reject his call to the Bar, as was done in two cases in 1888. There is an appeal from them to the judges (R. v. Gray's Inn, (1780) 1 Dougl.

353). See Odgers on Inns of Court and of Chancery.

Bench Warrant. A warrant for the apprehension of a person, issued by a judge of a Court of Record on the Bench, such as to commit a witness for trial for perjury under s. 19 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 100). The practice of issuing a warrant by a Court of Record for the immediate arrest and production before the Court of any indicted person is old established. See Archbold's Crim. Pract.; Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Criminal Law.'

Benefice [fr. beneficium, M. Lat., a kindness], an ecclesiastical living and promotion, a rectory or vicarage; all church preferments except bishoprics; also a fief in the feudal system. See s. 13 (1) of the Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48).

The Benefices Act, 1898, requires registration of the transfer of the right of patronage of a benefice, prohibits the sale of the right of the next presentation thereto, and requires a bishop before collating or admitting a clergyman to a benefice to give one month's notice to the churchwardens of the parish of the intended collation or admission.

By the Benefices Act, 1898 (Amendment) Measure, 1923 (14 & 15 Geo. 5, No. 1), s. 1, a right of patronage is to be incapable of sale after the benefice has been twice vacant subsequent to 14 July, 1924; and by s. 2 a patron may make a declaration under seal that his right of patronage shall thenceforth be without power of sale. And by the Benefices (Transfer of Rights of Patronage) Measure, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, No. 8), a person intending to transfer a right of patronage must give notice to the bishop.

When a right of patronage has been transferred the Parochial Church Council now has power under the Benefices (Purchase of Rights of Patronage) Measure, 1933 (23 Geo. 5, No. 1), within three years from the date of registration of the transfer, to purchase the advowson from the new patron, in which case it will be vested in the Diocesan Board of Patronage.

The Benefices Act, 1898, allows a bishop to refuse to institute a clergyman to a benefice, on the ground (1) that a year has not elapsed since the last transfer of the right of patronage, or (2) that at the date of presentation not more than three years have elapsed since the presentee was ordained deacon, or that the presentee is unfit for the discharge of the duties of the benefice by reason of physical or mental infirmity or incapacity, pecuniary embarassment of a serious character, grave misconduct or neglect of duty in an ecclesiastical office, evil life, having by his conduct caused grave scandal concerning his moral character since his ordination, or having, with reference to the presentation, been knowingly party or privy to any transaction or agreement which is invalid under the Act.

From a bishop's refusal to institute on any of the above grounds, or any other ground otherwise sufficient, except of doctrine or ritual, there is an appeal to the archbishop of the province and a judge of the Supreme Court. The Benefice (Exercise of Rights of Presentation) Measure, 1931 (21 & 22 Geo. 5, No. 3), gives to Parochial Church Councils some control over presentations.

As to the union of benefices, see the Union of Benefices Measures, 1923 (14 & 15 Geo. 5, No. 2) and 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, No. 2).

Beneficiary, he that is in possession of a benefice; also the person having the beneficial enjoyment of property of which a trustee, executor, etc., has the legal possession, in which sense it is gradually superseding the old term cestui que trust; see, e.g., s. 62 of the Trustee Act, 1925. See CESTUI QUE TRUST.

Beneficium primo ecclesiastico habendo, an ancient writ, which was addressed by the king to the Lord Chancellor, to bestow the benefice that should first fall in the royal gift, above or under a specified value, upon a person named therein.—Reg. Brev. 307.

Beneficium abstinendi, the power of an heir to abstain from accepting the inheritance.—Sand. Just., Cum. C. L.

Beneficium cedendarum actionum, the privilege by which a surety could, before paying the creditor, compel him to make over to him the actions which belonged to the stipulator, so as to avail himself of them.—Sand. Just.

Beneficium competentiæ, a right of certain persons which saves them from being condemned beyond such an amount as they can pay without depriving themselves of the necessities of life.—Cum. C. L. 350.

Beneficium inventori, the privilege which an heir had by an inventory of the testator's property to protect himself from the debts.—Cum. C. L. 159.

Beneficium ordinis, or excussionis, or discussionis, a privilege by which a creditor was bound to sue the principal debtor first, and could only sue the sureties for that which he could not recover from the principal.—Sand. Just.

Beneficium separationis, the right to have the goods of an heir separated from those of the testator in favour of creditors.—Civil Law.

Benefit Building Societies. See BUILDING SOCIETIES.

Benefit of Clergy [privilegium clericale, Lat.], an arrest of judgment in criminal cases. The origin of it was this : Princes and states, anciently converted to Christianity, granted to the clergy very bountiful privileges and exemptions, and particularly an immunity of their persons in criminal proceedings before secular judges. The clergy, afterwards increasing in wealth, number, and power, claimed this benefit as an indefeasible right, which had been merely a matter of royal favour, founding their principal argument upon this text of Scripture : 'Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm.' They obtained great enlargements of this privilege, extending it not only to persons in holy orders, but also to all who had any kind of subordinate ministration in the church, and even to laymen if they could read, applying it to civil as well as criminal causes. These exemptions at length grew so burthensome and scandalous, that the legislature from time to time interfered, by making particular offences 'felony, without benefit of clergy' (see, e.g., the Piracy Act, 1536 (28 Hen. 8, c. 15), s. 3), and finally the Criminal Law Act, 1827 (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28), s. 6, abolished benefit of clergy altogether.—See 2 Hale's Hist. 323 ; Jac. Law Dict.

Benefit of Discussion, is that whereby the antecedent heir, such as the heir of line in a pursuit against the heir of tailzie, etc., must be first pursued to fulfil the defunct's deeds and pay his debts. This benefit is likewise competent in many cases to cautioners.—Scots Law.

Benefit Societies. See FRIENDLY SOCIETIES.

Benerth, an ancient service which a tenant rendered to his lord with plough and cart.

Benevolence, nominally a voluntary gratuity given by subjects to their king, but in reality a tax or forced loan, now yielded only with consent of the House of Commons, in pursuance of the Petition of Right, 3 Car. 1, and 1 W. & M. st. 2, s. 2.

Also an aid granted by a tenant to his lord, in times of distress, abolished by 13 Car. 2, c. 24.

Benevolentia regis habenda, the form of purchasing the royal pardon and favour, in ancient fines and submissions, to be restored to estate, title, or place.—Paroch. Antiq. 172.

Benigne faciendæ sunt interpretationes, propter simplicitatem laicorum, ut res magis valeat quam pereat ; et verba intentioni non è contra debent inservire. Co. Litt. 36.— (Constructions are to be made liberally, on account of the simplicity of the laity, that the thing may rather avail than perish ; and words ought to serve the intention, not contrariwise.) These maxims relate to the mode of interpreting written instruments. The judges will rather apply the words of a document to fulfil its lawful intent, than destroy such intent because of insufficient language, for to the intention, when once discovered, all technical forms of expression must give way.

See the maxims very fully illustrated in Broom's Legal Maxims, it being said that, notwithstanding qualifications and restrictions, the maxims 'are undoubtedly the most important and comprehensive which can be used for determining the true construction of written instruments.'

Bequeath [fr. becwæthan, fr. cwæthan, A.S., to say], to leave by will to another. The word is properly applied to personalty only, but in a will avails to transmit real property, as well as the word 'devise,' which is the proper word ; and vice versâ.

Bequest, a gift of personal property by will ; a legacy.

Berbecaria, a sheep-down, or ground to feed sheep.

Berblage, a rent paid for the depasturing of sheep.

Bercaria, a sheep-fold, or other enclosure to keep sheep.

Bercla, Bercheria, the ancient names of Berkshire.

Berechingum, the ancient name of Barking, in Essex.

Berellarlil, the seven churchmen, who formerly belonged to the church of St. John of Beverley.—Blount.

Berewicha, or Berewlea, a village or hamlet belonging to some town or manor.—Domesday Book.

Bergmaster [fr. berg, Sax., a hill], a bailiff or chief officer among the Derbyshire miners, who also executes the office of coroner ; a mountaineer or miner.

Bergmoth, or Berghmote [fr. berg, Sax., a hill, and gemote, an assembly], an assembly or court upon a hill, held in Derbyshire, for deciding pleas and controversies among the miners.—Squire on Anglo-Saxon Government.

Beria, Berie, or Berry, a large open field. Those cities and towns in England which end with this word are built on plain and open places, and do not derive their names from boroughs, as Spelman imagines; the true sense of the word berie is a flat wide champaign, as is proved from sufficient authorities by the learned Du Fresne, who observes that Beria Sancti Edmundi, mentioned by Mat. Paris, sub. ann. 1174, is not to be taken for the town, but for the adjoining plain.

Bermundi Insula, the ancient name of Bermondsey, in Surrey.

Berne Convention, an international convention drawn up at Berne in 1886 for the international protection of copyright. This was revised in 1908 by the Berlin Convention, also known as the Revised Berne Convention, and in consequence of this revision the Copyright Act, 1911, was passed. See COPYRIGHT.

Bernet [fr. byran, Sax.], to burn.

Berra, a plain open heath.

Berry, or Bury [fr. beorg, Sax.], a hill or castle], a villa or seat of habitation of a nobleman; a dwelling or mansion house; a sanctuary.

Bersa, a limit or bound.

Bersare [fr. berser, Ger.], to shoot or hunt.

Berwick-upon-Tweed, a town which was originally part of Scotland, but is now part of the realm of England, and bound by all Acts of the British Parliament, whether specially named or otherwise (Wales and Berwick Act, 1746 (20 Geo. 2, c. 42), s. 3). It is a county of a town corporate, and is no part of the county of Northumberland. See Hale's Hist. 257.

Besalle, or Besayle [fr. besaieul, Fr.], a father of a grandfather.

Bescha [fr. bescher, Fr.], to dig], a spade or shovel.

Beset. Section 7 of the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), makes it an offence to beset the house or place where another resides or works with a view to compel him to abstain from doing or to do any act which he has a legal right to do or abstain from doing. The effect of this section in the case of a trade dispute has been mitigated by s. 2 of the Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 47), which legalizes 'peaceful picketing,' but by the Trade Disputes and Trade Unions Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 22), s. 3, attending in such numbers or manner as is declared to be unlawful by the Act shall be deemed to be a watching or besetting within s. 7 of the 1875 Act.

Besoin, need. See AU BESOIN.

Bestiality, the crime of men with beasts, punishable under the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, s. 61, by penal servitude for life, or for not less than ten years, but this minimum term is abolished, and power is given to inflict imprisonment for two years or less, by the Penal Servitude Act, 1891.

Bestials, beasts or cattle of any sort.

Betaches, laymen using glebe lands.

Bethlehem, a royal mental hospital.

Better Equity. Where as between rival claimants in a court of equity the court holds that one of them, either on the ground of notice or of priority in time or for some other sufficient reason, is entitled to priority over the other, such claimant is said to have the 'better equity.'

Betterment, increasing the value of property. Where the increase is due to the execution of public improvements, some modern Acts provide that the neighbouring owners should bear a special share of the expense. The principle seems to have been applied, under the term 'melioration,' by 19 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 26, when London was being re-built after the Great Fire. For an instance of what might now be considered betterment, see Re South Eastern Railway & L.C.C.'s Contract, 1915, 2 Ch. 252.

The principle has been adopted by the Town and Country Planning Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 48), s. 21, which, upon or apart from any question of compensation, allows local authorities to claim for betterment. See Re Webster, 51 T. L. R. 201. See also Public Health Act, 1925, s. 31, and Local Government Act, 1929, Sched. I., Part I., and IMPROVEMENT OF TOWNS.

Betting. For definition and for s. 18 of the Gaming Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 109), see WAGER.

Bets are irrecoverable at law by virtue of s. 18 of the Gaming Act, 1845, and the Gaming Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 9). The latter statute gets rid of the decision in Read v. Anderson, (1884) 13 Q. B. D. 779; and see Tatam v. Reeve, 1893, 1 Q. B. 44, and De Mattos v. Benjamin, (1894) 70 L. T. 560). In the case of a cheque given in payment of a gaming transaction the combined effect of s. 1 of the Gaming Act, 1710 (9 Anne, c. 14), and ss. 1 and 2 of the Gaming Act, 1835, was that if it was paid to any indorsee or holder, the amount so paid could be recovered by the drawer from the payee (Dey v. Mayo, 1920, 2 K. B.

346; Sutters v. Briggs, 1922, 1 A. C. 1). The Gaming Act, 1922, does away with this position.

The Betting Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119)—as to which see Reg. v. Brown, 1895, 1 Q. B. 119—elaborately provides for suppressing of houses, rooms, offices, or 'places' kept open for the purpose of betting. In Powell v. Kempton Park Racecourse Co., 1899, A. C. 143, it was held that a betting-ring on a racecourse to which subscribers only were admitted was not a 'place' within the meaning of the Act.

Betting in the metropolitan streets by three or more persons is constituted a penal obstruction by the Metropolitan Streets Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 134), s. 23; and every person betting in any street or public place, or in any place to which the public have access (including, as was decided in Langrishe v. Archer, (1882) 10 Q. B. D. 44, a railway carriage on its journey), is declared to be a rogue and a vagabond within the Vagrancy Act, 1824, by the Vagrant Act Amendment Act, 1873 (see VAGRANT).

Street betting as prohibited by the Street Betting Act, 1906, is committed by any person frequenting or loitering in streets or public places on behalf either of himself or of any other person for the purpose of book-making, or betting, or wagering, or agreeing to bet or wager, or paying or receiving or settling bets. Upon a third or subsequent offence, or if there was any betting transaction with a person under 16 years, the offender is liable to imprisonment. Loitering for the purpose of betting includes distributing handbills containing offers to bet, etc. (Dunning v. Sweetman, 1909, 1 K. B. 774; Richards v. Price, 1931, 2 K. B. 204 (distribution of entry forms in football pools)).

The Betting Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 15), imposes penalties on persons advertising or sending letters, circulars, telegrams, etc., as to betting; and by the Betting and Loans (Infants) Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 4), soliciting infants by circular, etc., to bet is made a misdemeanour punishable by imprisonment or fine, or both.

Betting duties were imposed by ss. 15-18 of the Finance Act, 1926, but the duties chargeable on bets made with a bookmaker were repealed by the Finance Act, 1929.

The totalisator was legalized under certain conditions by the Racecourse Betting Act, 1928; which Act also contained a section (which is now repealed except as to Northern Ireland) dealing with bets made with persons under seventeen). The Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934, amends the law regarding betting on tracks. It permits the establishment of the totalisator on dog racecourses on certain conditions, and prohibits betting with persons under eighteen and the employment of young persons in betting business. The Ready Money Football Betting Act, 1920, penalises the printing, publishing or circulating of circulars, advertisements or coupons of any ready money football betting business. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Games and Gaming,' Coldridge's Law of Gambling, and Jenkins on Betting Offences; and tits. INFANT; GAMING; and WAGER.

Beverches, bedworks, or customary services done at the bidding of the lord by his inferior tenants.

Bewared, expended. Before the Britons and Saxons had introduced the general use of money, they traded chiefly by exchange of wares.

Bias [adopted from Fr. biais, oblique]. The law will not suppose a possibility of bias in a judge, who is already sworn to administer impartial justice, and whose authority greatly depends upon that presumption and idea.—3 Bl. Com. 361. See R. v. Cork Justices, 1910, 2 Ir. R. 271.

Bible. For punishment of persons (brought up, etc., as Christian) denying 'the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testament to be of divine authority,' see 9 Wm. 3, c. 32 (Ruff).

Bice Viasya, a man of the third Hindu caste who by birth is a trader or husbandman.

Bicycles. The use of these and similar machines, formerly regulated by byelaws made by local authorities under the Highways Act of 1878, and the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, is regulated by s. 85 of the Local Government Act, 1888, which repeals all Acts empowering byelaws to be made on the subject, declares bicycles, etc., to be 'carriages within the meaning of the Highway Acts' (see especially s. 78 of the Highway Act, 1835); but see Simpson v. Teignmouth, etc., Bridge Co., 1903, 1 K. B. 405, and in addition provides that cyclists must carry lamps between one hour after sunset and one hour before sunrise, and must give warning of their approach by bell or whistle. The Road Traffic Act, 1934, makes provisions as to red reflectors and a white surface in order to exempt bicyclists from having to shew a red rear light under Road Transport Lighting Act, 1927, s. 5 (see Pedal Cycles (White Surface) Provisional Regulations, 1934, 18 October, 1934); it also makes regulations as regards brakes, and prohibits (except on conditions) the carrying of more than one person.

Motor Cycles. Motor cycles are specially classified under Road Traffic Act, 1930, as mechanically propelled vehicles (not invalid carriages) with less than four wheels and weighing unladen not more than 8 cwt. A driving test of competency is required before the issue of a driving licence, though a provisional licence may be issued for learning purposes; also a degree of physical fitness. The minimum age is now 16. Regarding the compulsory insurance of third-party risks, and the pertinent regulations concerning motor cycles and offences in regard to driving, especially reckless, dangerous, or careless driving, see the Road Traffic Acts, 1930 and 1934.

Bidal, or Bidall [fr. biddan, Sax., to pray], an invitation of friends to drink ale at the house of some poor man, who hopes thereby to be relieved by charitable contribution. It is something like 'house-warming,' i.e., a visit of friends to a person beginning to set up housekeeping.—26 Hen. 8, c. 6.

Bidder, a person who makes an offer at an auction, which he may retract before acceptance, although there may be a condition prohibiting it. See AUCTION.

Bidding of the Beade, a charge or warning given by the parish priest to his parishioners at some special time, to come to prayers upon any festival or saint's day, according to the canons of the church; also asking the banns is called bidding.—Rubric.

Bidding Prayer, an old form of prayer used before sermon, exhorting the people to pray for men of all conditions. A similar prayer for the University is used in the University Churches of Oxford and Cambridge.

Bidentes, two-yearling stags, or sheep of the second year.—Paroch. Antiq. 216.

Biens [Fr.], property: this term comprehends not merely goods and chattels, as in the Common Law, but also real estate, according to the sense attached to it by the civilians and continental jurists. Cf. the definition in s. 205 (1) (xx) of the Law of Property Act, 1925: 'Property includes anything in action and any interest in real or personal property.'

Biga, a cart, wain, or waggon; a chariot drawn by two horses, harnessed side by side; or, properly, a cart with two wheels, sometimes drawn by one horse.

Bigamus, a person guilty of the offence of bigamy.—4 Inst. 88.

Bigamy. By the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, s. 57, whosoever, being married, shall marry any other person during the life of the former husband or wife . . . shall be guilty of a felony punishable by penal servitude for not more than seven years, or less than three, or by imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour. That section, however, does not apply to any second marriage contracted elsewhere than in England and Ireland by any other than a subject of His Majesty or to any person whose husband or wife shall have been continually absent for seven years from such person, and shall not have been known to such person to be living within that time; or even, as was held in Reg. v. Tolson, (1889) 23 Q. B. D. 168, by nine judges to five, to a person re-marrying within the seven years with a bond fide belief on reasonable grounds in the death of the first husband before the second marriage. Bigamy will have been committed though the second form of marriage was celebrated beyond the king's dominions (R. v. Russell (Earl), 1901, A. C. 446), and the indictment need not aver that the accused was a British subject (R. v. Audley, 1907, 1 K. B. 383).

Billagines, byelaws of corporations, etc.

Bilancis deferendis, an obsolete writ addressed to a corporation for the carrying of weights to such a haven, there to weigh the wool anciently licensed for transportation.—Reg. Brev. 270.

Bilateral Contract, a contract in which both the contracting parties are bound to fulfil obligations reciprocally towards each other; as a contract of sale, where one becomes bound to deliver the thing sold, and the other to pay the price of it.—Civil Law.

Bilboes [fr. boja, Lat.; boia, Prov.; boie, O. Fr., fetters], a punishment at sea answering to the stocks on land.

Bilinguis, one who uses two tongues or languages; a jury, part Englishmen and part foreigners, which used to try a foreigner for a crime.

Bill. See BILL IN CHANCERY; BILL OF EXCHANGE; BILL IN PARLIAMENT, etc.

Bill of Adventure. See ADVENTURE, BILL OF.

Bill of Appeal, an abolished criminal prosecution.—59 Geo. 3, c. 46. See BATEL.

Bill of Attainder, a bill declaring a person attainted and his property confiscated.

Bill Chamber, a department of the Court of Session in Scotland. Abolished by the Administration of Justice (Scotland) Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 41).

Bill in Chancery, or Bill in Equity, a printed or written statement of a plaintiff's case, in the nature of a petition to the Court, praying for some redress.

For the descriptions of the several bills, see their distinctive names, as PEACE, BILL OF.

Bills are now abolished, and all actions in the High Court are now commenced by writ of summons, followed in certain cases by a statement of claim (R. S. C. 1883). See STATEMENT OF CLAIM; WRIT OF SUMMONS; and PLEADING.

Bill of Costs, an account of the charges and disbursements of an attorney or solicitor incurred in the conduct of his client's business. It must be delivered, signed, to the client, one calendar month before an action can be brought to recover the amount thereof, in order to give the client an opportunity of taxing it. An executor or administrator of an attorney or solicitor must also deliver a bill of costs, signed, and delivered, before he can sue upon it. See Solicitors Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 37), ss. 64 and 65. As to taxation, ibid., ss. 66 to 68, and see the Solicitors Remuneration Order, 1932 (S. R. & O. of 1932, No. 940); Chit. Stat., tit. 'Solicitors.'

Bill of Credit, a license or authority given in writing from one person to another, very common among merchants, bankers, and those who travel, empowering a person to receive or take up money of their correspondents abroad.

Bill in Criminal Cases. Grand Juries were abolished by the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 36), from 1st September, 1933, except in certain cases (s. 1 (9)). Section 2 of the Act provides for the new procedure. Until this Act was passed the bill was an indictment for a crime or misdemeanour preferred to a grand jury; evidence in support of it was adduced; if the grand jury thought it a groundless accusation, they endorsed 'not a true bill,' or 'not found,' and then the party was discharged without further answer, but a fresh bill might afterwards be preferred to a subsequent grand jury. If they were satisfied of the truth of the accusation, they then endorsed upon it 'a true bill'; the indictment was then said to be found and the party stood his trial.

Bill of Debt, or Bill Obligatory, when a merchant by his writing acknowledges himself in debt to another, in a certain sum, to be paid on a certain day, and subscribes it at a day and place certain. It may be under seal or not.—Com. Dig. 'Merchant,' F. 2.

Bill of Entry, an account of the goods entered at the Custom House, both inwards and outwards. It must state the name of the merchant exporting or importing, the quantity and species of merchandise, and whither transported, and whence. Also the name of a daily statistical publication issued by the Customs giving the particulars of goods imported and exported. See Customs Laws Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 36).

Bill of Exceptions. Prior to the Judicature Acts, if a judge, at the trial of a cause at Nisi Prius, mistook the law, either in directing a judgment of nonsuit or in refusing or admitting evidence or challenges, and other matters, the counsel for the party dissatisfied with the ruling of the judge might tender a bill of exceptions at any time before verdict, and require the judge to seal it.

By the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. LVIII., r. 1, bills of exception are abolished. But it is provided by s. 22, 'that nothing in the said Act, nor in any rule, etc., shall prejudice the right of any party to any action to have the issues for trial by jury submitted and left by the judge to the jury, etc.: Provided also, that the said right may be enforced either by motion in the High Court of Justice or by motion in the Court of Appeal, founded upon an exception entered upon or annexed to the record.' It is believed that this section has never been acted upon. The present mode of proceeding is by motion for a new trial.

In the Court of Session in Scotland a Bill of Exceptions presented to the Inner House is the procedure for obtaining a new trial in civil jury cases where the objection to the verdict is based either (1) on a misdirection in law, or (2) on the undue admission or rejection of evidence which might materially affect the verdict.

Bill of Exchange. Defined in the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), s. 3, as an 'unconditional order in writing, addressed by one person to another, signed by the person giving it, requiring the person to whom it is addressed to pay on demand or at a fixed or determinable future time a sum certain in money to or to the order of a specified person, or to bearer.'

It is a chose in action, but, for the encouragement of commerce, it is assignable, at Common Law, by mere endorsement, so that very many names are frequently attached to one bill as endorsers, and each of them is liable to be sued upon the bill, if it be not paid in due time. The person who makes or draws the bill is called the drawer, he to whom it is addressed is, before acceptance, the drawee, and after accepting it, the acceptor; the person in whose favour it is drawn is the payee; if he endorse the bill to another, he is called the endorser, and the person to whom it is thus assigned or negotiated is the endorsee or holder, and so on ad infinitum. A payee is not a holder in due course: (Jones v. Waring, 1926, A. C. 670). The earliest recorded bills of exchange, according to Beckmann (Hist. Invent. iii. 430), are mentioned by the jurist Baldus, and bear date A.D. 1328. But they were by no means in common use till the next century. However, they are said to have been in use among the Florentines in the twelfth, and the Venetians in the thirteenth century. In 3 Rich. 2, c. 3, they are referred to as a means of conveying money out of the realm though not as a process in use among English merchants. The earliest English case on the subject is Martin v. Boure, (1603-04) Cro. Jac. 6. (See the judgment of Lord Cockburn, C.J., in Goodwin v. Roberts, (1855) L. R. 10 Ex. 337 at p. 346.)

The whole law of bills of exchange, except so far as relates to stamps and other small matters, is 'codified' by the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, above mentioned, which, except s. 53, providing that a bill is not an assignment of funds in the hands of the drawee, assimilates the law of England and Scotland, but makes comparatively little alteration in the law of either country.

The remedy to recover on bills of exchange and promissory notes was much simplified and shortened by the Summary Procedure on Bills of Exchange Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 67), the procedure under which was continued by Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. II., r. 6, but abandoned afterwards by one of the rules of April, 1880. See now R. S. C. Ord. III., r. 6, and Ord. XIV.

Bill of Grand Jury. See GRAND JURY.

Bill of Gross Adventure, an instrument in writing which contains a contract of bottomry, respondentia, and every species of maritime loan.—Fr. Law.

Bill of Health, 'a certificate or instrument, signed by consuls or other proper authorities, delivered to the masters of ships at the time of their clearing out from ports or places suspected of being particularly subject to infectious disorders, certifying the state of health at the time that such ship sailed. A clean bill imports that at the time the ship sailed no infectious disorder was known to exist. A suspected bill, commonly called a touched patent or bill, imports that there were rumours of an infectious disorder, but it had not actually appeared. A foul bill, or the absence of a clean bill, imports that the place was infected when the vessel sailed.'—McCull. Com. Dict. See QUARANTINE.

Bill of Indemnity, an Act of Parliament, passed every session until 1869, but discontinued in and after that year, as having been rendered unnecessary by the passing of the Promissory Oaths Act, 1868, for the relief of those who have unwittingly or unavoidably neglected to take the necessary oaths, etc., required for the purpose of qualifying them to hold their respective offices. See 30 & 31 Vict. c. 88; 31 & 32 Vict. c. 72, s. 16; and OATH. Acts of Indemnity have been passed at various times to protect the military authorities and others for having exceeded their powers, e.g., Indemnity Act, 1920.

Bill of Lading, a memorandum signed by masters of ships, in their capacity of carriers, acknowledging the receipt of merchants' goods, of which there are usually three parts—one kept by the consignor, one sent to the consignee, and one preserved by the master. It is the evidence of the title to the goods shipped; and by its endorsement and delivery, the transfer of the property in the goods specified therein is generally effected. By the Bills of Lading Act, 1855, the rights of suit under a bill of lading vest in the consignee or endorsee (as if the contract contained in the bill of lading had been made with himself) without prejudice to any right of stoppage in transitu or to freight. See Carriage of Goods by Sea Act, 1924 (14 & 15 Geo. 5, c. 22), and Carver on Carriage by Sea.

Bill of Middlesex, a fictitious mode of giving the Court of King's Bench jurisdiction in personal actions, by arresting a defendant for a supposed trespass. The 2 Wm. 4, c. 39, abolished this fiction, and after 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, all personal actions in the Superior Courts of Law at Westminster were commenced by writ of summons.

Bill of Pains and Penalties, a special Act of the legislature which inflicts a punishment, less than death, upon persons supposed to be guilty of treason or felony, without any conviction in the ordinary course of judicial proceedings. It differs from a bill of attainder in this, that the punishment inflicted by the latter is death.—4 Br. & Had. Com. 334.

Bill of Parcels, an account given by the seller to the buyer, containing particulars of the goods bought, and of their price.

Bill in Parliament, is either (1) public, affecting the countries of England, Scotland, or Ireland generally, or a very important part of them, as London; (2) local and personal, affecting particular areas only, as railway construction bills, water or gas supply bills, etc.; or (3) private, as bills settling estates, divorce bills (rendered generally unnecessary by the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857), and naturalization bills.

All three kinds formerly required the assent of Sovereign, Lords, and Commons, but the assent of the House of Lords can now be dispensed with in the case of bills passed under the provisions of the Parliament Act, 1911; and by the Provisional Collection of Taxes Act, 1913 (3 Geo. 5, c. 3), resolution passed by a Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Commons varying or renewing taxation has for a limited period the same statutory effect as if contained in an Act of Parliament. In the case of local and personal bills and private bills the promoters and opposers are heard by counsel before select committees, whose decision is rarely questioned, the proceedings in the Houses being ordinarily merely formal. See May's Parliamentary Practice; Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Bill in Parliament'; ACT OF PARLIAMENT and PARLIAMENT.

Bill of Peace. See PEACE, BILL OF.

Bill of Rights, a declaration delivered by the Lords and Commons to the Prince and Princess of Orange, and afterwards enacted in parliament, when they became King and Queen, as 1 W. & M., sess. 2, c. 2. Its preamble sets forth that King James, by the assistance of evil counsellors, endeavoured 'to subvert and extirpate the Protestant religion and the laws and liberties of this kingdom,' by exercising a power of dispensing with and suspending of laws; by levying money for the use of the Crown by pretence of prerogative, without consent of parliament; by prosecuting those who petitioned the King, and discouraging petitions; by raising and keeping a standing army in time of peace; by violating the freedom of election of members to serve in parliament; by violent prosecutions and the causing partial and corrupt jurors to be returned on trials, excessive bail to be taken, excessive fines to be imposed, and cruel punishments to be inflicted; all of which are declared to be illegal; and the Act declares that the Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons 'do claim, demand, and insist upon all and singular the premises, as their undoubted rights and liberties.'

The Act also excludes from the Crown every person reconciled to or holding communion with the See of Rome or professing the popish religion or marrying a papist, and enacts that every sovereign shall on the first day of the meeting of his first parliament or at coronation (which shall first happen) make and subscribe a declaration. This form of declaration, being extremely obnoxious to his Majesty's Roman Catholic subjects, has been done away with by the Accession Declaration Act, 1910 (10 Edw. 7 & 1 Geo. 5, c. 29), which now provides a form of declaration as follows:—

I [here insert the name of the Sovereign] do solemnly and sincerely in the presence of God profess, testify, and declare that I am a faithful Protestant, and that I will, according to the true intent of the enactments which secure the Protestant succession to the Throne of my Realm, uphold and maintain the said enactments to the best of my powers according to law.

Bill of Sale, an assignment by deed of chattels personal, whether absolute or by way of security. See Twyne's case, (1602) 3 Rep. 80 [44 Eliz.], and 1 Sm. L. C. 1 et seq., where the principal cases are collected.

The registration of bills of sale was first required in 1854 by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, which enacted that every bill of sale should be void as against assignees in bankruptcy and execution creditors, unless the bill or a copy thereof should have been filed in the Court of Queen's Bench within 21 days after its execution, together with an affidavit of the time of the bill of sale being given, and a description of the residence and occupation of the deponent and of every attesting witness of the bill of sale. In 1866, by 29 & 30 Vict. c. 96, registration had to be renewed every five years. The two Acts were consolidated with some important amendments by the Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31). The principal amendments were these:—The period within which to register was altered from 21 to seven days. Attestation by a solicitor is required, who is to state in the attestation that the effect of the bill of sale has been explained to the grantor, and the Act applies to trade machinery. The evasion of the law (Ramsden

v. Lupton, (1873) L. R. 9 Q. B. 17) by giving successive bills of sale, of which the last only was registered, is prevented. Fixtures and growing crops are not to be deemed separately assigned when the land passes by the same instrument.

Bills of sale for securing the payment of money are further affected by the Bills of Sale Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43); such bill of sale must have attached thereto a schedule of the property comprised therein (s. 4); an unregistered bill is void as between grantor and grantee (s. 8); the causes for which seizure may be made are limited to default in payment of the sum secured, bankruptcy, fraudulent removal of the goods, non-production of receipt for rent, and suffering execution (s. 7); the bill is void unless it be in a form scheduled to the Act (s. 9), Smith v. Whiteman, 1909, 2 K. B. 437; attestation by a solicitor is dispensed with, and attestation by a 'credible witness' substituted (s. 10); and a bill is void if made for less than 30l. (s. 12). Further small amendments have been effected by the Bills of Sale Acts of 1890 and 1891 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 53, and 54 & 55 Vict. c. 35), but the law under the Acts of 1878 and 1882 is in a very confused state, and the decisions upon the construction of them are numerous and conflicting. To alter the mode of payment will be a defeasance of the bill of sale and render the registration void (Pettitt v. Lodge, 1908, 1 K. B. 744). As to what does not constitute a bill of sale requiring registration, see G. E. Ry. v. Lord (Trustee of), 1909, A. C. 109, and Maas v. Pepper, 1905, A. C. 102. Consult Reed on Bills of Sale.

Neither the 1878 Act nor the 1882 Act applies to Scotland or Ireland.

The Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 189 (1), provides that a power of distress given by way of indemnity against a rent payable in respect of any land, or against the breach of any covenant or condition in relation to land is not a bill of sale within the meaning of the above Acts.

Bill of Sight. When a merchant is ignorant of the real quantities or qualities of any goods assigned to him, so that he is unable to make a perfect entry of them, he must acquaint the collector or comptroller of the circumstance; and he is authorized, upon the importer or his agent making oath that he cannot, for want of full information, make a perfect entry, to receive an entry by bill of sight for the packages by the best description which can be given, and to grant warrant that the same may be landed and examined by the importer in presence of the officers; and within three days after any goods shall have been so landed, the importer shall make a perfect entry, and shall either pay the duties, or shall duly warehouse the same.

In default of perfect entry within three days, such goods are to be taken to the King's warehouse; and if the importer shall not, within one month, make perfect entry and pay the duties thereon, or on such parts as can be entered for home use, together with charges of moving and warehouse rent, such goods shall be sold to pay the duties.—Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 36), ss. 58 et seq.

Bill of Store, in the Customs, is a certified extract from the official records that certain imported goods, which would otherwise be liable to duty, are merely British goods which have been exported and are being returned to this country.—Ibid. s. 63.

Bill of Suffrance, a license granted to a merchant, to suffer him to trade from one English port to another, without paying custom. See Blount's Law Dict., 14 Car. 2, c. 11, s. 7.

Bill in Trade (both wholesale and retail, and among workmen), an account of merchandise of goods delivered, or of work done and performed, etc.

Billet, (1) a soldier's quarters in a civilian's house; (2) the ticket which authorizes him to occupy them.

Billeting Soldiers, finding quarters for them. This is regulated by Part III. of the Army Act, which replaces the Annual Mutiny Acts. See ARMY. In case of emergency it may be extended to the Navy; see the Naval Billeting, etc., Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 70).

Billeting on any inhabitant of the realm without his consent is illegal by 3 Car. 1, c. 1, and other Acts, but s. 102 of the Army Act annually suspends these Acts, and s. 104 obliges constables to provide billets. Section 104 subjects all innkeepers, etc., to the billets, and exempts private houses. The accommodation to be provided is very precisely laid down by s. 106 and Schedule II., as amended from time to time; the maximum remuneration is fixed by the Army Annual Act, which is passed every year. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Army.'

Billets of Gold, wedges or ingots of gold.—27 Edw. 3, c. 27.

Billiards. By the Gaming Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 109), ss. 10-14, every house 'where a public billiard table or bagatelle board, or instrument used in any game of the like kind is kept' (not being a house licensed for the sale of intoxicating liquor to be consumed on the premises) must be licensed by justices of the peace. The allowing persons to play at billiards for money in a public-house subjects the publican to a penalty; nor may billiards be played in such a house, even by a lodger, after closing hours.

Bills of Mortality, returns of the deaths which occur within a certain district.

It was with the view of communicating to the inhabitants of London, to the Court, and the constituted authorities of the city, accurate information respecting the increase or decrease in the number of deaths and the casualties of mortality occurring amongst them, that the bills of mortality were commenced in London after a visitation of the plague in 1592, but they were not continued uninterruptedly until the occurrence of another plague in 1603, from which period, up to the present time, they have been continued from week to week; excepting during the Great Fire, when the deaths of two or three weeks were given in one bill.

In 1605, the parishes comprised within the bills of mortality included the 97 parishes within the walls, 16 parishes without the walls, and six contiguous out-parishes in Middlesex and Surrey.

In 1626, the city of Westminster was included in the bills; in 1636, the parishes of Islington, Lambeth, Stepney, Newington, Hackney, and Redriff (Rotherhithe). Marylebone and St. Pancras, with some others, were never included in the bills. The enactments providing for the registration of births, deaths, and marriages now secure full statistics on these subjects; but the area 'within the bills of mortality' came to be occasionally used in Acts of Parliament as a practical equivalent to the metropolitan area before the passing of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120).

Bill-stickers. See Metropolis Management Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), for penalty for defacing property of metropolitan vestry, and, therefore, of London borough council; and Metropolis Police Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 47), s. 54, sub-s. 10, for penalty for affixing bill on any London building without the consent of the owner or occupier; as to bill-sticking on Post Office property, see Post Office Act, 1908.

Binding-over. See RECOGNIZANCE.

Binonlum, Vinoctum, Brinomlum,

Vinovla, Binovia, ancient names of Binchester, in the bishopric of Durham.

Bipartite, of two parts.

Birds. Larceny may be committed at Common Law of domestic fowls, as hens, ducks, geese, etc. (1 Hale, P. C. 511), and of tame pigeons, though unconfined (Reg. v. Cheafor, (1851) 2 Den. C. C. R. 361), and of tame pheasants (Reg. v. Head, (1857) 1 F. & F. 350); or partridges (Reg. v. Shickle, (1868) L. R. 1 C. C. R. 158). The Larceny Act, 1861, ss. 21-23, provides, that whoever shall steal, or kill with intent to steal, birds ordinarily kept in a state of confinement, or for any domestic purposes, not being the subject of larceny at Common Law, or shall be in possession of any such bird, or the plumage thereof, knowing the same to have been stolen, shall be punishable on summary conviction by fine or imprisonment.

As to unlawfully and wilfully killing or wounding house doves or pigeons under circumstances not amounting to larceny at Common Law, see Larceny Act, 1861, s. 23, and Malicious Damage Act, 1861, s. 41. See also the Poultry Act, 1911, and the Protection of Animals Act, 1911, as to cruelty to birds; and the Captive Birds Shooting (Prohibition) Act, 1921, which prohibits the shooting of pigeons released from traps, etc.

All wild birds in the United Kingdom are protected during the breeding season by the Wild Birds' Protection Acts, 1880 to 1908. As to nuisances in keeping poultry, etc., see Public Health Act, 1936, ss. 80 and 81. The Act of 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 35) contains a list of specially protected birds, for shooting or taking which the maximum penalty is one pound, whereas the maximum penalty in the case of other wild birds is five shillings for a second or subsequent offence only, the Act directing that a first offender shall be reprimanded and discharged on payment of costs.

The Act of 1880 was amended in 1881, in 1894 when the taking of eggs was prohibited, in 1896, in 1902, allowing eggs wrongfully taken to be forfeited, and in 1904 it was extended to St. Kilda by 4 Edw. 7, c. 10, and to the use of pole traps by 4 Edw. 7, c. 4, and in 1908 by 8 Edw. 7, c. 11, to the use of a hook in taking birds. As to publication of orders made under these Acts, see Duncan v. Knull, (1907) 95 L. T. 911; and as to what constitutes a wild bird 'recently taken,' see Green v. Garstang, (1901) 85 L. T. 615; Hollis v. Young, 1909, 1 K. B. 629; Protection of Birds Act, 1925 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 31) (dealing with taking or capturing birds); Protection of Birds Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 52) (taking and sale of certain wild birds is made illegal), and ANIMALS. See Aggs on Agricultural Holdings.

Birretum, or Birretus, a thin cap fitted close to the shape of the head; the cap or coif of a judge or serjeant-at-law.—Spelm.

Birth, Concealing. See Offences against the Person Act, 1861, s. 60, which enacts that every person who shall, by any secret disposition (see R. v. Brown, (1870) L. R. 1 C. C. R. 244) of the dead body of a child, whether such child died before, at, or after his birth, endeavour to conceal the birth thereof, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, punishable with imprisonment not exceeding two years. To constitute the offence it must be established that the mother was delivered of a child within the meaning of the statute (see R. v. Colmer, 9 Cox, 506; R. v. Hewitt, 4 F. & F. 1101), that there was a definite act of concealment of the body as distinguished from abandonment, that the child was dead at the time, and that a body has been found and identified with that of the child to whom the charge relates. Section 60 of the Act provides, further, that if any woman tried for the murder of a child is acquitted thereof, she can lawfully be convicted of concealment of birth if there is evidence of that offence. The Infanticide Act, 1922, s. 1 (4), provides for such a finding in the case of the acquittal of a woman upon indictment for infanticide; Infant Life (Preservation) Act, 1929 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 34), s. 2 (4), provides similarly upon acquittal upon indictment for child destruction. The offence was first created in connection with the birth of bastards only, and concealment by the mother was by 21 Jac. 1, c. 27, punishable by death until the repeal of that statute in 1802 by 43 Geo. 3, c. 58, s. 3.

In Scotland the corresponding crime is concealment of pregnancy. A woman is guilty of this if she conceals her pregnancy during the whole time, and does not call for and use assistance in the birth, and if the child is found dead or not found at all, the punishment is imprisonment, not exceeding two years.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths. By the Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 86), amended by the Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1837 (7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 22), a General Register Office is provided for keeping a register of births, deaths, and marriages in England. The Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 88), amends the laws relating to the Registration of Births and Deaths in England in important particulars, and consolidates the law relating to the registration of births and deaths at sea. This Act (s. 1) imposes upon the father and mother of a child, and in their default, upon the occupier of a house in which to his knowledge a child is born, the duty of giving information to the registrar within 42 days. By s. 10 a corresponding obligation to register a death is imposed upon relatives, etc.

By s. 203 of the Public Health Act, 1936, births of any child alive or dead after the twenty-eighth week of pregnancy must be notified to the Medical Officer of Health, except as there provided. The Act repeals the Notification of Births Acts, 1907 to 1915, but is without prejudice to the Registration Acts.

As to false statements as to births or deaths, see Perjury Act, 1911 (c. 6), s. 4.

As to forgery of certificates of birth, etc., see Forgery Act, 1913 (c. 27), s. 3.

Searches may be made and certified copies obtained at the General Register Office, or at the office of the superintendent registrar of the district, or from the clergyman, or registrar, or any other person who shall for the time being have the keeping of the register books.

Non-Parochial Registers.—By the Non-Parochial Registers Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 92), provision is made for depositing with the registrar-general a number of non-parochial registers and records of births, baptisms, deaths, burials, and marriages, which had been collected by a commission appointed for that purpose, and for rendering such registers and records available as evidence.

Canonical Registers and Act of 1812.—The 70th Canon of 1603 prescribed that—

In every parish church and chapel within this realm shall be provided one parchment book, at the charge of the parish, wherein shall be written the day and year of every christening, wedding, and burial which have been in that parish since the time that the law was first made in that behalf so far as the ancient books thereof can be procured, but especially since the beginning of the reign of the late Queen. . . . And henceforth upon every sabbath day, immediately after Morning or Evening Prayer . . . the ministers in the presence of the churchwardens shall write and record in the said book the names of all persons christened, together with the names and surnames of their parents, and also the names of all persons married and buried in that parish in the week before, and the day and year of every such christening, marriage, and burial. . . .

The Parochial Registers Act, 1812 (52 Geo. 3, c. 146) (repealed as to marriages by the Act of 1836), is to a similar effect with regard to registration 'by the rector, vicar, curate, or officiating minister of every parish, or of any chapelry,' of 'public and private baptisms, marriages, and burials' solemnized according to the rites of the united Church of England and Ireland, 'within all parishes or chapelries in England,' and that Act directs (as also does the Canon) transmission of copies of the entries, annually, to the diocesan registries.

See the Act and Canon in Chit. Stat., tit. 'Registration,' and as to evidence of date of birth by baptismal register, see Re Turner, (1885) 29 Ch. D. 985. And see Hubback on Succession.

The Parochial Registers and Records Measure, 1929 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, No. 1) contains provisions relating to the care and custody of parochial registers.

By the Public Health Act, 1936, repealing the Notification of Births Acts, 1907 and 1915, the father (if residing in the house) and any person in attendance upon the mother must give written notice of the birth to the district medical officer of health within 36 hours of the birth.

Bisantium, Besantine, Bezant, an ancient coin, first issued at Constantinople (Byzantium); it was of two sorts—gold, equivalent to a ducat, valued at 9s. 6d.; and silver, computed at 2s. They were both current in England.

Bl-scot, a fine of 2s. for not repairing banks, ditches, and causeways.

Bishop [fr. ἐπίσκοπος, Gk.; biscop, Sax.], an overseer or superintendent. The chief of the clergy in his diocese or jurisdiction in England, Wales, or Ireland, and the archbishop's suffragan or assistant. A bishop is elected by the king's congé d'élire, or license to elect the person named by the king, accompanied, by virtue of 25 Hen. 8, c. 20, by a letter-missive, addressed to the dean and chapter; and if they fail to make election in twelve days, the king, by letters-patent, may nominate whom he pleases. A bishop is said to be installed, and there are four things necessary to his complete title: (1) election, which resembles the presentation of a clerk to an ecclesiastical benefice; (2) confirmation, which cannot be opposed on doctrinal grounds: see Reg. v. Archbishop of Canterbury, 1902, 2 K. B. 503, under title CONFIRMATION OF BISHOPS; (3) consecration, similar to institution; (4) installation, answering to induction. The bishops are the lords spiritual in parliament: see HOUSE OF LORDS. A bishop has three powers: (1) a power of ordination, gained on his consecration, by which he confers orders, etc., in any place throughout the world; (2) a power of jurisdiction throughout his see or his bishopric; (3) a power of administration and government of the revenues thereof, gained on confirmation. He has, also, a Consistory Court, to hear ecclesiastical causes, and visits and superintends the clergy of his diocese. He consecrates churches and institutes priests, confirms, suspends, excommunicates, and grants licenses for marriages. He has his archdeacon, dean and chapter, chancellor who holds his court and assists him in matters of ecclesiastical law, and vicar-general.

As to the resignation of archbishops and bishops when incapacitated by age or other infirmities, and appointment of bishop coadjutor where bishop incapacitated by reason of permanent mental infirmity, see Bishops Resignation Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 111), continued by 35 & 36 Vict. c. 40, and made perpetual by 38 & 39 Vict. c. 19.

As to Indian bishops, see 37 & 38 Vict. c. 77, s. 13; and as to bishops suffragan, see SUFFRAGAN. As to the position of bishops in Parliament, see Hall. Mid. Ages, ch. viii.; Lord Selborne's Defence of the Church against Disestablishment, 5th ed., pp. 24-26, 45; and the Welsh Church Act, 1914, s. 2.

Bishopric, a diocese of a bishop. In the Church of England there are the following: Canterbury, Winchester, London, Bath and Wells, Chichester, Exeter, Ely, Hereford, Lincoln, Lichfield, Rochester, Salisbury, Gloucester, St. Albans, Bristol, Peterborough, Oxford, Norwich, Truro, Birmingham, Southwark, Southwell, Chelmsford, Coventry, St. Edmundsbury and Ipswich, Worcester, Derby, Guildford, Leicester, Portsmouth, York, Chester, Carlisle, Durham, Sodor and Man, Ripon, Liverpool, Manchester, Newcastle, Wakefield, Sheffield, Bradford, and Blackburn. As to the Welsh Bishoprics of Bangor and St. Asaph, Llandaff and St. Davids, see the Welsh Church Acts, 1914 and 1919, which came into force in 1920, disestablishing the Church in Wales.

Bissextile, leap-year. See LEAP-YEAR.

Black Act, 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, so called because it was occasioned by the outrages committed by persons with their faces blacked or otherwise disguised, who appeared in Epping Forest, near Waltham, in Essex, and destroyed the deer there, and committed divers other enormities. Repealed by 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27.

Black Acts, Acts printed in the old black letter during the dynasty of the Stuarts in Scotland.

Black Book, a book kept in the Exchequer, and at the Admiralty.

Black Cap. The head-dress worn by the judge in pronouncing sentence of death is not an emblem of the sentence. It is part of the judicial full dress, and is worn by the judges on occasions of especial state.

Black Death, the great pestilence which visited England and other parts of Europe about the middle of the fourteenth century.

Black Game, heath fowl, in contradistinction to red game, as grouse, is 'game' (see that title) within the Game Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 32), by s. 2 of that Act.

Black-leg. To call a man a 'black-leg' is not actionable unless it can be shown that the word was understood by the bystanders to mean 'a cheating gambler liable to be prosecuted as such' (Barnett v. Allen, (1858) 3 H. & N. 376). The term is applied to a man who refuses to join, or follow the ruling of, a Trades Union in times of disputes between employer and employee.

Black List. The term given to any list of persons with whom the person or body compiling the list advises that no one should have dealings of the character indicated. Thus the list of defaulters on the Stock Exchange is so named, and various societies and individuals also publish lists with a similar purpose. By s. 6 of the Licensing Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7, c. 28), there is power to put an 'habitual drunkard,' if he consents (Commissioner of Metropolitan Police v. Donovan, 1903, 1 K. B. 895), on a list kept by the police, and this renders him liable to a penalty on summary conviction for obtaining intoxicating liquor within three years, and the licensee or other person supplying him is also liable. See DRUNKENNESS.

The publication of a black list may constitute a libel if it conveys a defamatory and untrue meaning. 'Black lists are real instruments of coercion, as every man whose name is on one soon discovers to his cost' (Quinn v. Leatham, 1901, A. C. 538); see also Ware & De Freuille, Ltd. v. Motor Trades Association, 1921, 3 K. B. 41, as to putting a person's name on a black list to influence people to abstain from trading with him.

Black Mail [fr. maille, Fr., a small piece of money], a certain rent of money, coin, or other thing, anciently paid to persons upon or near the borders, who were men of influence and allied with robbers and brigands, for protection from the devastations of the latter. It was in fact a species of insurance. This was rendered illegal by 43 Eliz. c. 13. The same practice prevailed in Scotland, where it was also illegal. Also rent paid in cattle, otherwise called neat-gild; and all rents not paid in silver are called reditus nigri (black mail or rents), by way of distinction from reditus albi (blanch-firmes, or white-rents).

But the term is used in modern times to signify extortion of money by threatening letters or threats to accuse of crime—an offence punishable, if the crime is punishable, by death or penal servitude for not less than seven years, or be an attempt at rape, or be an 'infamous crime,' i.e., sodomy, etc., by penal servitude for life, and in the case of a male under sixteen, by whipping. Larceny Act, 1916, s. 29.

It is immaterial to this offence whether the party threatened be innocent or guilty (R. v. Gardner, (1824) 1 C. & P. 479). See THREATS.

Black Rod, Gentleman Usher of, a chief officer of the king, deriving his name from the Black Rod of office which he carries, and on the top of which reposes a golden lion. During the session of parliament he attends on the peers, and to his custody all peers impeached for any crime or contempt are first committed.—Consult May, Parl. Pr.

Blackstone, William, 1723-80. Judge of King's Bench and Common Pleas. Author of 'Commentaries on the Laws of England,' etc.

Black Ward, a sub-vassal, who held ward of the king's vassal.

Bladarius, a corn-monger, mealman, or corn-chandler.

Blanch-firmes. In ancient times the Crown rents were many times reserved in libris albis or blanch-firmes, in which case the buyer was holden dealtbare firmam, i.e., his base money or coin, below standard, was melted down in the Exchequer, and reduced to the fineness of standard silver, or instead thereof, he paid twelve pence in the pound by way of addition.—Jac. Law Dict.

Blanch Holding, an ancient tenure of the law of Scotland, the duty payable being trifling, as a penny or peppercorn.—20 Geo. 2, c. 50; 25 Geo. 2, c. 20.

Blancoforda, the ancient name of Blandford, in Dorsetshire.

Blancum Castrum, Blane Castle, in Monmouthshire.

Blank Acceptance. An acceptance written on the paper before the bill is made, and delivered by the acceptor, will charge the acceptor to the extent warranted by the stamp. See Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 20.

Blank Bar, common bar, a plea in bar, which, in an action of trespass, was resorted to to compel the plaintiff to assign the place where a trespass was committed.

Blank Bonds, Scottish securities, in which the creditor's name was left blank, and which passed by mere delivery, the bearer being at liberty to put in his name and sue for payment. Declared void by the Act 1696, c. 25.

Blank Indorsement, when the name of the indorsee is not mentioned.

Blank, Transfer in. A deed executed with the name of a transferee or vendee in blank is void; but the lender will have an equitable security (Colonial Bank v. Whinney, (1884) 26 C. D. 257), and this principle is applicable to transfers of shares in companies transferable only by deed; but if transferable under hand only the transfer may be filled in by any one having express authority, or authority to be implied from the nature of the transaction (Hibblewhite v. McMorine, 6 M. & W. 200, and Powell v. London, etc., Bank, 1893, 2 Ch. 555).

If in a will the name of a legatee is left blank, the Court may sometimes be able to ascertain from the context who was intended to take (Re Harrison, (1885) 30 Ch. D. 390). Parol evidence is never admissible to fill in the blank. See Theobald on Wills.

Blanks, a kind of white money (value 8d.) coined by Henry V., in those parts of France which were then subject to England; forbidden to be current in this realm by 2 Hen. 6, c. 9. Also, certain void spaces, sometimes left by mistake, in judicial proceedings, and which, if anything material be wanting, render the same void.

Blasphemy [fr. βλάπτω, Gk., to hurt, and φήμη, reputation; βλασφημέω, to speak impiously; blasphemo, Lat., to revile.—Wedg.], an offence against God and religion, by denying to the Almighty His Being and Providence, or by contemptuous reproaches of our Saviour Christ. Also, all profane scoffing at the Holy Scripture, and exposing it to contempt and ridicule. It is an indictable misdemeanour at Common Law (see Reg. v. Ramsay & Foote, (1883) 15 Cox, C. C. 231).

In case an offender has been educated in or at any time made profession of Christianity, the statute 9 & 10 Wm. 3, c. 32 (c. 35 in the Revised Statutes), Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Criminal Law (Offences against Peace, etc.)', commonly called 'The Blasphemy Act,' though it is only directed against apostasy, but is cumulative upon the common law (R. v. Carlile, (1819) 3 B. & Ald. 167), very severely punishes any person 'who shall by writing printing teaching or advised speaking, deny the Christian religion to be true, or the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testament to be of divine authority,' and is convicted thereof on indictment by the oath of two or more credible witnesses. The punishment is, for a first offence, disability for and forfeiture of any office 'ecclesiastical, civil, or military'; for a second, disability to sue in any action, or to be guardian of any child, or an executor or administrator, 'or capable of any legacy or deed of gift,' or to bear any office within the realm for ever, and also to suffer three years' imprisonment. 'So far as I am aware,' wrote Sir F. Pollock in 1895 (Preface to 22 R. R. at p. vi.), 'no prosecution under the statute has ever taken place'; but in Cowan v. Milbourn, (1867) L. R. 2 Ex. 230, it was held by Bramwell, B., in an action for breach of contract to let a room for lectures intended to show that 'the character of Christ is defective,' etc., that to establish that the lectures were illegal was a good defence. The Court of Appeal, however, has recently declined to follow this case, see Re Bowman, 1915, 2 Ch. 447. Consult Odgers on Libel and Slander, 6th ed., p. 400. And see SWEARING.

Blatum Bulgium, the ancient name of Bulness, in Cumberland.

Blaunpain, alias Blanpain, Whitbread.

Ble, sight, colour, etc.

Bleaching and Dyeing. These works were at first regulated by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 78; 25 & 26 Vict. c. 8; 26 & 27 Vict. c. 38; and 27 & 28 Vict. c. 98. By 33 & 34 Vict. c. 62, however, all these Acts are repealed after January 1, 1872, and the Factory Acts made to apply to them; and they are now regulated, along with other factories, by the consolidating Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 22). By Schedule VI., bleaching and dyeing works are a non-textile factory and are defined as 'any premises in which the process of bleaching, beetling, dyeing, calendering, finishing, hooking, lapping, and making up and packing any yarn or cloth of any material or the dressing or finishing of lace or any one or more of such processes or any process incidental thereto are or is carried on.' Section 28 deals with hours of employment; s. 40 deals with mealtimes; and s. 53 with overtime employment. See FACTORY.

Blench, Blench-holding. See ALBA FIRMA.

Blenheim, the Honour of Woodstock was granted to John, Duke of Marlborough, and Blenheim House built by Parliament, in reward of the victory at Blenheim, August 2, 1704; see 3 & 4 Anne, c. 4; 6 Anne, cc. 6, 7; 1 Geo. 1, st. 1, c. 12.

Blota [fr. bleche, Fr.], peat or combustible earth dug up and dried for burning.

Blind Persons Act, 1920. Applies the Old Age Pensions Acts to persons who are so blind as to be unable to perform any work for which eyesight is essential at the age of 50 instead of 70. The Act has further provisions as to charities for and the welfare of blind persons.

Blinks, boughs broken down from trees and thrown where deer are likely to pass.

Blockade [fr. bloccato, Ital., military term], the disposition of troops or armed vessels, so as to cut off all external communication with an enemy's port, fortress, city, etc. The term is now generally applied to the blockade of a port by armed vessels. By the Declaration of Paris, Art. 4, blockades in order to be binding must be effective; that is to say, maintained by a force sufficient really to prevent access to the coast of the enemy. Accordingly, the two essential circumstances necessary to make a blockade good against neutrals are—(1) that there be actually stationed at the place a sufficient force to prevent the entry or exit of vessels; and (2) that the party violating it shall be proved to be aware of its existence. The effect of a guilty violation of blockade to the offending party, when captured, is the condemnation usually of both the ship and the cargo. Consult Hall's International Law.

Pacific blockades, i.e., blockades of the ports of a power with whom the blockading power is not at war, have been more than once practised in fact, as those of Greek ports in 1827 and 1897; but such blockades are unrecognized by international law.

Blood, kindred, lineage. It is a maxim that none shall claim as heir who is not of the blood (i.e., kindred) of the purchaser.—Co. Litt. 12 a. And see STRANGER IN BLOOD.

Bloodwit, or Bloudveit [fr. blod, Sax., blood, and wyte, Old Eng., pity], an amercement for bloodshed; a customary fine, paid as a composition and atonement for shedding or drawing of blood.—Paroch. Antiq.

Bloody-Hand. See BACKBERINDE.

Blossevilla, the ancient name of Bloville Blofield.

Board [fr. A. Sax. bord, a plank or table], a body of persons having delegated to them certain powers of the central government, as the Board of Trade, the Board of Control, the Board of Admiralty, and the Local Government Board; or elected for the purposes of local government, as a Board of Guardians under the Poor Law Acts, a Local Board under the Public Health Acts; or elected as directors by the shareholders in public companies.

Board of Control. The Mental Treatment Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 23), established five Commissioners, including the Chairman, all of whom are paid. The Commissioners are styled senior Commissioners—including the Chairman—one at least shall be a practising barrister or solicitor of five years' standing, two shall be medical commissioners, and one, at least, a woman. The Commissioners have the powers specified in the 2nd and 3rd Schedules to the Mental Treatment Act, 1930, under s. 14 of that Act, together with other powers mentioned in that section, and also the powers and duties of the Lunacy Commissioners which were transferred to the Board by the Mental Deficiency Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 28), s. 25.

Board of Trade. See TRADE, BOARD OF.

Boards of Health. See PUBLIC HEALTH.

Boats. By s. 94 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907, local authorities may license pleasure boats; see also Public Health Act, 1936, s. 267. See Chitty's Statutes; and FISHING BOATS.

As to the provision of boats on ships, with a view to the prevention of accidents and the saving of life at sea, see Order of the Board of Trade, Merchant Shipping (Life-saving Appliances) Rules, May 8, 1914.—S. R. and O. 1914, No. 1006, and Merchant Shipping (Safety and Local Line Conventions) Act, 1932 (22 Geo. 5, c. 9).

Boc, a charter.—Ang.-Sax.

Boc-hord, or Book-hoard, place where books or writings are kept.

Bock-land, Boc-land, or Book-land, one of the original modes of tenure of manor-land, also called charter-land or deep-land, which was held by a short and simple deed under certain rents and free services, and in effect differed in no respect from the free-socage lands, whence have arisen most of the freehold tenants, who hold of particular manors and owe suit and service to the same.—2 Bl. Com. 90. And see An Inquiry into the Royal Prerogative in England, by John Allen, 1839, 143-151; and FOLC-LAND.

Bodotrio, the ancient name of the Firth of Forth.

Boduno; the people of Gloucestershire and Oxfordshire were formerly called so.

Bodily Harm, generally used in contradistinction to 'actual bodily harm' or 'grievous bodily harm,' as meaning a trivial injury. See ACTUAL BODILY HARM.

Body, the main part of any instrument; in deeds it is spoken of as distinguished from the recitals and other introductory parts and signatures; in affidavits, from the title, and jurat, q.v.; also the term is used in writs to describe the person who is to be taken (as habeas corpus). And see CORPSE.

Body Politic [fr. bodig, A.S.; bodhag, Gael.], the nation; also a corporation.

Boilary, water arising from a salt well belonging to a person who is not the owner of the soil. Cf. Co. Litt. 4 b.

Boiler Explosions Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 22), whereby detailed notice of an explosion from any boiler, i.e. (s. 3), 'any closed vessel used for generating steam, or for heating water, or for heating other liquids, or into which steam is admitted for heating, steaming, boiling, or other similar purposes,' must be sent within 24 hours by the 'owner or user,' or their agent, to the Board of Trade, who have power to order an inquiry with respect to the explosion. Boilers used exclusively for domestic purposes, and boilers used in the service of his Majesty or on board certificated steamships, were exempted from the Act, and so were some boiler explosions in mines, but an amending 'Boiler Explosions Act, 1890,' repeals these exemptions, except those for Crown and domestic boilers. A pipe may be a 'boiler' within this Act (R. v. Commissioners, 1891, 1 Q. B. 703); but a boiler used for heating business premises is within the exception (Smith v. Müller, 1894, 1 Q. B. 192).

Boiling to Death, the punishment for poisoning inflicted by 22 Hen. 8, c. 9, repealed by 1 Edw. 6, c. 12.

Bois, wood; sub-bois, underwood.

Bois saillis [Fr.], a coppice, or copse.

Bolhagium, or Boldagium, a little house or cottage.—Blount.

Bolurum promontorium. The Land's End.

Bolt, a long narrow piece of silk or stuff.

Bolting [fr. bolt, Sax., a house], a private arguing of cases in the Inns of Court. Now discontinued. See MOOT.

Bona. This term, according to the Civil Law, includes all sorts of property, movable and immovable.—Story's Conf. Laws, 375.

Bona confiscata, property forfeited for crime to the fiscus, or public treasury.

Bona fide (in good faith), implying the absence of all fraud or unfair dealing or acting, whether it consists in simulation or dissimulation.

As to 'bona fide traveller,' see TRAVELLER.

Bona forisfacta, goods forfeited; called by the civilians bona confiscata, because they belonged to the fiscus, or imperial treasury.

Bona gestura, good behaviour.

Bona mobilia, movable effects and goods.

Bona notabilia, notable good—goods sufficient in amount to require a probate or administration to be taken out under ecclesiastical law. They were determined by the 93rd Canon (excepting in London, where the sum is 10*l.*) to be legal personal estate to the value of 5*l.* or upwards.

The jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts as to wills and administration is abolished. See PROBATE.

Bona patria, an assize of countrymen or good neighbours; it is sometimes called assiza bonæ patriæ, when 12 or more men are chosen out of any part of the county to pass upon an assize. The persons composing it are called juratores, because they are to swear judicially in the presence of the party, etc., according to the practice of Scotland.—Skene.

Bonaught, or Bonaughty, an exaction imposed on the people of Ireland, at the will of the lord, for relief of the knights, called Bonaghti, who served in the wars.—Antiq. Hibern. 60.

Bona vacantia, things found without any apparent owner which belong to the first occupant or finder, unless they be whale or sturgeon, wreck, treasure trove, waifs or estrays (see those titles), which belong to the Crown by virtue of its prerogative. So personal property held on trusts which have failed, or held in trust for a corporation which has been dissolved, belongs to the Crown as bona vacantia; see Re Higginson, 1898, 1 Q. B. 325, and cases there cited. By the Companies Act, 1929, s. 296, the property of a dissolved company including property held on trust for it shall, subject to the provisions of the Act, become bona vacantia. Before the Act was passed freehold and leasehold property reverted to the grantor. Hastings Corporation v. Lemon, 1908, 1 K. B. 378, s. 296 is not retrospective, Re Katherine

Ltd., 1932, 1 Ch. 70, and 1933, 2 Ch. 29. As to the rights of the Crown, the Duchy of Lancaster or the Duke of Cornwall to bona vacantia, see Administration of Estates Act 1925, ss. 45 and 46, and ESCHEAT. And see Law of Property Act, 1922, Sched. 12 (11) (c) and Land Registration Act, 1925, s. 80; FINDER; UNCLAIMED PROPERTY.

Bona villa, de Bonevil.

Bona waviata, goods waived or thrown away by a thief in his flight for fear of being apprehended. They are given to the Crown by law, as a punishment upon the owner for not himself pursuing the felon and recovering his goods.—2 Steph. Com. bk. 4, ch. vii.

In the Roman Law it was originally the property which a person left at his death, without having disposed of it by will, and without having any heres. Such property was open to occupancy; and so long as the strict laws of inheritance existed, such an event must not have been uncommon. A remedy was, however, found by the bonorum possessio of the prætor.—Smith's Dict.

Boncha [fr. bonna or bunna, Old Lat.], a rising bank, the bounds of fields.

Bond [fr. binda, band, bunden, A.S., to bind], a written acknowledgment or binding of a debt under seal. See DEED. No technical form of words is necessary to constitute a bond; see Gerrard v. Cloves, 1892, 2 Q. B. 11; Strickland v. Williams, 1899, 1 Q. B. 382. The person giving the bond is called the obligor, and he to whom it is given the obligee. A bond is called single (simplex obligatio) when it is without a penalty, but there is generally a condition added, that, if the obligor does or forbears from some act, the obligation shall be void, or else shall remain in full force, and the bond is then called a double or conditional one; see Dav. Prec. vol. v., pt. ii., p. 268. When a bond contains a penalty, which is generally double the amount of the principal sum secured, only the sum actually owing, with interest, can be recovered, and in no case can this exceed the amount appearing on the face of the bond. See 8 & 9 Wm. 3, c. 11, s. 8; Re Dixon, 1900, 2 Ch. 561.

Although it is unnecessary to mention personal representatives or successors who are intended to be included in the benefit or burden of the obligation, see s. 80, L. P. Act, 1925, it is advisable to name them if it is contemplated that they may perform the condition, see K. & E., 13th ed. p. 277. The benefit passes to the survivors in the case of the death of any joint obligees, L. P. Act, 1925, s. 81, and the receipt of the survivors is sufficient, s. 111, ibid., but joint obligees are, prima facie, tenants in common in equity for all other purposes.

A bond conditioned either to do something which is malum in se or malum prohibitum, or to omit the doing of something which is a duty, or to encourage such crimes and omissions, is void. A bond may be valid in part and void in part, if such parts are separable.

There are two kinds of post obit bonds:

(1) Where the sum secured is greater than the sum borrowed, but to be payable only upon a contingency, such as the obligor-expectant surviving his ancestor. (2) Where the sum secured is greater than the sum borrowed, but it is to be paid on the death of a particular person, whether the obligor be then alive or not, the time of payment being contingent only. See EXPECTANT HEIRS; MONEY-LENDERS; POST OBIT BOND; USURERS.

Bonds to procure marriage (or marriage brokerage bonds), or to restrain marriage, or for immoral considerations, such as future, but not past, cohabitation, and also in total restraint of trade, are void.

As to forgery of a bond, see Forgery Act, 1915, s. 2; and as to larceny thereof, see Larceny Act, 1916, ss. 1 and 46. The term 'bond' is also used to denote an acknowledgment of indebtedness for a loan obtained by a Government or company. Bonds contain provisions as to interest until repayment of the principal. 'Bonds to Bearer' pass by simple delivery, and interest on the amount secured is collected by means of coupons attached to the bond, which are cashed at due date as warrants for the interest specified on each. Other bonds are registered, and interest is paid by the issue of warrants as in the case of ordinary shares. See also BEARER BONDS and DEBENTURES.

Bonds are also executed to secure duty on dutiable goods to the Crown while in a merchant's or shipper's warehouse.

See BONDED WAREHOUSE; BOTTOMRY BOND; LLOYD'S BOND.

Bondage, slavery; also a kind of tenure or occupation.

Bond-creditor, a creditor whose debt is secured by a bond.

Bonded Warehouse, a warehouse licensed by the Commissioners of Customs and Excise for the storing of dutiable goods without payment of the duty until they are 'cleared,' i.e., taken away. So called owing to the bond into which it is necessary to enter in order to secure that the Crown does not lose the duty by the goods being removed into the country without payment. Goods in such a warehouse are said to be 'in bond.'

Bondsman, a surety.

Bond-tenants, copyholders and customary tenants are sometimes so called.—Calthorp on Customs of London.

Boni iudicio est ampliare jurisdictionem. (It is the part of a good judge to enlarge his jurisdiction.)—Chanc. Prec. 329. This maxim is said (see Broom's Max.) to be erroneous, and Lord Mansfield, in R. v. Philips, (1757) 1 Burr. 304, observes that the true text is 'justitiam,' and not 'jurisdictionem.'

Bonis non amovendis (that the goods be not removed), a writ addressed to the sheriff, where error is brought, commanding that the person against whom judgment is obtained be not suffered to remove his goods, till the error be tried and determined.—Reg. Brev. 131. See EXECUTION.

Bonitarian, the right of possession.—Civil Law.

Bonium, or Bovium, Boverton, or Cowbridge, in Glamorganshire; also Bangor, in Flintshire.

Bono et malo (Writ de), an abolished writ of gaol delivery, which issued for every prisoner.

Bonus, premium or advantage; an occasional extra dividend; a gratuity. As to the respective rights of tenant for life and remaindermen in a bonus declared by a company, see Bouch v. Sproule, (1887) 12 App. Cas. 385; Re Northage, (1891) 60 L. J. Ch. 488, and see Palmer's Company Law, 15th ed., p. 228.

Book. For the purposes of s. 15 of the Copyright Act, 1911, dealing with the delivery of books to certain libraries, the expression 'book' includes every part or division of a book, pamphlet, sheet of letterpress, sheet of music, map, plan, chart or table separately published, but not a second or subsequent edition of a book unless such edition contains additions or alterations either in the letterpress, or in the maps, prints, or other engravings belonging thereto. By s. 15 a copy of every book published in the United Kingdom must be sent to the British Museum, and on written demand to the Bodleian Library, Oxford, the University Library, Cambridge, the Library of the Faculty of Advocates at Edinburgh, and the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, and subject to certain provisos the National Library of Wales. See COPYRIGHT; LIBRARIES.

Books. All the volumes which contain authentic reports of decisions in English Courts, from the earliest times to the present, are sometimes called, par excellence, 'The Books.' See REPORTS.

Books of Account. All companies registered under the Companies Act, 1929, are by s. 122 obliged to keep books of account of (a) all receipts and expenses with matters relating thereto; (b) all sales and purchases; and (c) the assets and liabilities of the company: these books are to be open to inspection by the directors—heavy penalties for non-compliance are imposed. The auditors are to have access at all times, s. 134.

Boosey [or Boosy] Pasture, a pasture with a shed on or by it, by custom of the country or written agreement in the north-western counties of England frequently allowed, till May 1, or 12, to outgoing tenants whose tenancy expires on the 2nd February or 25th March.

Booting, or Botting Corn [fr. bote or boot, Sax., compensation], rent corn, anciently so called.

Booty of War, property captured in war on land which falls to the forces capturing by grace of the Crown or to the Crown itself. By 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 22, the jurisdiction in matters of booty of war is in the Admiralty Jurisdiction of the High Court, on a reference by the sovereign. See JUDIC. Act, 1925, s. 22. See Banda and Kirwee Booty, (1875) L. R. 4 Adm. & E. 436. Appeals lie to the Privy Council, ibid., s. 27. See ADMIRALTY; PRIZE COURT.

Borcovicus, Berwick-upon-Tweed.

Bordagium. See BORDLODE.

Bordaria [fr. bord, Sax.], a cottage.

Bordaril, or Bordamanna [fr. bords, Old Gall., limits, borders], boors, husbandmen, cottagers.—Domesday.

Bord-brigch [fr. borg-bryce, or burg-brych, Sax.], a breach or violation of suretyship, pledge-breach, or breach of mutual fidelity.

Border Warrant [fr. bord, Fr., edge, margin], a process granted by a judge ordinary, on either side of the border between England and Scotland, for arresting the person or effects of a person living on the opposite side, until he find security, judicio sisti.

Bord-halfpenny [fr. bord, Sax., a table, and hapenny, or halfpenny], a customary small toll paid to the lord of a town for setting up boards, tables, booths, etc., in fairs or markets.

Bordlands, the demesnes which a lord keeps in his own hands for maintenance of his board or table.—Bract. l. 1, t. 3, c. ix.

Bordlode, or Bordage, a service required of tenants to carry timber out of the lord's woods to his house, or the quantity of food or provisions which the bordarii or bordmen paid for their bordlands. The old Scots had the term of burd and meet-burd for victuals and provisions, and burden-sack for a sack full of provender, whence probably came our word burden.—Spelm.

Bord-service, a tenure of bordlands.

Borel-folk, country people, from the Fr., bourre, a lock of wool, because they covered their heads with such stuff.

Borough, originally a walled town or other fortified place. In the Reform Act, 1832, by s. 79, the word means a town entitled to return a member to Parliament, or 'parliamentary borough,' and in the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, as also (by virtue of s. 15 of the Interpretation Act, 1889) in every Act passed in or after 1890 when used in relation to local government, a town incorporated for the purposes of internal government, and subject to the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, or 'municipal borough.' See MUNICIPAL CORPORATION.

Borough Council, the body representing the burgesses of a municipal corporation by virtue of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, and consisting of a mayor, alderman, and councillors, the councillors being elected by the burgesses, and the mayor and aldermen by the council. The councillors are elected for three years, one-third of their number going out annually. The aldermen are elected for six years, one half going out every third year. The mayor is elected for one year. The Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), has consolidated and amended the relevant sections of the 1882 Act, see ss. 17 et seq., of the 1933 Act; but it does not apply to London.

Borough Courts, private and limited tribunals, held by prescription, charter, or Act of Parliament, in particular districts for the convenience of the inhabitants, that they may prosecute small suits, and receive justice at home. In boroughs subject to the Municipal Corporations Acts they are termed 'borough civil courts' and regulated by ss. 175–188 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, but they are very few in number. See, further, INFERIOR COURTS.

Borough English, a custom abolished by Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 45. See Law of Property Act, 1922, 12th Schedule; evidently of Saxon origin, and so named to distinguish it from the Norman customs. By this custom, which was met with in some burgrave tenemental lands and elsewhere, if a person had several sons, and died intestate, the youngest son inherited all the realty, which belonged to his father, situated within such borough. It was based on the assumption that the youngest son, on account of his tender age, was not so capable as the rest of his brethren to keep himself. Among the pastoral tribes, the sons, as soon as they attained the proper age, migrated from the paternal habitation, with an allotment of cattle, to seek a residence elsewhere; the youngest son usually continued with his father, and thus became the heir to his house.—2 Bl. Com. 83.

The custom obtained in the manor of Lambeth, Surrey, in the manors of Hackney, St. John of Jerusalem in Islington, Heston and Edmonton in Middlesex, and in other counties.

Borough Fund, the revenues of a municipal borough derived from the rents and produce of the land, houses, and stocks belonging to the borough in its corporate capacity, and supplemented where necessary by a borough rate. See ss. 138–144 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, which specifies the purposes to which it is legally applicable, and allows (s. 141) orders of a town council for payment of money out of it to be questioned by the High Court on certiorari.

Borough Funds Acts. The Borough Funds Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 91) (commonly called Leeman's Act), authorized borough councils and governing bodies of other urban districts to apply public funds under their control to promoting or opposing bills in parliament or to prosecute or defend legal proceedings in the interest of their constituents, but will not allow of their indemnifying the chief constable for costs he has incurred in opposing a licensing appeal at Quarter Sessions (Tynemouth Corporation v. A.-G., 1899, A. C. 293); and the Borough Funds Act, 1903 (3 Edw. 7 c. 14), has materially amended that Act by requiring the resolutions of councils to promote bills to be submitted to public meetings, and dispensing with the consent of owners and rate-payers to incurring expense in opposing bills. See now the Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), ss. 254 et seq., which consolidates and amends both the 1872 and 1903 Acts, but does not apply to London. See Chitty's Statutes.

Borough-heads, borough-holders, bors-holders, or burs-holders.

Borough-reeve, the chief municipal officer in towns unincorporated before the Municipal Corporations Act, 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76.

Borough Sessions, courts established in boroughs under the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882. They are held by the recorders of the respective boroughs once a quarter, or oftener if they think fit, and at times to be fixed by them. The Court has 'cognizance of all crimes, offences, and matters' cognizable by the County Quarter Sessions, whose powers extend to all boroughs which may not have obtained a separate court by petition under s. 162 of the Act, 1882, and see also Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 33).

Borrowing Powers. Most public bodies are possessed of borrowing powers, but the terms of the Act conferring the power to borrow must be strictly pursued; see Att.-Gen. v. De Winton, 1906, 2 Ch. 106; Rex v. Locke, 1910, 2 K. B. 201.

A company under the Companies Act, 1929, has no power to borrow money unless the provision is contained in the Memorandum of Association, but it has an implied power to borrow money and give security therefor for the purposes of its business (General Auction Estate Co. v. Smith, 1891, 3 Ch. 432). If the money borrowed is beyond the company's powers the excess is void (Wenlock v. River Dee Co., (1885) 10 A. C. 354). And see Re Harris Calculating Machine Co., 1914, 1 Ch. 920, as to the lender's right of subrogation to creditors who have been paid with the proceeds of the void loan. See also Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 16), ss. 38 et seq.; ASSOCIATION, MEMORANDUM OF.

Borsholder, borough's ealder, tithing-man, or head-borough, supposed to be the discreetest man in the borough, town, or tithing. He was one of the principal inhabitants annually appointed to look after the rest, each separate community in the time of the Saxons being answerable as surety for the good behaviour of all its members.—1 Bl. Com. 114, 356.

Borstal Institution. This name originated from a large juvenile-adult reformatory which was opened at Borstal, near Rochester, in 1901, by utilizing a portion of the existing convict prison for the purpose. Power to establish Borstal Institutions is given by s. 4 of the Prevention of Crime Act, 1908, and the same section describes such institutions as 'places in which young offenders whilst detained may be given such industrial training and other instruction, and be subject to such disciplinary and moral influences as will conduce to their reformation and the prevention of crime.' The Act has been amended by the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914, ss. 10, 11.

Bortmagad [fr. bord, Sax.; domus, Lat., and magad, ancilla], a housemaid.—Spelm.

Boscage [fr. bosco, Ital.], food which wood and trees yield to cattle, as mast, etc.

Boscaria, wood-houses, or ox-houses, from bos, Lat.

Bosco, de, Bois, Boys.

Boseoarro, de, Brentwood, or Burntwood.

Boseo Boardl, de, Borhard.

Bosceus [fr. bosco, Ital.; bois, Fr.], all manner of wood; bosceus is divided into high wood or timber, haubois; and coppice, or underwoods, sub-bosceus, sub-bois; but the high wood is properly called saltus, and in Fleta we read it maeremium.—Jac. Law Dict.

Bosslnnus, a rustic pipe.

Bostar, an ox-stall.

Bote [fr. bot, A.S.; beton, to repair, synonymous with estovers, Fr.; esroffer, to furnish], necessities for the maintenance and carrying on of husbandry. The owner of an estate for life or for years is entitled, even if he is impeachable for waste and unless expressly restrained by the terms of the conveyance, settlement, or devise, to reasonable estovers or botes, i.e., necessary wood, such as house-bote, plough-bote, cart-bote, and hay-bote or hedge-bote. House-bote is a sufficient allowance of wood from off the estate to repair or burn in the house, and sometimes termed fire-bote; plough-bote and cart-bote are wood to be employed in making and repairing all instruments of husbandry; and hay-bote or hedge-bote is wood for repairing of hays, hedges, or fences. The word also signifies reparation for any damage or injury done, as man-bote, which was a compensation or amends for a man slain, etc.—2 Bl. Com. 35; Jac. Law Dict.

Boteless, or Bootless, without boot, profit or advantage, unavailing.

Bottellaria, a buttery or cellar, in which the butts and botles of wine and other liquors are deposited.

Botha, a booth, stall, or standing in a fair or market.—Dugd. Mon. 2 par. fo. 132.

Bothagium, or Boothage, customary dues paid to the lord of a manor or soil, for the pitching or standing of booths in fairs or markets.—Paroch. Antiq. 680.

Bothna, or Buthna, a park where cattle are enclosed and fed; a barony, lordship, etc.—Skene.

Bottler of the King [pincerna regis, Lat.], an officer that provides the king's wines, who might (Fleta, l. 2, c. xxi.), by virtue of his office, choose out of every ship laden with sale wines, one cask before the mast, and one behind.—25 Edw. 3, st. 5, c. 21.

Bottom [Old English], a valley.

Bottomry Bond, or Contract, also Bottomree, or Bummaree, a species of mortgage or hypothecation of a ship, by which her keel or bottom is pledged (parum pro toto) as a security for the repayment of a sum of money. If the ship be totally lost, the lender loses his money; but if she returns safely, he recovers his principal, together with the interest agreed upon. Such bonds are allowed as valid in all trading nations, for the benefit of commerce, and as a pretium periculi for the extraordinary hazard run. See Abbott on Shipping, and RESPONDENTIA.

Bouche of Court or Budge of Court, a certain allowance of provision from the king to his knights and servants who attended him on any military expedition.

Bough of a Tree, a symbol which gave seisin of land, to hold of the donor in capite. And see TREES.

Bought and Sold Notes. It is no longer the custom for brokers who have succeeded in making a contract to make any entry in their books save for their own private information, and it is now almost the universal practice to regard the bought and sold notes as the proper evidence of the contract. The broker sends to the seller a 'sold note' and to the buyer a 'bought note,' these being now the usual terms, though formerly their use was sometimes the converse. When each note discloses the name of both parties to the transaction, each is a complete memorandum of the bargain. When each note only discloses the name of one party, the two may be treated as one memorandum. The bought and sold notes are deemed to constitute a single document, and if they differ materially they are nullities unless one has been assented to by the parties as containing the terms of the contract.

Every contract note for or relating to the sale or purchase of any stock or marketable security must be stamped when the value of the subject-matter is 5*l.*, and does not exceed 100*l.*, 6*d.*; does not exceed 500*l.*, 1*s.*; does not exceed 1,000*l.*, 2*s.*; does not exceed 1,500*l.*, 3*s.*; does not exceed 2,500*l.*, 4*s.*; and for every 2,500*l.* or part thereof, a further 2*s.* up to a maximum of 1*l.* Consult Addison on Contracts, Benjamin on Sale, or Leake or Chitty on Contracts.

Bound, or Boundary [fr. borne, bone, Fr., a limit], the utmost limits of lands, whereby the same is known and ascertained. See ABUTTALS.

Boundaries are the lines marking the division between two adjacent territories. The boundary may be (a) physical, or (b) national and supported by documentary or other evidence. (a) may consist of walls, fences, hedges or ditches, and the presumption is that the outer line along the top line of the ditch bank furthest from the hedge marks the boundary of the land on which the hedge, if any, is erected, because the owner of the soil would be presumed to throw up the soil on to his own land for the hedge, but this presumption may be rebutted. Simple fences or ditches and walls frequently belong to the owners of both properties in common, see PARTY WALL.

Physical boundaries may also be roads or non-tidal streams, see Ad medium filæ, or the sea or tidal rivers, in which case the high-water mark of medium tides is presumed to be the boundary. Williams Real Property, 23rd ed., p. 463. (b) Unmarked or imaginary boundaries are generally ascertained by reference to maps or plans, or by description in documents.

The practice in regard to Registered Land is regulated by the Land Registration Act, 1925, s. 76, and Rules, 1925, ss. 272-288.

The divisions of counties and the limit of cities and boroughs so far as regards the election of members to sit in Parliament are now governed by the Boundary Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 46), and the Representation of the People Act, 1918 (7 & 8 Geo. 5, c. 64).

The boundaries of municipal boroughs, as fixed under the repealed Municipal Corporations Acts, 1835 and 1836 (5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76), ss. 7, 8, and (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 103), in England and Wales, were not affected by the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50). See s. 250 (2) (now repealed), see infra.

The Local Government Boundaries Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 61), constituted a Commission to inquire into the best mode of so adjusting the boundaries of counties and other areas of local government as to arrange that no poor law union, municipal borough, sanitary district, or parish should be situate in more than one county; and various provisions for the boundaries of counties and other areas for the purpose of the election of county councils are contained in the Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51). See also METROPOLITAN POLICE DISTRICT.

Bound-bailiffs, officers who arrested

debtors, etc., and who entered into bonds for their good behaviour. The vulgar phrase 'bum-bailiff' is, perhaps, a corruption of this word.

Bounty, (1) a premium paid by Government to the producers, exporters, or importers of certain articles, or to those who employ ships in certain trades, with a view of encouraging the establishment of some new branch of industry, or of fostering and extending a trade that is believed to be of paramount importance. See Smith's Wealth of Nations, Bk. iv. c. v. Bounties have been entirely abolished in England, and the Sugar Convention Act, 1903 (3 Edw. 7, c. 21), which authorized restrictions upon the importation of bounty-fed sugar into the United Kingdom, has been repealed.

(2) Queen Anne's Bounty: see BOUNTY OF QUEEN ANNE.

(3) Money paid to officers and crew of a king's ship which had successfully engaged pirates, slave traders, etc.

(4) King's Bounty: the grant made by the Crown on the birth of three or more infants in wedlock at one confinement.

Bounty of Queen Anne, given by royal charter, which was confirmed by Queen Anne (2 Anne, c. 11), whereby all the revenue of first-fruits and tenths (see those titles) which belonged to the English Crown was transferred by Queen Anne to trustees for ever, called 'Governors,' to form a perpetual fund for the augmentation of the maintenance of the poor clergy. After the appropriation of the revenue arising from the payment of first-fruits and tenths to the augmentation of small livings, it was considered a proper extension of this principle to exempt the smaller livings from the incumbrance of those demands; and, for that end, the bishops of each diocese were directed to inquire and certify into the Exchequer what livings did not exceed 50l. a year, according to the improved value at that time; and it was further provided that such livings should be discharged from those dues in future. It has been still further regulated by subsequent statutes, especially by the Queen Anne's Bounty Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 20); and by the Clergy Residences Repair Act, 1776 (17 Geo. 3, c. 53), commonly called 'Gilbert's Act,' s. 12, amended by the Parsonages Act, 1911, the Governors are empowered to lend money at not more than 4 per cent. for parsonages, etc., on mortgage of a benefice.

Under the Tithe Act, 1926 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, s. 87), there is vested in Queen Anne's Bounty all ecclesiastical tithe rentcharge. The rentcharge is collected by the Bounty and paid over to the clergy. See TITHES.

The Governors comprise, under the charter, Archbishops and Bishops, the Judges, the Lords Lieutenants of Counties, the King's Counsel, and the Mayors of Cities, the quorum being five by the Parsonages Act, 1865, s. 5, of whom three at least must be archbishops or bishops. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Church and Clergy.'

Bovata terræ, an oxgange or oxgate of land, as much land as an ox can plough; 8 bovatae make 1 carucate. See Co. Litt. 5 a, and OXGANG.

Boverium, or Boveria, an ox-house.

Bovettus, a young steer, or castrated bullock.

Boviclea, a heifer, or young cow.

Bovill's (Sir W.) Act, an Act to amend the law relating to the procedure in petitions of right.—23 & 24 Vict. c. 34. Also, an Act relating to partnership, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 86, now repealed but substantially re-enacted by the Partnership Act, 1890. It established the principle that participation in profits does not in itself constitute partnership, in accordance with Cox v. Hickman, (1860) 8 H. L. C. 268.

Bow-bearer, an under-officer of the forest whose duty it was to oversee and true inquisition make, as well of sworn men as unsworn, in every bailiwick of the forest; and of all manner of trespasses done, either to vert or venison, and cause them to be presented without any concealment, in the next court of attachment, etc.—Crompt. Juris. 201.

Bowling, Game of, legalized by the Gaming Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 109) (see Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Games and Gaming'), s. 1 of which repeals 33 Hen. 8, c. 9, which Act by s. 16 decreed that labourers, 'servants at husbandry,' fishermen, and others named therein, might not play bowls or other games named therein 'out of Christmas,' and 'in Christmas only in their masters' houses or in their masters' presence.'

Bowyers, manufacturers of bows and shafts. An ancient company of the city of London.—12 Edw. 4, c. 2; 33 Hen. 8, c. 6; 8 Eliz. c. 10.

Boycott, a cant term meaning to shun, ignore and refuse to have any dealings whatsoever with a person. The word is derived from the name of an estate agent in County Mayo, Captain Boycott, one of the first persons to whom this species of persecution was applied.

Boys, employment of, in factories, work-shops, etc. See CHILDREN; FACTORY. As to the employment of boys in mines below ground, see Coal Mines Act, 1911, ss. 91–95, and s. 102 (7).

Bracelets, hounds or beagles of the smaller or slower kinds.

Bracennarius, a huntsman or master of the hounds.

Bracetus, a hound.—Dugd. Mon. t. 2, 283.

Brachylogy [fr. βραχύς and λογος, Gk.], the method of expressing a sentence or argument concisely.

Bracinum, a brewing; the whole quantity of ale brewed at one time, for which tolsesto was paid in some manors. Brecina, a brew-house.

Bracton, the author of the Latin treatise entitled De Legibus et Consuetudinibus Angliæ. He lived at the latter end of the reign of Henry the Third. Bracton's book, compared with that of Glanville, is a voluminous work. It is divided into five books, and these into tracts and chapters. See 2 Reeves' Hist. c. viii. 86, note (a), for an analysis of the several divisions of the chapters and a complete digest of the contents of this venerable code. The rules of property are explained; the proceedings in actions, through the minutest steps, are investigated and developed; while every proposition is supported by fair deduction, or corroborated by the authority of some adjudged case, so that the reader never fails in deriving instruction or amusement from the study of this scientific treatise on our ancient laws and customs. Bracton was deservedly looked up to as the first source of legal knowledge, even down to the time of Sir Edward Coke, who seems to have made this author his guide in all inquiries into the foundation of our law.

It is said that Bracton was a judge, and, speaking of some judges of his time, he calls them insipientes, et minus doctos, qui cathedrali judicandi ascendunt antequam leges didicerint (Brac. I.).—Hale's Hist. 189. In Lincoln's Inn Library is an ancient MS. copy of Bracton, which is said to be more correct than the printed copies. The work was edited, with an English translation, by Sir Travers Twiss in the Rolls Series.

Branding in the hand or face with a hot iron. A punishment inflicted by law for various offences, after the offender had been allowed benefit of clergy. Abolished by 3 Geo. 4, c. 38.

Braslator [fr. brasium, Lat., malt], a maltster, a brewer.—Old Records.

Brasium, malt.

Brawling [fr. brailler, Fr., to brawl], the offence of quarrelling, or creating a disturbance in the church or churchyard, punished by 5 & 6 Edw. 4, c. 4 (partly repealed by 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 1, and wholly repealed as to laymen by the Ecclesiastical Courts Jurisdiction Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 32)), by excommunication and suspension, and also, by the unrepealed but disused 1 Mary, st. 2, c. 3, by imprisonment until the party repent.

By the Act of 1860, persons guilty of riotous, violent, or indecent behaviour in churches and chapels of the Church of England or Ireland, or in any chapel of any religious denomination, or in England in any place of religious worship duly certified under the Places of Worship Registration Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 81), or in churchyards or burial grounds, on conviction before two justices are made liable to a penalty of not more than 5*l.*, or imprisonment for any term not exceeding two months. See Matthews v. King, 1934, 1 K. B. 505.

To object to a deacon presenting himself for ordination as priest, that he has taken part in services in churches, in breach of prescribed ritual, is not to allege a crime or impediment to ordination, within the ordination service, and therefore the objector may be convicted of an offence against the Act of 1860 (Kensit v. St. Paul's Dean and Chapter, 1905, 2 K. B. 249).

Breach of Close, an unwarrantable entry on another's land; for every man's land is in the eye of the law enclosed and set apart from his neighbour's, and that either by a visible and material fence, as one field is divided from another by a hedge, or by an invisible boundary, existing only in the contemplation of law, as when one man's land adjoins to another's in the same field. Every such entry or breach of a man's close carries necessarily along with it some damage.—3 Bl. Com. 209.

Breach of Peace, offences against the public, which are either actual violations of the peace, or constructive violations, by tending to make others break it. See PEACE.

Breach of Pound. See POUND.

Breach of Prison, an escape by a prisoner lawfully in prison. See PRISON.

Breach of Privilege, contempt of either of the Houses of Parliament. See PRIVILEGE.

Breach of Promise of Marriage. See MARRIAGE, PROMISE OF.

Breach of Trust, a violation of duty by a trustee, executor, or other person in a fiduciary position.

In some cases a breach of trust may be a comparatively venial offence, arising from the trustee having honestly misconstrued the deed or will creating the trust either as to the persons entitled, or as to his powers of investment or of dealing with the trust property, or having otherwise erred in the discharge of his strict duty; in other cases he may have been guilty of negligence or carelessness involving at least some degree of moral blame; or, in other cases again, he may have committed some gross fraud. But in all these cases alike the trustee is personally responsible at the suit of the beneficiaries for any loss which may have resulted, and the rules of equity on the subject were extremely strict and were enforced with great severity by the Court of Chancery. In later times, however, the Court was not quite so astute in fixing honest trustees with liability for breach of trust as formerly; see Speight v. Gaunt, (1883) 9 App. Cas. 1. More recently, the Trustee Acts have relaxed the stringent rules of Equity in regard to trustees; their authority has been extended, their discretion has been widened; indemnities for innocent breaches of trust have been provided, and see generally, the Trustees Act, 1925. By s. 57 of this Act the Court may extend the powers of trustees in certain cases, and s. 61 ibid., replacing s. 3 of the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, empowers the Court, if a trustee has acted honestly and reasonably and ought fairly to be excused, to discharge him from liability.

Further, the Trustee Act, 1888, s. 8, allows a trustee to plead the Statute of Limitations except in cases of fraud or if he has not benefited by the breach of trust; see LIMITATIONS.

A breach of trust was not a criminal offence until 20 & 21 Vict. c. 54. It is now punishable, by the Larceny Act, 1916, s. 21, as a misdemeanour, with penal servitude not exceeding seven years; but no prosecution can be commenced without the sanction of the Attorney-General, or, if civil proceedings have been started by the prosecutor, without the sanction of the Court before whom the proceedings have been or are pending. Consult Levin, Godefrot, or Underhill on Trusts.

Bread. The Acts (see Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Bread') relating to the sale of bread are the London Bread Act, 1822 (3 Geo. 4, c. cvi.) (metropolis), now repealed; and the Bread Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 37), which, by s. 4 (as to which see Cox v. Blaines, 1902, 1 K. B. 670, explained in Mattinson v. Binley, 1908, 2 K. B. 534), prescribes that bread, 'except French, or fancy bread (as to which see Bailey v. Barsby, 1909, 2 K. B. 610) or rolls,' must be sold by weight, etc.; but the Weights and Measures Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 21), s. 32, makes a request by the purchaser an essence of the offence of refusal to weigh in the case of bread carried out in a cart. See Evans v. Jones, (1909) 99 L. T. 799; Lyons & Co. v. Houghton, 1915, 1 K. B. 489.

Section 8 of the Act of 1836 enacts that the names, addresses and offences of bakers and others convicted of adulterating bread may be directed by the convicting justices to be published in some newspaper. Section 14 prohibits Sunday baking, and the consents for prosecution for Sunday trading generally, which are required by the Sunday Observance Prosecution Act, 1871 (see SUNDAY), need not be procured (R. v. Mead, 1902, 2 K. B. 212). The Bread Acts (Amendment) Act, 1922 (12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 28), amended the then existing law so as to remove the restrictions as to the use of self-raising flour.

Breaking Bulk, a term formerly used to signify the separation of goods in the hands of a bailee which made him liable for felony. Since the Larceny Act, 1861, this distinction is immaterial, and remains so under the Larceny Act, 1916.

Breaking In. See ss. 24-27 of the Larceny Act, 1916, 'as to Sacrilege, Burglary, and Housebreaking,' and BURGLARY.

Breaking of Arrestment, is the contempt of the law committed by an arrestee who disregards the arrestment used in his hands, and pays the sum or delivers the goods arrested to the debtor. The breaker is liable to the arrester in damages.—Scots Law.

Brecca [fr. brèche, Fr.], a breach or decay.

Breccina. See BRACINUM.

Brede [adj.], broad.—Bract. Also in Saxon, deceit.

Bredwite [fr. bread and wite, Sax.], a fine or penalty imposed for defaults in the assize of bread.—Paroch. Antiq. 114.

Brehon, the Irish name for a Judge.

Brehon Law, the law by which Ireland was governed at the time of its conquest by Henry II.; 'a rule of right, unwritten but delivered by tradition from one to another, in which oftentimes there appeared great show of equity in determining the right between party and party, but in many things repugnant quite, both to God's laws and man's.' This law was formally abolished by 40 Edw. 3, it being unanimously declared to be indeed no law, but a lewd custom crept in of later times. See 1 Bl. Com. 100; Edm. Spenser's State of Ireland, 1513, edit. Hughes; Hale's Hist. 217.

Brelina, wether-sheep.—Cowel's Law Dict.; Dugd. Mon. t. 1, p. 406.

Brenaglum, a payment in bran, which tenants anciently made to feed their lord's hounds.

Brephotrophi, curators of places for receiving foundlings.

Bressummer, in the London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. cxxiii. (see s. 5 (7))), means 'a wooden beam or a metal girder which carries a wall.'

Bretoyse, or Bretoise, the law of the Welsh marches, observed by the ancient Britons.

Bretwalda (wielder), ruler of the Britons.

Breve, a writ, by which a person is summoned or attached to answer an action, complaint, etc., or whereby anything is commanded to be done in the courts, in order to do justice, etc. It is called breve, from the brevity of it, and is addressed either to the defendant himself, or to the chancellors, judges, sheriffs, or other officers.—Skene, de verb. 'Breve.' See WRIT; ORIGINAL WRIT; JUDICIAL WRIT.

Breve ita dicitur, quia rem de qua agitur, et intentionem petentis, paucis verbis breviter enarrat. 2 Inst. 39.—(A writ is so called because it briefly states, in few words, the matter in dispute, and the object of the party seeking relief.)

Breve de recto, a writ of right or license for a person ejected out of an estate, to sue for the possession of it.

Breve perquirere, to purchase a writ or license of trial, in the king's courts, by the plaintiff, qui breve perquisivit; whence the usage of paying 6s. 8d. fine to the Crown where the debt is 40l., and of 10s. where the debt is 100l., etc., in suits and trials for money due upon bond, etc.

Brevet, a commission conferring on an officer a degree of rank immediately above that which he holds in his particular regiment; without, however, conveying a power to receive the corresponding pay. Brevet rank does not exist in the royal navy, and in the army it neither descends lower than that of captain, nor ascends above that of lieutenant-colonel.

Brevia magistrallia, official writs framed by the clerks in Chancery to meet new injuries, to which the old forms of actions were inapplicable.—4 Reeves, 426.

Brevia selecta, abbrev. Brev. Sel. [Lat.], choice writs or processes.

Brevia testata, written memoranda, in-

roduced to perpetuate the tenor of a conveyance and investiture, when grants by parol only became the foundation of frequent dispute and uncertainty. To this end they registered in the deed the persons who attended as witnesses, which was formerly done without their signing their names (that not being always in their power), but they only heard the deed read; and then the clerk or scribe added their names in a sort of memorandum; thus, 'his testibus, Johanne Moore, Jacobo Smith, et aliis ad hanc rem convocatis.' Our modern deeds are in reality nothing more than an improvement or amplification of these brevia testata.—2 Bl. Com. 307.

Breviate, a memorandum occasionally prefixed to a Parliamentary Bill, shortly stating its effect.

Brevibus et rotulis liberandis, a writ to a sheriff to deliver to his successor the county, and appurtenances, with the rolls, briefs, remembrance, and all other things belonging to his office.—Reg. Brev. 295.

Brewster Sessions. The special sessions of licensing justices annually held in the first 14 days of February for the grant of licenses for sale by retail of intoxicating liquors to be drunk on the premises where sold. See INTOXICATING LIQUORS. Before the Licensing Act, 1902, these sessions were held under s. 1 of the Licensing Act, 1828, in August and September, and in Middlesex and Surrey in March.

Bribe, a gift to any person in office or holding a position of trust, with the object of inducing him to disregard his official duty or betray his trust for the benefit of the giver. It is a misdemeanour at common law for a public officer, whether judicial or ministerial, to accept a bribe, or for such an officer to conspire with others that he shall receive such a bribe (Reg. v. Whitaker, 1914, 3 K. B. 1283). It has long been settled law that the secret profits of an agent belong to his principal: see De Busche v. Al., (1878) 8 Ch. D. 286. The acceptance of a secret commission from the other side to a negotiation justifies the dismissal of the agent receiving it (Boston Deep Sea Fishery v. Ansell, (1888) 39 Ch. D. 339). The bribery of an agent avoids a contract: see Shipway v. Broadwood, 1899, 1 Q. B. 369, where a veterinary surgeon employed to test horses by the purchaser had passed them after acceptance of a bribe from the seller. In such a case it is an immaterial inquiry to what extent the bribe or the offer of it influenced the person to whom it was given or made: ibid., p. 373, per Chitty, L.J. The corrupt giving to or acceptance by any agent of any gift or consideration for doing or forbearing to do any act in relation to his principal's affairs or business is a misdemeanour punishable by fine or imprisonment or both (the Prevention of Corruption Acts, 1906 and 1916; and see the Prevention of Corruption Order, 1918, No. 321). See also the Public Bodies Corrupt Practices Act, 1889, which is directed against the bribery and corruption of members, officers, and servants of public bodies.

A right to vote for a candidate for election to the House of Commons being deemed a trust as well, it has been provided (Corrupt Practices Prevention Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 102)) (see also Corrupt and Illegal Practices Prevention Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 51)) that to procure or to endeavour to procure any money or valuable consideration to or for any voter, or to or for any person on behalf of any voter, or to or for any other person, in order to induce any voter to vote or refrain from voting, or corruptly to do any such act as aforesaid on account of such voter having voted or refrained from voting at any parliamentary election, is bribery punishable by heavy penalties; and this definition is applied to municipal and other local elections by the Municipal Elections (Corrupt and Illegal Practices) Act, 1884; to county council elections by s. 75 of the Local Government Act, 1888; and to parish and district council elections by s. 48 (3) of the Local Government Act, 1894. See new Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), s. 40. See CORRUPT PRACTICES.

The Extradition Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 15), (see EXTRADITION), adds bribery to the list of extradition crimes.

The Honours (Prevention of Abuses) Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 72), makes illegal any gift of money to assist in securing a title of a dignity or of honour.

Bribeur [fr. bribeur, Fr.], a pilferer of other men's goods.—28 Edw. 2, c. 1.

Bricks, the duties of excise on, were repealed by 13 & 14 Vict. c. 9.

Bridewell, a house of correction.

Bridge [γέφυρα, Gk.; pons, Lat.; bric, Sax.], a building erected across a river, ditch, valley, or other place, for the common benefit of travellers. The 'Statute of Bridges' (22 Hen. 8, c. 5), (which see, with other statutes, Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Highways (Bridges)'), provides for the rating of the inhabitants of a county or borough for the repair of bridges not repairable by any person ratione tenuræ. As to the offence of pulling down, throwing down, or destroying a bridge, see Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), ss. 29 and 33.

The management of county bridges is transferred from justices to county councils by s. 3, par. viii., of the Local Government Act, 1888; and by s. 6 of the same Act the county councils may purchase bridges not being county bridges, and may erect new bridges. And see Pub. Health Act, 1936, s. 343. The construction and repair of railway bridges over or under a public highway is mainly regulated by the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), ss. 46 et seq. See Rhondda Urban Council v. Taff Vale Railway, 1909, A. C. 253, and TRUNK ROADS.

The Road and Rail Traffic Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 53), s. 30, deals with power to prohibit or restrict the use of vehicles on certain bridges.

Bridge-masters, of London Bridge, were persons chosen by the citizens, who had certain fees and profits belonging to their office and the care of the bridge.—Jac. Law Dict.

Brief [fr. brevis, Lat.; brief, Dutch, a letter], an abbreviated statement of the pleadings, proofs, and affidavits in any legal proceeding, with a concise narrative of the facts and merits of the plaintiff's case, or the defendant's defence, for the instruction of counsel at the trial or hearing. See BARRISTER.

Also a document bearing the royal signature addressed to bishops and clergy, authorizing the collection in churches of money for charitable purposes therein mentioned. The issue of such documents was regulated by 4 Anne, c. 14, repealed by 9 Geo. 4, c. 42, and is still legal, though disused for many years.

Brief al'evsque, a writ to the bishop which, in quare impedit, shall go to remove an incumbent, unless he recover or be presented pendente lite.—1 Keb. 386.

Brief, or Brieve, out of the Chancery, a writ issued in Scotland in the name of the sovereign in the election of tutors to minors, the cognoscing of lunatics or of idiots, and ascertaining the widow's terce; and sometimes in dividing the property belonging to heirs-potitioners. In these cases only briefs are now in use.—Consult Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Briga [fr. brigue, Fr.], debate, contention. Brigandine [lorica, Lat.], a coat of mail or ancient armour, consisting of numerous jointed scale-like plates, very pliant and easy for the body, mentioned in 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 2; also in Jer. xlv. 4, and li. 3, Authorized Version.

Brigantes, the ancient names for the inhabitants of Yorkshire, Lancashire, Durham, Westmoreland, and Cumberland.

Brigbote, or Bragbote [fr. brig, Sax.; and bote, compensatio], the contribution to the repair of bridges, walls, and castles, which by the old laws of the Anglo-Saxons might not be remitted.—Fleta, l. 1, c. x., lvii.

Bristol Bargain, where A. lends B. 1,000*l.* on good security, and it is agreed that 500*l.*, together with interest, shall be paid at a time stated; and as to the other 500*l.*, that B., in consideration thereof, should pay unto A. 100*l.* per annum for seven years.

British America. See Fur Trade Act, (1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 66), North-Western Territories Act (22 & 23 Vict. c. 26), and the British North America Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 3), by which the Dominion of Canada was formed by the union of the provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick. Manitoba joined the Union in 1870, British Columbia in 1871, and Prince Edward Island in 1873. Outlying British possessions were added by Order in Council in 1880, and Newfoundland alone remains independent. The Act of 1867 was amended by the British North America and other Acts, all referred to collectively as the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1930. See STATUTE OF WESTMINSTER.

British Broadcasting Corporation. See BROADCASTING.

British Columbia, the territory on the north-west coast of North America, once known by the designation of New Caledonia. See BRITISH AMERICA.

British Empire, the Most Excellent Order of the, founded in 1917 for both men and women. The various grades take precedence immediately after the corresponding grades of the Royal Victorian Order.

British Islands. In Acts of Parliament the United Kingdom, Channel Islands and the Isle of Man, see Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 68).

British Museum, founded in 1752, under the will of Sir Hans Sloane and 25 Geo. 2, c. 22. The museum is governed by a body of trustees of whom three, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Chancellor and the Speaker of the House of Commons, are ex-officio trustees. The museum is entitled to a copy of every book published in the United Kingdom by s. 15 of the Copyright Act, 1911, but certain classes of publications, e.g., trade advertisements, registers of voters, specifications of Patents, time tables, calendars, etc., may be excepted; see British Museum Act, 1932. The trustees are authorized to store newspapers at 'the Hendon building' by the British Museum Act, 1902, and to lend objects for public exhibition by 14 & 15 Geo. 5, c. 23. In Martin v. British Museum Trustees, (1894) 10 T. L. R. 338, the plaintiff failed to recover for a libel in a pamphlet bought by the defendants and placed in the library for public use.

British Nationality and Status of Aliens Act, 1914. See ALIEN.

British Ship. As to the qualification for owning and the obligation to register British ships, see Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, ss. 1-3. The owner must be a British subject, natural born or naturalized, or a denizen q.v., or a body corporate established and subject to the laws of some part of His Majesty's dominions and having their principal place of business in those dominions but not a natural born British subject who has taken the oath of allegiance to a foreign sovereign or State or become a citizen or subject of a foreign State or been naturalized or made a denizen, unless while he is owning a British ship he has taken the oath of allegiance to the King after his disqualification and is, during his ownership, either resident in the said dominions or is partner of a firm carrying on business there.

Britton, a small French law tract under the name of Britton, thought by some to have been composed under the direction of Edward I., by others considered as nothing more than an abridgment of Bracton, with the subsequent alterations that had been made in the law; and to be called Britton, as one of the names of Bracton himself.—2 Reeves, c. xi. p. 280.

Broad-arrow, used as a Government mark, is thought to have had a Celtic origin; and the so-called arrow may be the  or d, the broad a of the Druids. This letter was typical of superiority either in rank and authority, intellect, or holiness; and is believed to have stood also for king or prince. Public stores are marked with the Broad Arrow. See Public Stores Act, 1875.

Broadcasting. Aural or visual communication by wireless telegraphy (q.v.).

In the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man, the service of broadcasting to the public by means of wireless telephony and television is carried on by the British Broadcasting Corporation incorporated by Royal Charter in December, 1926, which was supplemented in August, 1931, acting under licence of the Postmaster General. See Parliamentary Papers, Cmd. 5329 (1936); and WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY.

Brocade, the wages or hire of a broker; also termed Brokerage.—12 Rich. 2, c. 2.

Broccella [fr. brusca, obs. Lat.; broce, Fr.], a wood, a thicket, hence brouce of wood, and browsing of cattle.—Jac. Law Dict.

Brode-halfpenny, or Broad-halfpenny. See BORD-HALFPENNY.

Broken Stowage, that space in a ship which is not filled by her cargo.

Broker [fr. broceur, Fr., a person who breaks into small pieces], (1) an agent employed to make bargains and contracts between other persons in matters of trade, commerce and navigation, by explaining the intentions of both parties, and negotiating in such a manner as to put those who employ him in a condition to treat together personally; (2) and, more commonly, an agent employed by one party only to make a binding contract with another.

There are various sorts of brokers now employed in commercial affairs, whose transactions form, or may form, a distinct and independent business. Thus, for example, there are exchange and money-brokers, stock-brokers, ship-brokers, and insurance-brokers, who are respectively employed in buying and selling bills of exchange, or promissory notes, railway scrip, goods, stocks, ships, or cargoes; or in procuring freights or charter-parties. By custom or usage brokers may become personally liable on contracts made by them on behalf of principals where the principal's name is not disclosed at the time of contract. See Pike v. Ongley, (1887) 18 Q. B. D. 708. The character of a broker is also sometimes combined in the same person with that of a factor. In such cases we should carefully distinguish between his acts in the one character and in the other, as the same rules do not always apply to each. See FACTOR. The Romans called brokers Proxenetae.

Brokers in the City of London were by 33 & 34 Vict. c. 60, and 47 Vict. c. 9, the London Brokers Relief Acts of 1870 and 1884, relieved from the necessity of being admitted by the Court of Aldermen and other restrictions to which they were formerly subject.

As to fraudulent misappropriation by brokers, see Larceny Act, 1916, especially s. 20.

The term 'broker' is also applied to the agent or 'bailiff' employed by a landlord to distrain. (See 57 Geo. 3, c. 93, s. 6, whereby every broker must give a copy of his charges to the person on whose goods he distrains, and DISTRESS.) County court bailiffs may be authorized by a county court judge to act as brokers to sell goods taken in execution under the County Court Act, 1934, s. 133.

For the purposes of s. 17 of the Finance Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 36), a broker includes a general commission agent.

Brokerage, the commission or percentage paid to brokers on the sale or purchase of bills, funds, goods, etc. See CONTRACT NOTE.

Bronze Coinage. See 33 & 34 Vict. c. 10, repealing 22 & 23 Vict. c. 30.

Brooke's (Sir Robert) Abridgement, a work printed in 1568, and an improvement on the plan of Statham and Fitzherbert. The cases are here arranged with more strict regard to the title; but the order in which they are strung together is very little better, being generally guided only by the chronology.—Foster.

Brossus, bruised or injured with blows, wounds, or other casualty.—Cowel's Law Dict.

Brothel [fr. bordel, Fr.], a habitation of prostitutes. To keep one is an offence at Common Law, the prosecution of which by indictment is specially encouraged by the Disorderly Houses Act, 1751 (25 Geo. 2, c. 36), s. 5, and the prosecution of which by summary proceedings before justices of the peace is allowed by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69). Further provision for the suppression of brothels is made by the Criminal Law Amendment Acts, 1912 and 1922. For a person licensed to sell intoxicating liquor to permit his premises to be a brothel, the penalty is up to 20*l.* fine, forfeiture of license, and perpetual disqualification for holding another, by s. 15 of the Licensing Act, 1872. A woman who keeps a house for the purpose of prostitution with herself alone cannot be convicted of keeping a brothel (Singleton v. Ellison, 1895, 1 Q. B. 607).

Brougham's (Lord) Acts. The best known of them are the Beer Act of 1830 (11 Geo. 4, & 1 Wm. 4, c. 64), the Judicial Committee Act of 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 41), the repealed County Court Act of 1846, the repealed Act for shortening the language of Acts of Parliament (13 & 14 Vict. c. 21), for which ss. 1, 3 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, are now substituted, and the Evidence Acts of 1845 and 1851 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 113), and (14 & 15 Vict. c. 99); and the Act, now replaced, which made slave trading a felony for the first time.

Brudhote. See BRIGBOTE.

Brudkop [fr. brautkauf, Low. Sax.], betrothment.

Bruere [erica, Lat., heath], heath-ground.

Brueria [fr. brær, Sax., briar], thorns, briars, heath.—Par. Ant. 620.

Brulietus, a small coppice or wood.

Brullus [fr. breil, breuil, Fr., a thicket], a clump of trees in a park or forest.

Bruneta. See BURNETA.

Bruscia, a wood.—Dugd. Mon. t. 1, fol. 773.

Brutum fulmen, an empty noise: an empty threat.

Bubble Act, 6 Geo. 1, c. 18 (repealed by 6 Geo. 4, c. 91), passed after the failure of the South Sea Scheme, to discourage similar schemes designed merely as baits to extract money from the thoughtless.

Bucinus, a military weapon for a footman.

Buckstall, a toil to take deer.—4 Inst. 306.

Buckwheat, a French wheat, called in Essex, brank, and in Worcestershire crap.—15 Car. 2, c. 5.

Buggery, sodomy, punishable by the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, s. 61, by penal servitude for life or any term not less than ten years, but by the effect of the Penal Servitude Act, 1891, a maximum term of two years' imprisonment may in the discretion of the Court be imposed. And see BLACK MAIL, and INFAMOUS CRIME.

Building, defined by Lord Esher in Moir v. Williams, 1892, 1 Q. B. 270, as an inclosure of brick or stone covered by a roof, and said by Park, J., in R. v. Gregory, (1833) 5 B. & Ad. at p. 561, not to include a wall; but the definition depends on circumstances, and may include a reservoir (Moran v. Marsland, 1909, 1 K. B. 744). The London Building Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. clviii.), has no definition. The term 'new building' was defined in s. 23 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907 (c. 53) (now repealed); and see also Southend-on-Sea Corporation v. Archer, (1901) 70 L. J. K. B. 328; South Shields Corporation v. Wilson, (1901) 84 L. T. 267. An old railway carriage will be a 'new building' if the interior arrangements are altered (Hanrahan v. Leigh Urban Council, 1909, 2 K. B. 257). An advertisement hoarding is a building within a restrictive covenant (Nussey v. Provincial Bill Posting

Co., 1909, 1 Ch. 734; Stevens v. Willing & Co. Ltd., 1929, W. N. 53. See also Paddington Corporation v. Attorney-General, 1906, A. C. 53. With regard to the Disused Burial Grounds Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 72), an electricity transformer chamber (Rector and Churchwardens of the Parish of St. Nicholas Acons v. London County Council, 1928, A. C. 469) and a urinal (the Mayor, Aldermen and Councillors of Bermondsey v. Mortimer, 1926, P. 87), are buildings within the meaning of s. 3, but a small tool-shed is not (ibid.). Building is defined in the Roads Improvement Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 68), s. 11, as including 'any erection of whatsoever material and in whatsoever manner constructed and any part of a building.' For the Lead Paint (Protection against Poisoning) Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 37), building is defined as including fixtures, s. 7. The term 'building' for the purposes of the Representation of the People Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 45), s. 27 (repealed 7 & 8 Geo. 5, c. 64), is discussed in Powell v. Boraston, (1865) 18 C. B. N. S. 175, at p. 179. See also 18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 12. See NEW BUILDING.

Building Acts. The Acts commonly so called apply only to the metropolis, and have been called the Metropolitan Building Acts. The Metropolitan Building Acts, 1855 and 1862 (which were public general Acts), and their amending enactments were repealed and re-enacted with many amendments by the local and personal London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. cxxiii.), and its amending Acts of 1898 and 1905. These in their turn are repealed by the London Building Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. clviii.). See LONDON BUILDING ACT.

The old Building Act, par excellence, the Fires Prevention (Metropolis) Act, 1774 (14 Geo. 3, c. 78), although otherwise partial and repealed, has two sections, 83 and 86, which are still in force and (it is submitted) of universal application. See as to s. 86, Ex parte Goreley, (1864) 4 De G. J. & S. 477, but compare Westminster Fire Office v. Glasgow Provident Society, (1888) 13 App. Cas. at p. 167, per Lord Watson. Section 33 provides for the application of insurance money in reinstatement of insured buildings after damage by fire, and section 86 that no action shall lie against a person in whose house a fire accidentally begins.

Building Contract. A building contract means a contract for the building of anything—not necessarily a house, but any other physical construction' (Carlisle

R. D. C. v. Carlisle Corporation, 1909, 1 K. B. 471, at p. 483).

Building Lease, a lease of land for a long term of years, usually 99, at a rent called a ground rent, the lessee covenanting to erect certain buildings thereon according to specification, and to maintain the same, etc., during the term. At the end of the term, the land, with the buildings upon it, reverts to the lessor and his assigns. By 45 & 46 Vict. c. 38, s. 2 (10) (iii), a building lease is defined as a lease for the erecting and improving of, and the adding to and the repairing of, buildings, and by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 205, as a lease for building purposes or purposes connected therewith. Such leases of settled land are regulated by the Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 44, and (as to leases by mortgagees), by s. 99, sub-ss. 58 (3), (9) and (10) of the L. P. Act, 1925. See the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 36), s. 2 (1), in connection with a tenant's claim for compensation for improvements.

Building Societies, associations of persons subscribing to a common fund which is employed in making advances to such members (called 'advanced members') as desire to obtain them on the security of real or leasehold property, while those members who do not desire an advance (called 'investing members') simply pay their contributions to the society and receive interest thereon. Building societies are either (a) Unincorporated, or (b) Incorporated. Unincorporated societies (now few in number) are governed by the Building Societies Act of 1836 (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 32), and certain sections of the old Friendly Societies Acts of 1829 and 1835 (repealed for all other purposes) incorporated therewith. Incorporated societies are governed by the Building Societies Acts, 1874 to 1894, and the Building Societies Regulations, 1895, made thereunder. A cross division of these societies is into (1) Terminating, and (2) Permanent. A Terminating Society is one which continues only until every member has obtained an advance and then comes to an end; a Permanent Society is one which continues indefinitely. Every society is governed by its rules, which must be registered with the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies and form the contract between the society and its members. The form and operation of receipts by building societies for moneys paid on redemption of mortgages in England and Wales is now governed by s. 115 of the L. P. Act, 1925.

See Wurtzburg on Building Societies, and Davis on Building Societies, 5th ed.

Bulk. See LADEN IN BULK. The Electric Lighting Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 34), provides (s. 4) for the 'supply of electricity in bulk,' which means (s. 25) to supply electricity—

- (a) to any local authority, company, or person authorized to distribute electricity to be used for the purposes of distribution, or
- (b) to any local authority authorized by any general or special Act to undertake or contract for the lighting of streets, bridges, or public places, to be used for the purposes of lighting streets, bridges, and public places.

Bull [fr. bull, Lat., a stud or boss], a brief or mandate of the Pope or Bishop of Rome, so called from the seal of lead or gold affixed to it, upon which was engraved on one side an image of St. Paul on the right of a cross, and that of St. Peter on the left, and on the other the Pope's name, and the year of his pontificate.

To procure, publish, or put in use any of these is made treason, punished by death, by 13 Eliz. c. 2. That Act, though long previously obsolete, was not expressly repealed until 1846, and then only by an Act (the Religious Disabilities Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 59)) repealing it so far only as the same imposes the penalties or punishments therein mentioned.

Bull, a cant term used in the Stock Exchange to denote one who has bought stocks or shares with the intention of reselling on a rise in the market value. It may be applied either to a purely speculative purchaser or to one who makes a temporary investment. See BEAR.

Bull and Boar. By the custom of some places the parson was obliged to keep these animals for the use of the parishioners, in consideration of his having tithes of calves and pigs, etc.—1 Roll. Abr. 559.

Bull Baiting. See BAITING.

Bulletin, an official notice of a public transaction or matter of public importance; an abridged edition of the London Gazette.

Bullion [fr. billon, Fr., copper], uncoined gold and silver in the mass. Those metals are called so, either when smelted from the native ore, and not perfectly refined; or when they are perfectly refined, but melted down into bars or ingots, or into any unwrought body, of any degree of fineness. As to the purchase of bullion for the Mint, see Coinage Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 10), s. 9, which provides that the Treasury may, from time to time, issue to the Master of the Mint such sums as may be necessary to enable him to purchase bullion to provide supplies of coin for the public service. As to the weights used in sales of bullion, see Weights and Measures Act, 1878, replacing 16 & 17 Vict. c. 29. See CURRENCY AND BANK NOTES ACT.

Bulls. Licence required for keeping, see 21 & 22 Geo. 5, c. 43.

Bulter, or Boulter, the bran or refuse of meal after it is dressed; also the bag in which it is dressed. Hence, bulted or boulted bread, being the coarsest bread.

Bum-Bailiff, a person employed to dun one for a debt; the bailiff employed to arrest for debt. See BOUND-BAILIFFS.

Bungalow. Generally, a building on a single, or ground floor, the roof meeting the walls enclosing that floor, either with or without gables, but the space under the roof may be utilized; see Ward v. Paterson, 1929, 2 Ch. 396 (restrictive covenant).

Buoys and Beacons. As to supervision of these marks and signs of the sea, see ss. 634 et seq. and s. 742 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894.

Burden of Proof [onus probandi, Lat.]. The most prominent canon of evidence is, that the point in issue is to be proved by the party who asserts the affirmative, according to the civil law maxims, Ei incumbit probatio qui dicit, non qui negat; Actori incumbit onus probandi; and Affirmanti non neganti incumbit probatio. The burden of proof lies on the person who has to support his case by proof of a fact which is peculiarly within his own knowledge, or of which he is supposed to be cognizant. See Best on Evidence, Bk. III., Pt. 1, ch. 2.

Bureau [fr. bujo, It., dark], a large writing table; also the office of any functionary where public business is transacted.

Bureaucracy, government by departments, each under a chief; a word to describe the system used in an invidious sense.

Burgage-holding, a tenure by which lands in royal boroughs in Scotland are held of the sovereign. The service was watching and warding, and was done by the burgesses within the territory of the borough, whether expressed in the charter or not. See 31 & 32 Vict. c. 101.

Burgage-tenure. Tenure in burgage is, where an ancient burrough is, of which the King is lord, and they, that have tenements within the burrough, hold of the King their tenements; that every tenant for his tenement ought to pay to the King a certaine rent by yeare etc. And such tenure is but tenure in socage.—Co. Litt. 108 b. And the same manner is, where another lord spirituall or temporall is lord of such a burrough, and the tenants of the tenements in such a burrough hold of their lord to pay, each of them yearly, an annual rent.—Ibid. 109 a. It was a freehold tenure and may still give a right of vote, see Representation of the People Act, 1918 (7 & 8 Geo. 5, c. 64), s. 17(2). The tenure of Borough English (q.v.) is sometimes connected with burgage tenure. See also schedule 12 (1) (d) of the Law of Property Act, 1922, as amended.

Burbote, a contribution towards the building or repairing of castles or walls of a borough or city.—Cowel; Fleta, l. 1, c. 47.

Burg-breche [fidejussionis violatio, Lat., a breach of pledge], a fine imposed on the community of a town for a breach of the peace, etc.—Leg. Canuti, c. lv.

Burgesses [fr. burgeise, O.E.; bourgeois, O. Fr.; birgensis, Lat.], generally the inhabitants of a borough or walled town; sometimes restricted to the magistrates, etc., of corporate towns, and sometimes to the representatives of a borough in the Commons House of Parliament; in and for the purposes of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), those persons who by one year's residence in a borough and occupation of property and payment of rates are entitled to be 'enrolled,' and when enrolled, to elect the 'council,' by which a municipal corporation is capable of acting. The term 'Local Government electors' was substituted for 'burgesses' by the Representation of the People Act, 1918 (c. 64), s. 72, sched. 6, par. 2. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATION.

Burgessour, a burglar.—Britt.

Burgh, in Scotland equivalent to 'borough' in England. The Town Councils (Scotland) Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 49), consolidates (repealing 12 entire Acts) various Acts from 3 Geo. 4, c. 91, to the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, Amendment Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 18). Important changes have been made by the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1929 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 50).

Burgherlicthe, or Burgerliche, a breach of the peace in a city, etc.—Domesday.

Burgh-malls, yearly payments to the Crown of Scotland, introduced by Malcolm III., and resembling the English fee-farm rents.

Burghware, a citizen or burgess.

Burglary [fr. burg, Sax., a house, and larron, a thief, fr. latro, Lat.]. At Common Law burglary is the breaking and entering of the dwelling-house of another in the night-time with intent to commit a felony therein. Section 25 of the Larceny Act, 1916, provides that—

Every person who in the night (1) Breaks and enters the dwelling-house of another with intent to commit any felony therein; or (2) breaks out of the dwelling-house of another, having (a) entered the said dwelling-house with intent to commit any felony therein; or (b) committed any felony in the said dwelling-house, shall be guilty of the felony called burglary and on conviction thereof liable to penal servitude for life.

Section 46 defines night as meaning 'the interval between nine o'clock in the evening and six o'clock in the morning of the succeeding day.' As to the meaning of dwelling-house, see s. 46 (2). The felonious intent must exist, but need not be executed. The 'breaking,' which may be either actual, e.g., the forcing of a door or the opening of a window, or constructive, as where the offender obtains admittance by fraud, is a necessary part of the offence of burglary, although entry without a breaking in is a felony punishable with penal servitude not exceeding seven years (s. 27, ibid.). Burglary is triable at quarter sessions (s. 38, replacing s. 1 of the Burglary Act, 1896).

The question whether and how far it is justifiable to kill a burglar is by no means clear. If violence on the part of the burglar be reasonably apprehended, it is not murder to shoot him dead with intent to kill him, but whether it is justifiable to kill merely in defence of property is doubtful. By s. 7 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, 'no punishment or forfeiture shall be incurred by any person who shall kill another by misfortune or in his own defence, or in any other manner without felony,' and this kind of exculpation has been applied to unarmed burglary by high authorities. See 1 Hale, 481, 484; Archbold's Cr. Pl., 29th ed., p. 893, and the authorities there cited, especially R. v. Scully, (1824) 1 C. & P. 319; 28 R. R. 780.

Burghmote, a court of a borough.—Leg. Canuti, c. xlv.

Burl, husbandmen.—Dugd. Mon. t. 3, p. 183.

Burial. Burial in some part of the parish churchyard without payment is a Common Law right, but not burial in any particular part of it. In order to acquire a perfect right to be buried in a particular vault or place, a faculty must be obtained from the ordinary, as in the case of a pew; or a man may prescribe that he is occupier of an ancient messuage in a parish, and ought to have separate burial in such a vault within the church, and such prescription implies that a faculty was originally obtained. The faculty, however, fails when the family cease to be parishioners. In Bryan v. Whistler, (1828) 8 B. & C. 288, it was held that an exclusive right of burial in a vault is an easement, and therefore cannot be granted by parol or by mere writing without a deed.

Burial must not take place except after the Registrar of Births, Deaths or Marriages has issued his certificate of death or by order of a Coroner, see 16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 48. See CORONER.

A clergyman may be prosecuted in the Ecclesiastical Court for improperly refusing to bury a dissenter or other person, for by the 68th canon 'no minister shall refuse or delay to bury any corpse that is brought to the church or churchyard (convenient warning being given him before), in such manner and form as is prescribed in the Book of Common Prayer.' See Escott v. Martin, (1841) 4 Moore, P. C. 104, in which a clergyman was suspended under the canon for refusing to bury a child which had been baptized by a Wesleyan minister.

Burial Grounds. The Common Law place of burial is the parish churchyard; but the growth of population and sanitary reasons having made additional burial grounds necessary, these began to be provided by companies specially authorized thereto by local Acts of Parliament, and in 1847 the Cemeteries Clauses Act (10 & 11 Vict. c. 65), consolidated the provisions usually contained in the local Acts, which thenceforward usually, though not necessarily, incorporated that Act.

In 1852 an adoptive Burial Act (15 & 16 Vict. c. 85), enabled elective 'burial boards' of metropolitan parishes to acquire land for burial grounds, and this Act was applied to boroughs and parishes by an Act of 1853 and subsequent Acts, the parish meetings in rural parishes being constituted the sole adopting bodies by s. 7 of the Local Government Act 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73). The Burial Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 41), allows burial in a churchyard without Church of England rites; and the Burial Act, 1900, (63 & 64 Vict. c. 15), regulates the consecration of burial grounds not being churchyards, and otherwise amends the law affecting such burial-grounds. By the Burial Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 44), no consent to the use of grounds for burials is required in respect of a house erected within 100 yards of a burial ground after the ground has been once so appropriated. See Open Spaces Act, 1907, and as to the rating of burial-grounds, Winstanley v. North Manchester Overseers, 1910, A. C. 7, also Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Burial'; Baker or Little on the Law of Burial; and CREMATION.

A creditor cannot arrest or detain the body of the deceased debtor. See per Lord Ellenborough in Jones v. Ashburnham, (1804) 4 East, 455.

Burkism (from the name of its first perpetrator, who was executed at Edinburgh in January, 1829), the practice of killing persons for the purpose of selling their bodies for dissection. See preamble of the Anatomy Act, 1833 (2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 75).

Burlaw. See BY-LAW.

Burnetta, or Brunetta, cloth made of dyed wool.—Lyndewood.

Burning in the hand. See BRANDING.

Burning of houses, outhouses, etc. See ARSON, and Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), ss. 1 et seq.

Burning to Death, an ancient punishment (1) of women for petty treason, last inflicted for murder of a husband in 1726; (2) of any person for heresy. See HERETICO COMBURENDO, DE.

Burrochium, a burroock, dam, or small weir over a river, where traps are laid for the taking of fish.

Bursar [fr. bursarius, Lat.; whence purse, and purser, a ship's officer], a treasurer of a college.

Bursaria, the exchequer of collegiate or conventual bodies; or the place of receiving, paying, and accounting by the bursars. Also stipendiary scholars, who live upon the burse, fund, or joint-stock of the college.

Burseholders. See HEADBOROUGH.

Busellas [fr. bouts, O. Fr., leathern vessels, for holding wine], a bushel.

Bushel [fr. busse, a box; busken, a little box], a dry measure containing eight gallons or four pecks.

Business Day. For the purposes of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 92 provides that any day other than (a) Sunday, Good Friday, Christmas Day, (b) a bank holiday, (c) a day appointed by royal proclamation as a public fast or thanksgiving, is a business day.

Business Names. The Registration of Business Names Act, 1916, necessitates the registration of every firm or person carrying on business in the United Kingdom unless carried on in their true names. 'Business' includes profession. The Act imposes penalties for any period of non-registration or fraud when furnishing any statement required by the Act. Section 8 provides that any firm or person, in default of registration, shall be unable to enforce contracts made in relation to the business in respect of which the default has been made. Provisions are, however, made for obtaining relief in certain cases. Firms and persons obliged to register under the Act must set out in trade catalogues, business letters, etc., the true name or names of the person or persons trading under the business name. The fees payable on registration have been increased by s. 5 of the Fees Increase Act, 1923. See also the Companies Act, 1929, s. 145, which applies and extends the provisions of the Companies (Particulars as to Directors) Act, 1917, to certain limited companies registered in England or incorporated outside Great Britain and all carrying on business here as money-lending companies and obliges them to disclose the names, nationality, if not British, and changes of name and other particulars of their directors and to set out such names on trade catalogues, etc. No proceedings for penalties are to be instituted except by or by leave of the Board of Trade. The memorandum of every company must state the name of the company (Companies Act, 1929 (c. 23), s. 2), and see s. 344 ibid. in regard to particulars required by the Act from foreign and other companies incorporated outside Great Britain.

Busones comitatus, the barons of a county.

—Blount; 2 Reeves, c. viii. p. 2.

Bussa, a ship.—Blount.

Busta, Bustus, and Buscus, browse or brushwood.

Butcher, a person who carries on the trade of killing animals, or of selling the flesh of such animals, for human consumption. No license is required, neither are any special regulations applicable. See, however, SLAUGHTER HOUSES; UNSOUND FOOD.

Buthscarle, mariners or seamen.—Seld. Mare Clause. 184.

Butler [fr. bouteiller, Fr., as if fr. bouteille, a bottle; or fr. buttery, butt, a barrel]. See BOTILER.

Butler's Ordinance, a law for the heir to punish waste in the life of the ancestor. Though it be on record in the Parliament Book of Edward I., yet it never was a statute, nor ever so received; but only some constitution of the king's council, or lords in parliament, which never obtained the strength or force of an Act of Parliament.—Hale's Hist. p. 18.

Butlerage, an ancient hereditary duty belonging to the Crown, much older than the customs. It was a right of taking two tuns of wine from every ship importing into England twenty tuns or more, and by King Edward I. was exchanged into a duty of 2s. for every tun imported by merchant strangers. It was called butlerage, because paid to the king's butler; and also prisage, because it was a taking or purveyance of wine to the king's use.—4 Inst. 30.

Butt, 108 gallons.

Butter Factory. 'Any premises on which by way of trade butter is blended, re-worked or subjected to any other treatment, but not so as to cease to be butter.' Such premises have to be registered and are open to inspection by any officer of the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries or of the Local Government Board, by virtue of the Butter and Margarine Act, 1907. See MARGARINE.

Butts, the ends of short pieces of land in arable ridges or furrows. Also the place where archers meet with their bows and arrows to shoot at a mark.

Butty, a local term in the North for the associate or deputy of another, chiefly used in connection with mines, where the 'butty-man' undertakes, with a gang of men selected by himself, to perform a particular piece of work; also of things used in common. See in this connection Marrow v. Flimby & Co., 1898, 2 Q. B. 588.

Buyer [fr. byegan, bohte, A.S.; bygge, O.E.; to purchase for money] a purchaser. See CAVEAT EMPTOR.

Buying of Pleas. See MAINTENANCE.

Buzonis, the shaft of an arrow before it is fletched or feathered.—Jac. Law Dict.

Bye [fr. by, Sax.], signifieth a dwelling.—Co. Litt. 5 b.

Bye-bill-wuffa, a deed of mortgage or conditional sale. See KUT-KUBALA.—Indian.

By-laws, or Bye-laws [fr. bilagines, from by, Sax., pagus, civitas, and lagen, lex.—Spelm.], the laws, regulations, and constitutions of corporations, for the government of their members. See per Lord Russell, C.J., in Kruse v. Johnson, 1898, 2 Q. B. 91. They are binding, unless contrary to law, or unreasonable, and against the common benefit, and then they are void.

No trading company is allowed to make by-laws which may affect the Crown, or the common profit of the people, under penalty of 40*l.*, unless they be approved by the chancellor, treasurer, and chief justices, or the judges of assize.—19 Hen. 7, c. 7.

County Councils and Borough Councils

under Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), s. 249; may make by-laws for the good rule and government of the whole or any part of the county or borough, as the case may be, and for the prevention and suppression of nuisances: Provided that by-laws made under this section by a County Council shall not have effect in any borough. The confirming authority shall be the Secretary of State or the Minister; when confirmed the validity shall not be questioned in any legal proceedings on the ground that the Secretary of State or Minister is not the confirming authority.

The council of an urban or rural district has power to enforce by-laws made by a county council which are for the time being in force in the district.

Sections 250–252 deals with the procedure for making by-laws and penalties for their breach, and evidence of their existence.

Railway Companies have the power of making by-laws, by the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), and uniform by-laws made under this power apply to every railway company. Like powers are contained in the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 124; Commissioners Clauses Act, 1847, s. 96; Markets and Fairs Clauses Act, 1846, s. 42; Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847, s. 83; Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, ss. 126, 200; and Town Police Clauses Act, 1847, ss. 68, 71.

The Public Health Act, 1875, by ss. 182–6, regulated the making of by-laws under that Act, and these sections were incorporated by reference in the Factory and Workshop Act, and the Public Libraries Act of 1901. See also Public Health and Housing Acts, 1936.

By the Interpretation Act, 1889 (see that title), a statutory power to make by-laws includes a power to rescind, revoke, amend, or vary them (s. 32), and may be exercised at any time after the passing and before the commencement of the empowering Act, if the commencement be delayed (s. 37).

Bysax, the first month of the Bengal year, beginning on the 11th of April, and ending on the 11th of May.

C.

C, inscribed upon a ballot in the Roman Courts of Judicature, stood for condemno.—Tay. C. L. 192.

C.I.F.—'Cost, insurance, and freight.' Sometimes written C.F.I. These letters in a mercantile contract denote that the price named includes the price of the goods (cost), their insurance during transit to the purchaser, and the carriage (freight). As to obligations of parties to a C.I.F. contract, see Biddell Bros. v. Clemens Horst, 1911, 1 K. B. at p. 952; 1912, A. C. 18; Manbre Saccharine Co. v. Corn Products, 1919, 1 K. B. 198; Wilson Holgate v. Belgian Grain Co., 1920, 2 K. B. 1.

Cab. Abbreviated from the French cabriolet, a species of hackney-carriage (see that title) introduced in London in 1820. As to penalties for defrauding cabmen, see the London Cab Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 26). For the lawful fares of cabs, see London Cab and Stage Carriage Act, 1907; and the various orders made by the Secretary of State. As to disputes concerning the correct fare, see the London Hackney Carriage Act, 1853. Consult Charley on Cabs.

Cabal, a small association for the purpose of intrigue; an intrigue. This name was given to that ministry in the reign of Charles II. formed by Clifford, Ashley, Buckingham, Arlington, and Lauderdale, who concerted a scheme for the restoration of popery. The initials of these five names form the word 'cabal'; hence the appellation.—Hume, ix. 69.

Caballist, a factor or broker in French commerce.

Caballa, belonging to a horee.—Domesday.

Caballaria [fr. caballus, Lat., a horse], pertaining to a horse. It was a feudal tenure of lands, the tenant furnishing a horseman suitably equipped in time of war or when the lord had occasion for his service.

Cabinet Council, a private and confidential assembly of the most considerable ministers of state (all being Privy Councillors), to concert measures for the administration of public affairs; first established by Charles I., and not expressly recognized by law. For a sketch of the history and functions of the Cabinet, see Lord Morley's Walpole, ch. vii.

Cable [fr. cabl, Welsh; cabel, Dut.], the great rope of a ship, to which the anchor is fastened. The proof and sale of chain cables and anchors, formerly regulated by the Chain Cable and Anchors Acts, 1864, 1871, and 1874 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 27), (34 & 35 Vict. c. 101), and (37 & 38 Vict. c. 51) (see Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Shipping'), are now regulated by the consolidating Anchors and Chain Cables Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 23), which simplifies and amends the law by providing more elaborate tests, the schedule containing which takes the place of Rules of the Board of Trade, by which Board, however, it can be altered from time to time.

Cablish [fr. cado, Lat., to fall; cablis, O. Fr.], brushwood, or more properly wind-fall-wood, according to Spelman.

Cachepolus, or Cacherellas, an inferior bailiff, or catchpole.—Jac. Law Dict.

Cachet, Lettres de, letters issued and signed by the kings of France, and counter-signed by a secretary of state, authorizing the imprisonment of a person, usually in the Bastille. Abolished during the revolution of 1789.

Cadastral, an official statement of the quantity and value of realty made for purposes of taxation.—Fr. Law.

Cadastre. (Fr.) A register of survey of lands.—Cassell's Dict.

Cade, a cask containing, of herrings 500, but of sprats 1,000.—Book of Rates, fol. 45.

Cadet [fr. cadet, Fr., the younger son of a family; said to be fr. capitulum, little chief.—Wedg.], one who is trained for the army by a course of military discipline at Woolwich, Sandhurst, Halton Camp, etc., previously to obtaining a commission in the army. Also a younger brother.—Encyc. Londin.

Cadit questio: there is an end of the argument.

Caduca, the lapse of a testamentary disposition.—Sand. Just.

Caep gildum, restoring cattle or goods.

Caerleon, in Monmouthshire, an archbishopric which became subject to the Archbishop of Canterbury in the reign of Henry I.

Cæsarian Operation [fr. Cæsar, or rather Cæso, the first of that name, who was cut out of his mother's womb], a surgical operation whereby the fœtus is taken from the mother, with a view to save the lives of both or either of them. Consult Tayl. Med. Jur.

If this operation be performed after the mother's death, the husband cannot be tenant by the curtesy; since his right begins from the birth of the issue, and is consummated by the death of the wife; but if mother and child are saved, then the husband would be entitled after her death.

Cæstororum, a kind of administration granted after a limited administration for the rest of the estate.

Caglia, a cage or coop for birds.—Rot. Claus.; 38 Hen. 3.

Calrn's Act, for enabling the Court of Chancery to award damages, and try questions of fact with a jury, 21 & 22 Vict. c. 27, repealed by Stat. Law Rev. and Civil Procedure Act, 1883, as having been superseded by s. 24 of the Judicature Act, 1873. See R. S. C. Ord. L., r. 6, and Judicature Act, 1925, s. 36.

Calangium and Calangia, a challenge, claim or dispute.—Dugd. Mon., tom. 2, fol. 252.

Calcetum and Calcea [fr. calx, Lat.; chaux, Fr., chalk], a causey, or common hard-way maintained and repaired with stones and rubbish.—Kennet's Gloss.

Calcutta, Bishop of, the metropolitan bishop of India.—3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 85, s. 94; and see 53 Geo. 3, c. 155, s. 49; 34 & 35 Vict. c. 62, and Vict. c. 13. These have been replaced, see now the Government of India Act, 1915 (c. 61), ss. 115 et seq., and the Indian Church Act, 1927 (c. 40), which defines as the occupant for the time being of the See of Calcutta, whether or not that See is constituted an Archiepiscopal See.

Caledonia, the northern part of Britannia. For the precise signification of the term consult Smith's Dict. of Greek and Roman Geography.

Calefagium, a right to take fuel yearly.

Calendar [fr. calendarium, Lat.; fr. calendæ, the first day in the month in Roman reckoning], the order and series of months, together with the festivals and fasts, which make up the year. There are two modes of computing time—by the annual course of the sun, and by the periodical revolutions of the moon. The solar year consists of 365 days, 5 hours, 48', 45'', 30''' ; the lunar year of 354 days, 3 hours, 48', 38'', 12''' . The Mohammedans adopt the lunar year. The solar year, calculated by the ancient Egyptians, has undergone various corrections and denominations.

The chief of the calendars now in use are the three following: (1) The Julian, so called because Julius Cæsar introduced into the Roman Empire the solar or Egyptian year, instead of the lunar year. The Russians and Greeks are the only nations that now use the Julian year. The common Julian year consists of 365 days, and the bissextile or leap-year (see that title), which returns every four years, of 366 days. This computation is faulty, inasmuch as it allows 365 days and six entire hours for the annual revolution of the sun, being an excess every year of 11', 14'', 30''' , beyond the true time. This, in a course of ages, had amounted to several days, and began at length to derange the order of the seasons. Leo X. paid some attention to this, but Gregory XIII. caused a new calendar to be drawn up, which is called (2) the Gregorian; and because the civil year had gained ten days, he ordered, by a bull published in 1581, that these days should be expunged, so that instead of the 5th of October, 1582, it should be reckoned the 15th. The Catholic states adopted this new calendar, but the Protestants and the rest of Europe adhered to the Julian, and hence the distinction between the old and new style, to which it is necessary to attend in all public acts and writings since 1582. The difference until 1699 was ten days, and eleven from 1700; twelve days must be reckoned during 1800, so that the 1st of January of the old style answers to the 13th of the new. (3) The Reformed Calendar differs from the Gregorian, as to the method of calculating the time of Easter and other movable feasts. The Protestants of Germany, Holland, Denmark, and Switzerland adopted this in 1700, Great Britain in 1752, Sweden in 1753, but since 1776 the Protestants of Germany, Switzerland, and Holland have adopted the Gregorian.

In England the year commenced on the 25th of March until 1753, but by the Calendar (New Style) Act, 1750 (24 Geo. 2, c. 23), the beginning of the year was transferred to the 1st of January, and the 3rd of September, 1752, was reckoned the 14th of the same month in order to accommodate the English chronology to the new style. 6 Rymer's Fœdera, 119; 2 Hall. Lit. Hist. 56, 329; Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Time.'

Calendar Month, a period of time consisting of 30 days in April, June, September, and November; of 31 days in the remainder of the months, except February, which consists of 28 days, except in leap-year, when the intercalary day is added, making 29 days. See MONTH.

Calendar of Prisoners, a list of all the prisoners' names in custody in any prison for trial at assizes or sessions, to be delivered by the gaoler of the prison to the judges of assize and justices in quarter sessions, by virtue of s. 62 of the Prison Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 126). The judge's copy shows previous convictions. It is usual for the judge, but not obligatory upon him, to sign the calendar at the conclusion of the business.

Calends [fr. καλέω, Gk., to call], the first day of each month among the Romans.

Greek Calends, a term for a time that will never arrive, the Greeks having nothing which corresponded to the Roman calends.

Call, 1. (1) The election of students to the degree of barrister-at-law, hence (2) the ceremony or epoch of election, and (3) the number of persons elected. See INNS OF COURT.

2. The demand for payment of an instalment other than payments due at fixed dates by the terms of the prospectus or agreement to take shares (Croskey v. Bank of Wales, (1863) 4, 9 Giff. 314), due upon shares. On the issue of shares a certain portion only of the issue price is usually demanded on allotment and at fixed dates thereafter: the balance is sometimes payable when demanded. In the case of limited companies the calls are limited to the total amount unpaid on each share. There is an implied promise by a purchaser of shares that he will indemnify the vendor against all future calls on shares (Spencer v. Ashworth, Partington & Co., 1925, 1 K. B. 589). See COMPANY AND CONTRIBUTORY; FLOATING CHARGE and TABLE A. (Articles 11 to 16).

3. A Stock Exchange term for the right to buy stock or shares at a fixed price on a certain date, which right is acquired by the payment of a percentage. See OPTION.

Call of the House, an imperative summons sent to every member of the House of Commons, on some particular occasion, when the sense of the whole House is deemed necessary. Members not attending when their names are called are reported as defaulters, and ordered to attend on another day, when, if they still be absent, and no excuse offered, they may be committed to the custody of the sergeant-at-arms. No such call has been enforced since 1836, when there was a call on Mr. Whittle Harvey's Motion on the Pension List. Since then calls have been ordered, but afterwards discharged or negatived. Motions for a call were negatived on July, 10, 1855, and March 23, 1882.—May's Parl. Pr. 11th ed. p. 182.

Calling the Jury, successively drawing out of a box, into which they have been previously put, the names of the jurors on the panels annexed to the nisi prius record, and calling them over in the order in which they are so drawn. The twelve persons whose names are first called, and who appear, are sworn as the jury, unless some just cause of challenge or excuse, with respect to any of them, shall be brought forward.

Calling upon a Prisoner. When a prisoner has been found guilty on an indictment, the clerk of the court addresses him and calls upon him to say why judgment should not be passed upon him. To this, he is strictly only entitled to point out a defect of law in the indictment or otherwise. See ALLOCUTUS.

Callis, the king's highway, according to old writers.—Huntingdon, lib. 1.

Calpes, a gift to the head of a clan, as an acknowledgment for protection and maintenance.—Scots Law.

Calumnia, the offence of a man who, in the language of Gaius, intelligit non recte se agere sed vezandi adversarii gratiâ actionem instituit.—Sand. Just.

Calumniators, false accusers.

Calvin's Case (Calvin v. Smith, 7 Rep. 1; 2 S. T. 559). A case decided in 1608 in which it was held that persons born in Scotland after the accession of James I. to the crown of England were not aliens but capable of inheriting land in England; see Broom's Const. Law.

Camalodunum, Maldon, in Essex.

Cambist [fr. cambium, Lat.], a person skilled in cambistry or exchanges; a trader or dealer in promissory notes and bills of exchange. Technical among merchants and bankers.

Cambridge. See UNIVERSITY.

Camera [fr. καμάρα, Gk.], the judge's chamber in Serjeants' Inn.—Ken. Glos.

The judge's private room behind the court.

A trial is said to take place in camerâ when the public are excluded from the court.

No criminal trial can take place in camerâ. Certain kinds of civil actions in the Chancery Division are heard in camerâ, e.g., cases concerning secret processes of manufacture.

It has recently been decided (contrary to what was commonly supposed to be the law) that no nullity suit or other matrimonial cause, whatever its nature, can be heard in camerâ unless justice cannot otherwise be administered; see Scott v. Scott, 1913, A. C. 417, where the whole question of hearings in camerâ is discussed at length by the House of Lords.

In a trial under the Official Secrets Act, by the 1920 Act (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 75), s. 8, the public may be excluded during part of the hearing (in certain cases) but the verdict must be pronounced in public.

By the Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 12), s. 37, the judge is empowered to clear the court while a child or young person is giving evidence in the case of an offence against decency or morality, and all persons may be excluded except officers of the Court, parties, counsel, or certain newspaper representatives. And see JUVENILE COURTS.

Cameralistics, the science of finance or public revenue, comprehending the means of raising and disposing of it.

Camera Stellata, the Star Chamber. Its authority was enlarged and confirmed by Rot. Parl. 3 Hen. 7, n. 17, and abolished in the reign of Charles I. a little before the commencement of the civil wars.—Hume, iv. 96.

Cameronians, an extreme sect of the Presbyterian party in Scotland. They disowned altogether the King's authority and that of the Government, and renounced the title of all pretenders to the throne who would not subscribe to the Solemn League and Covenant and govern according to its principles. These doctrines were chiefly enforced by two preachers named Cargill and Cameron, from the latter of whom the name was derived.

Camisia, a garment belonging to priests, called the Alb.—Pet. Blesensis.

Camoca, a garment made of silk.—Dugd. Mon., tom. 3, pl. 81.

Campaltum, a corn-field.—Pet. in Parl., 30 Ed. 1.

Campana Bajula, a small hand-bell, used in the ceremonies of the Roman Church, and retained amongst the Protestants by sextons, parish clerks, and criers.—Cumb. ap. Wharton Angl. Sacr., par. 2, p. 637.

Campartum, a part of a larger field or ground, which would otherwise be in gross or common.—Prianne, His. Coll., vol. iii. p. 89.

Campbell's (Lord) Acts—(1) for amending the practice in prosecutions for libel (see that title), 6 & 7 Vict. c. 96 (the Libel Act, 1843); and (2) the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846, now, with its amending Acts, known as the Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846 to 1908, provided for the compensation of the families of persons killed by negligence (q.v.). To found an action the death must have resulted from the act, neglect, or default of the defendant against whom an action founded on such act, neglect, or default would have lain at the suit of the deceased had he not succumbed to his injuries. The damages recoverable are strictly on the basis of compensation (e.g., funeral expenses not recoverable: Clark v. London General Omnibus Co., 1906, 2 K. B. 648). The action, which is to compensate the wife, husband, parent, or child of the deceased, may be commenced by the executor or administrator, but if not instituted within six months, then any person interested may commence the proceedings. The action must be started within 12 months after the death. The rights of persons to claim under this Act cannot be abrogated by a contract entered into by the deceased

Campfight, the trial of a cause by combat of two champions in the field. If it were a crime deserving death, the campfight was for life or death; if the offence deserved only imprisonment, the campfight was accomplished when one combatant had subdued the other, so as either to make him yield or take him a prisoner. The accused might choose another to fight in his stead, but the accuser was obliged to fight in his own person. See BATTEL, WAGER OF. The combatants were armed with similar weapons.—3 Inst. 221.

Campus Mail, an anniversary assembly of our ancestors, held on May-day, when they confederated for the general defence of the kingdom.—Leges Edw. Conf., c. 35.

Can, clearance, averment.—Anc. Hist. Eng.

Can, a rod or distance in the measure of ground.

Canal. As to breaking down bank, dam, wall, etc., of, see Malicious Damage Act, 1861, s. 30; as to setting fire to buildings belonging to, see s. 4; as to stealing vessels from, see Larceny Act, 1916, s. 15.

By the Canal Tolls Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 28), canal companies may vary their tolls, but must charge the public equally; and by the Canal Carriers Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 42), they may act as carriers. The Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 31), as amended by the Regulation of Railways Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 48), provides for the interchange of traffic between canal and railway companies, and for the due maintenance of canals by railway companies owning them; and the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 25), gives 'the Railway and Canal Commission' extensive control over the management of canals, more especially if owned by railway companies, and provides for a new classification and schedule of rates to be charged for canal traffic. The Act was amended by the Railway and Canal Traffic Acts of 1894 and 1913. See Chit. Stat., tits. 'Canals' and 'Railways.'

As to the abandonment of unnecessary or derelict canals, see s. 45 of the Act of 1888.

In London, the Canal Protection (London) Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 16), empowers local authorities to request canal companies to fence, etc., dangerous parts on canals.

As to placing telegraph lines across canals, see Telegraph Construction Act, 1911.

The Ministry of Transport Act, 1919, transferred to that Ministry the powers and duties relating to canals previously vested in other Government Departments.

Canal Boats. The registration and inspection of canal boats used as dwellings, and the education of children living therein, provided for by the Canal Boats Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 60), partly repealed by the Public Health Act, 1936, made more stringent by the Canal Boats Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 75), repealed and replaced by the P. H. Act, 1936. See ss. 249 and 258 ibid. For the purposes of this Act 'canal' includes any river, inland navigation or lake or any other waters wholly or in part within a county or borough. Canal boat means any vessel used for the conveyance of goods except registered Thames barges, registered sea-going ships and pleasure vessels.

The Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 12), s. 10, deals with education of children.

Cancellaria Curia, the ancient denomination of the Court of Chancery.

Cancellarii Angliæ dignitas est, ut secundus a rege in regno habetur. 4 Inst. 78.—(The dignity of the Chancellor of England is, that he is deemed the second from the sovereign in the kingdom.)

Cancellation, any manner of obliteration and defacement, as of an adhesive stamp in the manner prescribed by s. 8 of the Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 91), which enacts that—

(1) Mode of Cancellation. An instrument, the duty upon which is required or permitted by law [see ss. 22, 34, 49 (2), 52 (3), 64, 69 (3), 78 (1), 79 (2), 80 (2), 85 (1), 90, 99, 101 (2), 110 (1), and 111 (2)], to be denoted by an adhesive stamp, is not to be deemed duly stamped with an adhesive stamp, unless the person required by law to cancel the adhesive stamp cancels the same by writing on or across the stamp his name or initials, or the name or initials of his firm, together with the true date of his so writing, or otherwise effectively cancels the stamp and renders the same incapable of being used for any other instrument, or for any postal purpose, or unless it is otherwise proved that the stamp appearing on the instrument was affixed thereto at the proper time.

(2) Plurality of Stamps. Where two or more adhesive stamps are used to denote the stamp duty upon an instrument, each or every stamp is to be cancelled in the manner aforesaid.

(3) Penalty for non-cancellation. Every person who, being required by law to cancel an adhesive stamp, neglects or refuses duly and effectually to do so in the manner aforesaid, shall incur a fine of ten pounds.

This enactment (see Re McMullen, (1902) 71 L. J. Ch. 766) is less strict than s. 24 of the repealed Stamp Act, 1870, from which it was taken. Among the instruments to which it applies are agreements not specifically charged, and charged with a 6d. duty (s. 22), which are to be cancelled by the person by whom they are first executed; proxies (s. 80) which are to be similarly cancelled; and a receipt for 2l. or more (s. 101), which is to be cancelled by the person by whom the receipt is given before he delivers it out of his hands.

Actions for the cancellation of deeds or other written instruments are assigned to the Chancery Division of the High Court (Judicature Act, 1873, s. 34 (3)). Now replaced by s. 14 of the Judicature Act, 1925.

Cancelli (lattice work), the rails or balusters inclosing the bar of a court of justice or the communion-table. Also the lines drawn on the face of a will or other writing, with the intention of revoking or annulling it.

Candidate [fr. candidatus, Lat., clothed in white], a competitor, one who solicits or proposes himself for a place or office. The name is derived from the toga candida in which competitors at Rome were habited. In the Corrupt Practices Acts the expression has a specially extensive meaning. See Corrupt and Illegal Practices Prevention Act, 1883, s. 63, by which, with a saving for a person nominated without his consent—

In the Corrupt Practices Prevention Acts, as amended by this Act, the expression 'candidate at an election' and the expression 'candidate' respectively mean, unless the context otherwise requires, any person elected to serve in Parliament at such election, and any person who is nominated as a candidate at such election, or is declared by himself or by others to be a candidate on or after the day of the issue of the writ for such election, or after the dissolution or vacancy in consequence of which such writ has been issued.

Making certain false statements about a candidate is an illegal practice, and may also be restrained by injunction; see Municipal Elections (Corrupt and Illegal Practices) Act, 1911.

Candle, sale by. See INCH OF CANDLE.

Candlemas-day, a festival appointed by the Church to be observed on the second day of February in every year, in honour of the purification of the Virgin Mary; so called from the processions with lighted candles, and consecration of candles on that day for the service of the ensuing year. In some parts of the country agricultural tenancies date from this day.

Canes opertiæ, dogs with whole feet, not lawed, i.e., not having the fore-claws cut off, to disable them from running at deer.

Canestellus [canistrum, Lat.], a basket.

Canfari, a trial by hot iron.

Canon [fr κανών, Gk., a rule], a law or ordinance of the Church; also a residentiary member of a cathedral chapter.—3 & 4 Vict. c. 113. As to the resignation of canons, see 35 & 36 Vict. c. 8. As to sale of residence, see Cathedrals (Homes of Residents) Measure, 1936 (No. 2).

Canon Law. When Christian communities formed themselves into congregations (ἐκκλησίαι), certain resolutions were agreed upon for their government; these were termed rules (κανόνες, forma, disciplina); and the phrases canonica sanctio, lex canonica, and canonum jura, were not introduced until the ninth century, nor the phrase jus canonicum until the canon law began in the twelfth century to be treated as a science. The canon law, properly so called, denotes the ecclesiastical law, sanctioned by the Church of Rome. It borrows from the Roman Law many of its principles and rules of proceeding, though not servilely, nor without such variations as the independence of its tribunals and the different nature of its authorities might be expected to produce.—See Hall. Lit. Hist.

The canons made in England in 1603, and revised in 1866, are binding on the clergy only (see per Lord Hardwicke in Middleton v. Croft, (1737) 2 Str. 1056), some of them being very archaic, as canon 72, by which it is unlawful for any minister to attempt to cast out devils, except with the licence of the bishop of the diocese. They are made by Convocation, but by the Act of Submission (25 Hen. 8, c. 19), the Royal Licence is required for the making of any new canon. In 1888 canon 62 was amended into harmony with the Marriage Act, 1886, by which the legal hours for marriage were extended to 3 P.M. from 8 A.M., having previously been between 8 A.M. and noon. Canons 75 and 109, prohibiting misconduct on the part of the clergy, are given special force to by s. 12 of the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892, and a new canon was made after that Act enabling the bishop of the diocese to declare vacant the benefice of any priest declared disqualified by reason of any crime or immorality proved against him under that Act. In 1922 a new canon was made dealing with the constitution of the Lower Houses of Convocation. Canon 59 directs catechizing (see CATECHISE). Consult Mailland's Roman Canon Law in the Church of England; Mylne's Canon Law.

Canonical, agreeable to the canons of the Church.

Canonical Obedience, that duty which a clergyman owes to the bishop who ordained him, to the bishop in whose diocese he is beneficed, and also to the metropolitan of such bishop.

Canonist, a professor of ecclesiastical law.

Canons of Inheritance. See INHERITANCE.

Cantel, or Cantle [fr. chantel, Fr.], a lump, or that which is added above measure; also a piece of anything, as 'cantel of bread,' or the like.—Blount.

Canterbury, Archbishop of, the Primate of All England: the Chief Ecclesiastical Dignitary in the Church; his customary privilege is to crown the kings and queens of England; he is an ex-officio trustee of the British Museum. The Archbishop of Canterbury has, by 25 Hen. 8, c. 21, the power of granting dispensation in any case not contrary to the Holy Scriptures and the law of God, where the Pope used formerly to grant them, which is the foundation of his granting special licenses to marry at any place or time. By the Jews Relief Act, 1858, (21 & 22 Vict. c. 49), s. 4, the right of exercising the official ecclesiastical patronage of a Jew is vested in the Archbishop for the time being.

Cantred, or Kantress [fr. cant, or cantre, Brit., a hundred, and tre, a town or village], a hundred Welsh villages.—Dugd. Mon. pt. 1, p. 319; 28 Hen. 8, c. 3.

Canute, Laws of. An Anglo-Saxon code promulgated by King Canute, more properly Cnut (1016–35).

Cap of Maintenance, one of the regalia or ornaments of State belonging to the sovereigns of England, before whom it is carried at the coronation and other great solemnities. Caps of maintenance are also carried before the mayors of several cities in England.

Capax doll, capable of committing crime.

Cape, a judicial view touching a plea of lands or tenements, divided into cape magnum, or the grand cape, which lay before appearance to summon the tenant to answer the default and also over to the demandant; the cape ad valentiam was a species of grand cape; and cape parvum, or petit cape, after appearance or view granted, summoning the tenant to answer the default only. —Termes de la Ley; Steph. Com.

The proceedings in real actions were abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 36, and 23 & 24 Vict. c. 126, s. 26.

Capella, an oratory, or depending place of divine worship; also a chest, cabinet, or other depository of precious things, especially of religious relics.—Ken. Paroch. Antiq. 580.

Capellus, a cap, bonnet, helmet, or other covering for the head.

Capias (that you take). The writ of capias (which was a writ directing the sheriff to take the body of the defendant), as a means of commencing an action at Common Law, was altogether abolished, and a new writ, called a 'capias on mesne process,' or 'bailable process,' was introduced by the Judgments Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110), s. 3, which limited the application of the writ to cases in which the cause of action amounted to 20*l.* or upwards, and the debtor was about to quit England, unless forthwith apprehended; see now the Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), s. 6, abolishing arrest on mesne process; and see MESNE PROCESS.

Capias ad audiendum judicium (that you take to hear judgment). This writ is awarded and issued, in case the defendant be found guilty of a misdemeanour (the trial of which may happen in his absence), to bring him up to the Court to receive sentence.

Capias ad respondendum (that you take to answer). A process issued in cases of injury accompanied with force, or otherwise, against the defendant's person, when he neglected to appear upon the former process of attachment, or had no substance whereby to be attached, subjecting his person to imprisonment.—3 Bl. Com. 281. See 48 Geo. 3, c. 58.

Capias ad satisfaciendum (that you take to satisfy); called in practice a ca. sa. A writ of execution of the highest nature, inasmuch as it deprived a person of liberty, till the satisfaction awarded be made. The writ was addressed to the sheriff, commanding him to take the body of the defendant and have him at Westminster on a day therein named, or immediately after the execution of the writ, to make the plaintiff satisfaction for his demand, or remain in custody till he did. The general rule was that any person might be arrested under this writ who was not privileged from being held to bail under a capias ad respondendum. By 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 57, this kind of execution was abolished 'in any action for the recovery of any debt wherein the sum recovered shall not exceed 20*l.*, exclusive of the costs recovered by such judgment,' and by the Debtors Act, 1869, (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), in any action whatever, unless the defendant could, but would not, pay. See IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT, and DEBT.

Capias in withernam (that you take by way of reprisals). If the goods before an action of replevin had been concealed, so that the sheriff could not replevy them, then, upon plaint being levied in the County Court by the plaintiff, the plaintiff might issue this writ directing the sheriff to take goods or cattle of the defendant, to the value of those taken by him, and deliver them to the plaintiff, who gave a bond with sureties, conditioned to prosecute his suit and to return the goods, etc., so to be delivered to him, if a return of them should be afterwards adjudged. Goods taken in withernam could not be replevied till the original distress was forthcoming.

Also, after verdict and judgment for defendant in replevin, and the usual writ of execution de retorno habendo had been sued out, to which the sheriff had returned that the goods, etc., were concealed or eloiigned, i.e., conveyed to places unknown to him, so that he could not execute the writ, the defendant might then sue out a capias in withernam, requiring the sheriff to take other goods, etc., of the plaintiff to the value of the goods, etc., eloiigned, and deliver them to the defendant, to be kept by him until the plaintiff deliver to him the goods, etc., originally replevied. The whole process has long been obsolete. See REPLEVIN.

Capias pro fine, or Misericordia (that you take for the fine or in mercy). Formerly, if the verdict was for the defendant, the plaintiff was adjudged to be amerced for his false claim; but if the verdict was for the plaintiff, then in all actions vi et armis, or where the defendant, in his pleading, had falsely denied his own deed, the judgment contained an award of a capiatur pro fine; in all other cases the defendant was adjudged to be amerced. The insertion of the misericordia, or of the capiatur in the judgment, has long been unnecessary. Abolished by 5 & 6 Wm. & M., c. 12.

Capias utlagatum (that you take the outlaw). This writ is either general, against the person only; or special, against the person, lands, and goods. Outlawry is abolished in civil proceedings; but survives (though long practically disused) for criminal purposes, and a form of the writ (No. 62) may be found in the Appendix to the Crown Office

Rules of 1906, which also (by Rules 88-110) provide for procedure to outlawry and in reversal of outlawry.

Caplatur, judgment quod. See CAPIAS PRO FINE, or MISERICORDIA.

Capita [M. Lat.], abutments or boundaries.

Capita, Per (by heads). Distribution of personality per capita (professedly borrowed from the civilians, and enacted in the Statute of Distribution) happens when all the claimants claim in their own right, in equal degree of kindred, and not jure representationis (per stirpes), in the right of another person, as if the next of kin be the intestate's three children, A., B., and C.; here the intestate's personality is divided into three equal portions, and distributed per capita, one to each. The expression 'per capita' does not occur in the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, which repealed the Statute of Distribution and altered and diminished family rights in the distribution of intestate estates. See WIDOW in regard to all deaths after 1925.

Capital [fr. capitalis; caput, Lat.]. The corpus of property of any description which may or may not be the source of a periodical or other return (fructus, produce or income). The word 'capital' when employed in Company Law is used in different senses. Nominal capital is the capital of a company so stated for the purposes of division into shares. It implies nothing more than that the company is possessed of money or assets of a stated value at the company's own valuation which may be, and often is, exaggerated or illusory. Working capital means the amount employable for the purposes of a company or any other undertaking or business. See ALTERATION OF CAPITAL, COMPANY, PROSPECTUS, DIRECTORS. In the Settled Land Act, 1925, capital money arising under the Act means capital money arising under the powers or provisions of that Act or Acts which it replaces, receivable for the purposes of a settlement and includes securities representing capital money. Elaborate provisions are contained in the Act, see ss. 73-82 relating to the investment and attribution of returns to capital in the case of minerals, and timber. See SETTLED LAND. In commerce, and as applied to individuals, it is understood to mean the sum of money which a merchant, banker, or trader adventures in any undertaking, or which he contributes to the common stock of a partnership.

Capital Offences, those crimes upon conviction of which the offender is condemned to be hanged. The only crimes now punishable with death are high treason; murder; destruction of H.M. ships, arsenals, etc. (12 Geo. 3, c. 24); piracy when accompanied by attempted murder (Piracy Act, 1837 (7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 88), s. 2). See PIRACY.

Originally all felonies were capital, but early in the 19th century, mainly through the exertions of Sir Samuel Romilly, the severity of the law was mitigated by rapid steps in this respect. Larceny in a dwelling-house up to the value of 40s. was long a capital offence, with the result that juries, to save a prisoner's life, would often falsely find that valuable goods stolen were of the value of 39s.

Sentence of death cannot be pronounced on or recorded against a young person under 18 (Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 12), s. 53).

Capital Offences (Scotland). The Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 35), by s. 56 enacts that 'a capital sentence shall no longer be competent except on conviction of murder or of offences against the Act (10 Geo. 4, c. 38), which statute by s. 1 makes it a capital crime either to attempt to discharge any kind of loaded firearms at a person or maliciously to stab with intent to murder or maim, or to administer poison, with intent to murder, disable or do grievous bodily harm, or (by s. 2) to throw any sulphuric acid, etc., with intent to murder or maim.

Capital Punishment, inflicted in pursuance of the Capital Punishment Amendment Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 24) (before which executions were public), within the prison in which the offender is confined at the time of execution, in the compulsory presence of the sheriff, gaoler, chaplain, and surgeon, and such other officers of the prison as the sheriff requires, and also in the discretionary presence of any justice of the peace for the county, etc., and of such 'relatives of the prisoner, or other persons as it seems to the sheriff or visiting justices proper to admit within the prison.'—Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Criminal Law,' where see the Rules of 1888 under the Act. See SENTENCE OF DEATH.

The mode in the United Kingdom is hanging, but for high treason the Crown may alter it to beheading: see the Treason Act, 1814 (54 Geo. 3, c. 146), as amended by s. 31 of the Forfeiture Act, 1870.

Capitale, a thing which is stolen, or the value of it.—Blount.

Capitale vivens, live cattle.—Ibid.

Capitation, a tax on each person in consideration of his labour, office, rank, etc.

Capitation Fee. A fee for each person dealt with by the person who receives it; as where a schoolmaster, in addition to his salary, or instead of it, is paid one pound per annum for each boy in the school.

Capite, Tenure in, lands held by tenants immediately from the king. It was the most honourable tenure, and was of two kinds, either ut de honore, where the land was held of the king, as proprietor of some honour, castle, or manor, or ut de coronâ, where it was held in right of the Crown itself. When these tenants in capite granted portions of their lands to inferior persons, they were called mesne (middle) lords or barons, with regard to such inferior tenants, who were styled tenants paravail, the lowest tenants, because they were supposed to make 'avail' or profit of the lands. This tenure is abolished, so that tenures now created by the Crown are in common socage.—12 Car. 2, c. 24.

Capitlitium, poll-money.

Capititium, a covering for the head.—1 Hen. 4.

Capitula Itineris, articles of inquiry.—2 Reeves, c. viii. p. 4.

Capitula ruralia, assemblies or chapters, held by rural deans and parochial clergy, within the precinct of every deanery; which at first were every three weeks, afterwards, once a month, and subsequently once a quarter.—Cowel's Law Dict.

Capitulary, a code of laws.

Capitulation [fr. capitulo, Lat., to treat upon terms; fr. capitulum, a little head or division], the treaty which determines the conditions under which a besieged place is surrendered to the commanding officer of the besieging army; (2) an agreement by which the prince and the people, or those who have the right of the people, regulate the manner of government.

Capitulation. An arrangement between states providing certain immunities for or reserving jurisdiction over subjects of one state within the territory of another. See the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 37), Preamble.

Capituli agri, head-lands, lands lying at the head or upper end of lands or furrows.—Ken. Par. Ant. 137.

Captator, a person who obtains a gift or legacy through artifice.

Caption, that part of a legal instrument, as a commission, indictment, etc., which shows where, when, and by what authority it is taken, found, or executed.—Arch. Crim. Plead., tit. 'Caption.'

Capture, the arrest or seizure of a person or thing, particularly applied to the seizure of ships by an enemy in time of war. On 16th April, 1856, a treaty or declaration was signed at Paris between the powers of Great Britain, Austria, France, Russia, Sardinia, and Turkey, by which privateering is abolished, so far as those powers are concerned. See LETTERS OF MARQUE, PRIZE OF WAR.

Caputagium, head or poll-money.

Caput anni, the first day of the year.

Caput baroniæ, the castle or chief seat of a baron.

Caput jejunii, the beginning of the Lent Fast, i.e., Ash Wednesday.

Caput lupinum, a wolf's head. An outlawed felon was said to be caput lupinum, and might be knocked on the head, like a wolf.

Caput mortuum, dead; obsolete.

Car, and Char [fr. caer, Brit., city], names of places beginning with these words signify city, as Carlisle, Cardiff, etc.

Carat, a weight equal to three and one-sixth grains; the measure of purity of gold, pure gold being 24 carats.

Carcan, a pillory.

Carcanum, a prison.—Leg. Canut. Reg.

Carceatus, loaded, a ship freighted.

Carcelage, prison fees.

Cards. To keep a common house for card-playing is unlawful.—Gaming Houses Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 38); and see GAMING. Cheating at cards is punishable by the Gaming Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 100), s. 17. An excise duty of 3d. a pack—i.e., any quantity not exceeding 52—on home-made cards is levied by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 22, and a customs duty of 3s. 9d. per dozen packs on imported cards by the Customs Tariff Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 36).

Carecta and Carectata, a cart and cartload.—Dugd. Mon. tom. 2, p. 340.

Caretarius, or Carectarius, a carter.—Blount.

Carretta, a carriage, cart, or wain-load.

Cargo [fr. cargo, Sp., the load of a ship; charge, Fr.], the lading of a ship, the merchandise or wares contained and conveyed in a ship.

Caristia, dearth, scarcity, dearth.—Cowel.

Caritas, or Karite, a grace cup, an extraordinary allowance of wine or liquor.

Cark, a quantity of wool, whereof thirty make a sarplar.—27 Hen. 6, c. 2.

Carle. See KARLE.

Carnal Knowledge. As to meaning, see Offences against the Person Act, 1861, s. 63; R. v. Marsden, 1891, 2 Q. B. 149, and R. v. Russen, (1777) 1 East, P. C. 438. See tit. RAPE; ABUSING CHILDREN.

Carno, an immunity or privilege.—Cowel.

Carroome, a license by the Lord Mayor of London to keep a cart.

Carpemeals, a coarse cloth.—7 Jac. 1, c. 16.

Carrels, closets, or apartments for privacy or retirement.

Carriele, or Carracle, a ship of great burden.

Carriage by Air Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 26), was passed to give effect to the Convention for the Unification of Certain Rules relating to International Carriage by Air. The rules constitute a code of the law of carriage of passengers, luggage and goods consigned, and the liabilities of the carrier and rights and liabilities of passengers and consignors. The act is to come into force by Order in Council.

Carriage of Goods by Sea Act, 1924 (14 & 15 Geo. 5, c. 22), embodies the Hague Rules for the unification of bills of lading (q.v.).

Carrier, in its general sense, a person who undertakes to transport the goods of other persons from one place to another for hire. It is not, however, every person who undertakes to carry goods for hire that is deemed a common carrier.

A carrier of passengers is liable only for negligence and not as an insurer (Redhead v. Midland R. Co., (1869) L. R. 4 Q. B. 379).

To bring a person within the description of a common carrier, he must exercise it as a public employment; he must undertake to carry goods for persons generally; and he must hold himself out as ready to transport goods for hire, as a business, not as a casual occupation, pro hac vice.

The two obligations of a common carrier of goods are (1) to carry for everybody, and (2) to answer for all things carried as an insurer, unless lost or injured by the act of God or the King's enemies.

The second obligation, that of an insurer, is restricted by the Carriers Act, 1830 (11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 68), which protects carriers from liability in case of the loss of certain specified articles, e.g., jewellery, pictures, plate, and silks, exceeding the value of ten pounds (excepting loss by the felony of the carrier's servants or his own personal default), unless the party delivering the goods declare the value, and offer to pay, if required, an extra charge for carriage.

Railway companies (see RAILWAY) carry under the 86th section of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), canal companies under the Canal Carriers Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 42). The Act extends to carriage by land only; as to carriage by sea, or partly by land and partly by sea, see SHIPOWNER. See Macnamara on Carriers; Chitty on Contracts; CARRIAGE BY AIR.

Carry over, a term used in the Stock Exchange to denote the process of postponing the completion of a contract, either for the purchase or sale of stocks or shares, to a later date than that originally fixed. When this happens the buyer usually pays the seller interest on the capital involved, the seller retaining the stocks or shares till the transaction is ultimately completed. This interest is called a 'contango.' If, on the other hand, the buyer is anxious to pay for and take up the stocks or shares but the seller is unable to deliver, the buyer would not pay interest to the seller, but on the contrary exacts a payment from him, as consideration for postponing the completion of the contract. This payment is called a 'backwardation,' or shortly a 'back.'

Carte blanche, a white card, or free permission, signed at the bottom with a person's name, and sometimes sealed, giving another person power to subscribe what conditions he pleases. Applied generally in the sense of unlimited authority being granted.

Carte-bote. See BOTE.

Cartel [fr. cartella, It., pasteboard], a piece of pasteboard with some inscription on it, hung up in some place, and to be removed.—Florio's Dict., voce 'Cartella.' Hence a written challenge openly hung up; afterwards any written challenge. See CHARTEL.

An agreement between or conventional grouping of producers of raw materials or goods.

Cartel-ship, a vessel commissioned in time of war to exchange the prisoners of two hostile powers; also to carry any particular proposal from one to another; for this reason the officer who commands her is particularly ordered to carry no cargo, ammunition, or implements of war, except a single gun for signals.

Cartulary [fr. carta, Lat., paper], a place where papers or records are kept.

Caruca [fr. carr, old Gallic], a plough. See AVERIA CARUCÆ.

Caruage, a tax imposed on every plough for the public service.

Carucatarius, he that held lands in carvage, or plough-tenure.—Paroch. Antig. 354.

Carucate [fr. carucata terræ], Carvage, or Carve of land, a plough-land of 100 acres, or according to Skene, as much land as may be tilled in a year and a day by one plough.—Ken. Glos. 'And one plowland, carucata terræ, or a hide of land, hida terræ (which is all one), is not of any certain content, but as much as a plow can by course of husbandry plough in a year.'—Co. Litt. 69 a. This quantity varies in different counties from 60 to 120 acres.

Case. (1) A trial. (2) A trial involving some point of law so important as to be published in Law Reports (see that title) for future use as a precedent. (3) A statement of facts and documents, raising a point of law, submitted for the opinion of counsel. See PRECEDENTS.

Case, Action on the. The action on the case lay where a party sued for damages for any wrong or cause of complaint (such as negligence, or breach of contract not under seal) to which covenant or trespass did not apply. Statutory sanction was obtained for this form of action under the Statute of Westminster 2 (13 Edw. 1, c. 24), which regulated and limited the increasing practice of framing new writs by officers of the Crown and empowered the Clerks in Chancery to frame new writs in consimili casu with writs then in existence, see Pollock on Torts and Law Quarterly Review, Vol. 52, p. 68. Under the statutory sanction many new writs which were analogous to the writ of trespass, or in consimili casu with that action, were invented and issued under the appellation of 'trespass on the case' (brevia 'de transgressione super casum') as being founded on the particular circumstances of the case thus requiring a remedy, and to distinguish them from the old writ of trespass; and the injuries themselves, which are the subject of such writs, were not called trespasses, but had the general name of torts. Slander in the Limitation Act, 1623 (21 Jac. 1, c. 16), is termed 'an action on the case for words' as well as slander, two years being fixed as its limitation of time, six years being fixed for other actions on the case, whereas four were fixed for trespass, except to land, in which case the limit was six.

But another instance of the exercise of the statutory authority was the issue of the writ 'indebitatus assumpsit', and although this cause of action has been assigned to the breach (a tort) of a promise and therefore in trespass the writ may also plausibly be ascribed to have been founded on fact in consimili casu with those required to support the legal action of 'debt' (also founded, by implication, on failure to pay), see the Chancery writ, consimili casu, and ORIGINAL WRIT.

As the technical mode of pleading at Common Law was abolished by the Judicature Acts, 1873 and 1875, the term 'action on the case' only continues to exist as a convenient mode of expression, and has ceased to be a term of art.

For different kinds of actions of trespass on the case, see MALICIOUS PROSECUTION; NEGLIGENCE; DECEIT; LIBEL; SLANDER; SEDUCTION; LIGHTS; WAYS; SEDUCING FROM SERVICE.

Case for the Opinion of Courts of Law. Prior to 16 & 17 Vict. c. 86, s. 61, the Court of Chancery used to direct cases to be submitted for the opinion of a court of law; but that Act gave the Court of Chancery the power of deciding questions of law.

Case stated, a narrative (agreed upon by both parties to an action, or drawn up by an impartial person agreed upon by them or settled by the Court or a judge) setting forth the facts and points in dispute, with a view to a prompt decision. By R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXXIV., the parties after writ may concur in stating questions of law in the form of a special case, or if it appear to the Court or a judge from the pleadings or otherwise that there is a question of law which it would be convenient to have decided in that manner, they or he may order a special case to be stated. See SPECIAL CASE.

As to cases stated by justices of the peace on points of law only for the High Court, see Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 43), Review of Justices Decisions Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 26), and Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), s. 33; see also ARBITRATION; Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Justices'; and see R. v. Woodcock, 1907, 2 K. B. 104.

Cash [fr. caisse, Fr., a chest], money, properly ready money of the current coin of the realm, including Bank of England notes. See the Coinage Act, 1870, s. 6.

Cashier, a person entrusted with the monetary interest of an individual, a firm, or a public company; also, to deprive of office.

Cashite, a mulct.

Cassation [fr. casser, Fr., to quash], a making null and void any unjust or illegal act or decision: also a decision in the last resort.—Fr. Law. The 'Cour de Cassation' is the Highest Court of Appeal in France.

Cassatum and Cassata, a house, with land sufficient to maintain one family.

Cassetur breve (that the writ be quashed). When the defendant pleaded sufficient matter in abatement and the plaintiff could not deny it, he could either obtain leave to amend his declaration, or he might at once enter on the roll a cassetur breve, or judgment upon his prayer that his writ might be quashed, to the intent that he might sue out a better.—2 Chit. Arch. Prac. Pleas in abatement are, however, now abolished by the Judicature Act, 1875. See ABATEMENT.

Cassidle, a little sack, purse, or pocket.

Cassock, or Cassula [fr. casag, Gael., a long coat], a garment worn by a priest.

Cast, defeated at law, condemned in costs or damages.

Castel, or Castle [fr. castellum, dim. of castrum, Lat.], a fortress in a town; a principal mansion of a nobleman.—Co. Litt. 31.

Castellain, the lord, owner, or captain of a castle; the constable of a fortified house; a person having the custody of one of the Crown mansions; an officer of the forest.—Bract.; Manw.

Castellarium, the precinct or jurisdiction of a castle.

Castellarum operatio, castle-work, or service and labour done by inferior tenants for the building and upholding of castles of defence; towards which some gave their personal assistance, and others paid their contributions. See TRINODA NECESSITAS. Castleward was the service of guarding or watching at such castle.

Caster and Chester [fr. castrum, Lat.]. The places ending with either of these words are, as a rule, the sites of the castra (fortified camps) built by the Romans.

Castigatory, a certain engine of correction, otherwise called the tre-bucket, tumbrel tym-borella, cucking-stool, scolding-stool, ducking-stool, goginstole, and cokestole, corrupted from choking-stool. It was a punishment provided for scolding women, wherein they were plunged or soused overhead in the water.

In Domesday Book it is called Cathedra Stercoralis, and by the Saxons sealfiging stole. It was also anciently inflicted on brewers and bakers transgressing the laws, who were ducked in stercore (in stinking water).—Jac. Law Dict.

Castig an Essoin. See ESSOIN.

Castig Vote, the vote given by the chairman or president of a deliberative assembly when the suffrages of the meeting are equal.

The chairman, though not disqualified by law from voting (Nell v. Longbottom, 1894, 1 Q. B. 767), is usually not entitled to vote in the first instance.

The Speaker of the House of Commons (though he has no vote in the first instance) has a casting vote, and by the practice of the House gives it in favour of a motion or bill, so as to give opportunity for further consideration. So has the mayor or other chairman at a meeting of a town council (Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), s. 22, and Sched. II., r. 11), and the chairman of a county council (Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 75), and the chairman of a parish meeting, or parish council (Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), Sched. I., Pt. 2, r. 8, and Pt. 3, r. 10). These Acts have been replaced, except in regard to London, by the Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51); see s. 75, and the Provisions of Parts I. to V., of the Third Schedule. By Part V., r. 1 (2), in the case of equality of votes, the person presiding at the meeting shall have a second or casting vote; the same applies to Parish Meetings by Part VI., r. 5 (3). The Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, still applies to London, see s. 22.

By the Companies Clauses Act, 1845, the chairman of directors has a casting vote (s. 92), as has the chairman of a committee (s. 96), and the chairman of a general meeting (s. 76), and see Art. 52 of Table A. under the Companies Act, 1929.

Castle-ward, an imposition laid upon persons living within a certain distance of a castle towards the maintenance of those who watch and ward the same.—Magna Charta, cap. 15, 20; 32 Hen. 8, c. 48.

Casual Ejector, the fictitious Richard Roe in the mixed action of ejectment, before the fiction was abolished by the C. L. P. Act, 1852. See EJECTMENT.

Casual Pauper (obsolete term). Any destitute wayfarer or wanderer applying for or receiving relief. See Pauper Inmates Discharge and Regulation Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 108), and Casual Poor Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 36). These Acts were repealed and replaced by the Poor Law Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 14), which was further consolidated by the Poor Law Act, 1930 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 17); and the term used is 'Casual Poor Person' or 'Casual Poor.' The Poor Law Act, 1930 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 17), ss. 41 to 44, deals with provisions of casual wards and treatment of casual poor.

Casualty of Wards, the mails and duties due to the superior in ward-holdings.

Casu consilium, a writ of entry, granted where tenant by the courtesy, or tenant for life, alienated in fee, or in tail, or for another's life, and was brought by him in reversion against the party to whom such tenant so alienated to his prejudice, and in the tenant's lifetime.—Termes de la Ley. Abolished.

Casu proviso, a writ of entry, given by the Stat. of Gloucester, c. 7, where a tenant in dower alienated in fee, or for life, etc., and it lay for him in reversion against the alienee.—Fitz. N. B. 207. Abolished.

Casus belli, an occurrence giving rise to or justifying war.

Casus fœderis, a case stipulated by treaty, or which comes within the terms of a compact.

Casus omissus, a point unprovided for: if by statute, the omission can be remedied by another statute only (Mersea Docks case, (1888) 13 App. Cas. 602, per Lord Halsbury); and see Reg. v. Arnold, (1864) 5 B. & S. 322; Hardcastle on Statutes and Marvell on Statutes.

Cat. (1) A cat is not the subject of larceny at Common Law: for the punishment for stealing a cat, see Larceny Act, 1861, s. 21; for maliciously killing or wounding, see Malicious Damage Act, 1861, s. 41; and for painful experiment on, see Cruelty to Animals Act, 1876, s. 5. See further as to cruelty, ANIMALS.

(2) The instrument (cat o' nine tails) with which criminals are flogged in England. [See WHIPPING.] It consists of nine lashes of whipcord tied on to a wooden handle.

Cat and Mouse Act, a popular term for the Prisoners (Temporary Discharge for Ill-health) Act, 1913 (3 Geo. 5, c. 4).

Catalla, chattels. The word among the Normans primarily signified only beasts of husbandry, or, as they are still called, 'cattle'; but in a secondary sense the term was applied to all movables in general, and not only to these, but to whatever was not a fief or feud.

Catallis captis nomine distictionis, an obsolete writ that lay where a house was within a borough, for rent issuing out of the same, and which warranted the taking of doors, windows, etc., by way of distress.—Old Nat. Brev. 66.

Catallis reddendis, an obsolete writ that lay where goods delivered to a man to keep till a certain day were not upon demand re-delivered at the day.—Reg. Brev. 39.

Catals, goods and chattels. See CATALLA. Catapulta, a warlike engine to shoot darts; a crossbow.

Catascopus, an archdeacon.—Du Cange.

Catching Bargain, a purchase from an expectant heir, for an inadequate consideration. See EXPECTANT HEIR.

Catchland. Land in Norfolk, so called because it is not known to what parish it belongs, and the minister who first seizes the tithes of it, by right of pre-occupation, enjoys them for that year.—Cowel.

Catchpole, a sheriff's officer or bailiff, so called.

Catechise. Ministers of the Church of England, by Canon 59, headed 'Ministers to catechise every Sunday,' are directed 'upon every Sunday and holy-day, before Evening Prayer' 'for half an hour or more' to 'examine and instruct the youth and ignorant persons' of their parishes 'in the Ten Commandments, the Articles of the Belief and in the Lord's Prayer,' on pain of sharp reproof upon the first complaint for neglect of duty, suspension for the second offence, and, 'there being little hope that the minister will be therein reformed,' of excommunication for the third, to continue until reformation; and see also the Rubrics subjoined in the Prayer Book to the Church Catechism.

Categorical, direct; unqualified, unconditional.

Category [fr. κατηγορία, Gk.], a series or order of all the predicates or attributes contained under a genus.

Cathedral [fr. καθέδρα, Gk., a seat], the church of the bishop and head of the diocese, in which is his seat of dignity. The Cathedral Acts and Measures are 3 & 4 Vict. c. 113, 4 & 5 Vict. c. 39, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 77, 16 & 17 Vict. c. 35, 27 & 28 Vict. c. 70, 36 & 37 Vict. c. 39, 21 & 22 Geo. 5, No. 7, and 24 & 25 Geo. 5, No. 3; and as to Wales, see 6 & 7 Vict. c. 77, and Welsh Church Act, 1914.

Our cathedrals and collegiate churches have been divided into four classes:—1st, consisting of 13, being the cathedrals of the old foundation, or Ecclesiæ Cathedrales Canoniorum Secularium; 2nd, consisting of eight conventual cathedrals, constituted with deans and chapters by Hen. VIII.; 3rd, containing the five cathedrals founded, together with new bishoprics, by Hen. VIII.; 4th, the new cathedrals constituted since that time. See BISHOPRIC.

Cathedral Preferments, all deaneries, arch-deaconries, and canonries, and generally all dignities and officers in any cathedral or collegiate church, below the rank of a bishop. Consult Stephens on the Clergy.

Cathedratic, a sum of 2s. paid to the bishop by the inferior clergy; but from its being usually paid at the bishop's synod, or visitation, it is commonly named synodals.—Burn's Dict.

Catholics. See ROMAN CATHOLIC.

Cato Street Conspiracy, an extraordinary plot to assassinate the entire Cabinet and get possession of London by means of an armed mob. The scheme was divulged to the authorities by an informer, and the conspirators, the chief of whom was a man named Thistlewood, were apprehended, and five of them brought to trial and executed. See R. v. Thistlewood, (1820) 33 St. Tr. 681; Martineau's History of the Thirty Years' Peace, Bk. II. c. i.

Cattle [derived by Skinner, Menage, and Spelman fr. capitalia, quæ ad caput pertinent, personal goods; in which sense chattels is yet used. Mandeville uses Catele for price], beasts of pasture, either wild or domestic.

The term, though often limited to horned domestic animals, may include (see Wright v. Pearson, L. R. 4 Q. B. 582) horses and sheep; and also pigs and asses (R. v. Chapple, Russ & Ry. 77; R. v. Whitney, 1 Mood. 3).

As to injury to cattle by a dog, see Dogs Act, 1906, in which, by s. 7, 'cattle' includes 'horses, mules, asses, goats and swine.' See Dog.

As to larceny of cattle, see Larceny Act, 1916, s. 3, and as to killing cattle, etc., with intent to steal the carcase, skin, or any part of the animal killed, see s. 4.

As to the malicious wounding of cattle, see Malicious Damage Act, 1861, ss. 40 and 41.

As to the prevention of cattle plague, pleuro-pneumonia, and foot and mouth disease, by slaughtering or preventing the movement of infected animals and restricting the importation of foreign cattle, see Diseases of Animals Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 57), repealing and re-enacting the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, 1878, repealing and replacing an Act of 1869 having the same title, and itself repealing eight prior Acts in pari materiâ, from 38 Geo. 3, c. 65, to 30 & 31 Vict. c. 125. It has further been amended by the Diseases of Animals Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 13). The law of this subject has always depended for its effectual working upon orders to be made from time to time by a Government Department, now the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries. See AGRICULTURE AND FISHERIES, MINISTRY OF.

The weighing of cattle at markets and fairs is provided for by the Markets and Fairs (Weighing of Cattle) Acts of 1887 and 1891 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 27), and (54 & 55 Vict. c. 70).

As to cruelty to cattle, see the Protection of Animals Acts, 1911 and 1912. See ANIMALS.

Cattle-gate, common for one beast.

Catzurus, a hunting-horse.

Cauda terræ, land's end, or the bottom of a ridge in arable land.

Caulceels, ways pitched with flint or other stones. See CALCETUM.

Caucines, Italians that came into England about the year 1235, terming themselves the Pope's merchants, but driving no other trade than letting out money; see Jac. Law Dict.

Causa causans, the immediate cause; the last link in the chain of causation. Not the cause of which the proximate cause is an effect but the nearest cause of the damage or effect for which relief is sought (see Reischer v. Borwick, 1894, 2 Q. B. 548; Dudgeon v. Pembroke, (1874) 2 A. C. 284). See Cullerne v. London, etc., Building Society, (1890) 25 Q. B. D. 485.

Causa matrimonii prælocuti, a writ which lay where a woman gave lands to a man in fee simple, etc., to the intent he should marry her, and he refused to do so in any reasonable time, being thereunto required.—Reg. Brev. 66. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27.

Causâ mortis (in case of death). See DONATIO MORTIS CAUSA.

Causa proxima, the same as causa causans. See IN JURE NON REMOTA CAUSA SED PROXIMA SPECTATUR.

Causam nobis significes quare, a writ to a mayor of a town, etc., who was by the king's writ demanded to give seisin of lands to the king's grantee; on his delaying to do it, requiring him to show cause why he so delayed the performance of his duty.

Cause, a suit or action; motive or reason; that which produces an effect.

Cause of Action, a right to sue. All the facts which are necessary to establish the plaintiff's right to the remedy which he claims. As to joinder of causes of action, see that title.

Cause-list, a printed roll of actions to be tried in the order of their entry, with the names of the solicitor for each litigant.

Causea [fr. chaussée, Fr., a paved road], a causeway.

Causes célèbres, a work containing reports of the decisions of interest and importance in French Courts in the 17th and 18th centuries. The first series, in 22 vols., is by Gayot de Pitival; the second, called the Nouvelles Causes Célèbres, in 15, by Des Essarts. Compare Howell's State Trials in England. The word is applied to any English case of great interest and importance, as the Tichborne case (see TICHBORNE CASE), Queen Caroline's case, etc.

Cautio pro expensis, security for costs.

Caution, a species of bail; security. When used in this sense, the word is pronounced 'cayshon.'—Scots Law. In England, any warning. A prisoner or accused person is 'cautioned' before making a statement, that such statement may be used in evidence upon his trial.

Caution.—Under the Land Registration Act, 1925, ss. 54 to 56, is a notice to the Registrar in the nature of a caveat to the effect that the cautioner is entitled to be served with a notice of any application for the registration of an interest in registered land affecting the cautioner. Registration, as a rule, will not be effected until a reasonable time (usually 14 days) has elapsed after service of notice, or the cautioner has entered an appearance. Cautions may be lodged against first registration to protect unregistered mortgages, contracts for purchase, the vesting of equitably settled estates and other purposes. Cautions to protect unregistered mortgages under s. 106 of the L. R. Act, 1925, confer a priority for the mortgage. Other cautions do not affect priority. See Fortescue - Brickdale and Stewart-Wallace on the Land Registration Act, 1925. See also PRIORITY CAUTION.

Cautione admittenda, a writ that lies against a bishop who holds an excommunicated person in prison for contempt, notwithstanding he offers sufficient caution or security to obey the orders and commandment of the church for the future.—Reg. Brev. 66.

Cautioner, a security.

Cauzl, Cazl, Kazi, a Mohammedan official.—Indian. See KAZI.

Caveat (let him take heed), a warning or caution. If a person desired to stop the enrolment of a decree in Chancery, in order to present a petition of appeal to the Lord Chancellor, he entered a caveat with his lordship's secretary, which prevented the enrolment for 28 days. See APPEAL. It is sometimes entered to prevent the issuing of a lunacy commission. It is also entered to stay certain proceedings in Admiralty, the probate of a will, letters of administration, a license of marriage, or an institution of a clerk to a benefice. Also a synonym for a CAUTION (q.v.), under the Land Registration Act, 1925.

In Scotland any one who expects certain proceedings to be taken by another may lodge with the Clerk of Court a 'caveat.' He is then entitled to be informed by the Clerk if and when the proceedings are taken.

Caveat actor. The Criminal Law of England supposes that a man intends the natural and probable consequences of his act. But in civil matters there is no rule of common law that a man 'acts at his peril,' except the case of one who harbours or collects a dangerous thing, or anything likely to do mischief if it escapes, Rylands v. Fletcher, (1866) L. R. 1 Ex. 265; (1868) L. R. 3 H. L. 330; with that exception in which nothing short of an act of God, or the victim's default, will excuse him, if a person suffers injury he must found his action either on contract or tort, e.g., trespass or negligence on the part of the defendant. This is the theory of the law, though in practice a very small amount of malice or negligence will suffice. See MALICE and RES IPSA LOQUITUR.

Caveat emptor. Hob. 99.—(Let the purchaser beware.)

The rule of 'caveat emptor' as to purchase of goods and animals with its existing modifications was thrown into statutory shape by s. 14 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, by which 'subject to the provision of this Act and of any statute in that behalf' (as, e.g., the Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 45), s. 1), 'there is no implied warranty or condition as to the quality or fitness for any particular purpose of goods supplied under a contract of sale,' except (1) on a purchase in reliance on the seller's skill; or (2) on a purchase by description from a seller who deals in goods of that description, in which case there is an implied warranty that the goods shall be of merchantable quality; or (3) by usage of trade.

As to the implied condition of the right of a seller to sell the goods, see s. 12, ibid.

Caveat viator (let the traveller beware), meaning that he must use reasonable care for his own safety; but a traveller or passer-by on premises on or over which he has a right to be or to pass is entitled to be protected from the negligence of those who are under some duty to passers-by or users of the premises. The degree of duty varies according to whether the victim of the accident has a contract involving care or even absolute assurance or warranty on the part of the defendant in regard to the soundness of the premises or otherwise, or whether the plaintiff was a visitor or licensee. See Indermaur v. Dames, (1866) L. R. 1 C. P. 274, Latham v. Johnson, 1913, 1 K. B. 398, and Norman v. Great Western Railway Company, 1915, 1 K. B. 584, 2 C. P. 311. The case of a trespasser is quite different, but even then the owner of the land or person in possession has no right to lay a trap for him or commit any other wilful injury, see Bird v. Holbrook, (1828) 4 Bing. 628, with that exception, the owner of the premises is not obliged to ensure a trespasser's safety or to warn him of danger, Great Central Railway Co. v. Bates, 1921, 3 K. B. 578, but the trespasser does not lose his rights as a member of the public if the defendant was guilty of a public nuisance towards the person injured, Barnes v. Ward, (1850) 9 C. B. 392; and see also Cooke v. Midland Great Western Railway of Ireland, 1909, A. C. 229, and cases there cited.

Cavers, persons stealing ore from mines in Derbyshire, punishable in the berghmote or miner's Court: also officers belonging to the same mines.

Cavil, to use a captious argument.

Ceap, a bargain: anything for sale; chattel: also cattle, as being the usual medium of barter. Sometimes used instead of Ceapgild. See next title.

Ceapgild [fr. ceap., Sax., cattle, and gild, payment], payment in cattle, market price.

Cellibacy [fr. celibatus, Lat.], an unmarried or single state of life.

Cellar. As to prohibitions and restrictions upon use as a dwelling-house, see Housing Act, 1936, s. 12; and as a bakehouse, see Factory Act, 1901, s. 101.

Cellerarius, a butler in a monastery: sometimes in universities called manciple or caterer.

Cemetery [fr. κοιμητήριον, Gk., fr. κοιμάω, to set to sleep], a place of burial differing from a churchyard by its locality and incidents; by its locality, as it is separate and apart from any parochial church, though it has ordinarily a chapel of its own for the performance of a burial service; by its incidents, as it is usually the property of some private company, incorporated by special Act of Parliament, empowered to take land compulsorily, and subject to the Cemeteries Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 65) (see Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Burial'), by which, amongst other things, provision is made for obtaining a burial place in perpetuity.

Cenegild [fr. cinne, Sax., relation, and gild, payment], an expiatory mulct paid by one who killed another, to the kindred of the deceased.

Cenninga, notice given by a buyer to a seller that the thing sold was claimed by another, that he might appear and justify the sale.—Jac. Law Dict.

Censaria [fr. cense, Fr.], a farm or house and land let at standing rent.

Censaril, farmers.—Blount.

Censor. A person who regulates or prohibits the publication of any newspaper or the production of any play or any part thereof. There is ordinarily no censorship of the press in England; but by ss. 12 and 14 of the Theatres Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 68), a copy of every new stage play must, before it is acted for hire at any theatre in Great Britain, be sent to the Lord Chamberlain of His Majesty's Household, who will issue a license for its production or forbid it for the 'preservation of good manners, decorum, or the public peace.' See THEATRE; CINEMATOGRAPH.

Censuales, a species or class of the oblati or voluntary slaves of churches or monasteries, i.e., those who, to procure the protection of the Church, bound themselves to pay an annual tax or quit-rent out of their estates to a church or monastery. Besides this, they sometimes engaged to perform certain services.—Jac. Law Dict.

Consumethidus, a dead rent, like that which is called mortmain.—Blount.

Censure [fr. census, Lat.] a custom observed in certain manors in Devon and Cornwall, where all persons above the age of sixteen years are cited to swear fealty to the lord, and to pay 11*d.* per poll, and 1*d.* per annum ever after; these thus sworn are called censores. Surv. of the Duch. of Corn. Also a judgment which condemns some book, person, or action; more particularly a reprimand from a superior.

Census, a numbering of the people. It formerly took place in this country once in every 10 years. The first was taken in 1801 under 41 Geo. 3, c. 15; that of 1891 on Sunday, 5th April, 1891, under the Census Acts, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 61 (England), c. 38 (Scotland), and c. 46 (Ireland)), and that of 1911 under the Census (Great Britain) Act, 1910 (10 Edw. 7 & 1 Geo. 5, c. 27), and the Census (Ireland) Act, 1910. The Census Act, 1920, provides that a census may be taken, if so directed by an Order in Council, at any time, provided that five years have elapsed since the last census, and provided that a draft order has been laid before Parliament for 20 days. The early Census Acts only got at the numbers, occupations, etc., by a series of questions to overseers, clergymen, etc. The Act of 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 99), was the first to get at the name, etc., of every person in every house. The Act (s. 11 (3)) makes it penal for a person employed in the census to communicate, without lawful authority, any information acquired in the course of his employment.

Population, for a particular purpose, is sometimes expressly directed to be ascertained 'by the last published census for the time being'; see, e.g., Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, s. 109.

Census Regalis, the annual revenue or income of the Crown.

Centenarii, petty judges, under-sheriffs of counties, that had rule of a hundred, and judged smaller matters among them.—1 Vent. 211.

Centeni, the principal inhabitants of a district composed of different villages, originally in number a hundred, but afterwards only called by that name.

Central Criminal Court. This Court was created by the Central Criminal Court Act, 1834 (4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 36), for the trial of all cases of treasons, murders, felonies, and misdemeanours committed within the county of Middlesex, and in certain specified parts of the counties of Essex, Kent, and Surrey, all of which constitute one county for the purpose of the Act, and also commissions of gaol delivery to deliver the gaol of Newgate of the prisoners therein charged with any of the offences aforesaid. The Court consists of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen and also of the Judges; and there are twelve sessions held in every year, at times fixed by four or more of the judges of the High Court, (Judicature Act, 1925, s. 74). The 17th section of the Act authorizes the Court to try offences committed on the high seas; and the Central Criminal Court Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 16) (see PALMER'S ACT), authorizes the King's Bench Division of the High Court to order any indictment for any felony or misdemeanour supposed to have been committed out of the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court upon removal by certiorari into the King's Bench Division, to be tried at the Central Criminal Court, if it appear that it is expedient that a trial there would be 'expedient to the ends of justice'—a provision generally put in force in cases of local prejudice against a person charged with crime of peculiar enormity. For mode of application for the order, see Rule 19 of the Crown Office Rules of 1906, and for form of writ to remove indictment 'for certain reasons,' see No. 9 of the forms scheduled to those rules. All the judges of the High Court of Justice, except such as were appointed before the Jud. Act, 1873, and were not liable then to serve (s. 11), may be in the commission for the Central Criminal Court, and by the same Act (ss. 16 and 29) the Court became a branch of the High Court (see per Wills, J., in R. v. Davies, 1906, 1 K. B. at p. 46), and Judicature Act, 1925, ss. 18, 70. The King's Bench Division of the High Court cannot issue a writ of certiorari to remove an order of this court, R. v. Central Criminal Court Justices, Ex parte London County Council, 1925, 2 K. B. 43. The less important offences are tried by either the recorder or common serjeant or the judge of the City of London Court; on every occasion the lord mayor or some of the aldermen being also present on the bench.

Central Office of Supreme Court. Established by Jud. (Officers) Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 78). See R. S. C. Ord. LXI.

Ceola, a large ship.—Blount.

Cepi corpus et paratum habeo (I have taken the body and have it ready), a return made by the sheriff upon an attachment, capias, etc., when he has the person, against whom the process was issued, in custody.—Fitz. N. B. 26.

Cepit in alio loco, a plea in replevin, when the defendant took the goods in another place than that mentioned in the declaration.

Ceppagium, the stumps or roots of trees which remain in the ground after the trees are felled.—Fleta, c. xli.

Ceragram, a payment to find candles in the church.—Blount.

Cerne Abbas. See ABRAS.

Certificando de recognitione stapulæ, a writ commanding the mayor of the staple to certify to the Lord Chancellor a statute-staple taken before him where the party himself detains it, and refuses to bring in the same. There is a like writ to certify a statute-merchant, and in divers other cases.—Reg. Brev. 148, 151, 152.

Certificate, a testimony given in writing to declare or verify the truth of anything. Certificates are frequently referred to or required by Statute. A certificate is the usual evidence of the title to shares in a company. See Companies Act, 1929, ss. 67 and 68; for Certificate of Incorporation, see ss. 15 and 329, ibid.; and commencement of business, s. 94, ibid., and s. 82, ibid., as to registration of charges. Also ALIENS and SHARE CERTIFICATE; and see LAND CERTIFICATE.

Trial by certificate, which has long been obsolete, took place in those cases in which the evidence of the person certifying was, by custom or otherwise, the only proper criterion of the point in dispute; see 3 Bl. Com. 333.

As to when certificates and examined copies are admissible in evidence, consult Taylor on Evidence, and the Documentary Evidence Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 113).

As to the Master's Certificate in Chambers in the Chancery Court, see Ord. LV., part xiii.

As to the obligation of solicitors, conveyancers, notaries public, and others to take out annual certificates, see Stamp Act, 1891, ss. 43—48.

Certification, in Scotch judicial procedure, is the assurance given to a party of the course to be followed in case he does not appear to obey the order of the Court.—Bell's Dict.

Certification of Assize, a writ anciently granted for the re-examining or re-trial of a matter passed by assize before justices, now entirely superseded by the remedy afforded by means of a new trial.

Certified Copy. As to when admissible in evidence, see Taylor on Evidence, and the Documentary Evidence Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 37), as to certain official documents.

Certifying Surgeons. See ss. 122 to 124 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 22).—Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Factories.'

Certiorari (to be more fully informed of), an original writ issuing out of the Crown side of the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice, addressed, in the king's name, to judges or officers of inferior courts, commanding them to certify or to return the records of a cause depending before them, to the end that justice may be done.

Certiorari lies to remove into the High Court of Justice, King's Bench Division, which, superseding the King's Bench, is the sovereign Court of justice in criminal causes, all indictments, coroners' inquisitions, summary convictions by magistrates, orders of removal of paupers, and of poor's rates, also orders made by commissioners of sewers and other commissioners, town councils, and railway companies, for the purpose of being examined and 'quashed,' if contrary to law. The writ may be granted either at the instance of the prosecutor or the defendant. A prosecutor was formerly entitled to a writ of certiorari as a matter of right, but a defendant could only obtain it by express leave of the Court, and upon his entering into recognizances; but to prevent abuses, by the wanton and improvident application for it, the Acts 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 33, and 16 & 17 Vict. c. 30, s. 5, provide that a prosecutor must obtain the previous leave of the Court to issue it, and enter into recognizances; and these and other statutory provisions are incorporated in the Crown Office Rules, 1906, Rules 12—39, superseding Rules 28—42 of the Rules of 1886 (see Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Certiorari'). The Statute Law Revision Act of 1888 repeals 13 Geo. 2, c. 18, so that procedure on certiorari in a very great measure depends on Rules of Court alone. For the very numerous cases in which the writ has been granted or refused, see Mews's Digest, tit. 'Crown Office (Certiorari)'; and for a review of the authorities as to procedure on certiorari, see R. v. Nat Bell Liquors, 1922, 2 A. C. 128, and see the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 36), s. 5, providing for the simplification of procedure.

An appeal does not lie unless it be expressly given by statute, but certiorari always lies unless it be expressly taken away by statute, and special clauses in modern statutes have frequently taken it away. See, e.g., Public Health Act, 1875, s. 262; Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 156; but even such clauses do not apply to cases where a decision is impeached for substantial want of jurisdiction (R. v. Cheltenham Commissioners, (1841) 1 Q. B. 467). See also Housing Act, 1936, 2nd Sched.

A certiorari to remove a conviction or order made by justices of the peace must be applied for within six months.—Crown Office Rule 21.

A writ of certiorari to remove an action from an inferior court to the High Court issues as of right (Edwards v. Liverpool Corporation, (1902) 86 L. T. 627).

The removal of County Court actions by certiorari is regulated by s. 126 of the County Courts Act, 1888, reproduced in County Courts Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 53), s. 111, but an order made under the bankruptcy jurisdiction is not removable (Skinner v. Northallerton County Court (Judge of), 1898, 2 Q. B. 680).

The long disused 'Bill of Certiorari' to remove into Chancery a suit in some inferior court having equity jurisdiction was an analogous procedure in equitable matters.

There is power to grant costs to a successful applicant for a certiorari (R. v. Woodhouse, 1906, 2 K. B. 501). See Corner's Crown Practice; Shortt and Mellor's Crown Practice.

Cert Money, quasi certain money. Head-money paid yearly by the residents of several manors to the lords thereof, for the certain keeping of the leet, and sometimes to the hundred. It is called certum letæ in ancient records.

Certum est quod certum reddi potest. 9 Rep. 47.—(That is certain which can be rendered certain.) Therefore, although to support a distress for rent the rent must be specific, it is enough if it be definitely ascertainable, as was held in a case where the rent for a marl and brickfield depended on the amount of marl got and bricks made (Daniel v. Gracie, (1844) 6 Q. B. 145).

Cerura, a mound, fence, or inclosure.

Cervisarli [fr. cerevisia, Lat., ale], tenants who paid a duty called by the Saxons drinclean, i.e., retributio potus.—Domesday.

Cess [fr. asseoir, Fr., to fix], an assessment or tax. In Ireland it was anciently applied to an exaction of victuals, at a certain rate, for soldiers in garrison, and in modern times is equivalent to the English 'Rate.'

Cessante ratione legis cessat ipsa lex. Co. Litt. 70 b.—(The reason of the law ceasing, the law itself ceases.) For illustration of this rule, see Broom's Leg. Max.

Cessavit, a writ which lay (by the Statute of Gloucester, 6 Edw. 1, c. 4, and Westminster 2, 13 Edw. 1, c. 21), when a man who held lands by rent or other services neglected or ceased to perform his services for two years together, or where a religious house had lands given to it, on condition of performing some certain spiritual services, as reading prayers, giving alms, etc., and neglected it; in either of which cases, if the cesser or neglect had continued for two years, the lord or donor, and his heirs, had a writ of cessavit to recover the land itself.—Fitz. N. B. 208. This writ was abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27.

Cesser, Proviso for. Where terms for years are raised by settlement, it is usual to introduce a proviso that they shall cease when the trusts end. This proviso generally expresses three events:—(1) the trusts never arising; (2) their becoming unnecessary or incapable of taking effect; (3) the performance of them. See ATTENDANT TERM.—Sug. V. & P., 14th ed. 621–3.

Cesset processus, a stay of proceedings entered on the record.

Cessio bonorum (a surrender of goods). By the Roman Law a cessio bonorum of the debtor was not a discharge of the debt, unless the property ceded was sufficient for that purpose. It otherwise operated only as a discharge pro tanto, and exonerated the debtor from imprisonment. Huberus informs us that in Holland a cessio bonorum does not even exempt from imprisonment unless the creditors assent; and Heineccius proclaims the same as the law of some parts of Germany. The Scottish Law conforms to the Roman code in its leading outlines, and the modern code of France adopts the same system.—Story's Conflict of Laws, 492; and see 2 Br. & Had. Com. 623.

Cessio in jure, a fictitious suit, in which the person who was to acquire a thing claimed (vindicabat) the thing, the person who was to transfer it acknowledged the justice of the claim, and the magistrate pronounced it to be the property (adicebat) of the claimant.—Sand. Just.

Cession, a ceasing, yielding up, or giving over. By 21 Hen. 8, c. 13 (repealed by the Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), if any one having a benefice of 8*l.* per annum, or upwards, accepted any other, the first was adjudged void, unless he obtained a dispensation. A vacancy thus made, for want of a dispensation, was called cession. See PLURALITY.

Cessionary Bankrupt, one who gave up his estate to be divided amongst his creditors.

Cessment, an assessment or tax.

Cessor, he who ceases or neglects so long to perform a duty that he thereby incurs the danger of the law.—Old Nat. Br. 136.

Cessure, or Cessor, ceasing, giving over, departing from.

Cestui que Trust, the person (now frequently termed 'beneficiary,' as in s. 62 of the Trustee Act, 1925, who possesses the equitable right to property and receives the rents, issues, and profits thereof, the legal estate being vested in a trustee. The remedy of the cestui que trust, if the trustee fails in his duty, is by an action in the Chancery Division (in the majority of cases instituted by way of an Originating Summons). The phrase cestui que trust is Norman-French. In Roman Law obligations analogous to trusts could only be created by testament; the trustee was (Heres) 'fiduciarius'; the beneficiary, 'fideicommissarius.' Sandars, Inst. Lib. 2 tit. XXIII.

Cestui que use, in old law tracts cestui a que use, the person in whose favour a use was declared. See USES.

Cestui que vie, the person for whose life any lands, tenements, or hereditaments are held by another, who is called the tenant pur autre vie. See AUTRE VIE.

Chacea, a station of game, more extended than a park, and less than a forest; also the liberty of chasing or hunting within a certain district; also the way through which cattle are driven to pasture, otherwise called a drove-way.—Blount; Bract. l. 4, c. xlv.

Chaceare ad lepores vel vulpes. To hunt hares or foxes.—Cart. Abb. Glast. MS. 87.

Chacurus [fr. chasseur, Fr.], a horse for the chase, or a hound, dog, or coursier.

Chaff-cutting Machines are required, for prevention of accidents, if worked by any motive power other than manual labour, to have their feeding mouths so contrived as to prevent the hand of the person feeding them from being drawn between the rollers to the knives.—Chaff-Cutting Machines (Accidents) Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 60).

Chaffery, traffic; the practice of buying and selling.

Chaffwax, an officer in Chancery, who fitted the wax to seal writs, commissions, and other instruments. The office was abolished by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, s. 23.

Chain Cables. See CABLE.

Chaldron, Chaldern, or Chalder, twelve sacks of coals, each holding three bushels, weighing about a ton and a half. In Wales they reckon twelve barrels or pitchers a ton or chaldron, and 29 cwt. of 120 lbs. to the ton.

Chalking, or Caulking, stopping the seams in a ship or vessel.—Rot. Parl., 50 Edu. 3.

Challenge [fr. challenger, O. F., to accuse of], an exception taken either against things or jurors.

In civil actions, when a full jury appear, either party may challenge them for cause, as well the talesmen as the jurors originally returned. Challenges are of two kinds: (1) to the array; (2) to the polls; and each of these is again subdivided into principal challenges, and challenges to the favour.

(1) A challenge to the array is an exception to all the jurors returned by the sheriff collectively, not for any defect in them, but for some partiality or default in the sheriff or his under-officer who arrayed the panel; this is either (a) a principal challenge, as that the sheriff or other returning officer is of kindred or affinity to the plaintiff or defendant, if the affinity continue; that one or more of the jury are returned at the nomination of the plaintiff or defendant; that an action of battery is pending at the suit of the plaintiff or defendant against the sheriff, or at the suit of the sheriff against the plaintiff or defendant; that the sheriff or returning officer holds land depending upon the same title with that in litigation between the parties; that the sheriff, etc., is under the distress of the plaintiff or defendant; that the sheriff, etc., is employed by or is the special friend of either party or is an arbitrator in the same matter, and has treated thereof. (β) A challenge for favour, being such as implies at least a probability of bias or partiality in the sheriff, but does not amount to a principal challenge, as that the plaintiff or defendant is tenant to the sheriff, or that the parties are connected by marriage, etc. It seems very doubtful if the array in special jury cases can be challenged. Challenges to the array are, however, seldom resorted to, since, for the causes above named, the jury-processes may be directed to the coroner, or they would be grounds for a new trial.

(2) A challenge to the polls, which is an exception to one or more of the jurors who have appeared individually: Either (a) a principal challenge, which may be subdivided into (a) challenge propter honoris respectum, as, if a lord of Parliament be called, he may challenge himself or he may have his writ of privilege, but it is doubtful if either party can challenge him; (b) challenge propter defectum, that the juror is not qualified; (c) challenge propter affectum, by reason of some supposed bias or partiality; (d) challenge propter delictum, when for some act of the juror he has ceased to be, in consideration of the law, probus et legalis homo. (β) A challenge to the polls for favour is of the same nature with the principal challenge propter affectum, but of an inferior degree.

No challenge can be made before a full jury have appeared; a challenge to the polls is made ore tenus, that to the array in writing.

The trial of challenges to the array is entirely in the discretion of the Court; sometimes they are tried by two of the coroners, sometimes by two of the jury, sometimes by the Court itself. Challenges to the polls, if to the favour, are tried by two jurors, who have been sworn; if two have not been sworn, the Court appoints two indifferent persons to try them, thence called triers, who are superseded as soon as two jurors are sworn; a principal challenge to the polls is tried by the Court itself.—1 Chit. Arch. Prac.

In criminal cases, challenges may be made, either on the part of the Crown, or on that of the prisoner, and either to the whole array, or to the separate polls for the very same reasons that they may be made in civil causes. In capital cases the prisoner, in favorem vite, is allowed an arbitrary and capricious species of challenge, without showing any cause at all, limited, in cases of treason, to thirty-five, and in felonies to twenty.—County Juries Act, 1825 (6 Geo. 4, c. 50), s. 29. Criminal Law Act, 1827 (7 & 8 Geo. 5, c. 28), s. 3. See Archbold's Criminal Pleading.

Challenges to fight, either by word or letter, or to the bearer of such challenges, are misdemeanours, punishable by fine and imprisonment. See DUEL.

Chamber, the place where certain assemblies are held; also the assemblies themselves.

Chamber Clerks, of the Judges. As to their positions since the Judicature Acts, see Jud. Act, 1873, s. 79, amended by Jud. Act, 1875, s. 35.

Chamber of Agriculture, Chamber of Commerce, an assembly of (1) agriculturists or (2) merchants and traders, where affairs relating to agriculture or trade are treated. Chambers of such kind are recognized by s. 7 (1) (b) of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 25), as having a locus standi before the Railway and Canal Commission to complain of any infringement of the Railway and Canal Traffic Acts, upon obtaining a certificate from the Board of Trade of being 'a proper body' to complain.

Chamberdekins, or Chamber-deacons, certain poor Irish scholars, clothed in mean habit, and living under no rule; also beggars banished from England, 1 Hen. 5, cc. 7 and 8.

Chamberlain [fr. chambellan, Fr., custos cubiculi, cubicularius, Lat.], a person who has the management or direction of a chamber or chambers. It is variously used in our laws, statutes, and chronicles. Among the most important are (1) The Lord Great Chamberlain, an hereditary officer of the Crown, whose chief duties are performed at a Coronation, and who can appoint a deputy subject to the approval of the king (see ENSOR). (2) The Lord Chamberlain of the Household, an officer appointed by the sovereign, on the nomination of the Prime Minister; he has the oversight of all officers belonging to the king's household, and by the Civil List Act, 1781 (22 Geo. 3, c. 82), s. 13, the care of the royal furniture, pictures and plate. He has also by the Theatres Act, 1843 (see THEATRE), the control of the London Theatres.

The places in the House of Lords of 'the great Chamberleyn' and 'the King's Chamberleyn' respectively are fixed by 31 Hen. 8, c. 10. (3) The Chamberlain of London keeps the city money, presides over the affairs of the citizens and their apprentices, etc.

Chambers are quasi-private rooms, in which the judges or masters dispose of points of practice and other matters not sufficiently important to be heard and argued in court. See SUMMONS; ORDER.

The jurisdiction of a judge in chambers depends partly on Statute and partly on the Common Law. An appeal lies to a Divisional Court or to a judge sitting in court according to the practice of the Division of the High Court to which the matter in question is assigned (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 50. See now Jud. Act, 1925, ss. 31 (8) and 62). By R. S. C. 1883, Ord. LIV., the masters in the King's Bench Division, and the registrars in the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division may exercise the jurisdiction of a judge in chambers (subject to appeal to a judge), except in matters relating to crime or to the liberty of the subject, and certain other matters set out in the order. As to Chambers in the Chancery Division, see Ord. LV.

Chambers of the King (Regie camera). The exclusive territorial jurisdiction of the British Crown over the inclosed parts of the sea along the coasts of the island of Great Britain has immemorially extended to those bays called the King's chambers: that is, portions of the sea cut off by lines drawn from one promontory to another.—Wheat. Int. Law, 234.

Chambre depointe, anciently St. Edward's Chamber, called the Painted Chamber, destroyed by fire with the Houses of Parliament in October, 1833.

Champart, field-rent; champerty.

Champarty or Champerty [fr. champ parti, Fr.; campi partitio, Lat., a division of the land], properly a bargain between a plaintiff or defendant in a suit and a third person, campum partire, to divide between them the land or other matter sued for in the event of the litigant being successful in the suit, whereupon the champertor is to carry on the party's suit or action at his own expense; or it is the purchasing the right of action or suit of another person; illegal by Common Law, and also by 3 Edw. 1, c. 25; 13 Edw. 1, st. 1, c. 49; and 32 Hen. 8, c. 9. It is an aggravated form of maintenance. See Hutley v. Hutley, (1873) L. R. 8 Q. B. 112; In re Attorneys and Solicitors Act, 1870, (1875) 1

Ch. D. 573; Holden v. Thompson, 1907, 2 K. B. 489; Haseldine v. Hoskin, 1933, 1 K. B. 822; and MAINTENANCE.

Champertors, persons who move pleas or suits, or cause them to be moved, either by their own procurement, or by others, and sue them at their proper costs, in order to have part of the land in variance, or part of the gain.—33 Edw. 1, c. 2.

Champion of the King (or Queen), an ancient officer, whose duty (hereditary in the family of Scrivelsby in Lincolnshire) it was to ride armed cap-à-pie into Westminster Hall at the coronation, while the king was at dinner, and by the proclamation of a herald, make a challenge, 'that if any man shall deny the King's title to the crown, he is there ready to defend it in single combat.' The king drank to him, and sent him a gilt cup covered, full of wine, which the champion drank, retaining the cup for his fee. The ceremony, long discontinued, was revived at the coronation of George IV., but not afterwards.

Chance, misfortune, accident, deficiency of will. Where a man commits an unlawful act by misfortune and chance, and not by design, his will not co-operating with the deed, such act wants one main ingredient of a crime. If an accidental mischief should follow from the performance of a lawful act, the party stands excused from all guilt; but if the act be felonious, and a consequence ensues not foreseen or intended, as the death of a man or the like, his want of foresight shall be no excuse, for, being guilty of one offence, in doing antecedently what is in itself unlawful, he is criminally guilty of whatever consequence may follow.

But a very important distinction is made in such cases, viz., whether the unlawful act is also in its original nature wrong and mischievous; for a person is not answerable for the incidental consequences of an unlawful act which is merely malum prohibitum; as, where any unfortunate accident happens from an unqualified person being in pursuit of game, he is amenable only to the same extent as a man duly qualified.—Fost. 259; 1 Hale's P. C. 475. See MANSLAUGHTER.

Chance, Game of, playing at, in a public place is punishable under Vagrant Act Amendment Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 38); applied to a 'pari mutuel'—a machine whereby the element of chance is added to the element of matching one horse against another—in Tollett v. Thomas, (1871) L. R. 6 Q. B. 514. And see GAMING; LOTTERY.

Chancel, the part of a church in which the communion table stands; it belongs to the rector or the impropiator.—2 Br. & Had. Com. 420. As to a pew in a chancel, see Parker v. Leach, (1866) L. R. 1 P. C. 312; and as to property in a chancel generally, see Chapman v. Jones, (1869) L. R. 4 Ex. 273; Duke of Norfolk v. Arbutnot, (1880) 5 C. P. D. 390. For the liability to repair a chancel, see the Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Measure, 1923 (14 & 15 Geo. 5, No. 3), s. 52, and the Chancel Repairs Act, 1932 (22 Geo. 5, c. 20).

Chancellor, Lord, properly, 'the Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain' [fr. cancellarius, low Lat., cancelli, Lat., lattice-work], the highest judicial functionary in the kingdom, and superior, in point of precedence, to every temporal lord. He is appointed by the delivery of the king's Great Seal into his custody. He may not be a Roman Catholic (10 Geo. 4, c. 7, s. 12). He is a cabinet minister, a privy councillor, and prolocutor of the House of Lords by prescription (but not necessarily, though usually, a peer of the realm), and vacates his office with the ministry by which he was appointed, but is entitled to a pension. When royal commissions are issued for opening the session, for giving the royal assent to bills, or for proroguing parliament, the Lord Chancellor is always one of the commissioners, and reads the royal speech on the occasion. To him belongs the appointment of all justices of the peace throughout the kingdom, and the appointment and removal of county court judges (see COUNTY COURTS), and (see s. 8 of the Coroners Act, 1887) the power to remove coroners. He is one of the three ex-officio trustees of the British Museum. Being, in the earlier periods of our history, usually an ecclesiastic (for none else was then capable of an office so conversant in writings), and presiding over the royal chapel, he became keeper of the sovereign's conscience, visitor, in right of the Crown, of the hospitals and colleges of royal foundation, and patron of all the Crown livings under the value of twenty marks per annum in the king's books. He is the general guardian of all infants, idiots, and lunatics, and has the general superintendence of all charitable uses—and all this, over and above the vast and extensive jurisdiction which he exercises in his judicial capacity in the Supreme Court of Judicature, of which he is the head. An ex-Chancellor is by virtue of the Judicature Act, 1925, s. 6, an ex-officio judge of the Court of Appeal. See CHANCERY; SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE. The Chancellorship of Scotland was abolished at the Union, and that of Ireland by the Irish Free State (Consequential Provisions) Act, 1922, s. 2.

The multifarious duties of the Lord Chancellor and the excessive work entailed by them were fully dwelt upon by Lord Herschell in a statement to members of the House of Commons who had called attention to the appointment of magistrates, which statement is reproduced in the Law Times of 17th November, 1906, from The Times of the 16th November, 1893. See also Chapter X. of the Report of the Machinery of Government Committee, 14th December, 1918. See Lives of the Lord Chancellors of England, by Lord Campbell.

Chancellor of a Cathedral, one of the quatuor personæ, or four chief dignitaries, of the Cathedrals of the Old Foundations. The duties assigned to the office by the statutes of the different chapters vary; but they are chiefly of an educational character, with special reference to the cultivation of theology.

Chancellor of a Diocese, or of a Bishop, a law officer, appointed to hold the Bishop's Court in his diocese, and to adjudicate upon matters of ecclesiastical law. He is the vicar-general of the bishop, and by Canon 127 must be at least 26 years old, must be learned in the Civil and Ecclesiastical Laws, must be at least a Master of Arts or Bachelor of Law, and 'reasonably well practised in the course thereof, as likewise well affected, and zealous bent to religion, touching whose life and manners no evil example is had.' By the same canon, he must take the Oath of Supremacy and subscribe the Thirty-nine Articles of Religion (see that title).

Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, an officer before whom, or his Deputy, the Court of the Duchy Chamber of Lancaster is held. This is a special jurisdiction concerning all matters of equity relating to lands held of the Crown in right of the Duchy of Lancaster; which is a thing very distinct from the county palatine (which has also its separate chancery for sealing of writs or the like), and comprises much territory lying at a vast distance from it, as particularly a very large district surrounded by the city of Westminster. This Court has been inactive for more than a century. See COUNTY PALATINE.

Chancellor of the Exchequer, a Minister of State having special care of the revenue, who is entitled to precedence in the High Court on the nomination of sheriffs.

Chancellor of the Order of the Garter, and other military orders, an officer who seals the commissions and the mandates of the chapter and assembly of the knights; keeps the register of their proceedings, and delivers their acts under the seal of their order.—Stow's Annals, 706.

Chancellors of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, the titular heads of those bodies, the office being honorary.

The Chancellor of the University of Oxford, by virtue of certain ancient charters confirmed by statute, enjoys the sole jurisdiction (in exclusion of the King's Courts) when a scholar or privileged person is the defendant, over all civil actions and suits whatsoever, excepting where a right of freehold is concerned, and of all injuries and trespasses against the peace, mayhem and felony excepted (Brown v. Renouard, (1810) 12 East, 12; Thornton v. Ford, (1812) 15 East, 634; Ginnett v. Whittingham, (1886) 16 Q. B. D. 761); and these he is at liberty to try and determine, either according to the Common Law of the land, or according to the University Statutes and customs, at his discretion. The judge of the Chancellor's Court at Oxford is the Vice-Chancellor, or his deputy. By 25 & 26 Vict. c. 26, amending 17 & 18 Vict. c. 81, s. 45, the Court of the Vice-Chancellor of Oxford is now governed by the Common and Statute Law of the realm and no longer by the rules of the Civil Law. See ORDER IN COUNCIL, August, 1894, applying the Rules of the Supreme Court relating to appeals from County Courts to this Court. See COUNTY COURT. And see 18 & 19 Vict. c. 36; 20 & 21 Vict. c. 25; and Judicature Act, 1925, s. 208.

A similar privilege was formerly enjoyed by the University of Cambridge, but the right of the University, or any member thereof, to claim consuance of any actions or criminal proceedings wherein any person who is not a member of the University is a party, has ceased.—19 & 20 Vict. c. xvii., s. 18, and see County Courts Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 53), s. 192, which saves the rights, privileges and jurisdiction of the Chancellors of both University Courts. As to the disciplinary jurisdiction over women formerly exercised at Cambridge, see SPINNING HOUSE.

Chance-medley [fr. chaude meslée, Fr.; fr. chaud, hot, and meslée, fray, mesler, meler, to mingle, mescolare, It. When the element chaud lost its meaning to ordinary English ears, it was replaced by chance in accordance with the meaning of the compound.—Wedg.], a casual affray. Such killing of a person as happens either in self-defence on a sudden quarrel, or in the commission of an unlawful act without any deliberate intention of doing any mischief.—1 Hawk. P. C. c. xxx., s. 1. It is sometimes termed chaud-medley, which more properly signifies an affray in the heat of blood or passion.

Chancery [fr. cancelli, lattice-work, Lat.; chancellerie, Fr.]. The Court of Chancery, which administered equity (see that title) so far as distinct from law, was the highest court of judicature in this kingdom next to parliament.

Its powers and jurisdiction were in 1875 transferred to (I.) The High Court of Justice, and (II.) The Court of Appeal (Jud. Act, 1873, ss. 16–18).

(I.) There is by the Judicature Act, 1873, replaced by the Judicature Act, 1925, s. 4, a Division of the High Court of Justice called the Chancery Division. To this Division are assigned (1) matters in which the Court of Chancery had exclusive statutory jurisdiction (except County Court appeals), of these, the jurisdiction under the Charitable Trusts Acts, 1853–1869, is practically the only portion now remaining, the other jurisdictions having become exercisable under subsequent legislation. (Note : A. P. 1934, p. 2374), and (2) causes and matters for the administration of estates of deceased persons, dissolutions of partnerships, or taking of partnership or other accounts; redemption and foreclosure of mortgages, raising of portions or other charges on land; sale and distribution of proceeds of property subject to a lien or charge; execution of trusts, charitable or private; rectification, setting aside, or cancelling deeds or other written instruments; specific performance of contracts between vendors and purchasers of real estates, including contracts for leases; partition or sale of real estates; wardship of infants and care of their estates and many other matters assigned by Statute, e.g., Companies (Companies Act, 1929), Law of Property (Settled Land and Trustee) Acts, 1925, Land Registration Act, 1925, Life Assurance Companies Act, 1896, and Patents and Designs Acts, 1907 and 1919.

Also all matters within the jurisdiction of the High Court under the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, and certain matters relating to the appointment of new trustees and vesting orders of property in connection with persons of unsound mind, see s. 54, T. Act, 1925, and T. A. Rules (Jurisdiction in Lunacy), 1925.

(II.) The powers and jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal in Chancery, formerly consisting of the Lord Chancellor and Lords Justices of Appeal in Chancery, are transferred to the Court of Appeal (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 18, sub-s. 1), replaced by Jud. Act, 1925, s. 26. See APPEAL, COURT OF.

As to the investment of and the mode of dealing with money paid into the Chancery Division of the High Court, see the Chancery Funds Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 44), now repealed and replaced by the Jud. Act, 1925, and Supreme Court Funds Rules, 1927.

Chancery Amendment Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 27 ('Cairns's Act')), giving the Court power to award damages to a party injured either in addition to or in substitution for specific performance, and to try questions of fact or to have damages assessed by a jury before the Court itself; repealed by the same Act as the Chancery Regulation Act, 1862 (see below), and for the same reason.

Chancery Common Law Seal, for the sealing of writs, etc., out of the Petty Bag Office.—12 & 13 Vict. c. 109, ss. 11, 14. See now R. S. C., Ord. LXI.

Chancery Court of the County Palatine of Durham. A Court possessing an unlimited jurisdiction of the Chancery Division and concurrent with it, within the area of the County Palatine of Durham. Appeals lie to the Court of Appeal, see Palatine Court of Durham Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 47), and Judic. Act, 1925, s. 28 (as to appeals). The Chancellor, appointed by Royal Warrant, is the sole Judge of the Court.

Chancery Court of Lancaster. By Royal Charter and by Statute, a Court conferred on the County Palatine of Lancaster, having the same and concurrent jurisdiction within its area as the Chancery Division of the High Court, see Chancery of Lancaster Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 23); appeals lie to the Court of Appeal (Judic. Act, 1925, s. 28). The Court is presided over by a Vice-Chancellor appointed by the Chancellor of the Duchy and County Palatine.

Chancery Court of York. See 37 & 38 Vict. c. 85, s. 7, and ARCHES COURT.

Chancery (Great Seal [Offices] Abolition Act). See 37 & 38 Vict. c. 81.

Chancery Regulation Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 42), 'Rolt's Act,' by which the Court became bound to determine every question of law and fact; repealed by the Statute Law Revision and Civil Procedure Act, 1883, as having been superseded by the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 24, and now by Jud. Act, 1925, s. 36.

Chancery, Sheriff of, a Scottish official whose jurisdiction is to deal with petitions for the service of heirs (q.v.).

Chandala, the most degraded Hindoo caste.

Chandos Clause, the 20th section of the Representation of the People Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 45), giving the right of voting in counties to leaseholders: introduced by the Marquis of Chandos, afterwards Duke of Buckingham, in the House of Commons.

Change of Solicitor. Before 1883 no solicitor could be changed without the order of a judge, but by R. S. C. 1883. Ord. VII. r. 2, the change can be effected by mere notice.

Channel Islands. Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney, and Sark, part of the ancient Duchy of Normandy, annexed to the kingdom of England by William the Conqueror: by the Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 18 (1) (b), included in the expression British Isles. They are governed by their own laws and not bound by any statute of the British parliament, unless expressly named therein. An appeal lies from their Courts to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

Chanter. The chief singer in the choir of a cathedral. Mentioned in 13 Eliz. c. 10.

Chantry, or Chantry [fr. cantaria, Lat.], a little church, chapel, or particular altar, endowed with lands, or other revenues, for the maintenance of priests to sing mass, etc., for the souls of the donors, etc. See 1 Edw. 6, c. 14, abolishing them.

Chapel [fr. chapelle, Fr.], a building either adjoining to a church, for performing divine service, or separate from the mother-church, where the parish is large, and then called a chapel of ease, for the accommodation of those parishioners who dwell at a distance from the parish church. These may be parochial, and have a right to sacraments and burials, and to a distinct minister, by custom, though subject in some respects to the mother-church.—2 Inst. 363.

In an Act of Parliament 'chapel' means a Church of England chapel only, unless words be used as in the Parliamentary Registration Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 18), s. 23, showing that places of worship which do not belong to the Established Church are to be included. In ordinary parlance 'chapel' means a place of worship for dissenters, formerly (and more properly) called a 'meeting-house.'

Chapelry, the precincts and limits of a chapel.

Chaperon, a hood or bonnet anciently worn by the Knights of the Garter, as part of the habit of that noble order; also a little escutcheon fixed in the forehead of horses drawing a hearse at a funeral.

Chapitre [fr. capitula, Lat., chapters of a book], a summary of matters to be inquired of or presented before justices in eyre, justices of assize, or the peace, in their sessions.—Britton, c. iii.

Chaplain [fr. capellanus, Lat.], an ecclesiastic who performs divine service in a chapel; but it more commonly means one who attends upon a king, prince, or other person of quality, for the performance of clerical duties in a private chapel.—4 Rep. 90.

Chapman [fr. ceapman, Sax.], a cheapener, one that offers as a purchaser; also a seller.—Webster.

Chapter [fr. capitulum, Lat.], a congregation of ecclesiastical persons in a cathedral church, consisting of canons or prebendaries whereof the dean is the head, all subordinate to the bishop, to whom they act as assistants in matters relating to the church, for the better ordering and disposing the things thereof, and the confirmation of such leases of the temporality and offices relating to the bishopric, as the bishop shall make from time to time. And they are termed capitulum, as a kind of head, instituted not only to assist the bishop in manner aforesaid, but also anciently to rule and govern the diocese in the time of vacation.—Burn's Dict.

Character. Witnesses to speak to the good character of a prisoner may be called by him in his defence, and, if they speak to nothing else, it is the custom that the counsel for the prosecution should not reply. It is not allowable to state any particulars of the prisoner's conduct, either in proof of his good or bad character; but if he call witnesses to his good character, a previous conviction against him may be put in evidence. Witnesses to the bad character of a prisoner can be called only to contradict witnesses to his good character, and evidence so called must be confined to general reputation (R. v. Rowton, (1865) 34 L. J. M. C. 57). But a previous conviction may then be given in evidence in many cases, as in any case of an offence against the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), by s. 116 of that Act.

Questioning of Witness.—A witness may also be questioned as to whether he has been convicted of any felony or misdemeanour, and proof of his conviction may be given if he either denies or does not admit the fact, or refuses to answer.—Criminal Procedure Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 18), applicable both to civil and criminal cases, and to all courts.

Questioning of Accused.—By s. 1 (f) of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (see that title), a person charged with an offence, and called as a witness under that Act, must not be asked, and if asked need not answer, any question tending to show his commission of an offence not charged or that he is of bad character, unless (i.) proof of such offence is evidence of his guilt of the offence charged; or (ii.) 'he has personally or by his advocate asked questions of the witnesses for the prosecution with a view to establish his own good character, or has given evidence of his good character, or the nature or conduct of the defence is such as to involve imputations on the character of the prosecutor or the witnesses for the prosecution' (see R. v. Bridgwater, 1905, 1 K. B. 131); or (iii.) 'he has given evidence against any other person charged with the same offence.'

No Obligation to give Servant Character.—A master is under no legal obligation (except in Ireland) to give his servant a character when asked, but if he gives one he must do so honestly, and his answer is prima facie privileged.

False Characters.—Giving false characters, whether verbal (R. v. Connolly, 1910, 1 K. B. 28) or not, to servants, is punishable under the Servants Characters Act, 1792, (32 Geo. 3, c. 56), and the forgery of seamen's or soldiers' certificates of service or discharge, under the Seamen and Soldiers False Characters Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 5).

Charge (i) the instructions of a judge to a jury; the judge's summing up of the evidence at a trial by jury; the periodical address of a bishop or archdeacon to his clergy; the taking proceedings against a prisoner; a commission.

(ii.) To lay a duty upon any one, to acquaint any with the nature of their duty. See CHARGE SHEET. The clerk of arraigns gives the prisoner 'in charge' to the jury, by reading an abstract of the indictment, and they are bound to proceed to deliver him until they are discharged. To prefer an accusation against any one.

(iii.) A burden, duty, or trust; when attached to property; see MORTGAGES AND CHARGES, DEBENTURE, LAND CHARGES, ADMINISTRATION, REGISTRATION OF LAND.

Charge and Discharge, the old mode of taking accounts in Chancery.—Daniell's Chancery Practice, 2nd ed.

In Scotland the accounts of the intro-missions of trustees are commonly called Accounts of Charge and Discharge.

Chargé d'affaires, a diplomatic representative of a foreign court, to whose care are confided the affairs of his nation.

Charges, expenses, costs. A trustee is entitled as a matter of right to his costs, charges and expenses properly incurred in relation to the trust, and they constitute a first charge on the trust property, both capital and income; see Stott v. Milne, (1884) 25 Ch. D. 710.

Charge-sheet, a paper kept at a police-station to receive each night the names of the persons brought and given into custody, the nature of the accusation, and the name of the accuser in each case. It is under the care of the inspector on duty. Unless the accuser is willing to sign the charge-sheet, the accused will generally not be detained.

Charging Order, an order obtained from a court or judge under the Judgments Acts, 1838 and 1840 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110), s. 14, and (3 & 4 Vict. c. 82), s. 1, and R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XLVI., charging the stocks or funds of a judgment debtor with the judgment debt.

Solicitors' Costs.—The Solicitors' Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 37), s. 69, enables any Court in which a solicitor has been employed to prosecute or defend a suit to make a charging order in favour of the solicitor of the successful party for his taxed costs upon the property 'recovered or preserved' through the instrumentality of such solicitor, and the Court may make such orders for taxation of and for raising and payment of such costs out of the property as shall appear just and proper, and all conveyances and acts done to defeat, or which shall operate to defeat, such charge, unless made to a bona fide purchaser for value without notice, will be absolutely void as against the charge; but no such order may be made in any case in which the right to recover payment of the costs is barred by any statute of limitations. See Cordery on Solicitors; Atkinson on Solicitors' Lien.

Partners.—Under s. 23 of the Partnership Act, 1890, separate judgment creditors of a partner may obtain an order charging his interest in the partnership property: the other partner or partners may redeem the interest charged, or in case of sale, purchase the same. See R. S. C., June, 1891, Ord. XLVI. (1a).

Charitable Uses and Trusts. 9 Geo. 2, c. 26, commonly called 'The Mortmain Act', 1735, after reciting that gifts or alienations of land in mortmain (see MORTMAIN) were prohibited by Magna Charta and other wholesome laws as prejudicial to the common utility, and that such public mischief had greatly increased by many large and improvident dispositions, made by languishing or dying persons to charitable uses, to take place after their deaths to the disherison of their lawful heirs, enacted that no lands or other hereditaments whatsoever, nor money, or personal estate to be laid out in land should be given to any person or bodies corporate, or charged by any person in trust, for any charitable uses, unless such gift, etc., should be made by deed (thus entirely excluding gifts by will) executed twelve months before the death of the donor and be enrolled in the Court of Chancery within six calendar months after execution, and be without any power of revocation for the benefit of the donor.

The Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 29 (4), however, provides that assurances of land or personal estate to be laid out in land or separate instruments declaring the charitable trusts executed after 1925 need not be so enrolled, but that they must be sent to the Charity Commissioners within six months or such extended time as the Commissioners may allow to be recorded in their books: this enactment does not apply to registered land or to instruments required to be sent to the Board of Education by s. 117 of the Education Act, 1921 (11 & 12 Geo. 5, c. 51).

The Mortmain Act of 1735 excepted dispositions of lands to or in trust for either of the universities of Oxford and Cambridge, or any of the colleges therein, or to or in trust for the colleges of Eton, Winchester, or Westminster, for the better support and maintenance of the scholars upon the foundations thereof; and various Acts of Parliament passed from time to time have also specially exempted devises of lands or moneys charged thereon to the trustees of the British Museum for the benefit of that institution (5 Geo. 4, c. 39, s. 3); or to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty (2 & 3 Anne, c. 11, s. 4; 43 Geo. 3, c. 136, s. 1; and 45 Geo. 3, c. 84, s. 3); the commissioners of Greenwich Hospital, and of the Royal Navy Asylum; the members of the Seamen's Hospital Society; the governors of St. George's Hospital, and of the Foundling Hospital (13 Geo. 2, c. 29); and of public schools (32 & 33 Vict. c. 58, s. 2); also public parks, museums, or libraries (34 & 35 Vict. c. 13); together with a few other public charities.

The strictness of the Act was further relaxed in the case of gifts of land for charitable purposes, such as parks, universities, schools, museums, places of worship, endowment or augmentation of livings, literary and scientific institutions, etc. A list of the various statutes enabling land to be acquired for charitable purposes will be found in Bouchier and Chilcott, and by 24 Vict. c. 9, which provided that a conveyance for charitable uses should not be void by reason of containing certain stipulations for the donor's benefit, and dispensed with a deed in the case of copyholds. The Mortmain Act itself, together with eight amending Acts, is repealed by the consolidating Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 42), which re-enacts them in substance, though the phraseology is much altered; and see the Charitable Trusts Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 56).

An important amendment of the law of charitable uses was effected by the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 73), to the effect that money secured on land and other personal estate arising from or connected with land (which, as 'savouring of the realty' had been held to be within the Act of Geo. 2) may be devised to charitable uses, and that even land itself may be so devised, though the Act provides that it must be sold within one year from the death of the testator unless the Court or the Charity Commissioners allow it to be retained. The Settled Land Act, 1925, has effected some further changes chiefly affecting the formalities of conveyance and the transmission of legal estate without altering the substantive incidents of the law relating to gifts of land to charities or their right to hold or convey it.

As a rule, trustees of charities cannot sell land unless it is wholly maintained by voluntary contributions; see Charitable Trusts Acts, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 137), s. 241, and 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 124), s. 29, without the authority of a Statute or the Court, or under an authorized scheme or with the approval of the Charity Commissioners, of whom many of the powers relating to education were transferred to the Board of Education (O. C., 11th August, 1902).

Charities, or Public Trusts. One of the earliest fruits of the Emperor Constantine's zeal, or pretended zeal, for Christianity, was a permission to his subjects to bequeath their property to the Church. This permission was soon abused to so great a degree as to induce the Emperor Valentinian to enact a Mortmain Act by which it was restrained.

But this restraint was gradually relaxed; and in the time of Justinian it became a fixed maxim of civil law that legacies to pious uses (which included all legacies destined to works of charity, whether they related to spiritual or temporal concerns) were entitled to peculiar favour, and to be deemed privileged testaments.

Lord Thurlow was clearly of opinion that the doctrine of charities grew up from the civil law; and Lord Eldon, in assenting to that opinion, has judiciously remarked, that at an early period the ordinary had the power to apply a portion of every man's personal estate to charity; and when afterwards the statute compelled a distribution, it is not impossible that the same favour should have been extended to charity in wills, which by their own force purported to authorize such a distribution.

Charity (as Sir William Grant has justly observed), in its widest sense, denotes all the good affections men ought to feel towards each other; in its more restricted and common sense, relief to the poor. In English law it means a general public use (Commissioners for Income Tax v. Pemsel, 1891, A. C. 531), and comprehends 'relief of aged, impotent, and poor people; maintenance of sick and maimed soldiers and mariners, schools of learning, free schools, and scholars of universities; repairs of bridges, ports, havens, causeways, churches, sea-banks, and highways; education and preferment of orphans; the relief, stock, or maintenance of houses of correction; marriages of poor maids; supportation, aid, and help of young tradesmen, handicraftsmen, and persons decayed; relief or redemption of prisoners or captives; and aid or ease of any poor inhabitants, concerning payments of fifteenths, setting out of soldiers, and other taxes.' These are the words of the preamble to 43 Eliz. c. 4, which is amongst the many statutes repealed by the consolidating Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 52); but s. 13, sub-s. 2, of that Act recites this definition at length, and provides that 'whereas in divers enactments and documents reference is made to charities within the meaning of the said Act,' references to such charities shall be construed as 'references to charities within the meaning of the said preamble.'

In general the question whether a gift is charitable depends not on whether it may, but whether it must be applied to purposes strictly charitable; see Morice v. Bishop of Durham, (1904) 9 Ves. 399, 406; Re David- son, 1909, 1 Ch. 667, and see A.-G. v. National Provincial Bank, 1924, A. C. 262; and Verge v. Somerville, 1924, A. C. 496; if there is any option in the matter, the gift will be void. To be valid a charitable bequest must be for the public benefit and the trust must be capable of being administered and controlled by the Court: whether gift or trust is for the public benefit is a question for the Court (In re Hummeltenberg, Beatty, v. London Spiritualistic Alliance, Ltd., 1923, 1 Ch. 237). There are certain uses which, though not within the letter, are yet deemed charitable within the equity of the statute. Such is money given to maintain a preaching minister; to maintain a school master in a parish; for the setting up a hospital for the relief of poor people; for the building of a sessions-house for a city or county; for the making of a new, or for the repairing of an old, pulpit in a church; or for the buying of a pulpit-cushion, or pulpit-cloth; or for the setting of new bells where there were none, or for the mending of them when they are out of repair; or to pay ringers who should ring a peal of bells on the anniversary of the restoration of Charles II. (Re Pardoe, 1906, 2 Ch. 184). City companies are not 'charities' in any legal sense of the word (Re Meech, 1910, 1 Ch. 426). A charitable gift pays legacy or succession duty at 10 per cent., but charities, generally speaking, are exempt from income tax. By the Charitable Trusts Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 27), the Trustees or Charitable Funds have become incorporated. See Tyssen's Charitable Bequests, 2nd ed., and preceding title.

Charity Commissioners. The Charity Commissioners for England and Wales are a body appointed under the provisions of the Charitable Trusts Acts, 1853 to 1925, and their powers and duties are to be found in these Acts. They exercise very extensive powers of management and control over charities, including power to authorize sales, exchanges, leases and mortgages of charity property; to frame new schemes where the original terms of the trust can no longer be literally or beneficially complied with; to investigate the accounts of charitable trusts; to sanction proceedings by the trustees and give them advice, and many other powers. There are, however, certain institutions exempted from their jurisdiction, e.g., certain universities and colleges, registered places of worship, and charities wholly supported by voluntary contributions; see s. 62 of the Act of 1853, the construction of which has given rise to great difficulties, and the judgment of Davey, L.J., in Re Clergy Orphan Corporation, 1894, 3 Ch. 145. By the Charitable Trusts Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 56), power is given to the Commissioners and also to the High Court to extend the area and objects of town charities in certain cases.

All powers and authorities, by the Endowed Schools Acts (see that title), vested in the Endowed Schools Commissioners by the Endowed Schools Act, 1874, were transferred to the Charity Commissioners. And by Orders in Council made under the Board of Education Act, 1899, the powers of the Commissioners over all endowments held for purely educational purposes have been transferred to the Board of Education (see that title).

Charre of Lead, thirty pigs of lead.

Charta Chyrophaphata, or Communs, an indenture. See that title.

Charta de Forestâ is taken from the roll of 25 Edward I., and has a confirmation of that date prefixed to it, similar to that prefixed to Magna Charta. This charter, though of infinite importance at the time it was made, contains in it nothing interesting to a modern lawyer, any further than as it gives some specimen of the nature of the institution of Forest Laws, and the burthens thereby brought on the subject. It contains 16 chapters.—1 Reeves, c. v. 254.

Charta de una parte, a deed-poll. See DEED POLL.

Chartæ libertatum are Magna Charta (see that title) and Charta de Forestâ.

Chartel or Cartel [fr. cartel, Fr.], a letter of defiance or challenge to a single combat; also, an instrument or writing between two states for settling the exchange of prisoners of war.

Charter [fr. charta, Lat.; chartre, Fr.], an evidence in writing of things done between man and man. Charters of the Sovereign are written instruments granting certain privileges or exemptions to any person or body politic (Jacob's Law Dict.) (see, e.g., the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, s. 210) or corporations; e.g., to 'chartered' banking or other trading companies (see 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 73, and Chartered Companies Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 56)), or to a college or university (see College Charter Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 63)), or to a City company, as the Apothecaries Company, whose charter, granted by James I., is cited in the Apothecaries Act, 1815 (55 Geo. 3, c. 194). See LETTERS PATENT. The word also meant deeds and other documents of title belonging to private owners.—Jacob's Law Dict.

Chartered Accountant. See ACCOUNTANT.

Chartered Civil Engineer. See CIVIL ENGINEER.

Chartered Ship, a ship hired or freighted.

Charterer, a person who charters or hires a ship for a voyage or for a certain period; also a Cheshire freeholder.—Sir P. Ley's Antiq. f. 356.

Charter-land, otherwise called bookland, property held by deed under certain rents and free-services. It in effect differs nothing from the free socage lands, and hence have arisen most of the freehold tenants, who hold of particular manors, and owe suit and service to the same.—2 Bl. Com. 90.

Charter-party [fr. charta partita, Lat., a divided charter; charte partie, Fr.]. When notaries were less common there was only one instrument made for both parties; this they cut in two, and gave each his portion; an agreement in writing by which a ship-owner agrees to let an entire ship, or part thereof, to a merchant, for the carriage of goods on a specified voyage, or during a specified period, for a sum of money which the merchant agrees to pay as freight for their carriage. By such an agreement the ship is said to be chartered to the merchant, who is called the charterer. There are certain terms usually to be found in all charter-parties, e.g., a statement of the burthen of the ship, an undertaking by the ship-owner that the ship, being seaworthy and furnished with necessaries, shall be ready by a certain day to receive the cargo, shall sail when loaded, and deliver her cargo at her port of destination (the act of God or the king's enemies excepted), the charterer undertaking to load and unload the ship, within a certain number of days, called the lay or running days, and if he detain her longer, to pay demurrage, i.e., a certain sum of money for each extra day, and also to pay freight agreed. In the absence of a charter-party or bill of lading, the ship-owner becomes a common carrier and remains liable as such (see Hill v. Scott, 1895, 2 Q. B. 713). See Leggett or Scrutton on Charter-parties; Abbott on Shipping; Carver, Carriage by Sea. As to stamp (6d.), see ss. 49–51 of the Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39).

Chartis reddendis, an ancient writ which lay against one who had charters of feoffment entrusted to his keeping and refused to deliver them.—Reg. Brev. 159.

Chase [fr. chasse, Fr.], a privileged place for the preservation of deer and beasts of the forest, of a middle nature between a forest and a park. It is commonly less than a forest and not endowed with so many liberties, as officers, laws, courts; and yet it is of larger compass than a park, having more officers and game than a park. Every forest is a chase, but every chase is not a forest. It differs from a park in that it is not enclosed, yet it must have certain metes and bounds, but it may be in other men's grounds as well as in one's own.—Manw. 49.

Chastisement. As to legality of correction of a child by its parent, an apprentice or scholar by his master, or a criminal by an officer, see s. 24 of the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 41), replaced by the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, 1904 (4 Edw. 7, c. 15), and see 8 Edw. 7, c. 67. The Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 12), s. 1 (7), preserves the right of parent, teacher, or persons having lawful control to administer punishment. As to criminals, the Prisons Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 41), and rules thereunder. By s. 5, ibid., the order must be confirmed by the Secretary of State, and (as to scholars) Cleary v. Booth, 1893, 1 Q. B. 465; and Mansell v. Griffin, 1908, 1 K. B. 160, 947; R. v. Newport (Salop) J.J., ex parte Wright, 1929, 2 K. B. 416. A husband cannot inflict chastisement on his wife, and all ancient dicta to the contrary are now unsound (R. v. Jackson, 1891, 1 Q. B. 671). See Lush on Husband and Wife; Macdonell on Master and Servant.

Chastity, an imputation on the chastity of a woman is now actionable without special damage. See SLANDER.

Chattels or Catala [fr. catalla, Lat.; chatel, Fr.; chapel, Old Fr.]. The word 'catalla' among the Normans primarily signified only beasts of husbandry or, as they are still called, cattle, but in a secondary sense the term was extended to all movables and not only to these but to whatsoever was not a fief or feud or, at a later date, in the nature of freehold or parcel of it. The distinction in the class of chattels survives in the legal meaning of the terms, 'personal chattels,' denoting movable property and 'chattels real,' which concern the realty, such as terms of years of lands or tenements, wardships, the interest of tenant by statute staple, by statute merchant, by elegit, and such like.—Co. Litt., 118 b.

Chattels personal or in a more narrow and more modern sense, 'chattels' (cf. 'goods and chattels' in the writ of fiari facias) (q.v.), means movable property or effects which belong personally to the owner and for which if they are injuriously withheld from him he has, in general, no other remedy than by personal action (see TROVER), while a mixed action of ejectment (q.v.), in which the plaintiff could recover the specific property was available in the case of 'chattels real.' The Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 55 (x) provides a definition of 'personal chattels' upon an intestacy. The statutory definition excludes chattels used at the death of the intestate for business purposes, and money or securities for money.

Chattels Real are estates or interests in or arising out of lands. The difference between real estate or freeholds and chattels real consists for the most part in the fixity or non-fixity of their duration. It is the latter property, viz., uncertainty of duration, that characterizes a freehold; it is the former, certainty, that characterizes a chattel real or chattel interest in realty. Hence, every tenancy of a definite duration is a term, i.e., a period accurately ascertained, during which the estate or interest is to endure, and it is immaterial that the interest may come to an end sooner; e.g., a lease for 99 years if A. shall so long live is a chattel interest or chattel real, for it cannot under any circumstances last beyond the 99 years, although it will determine earlier by A.'s death, while a lease for the life of A. was until 1926 (L. P. Act, 1925) a freehold estate. The L. P. Act, 1925, has preserved as equitable interests many of the incidents of former freehold estates, but it has enacted (s. 1) that the only estates in land which are capable of subsisting or of being conveyed or created at law are an estate in fee simple absolute in possession and a term of years absolute, and by s. 149 a lease at a rent or in consideration of a fine for the life of A. is to take effect as a lease for 90 years determinable after the death of A. by notice as provided by the Act. Before 1926 the most important consequence of the distinction between chattels real and freeholds which were not limited to a life or lives was that freeholds of inheritance devolved at law upon the heir or devisee, while chattels real devolved on the personal representatives of the deceased. This difference has now been abolished, firstly, by s. 1 of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (replacing the Land Transfer Act, 1897), which assimilated the devolution to personal representatives of real estate to that of chattels real and, secondly, by s. 45 of the A. E. Act, 1925, which abolished all the existing rules of descent to land belonging to persons dying after 1925 other than entailed interests, while s. 46 provides for the same rules of succession to real and personal estate without distinction in case of intestacies of persons dying after 1925. Another consequence of the difference between chattels real and freeholds is that freeholds are considered to be greater estates than leaseholds, and therefore if a term of 1,000 years and an estate for life were to vest in the same persons in the same right, the term would merge and be extinguished in the life estate unless an intervening estate operated to prevent the union of interests, but the importance of this principle has been lessened by s. 25 (4) of the Judicature Act, 1873, replaced by s. 185 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, under which there is no merger at law if there is no merger in equity (Capital & Counties Bank, Ltd. v. Rhodes, 1903, 1 Ch. at p. 653), and see MERGER.

Another difference between chattels real and freeholds personal was that chattels real could not be settled in succession but vested absolutely at birth in the first tenant-in-tail (Foley v. Burnell, 1 Bro. C. C. 274). But now, by s. 130 of the L. P. Act, 1925, an entailed interest may be created by way of trust in any property real or personal, subject to statutory requirements. See TAIL.

Among chattels real five species of legal or equitable estates may be enumerated: (a) for years; (b) from year to year; (c) at will; (d) by elegit; and (e) on sufferance. See also HEIRLOOMS.

Chaud-medley. See CHANCE-MEDLEY.

Chaumpert, an ancient tenure.—Blount.

Chantry. See CHANTRY.

Cheap, subst. purchase, bargain; adj. low in price. The word cheap, forming part of the name of a place, denotes that in that place there was a market, e.g., Cheapside, Eastcheap, Westcheap.

Cheap Trains. Early in the history of railways the companies were compelled by the Railway Regulation Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 85), sometimes called the Cheap Trains Act, to run one train a day at a penny a mile fare; in respect of which trains (ss. 6, 7) termed 'parliamentary trains,' or 'Government trains,' the companies were exempt from the passenger duty otherwise chargeable. Disputes arising between the companies and the Government as to the extent of this exemption, the Cheap Trains Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 34), abolished the duty altogether on all fares not exceeding one penny per mile and empowered the Board of Trade to require any company to provide proper accommodation at such fares, and also reasonable accommodation for workmen going to and returning from their work. See Browne or Theobald on Railways.

Cheaters, or Escheators, were officers appointed to look after the king's escheats, a duty which gave them great opportunities of fraud and oppression, and in consequence many complaints were made of their misconduct. Hence it seems that a cheater came to signify a fraudulent person, and thence the verb to cheat was derived.—Wedgw.

Cheats, deceitful practices, in defrauding or endeavouring to defraud another of his known rights, by means of some artful device, contrary to the plain rules of common honesty; as by playing with false dice, by causing an illiterate person to execute a deed to his prejudice, or reading it over to him in words different from those in which it is written; selling one commodity for another, or using false weights and measures, and the like.—1 Hawk. 188. 'If a person in the course of his trade or business, openly and publicly carried on, put a false mark or token upon an article so as to pass it off as a genuine one, when in fact it is only a spurious one, and the article is sold and money obtained by means of that false mark or token, that will be a cheat at Common Law.'—Per Cockburn, C.J., in R. v. Closs, (1857) 27 L. J. M. C. 54. See also R. v. Vreones, 1891, 1 Q. B. 360; R. v. Hamilton, 1901, 1 K. B. 740.

Cheating at play is punishable in like manner as obtaining money by false pretences under the Gaming Act, 1845, s. 17. See Russell on Crimes.

Check. See CHEQUE.

Check-roll, a list or book containing the names of such as are attendants on, or in the pay of, the sovereign or other great personages, as their household servants.—19 Car. 2, c. 1.

Check-weighter. A person appointed under ss. 13 and 14 of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, by the majority ascertained by ballot of the persons employed in a coal mine who are paid according to the weight of the mineral gotten by them, and stationed at their own cost at each place appointed for the weighing of the mineral to take a correct amount of the weight. See Checkweighing in Various Industries Act, 1919 (9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 51). See Date v. Gas Coal Collieries, 1914, 3 K. B. 1175.

Chemists and Druggists. The Pharmacy Act, 1933, provides for registration and abrogates certain provisions of the Pharmacy Acts of 1852, 1868 and 1869, the Poisons and Pharmacy Act, 1908, the Dangerous Drugs Acts, 1920, 1923 and 1925, which otherwise regulate the business of chemists and druggists, and provide for their examination. Any registered person is entitled to sell drugs, other than poisons which are contained in the Schedules to the Act of 1933 or added thereto under the provisions of that Act. Others must not falsely imply that they are registered members of the Pharmaceutical Society or use the description of chemist, druggist, pharmacist, etc. Only authorized persons may sell poisons. It is an offence to use such titles unless authorized by the Pharmacy Acts. Medical practitioners, qualified veterinary surgeons, and certain other persons, as, for example, those selling certain scheduled poisonous substances for agricultural purposes, are not within the above-mentioned prohibition imposed upon persons other than chemists and druggists respecting the sale of scheduled poisons. The Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain, which was incorporated in 1843 by Royal Charter and received a supplementary charter in 1901, is the examination and registration authority for chemists and druggists. There was a similar society in Ireland, see 38 & 39 Vict. c. 57. See Poisons; and consult Halsbury's Laws of England, vol. xx., tit. 'Medicine and Pharmacy'; and Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Medical Acts'.

Cheque. An order addressed to a banker requesting him to pay to (a) the person therein mentioned, or his order, or (b) the person therein mentioned, or the bearer of the cheque, the sum of money therein mentioned; defined in the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 73—by which such provisions of that Act as are applicable to a bill of exchange payable on demand apply also to a cheque—as a 'bill of exchange drawn on a banker payable on demand.'

A warrant for the payment of half a year's interest on 5 per cent. War Stock, 1929-47, made out in the usual form of the Bank of England, signed by the Bank's chief accountant, to the order of a specified person was held to be a cheque 'within the meaning of that word in the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (Slingsby v. Westminster Bank, Ltd., 1931, 1 K. B. 173). Section 82 of the Act affords the banker protection when 'in good faith and without negligence he receives payment for a customer of a cheque crossed generally or specially to himself and the customer has no title or a defective title thereto.' But see Underwood, Ltd. v. Bank of Liverpool, 1924, 1 K. B. 775; and Lloyds Bank, Ltd. v. Savory & Co., (1933) 49 T. L. R. 116.

As to the effect of stopping a cheque, see Cohen v. Hale, (1878) 3 Q. B. D. 371; and of alteration, Slingsby v. District Bank, 1932, 1 K. B. 544. See Watson on Cheques; Chalmers on Bills of Exchange. See CROSSED CHEQUE.

Chester was declared to be no longer a county palatine by 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 70, s. 13. As to Chester Courts, see 30 & 31 Vict. c. 56.

Chevage, Chevagium, or Cherae [fr. chef, Fr.], a tribute sum of money formerly paid by such as held land in villeinage to their lords in acknowledgment, and was a kind of head or poll money.—Bract. l. 1, c. x.

Chevantia [fr. chevance, Fr.], a loan or advance of money upon credit; also goods, stock, etc.—Cowel.

Chevisance [fr. chevir, i.e., venir à chef de quelque chose, Fr., to come to the end of a business], an agreement or composition; an end or order set down between a creditor and debtor; an indirect gain in point of usury, etc.; also an unlawful bargain or contract.—Jac. Law Dict.

Cheze, a homestead or homesfall which is accessory to a house.—Div. of Purl. 162, note.

Chicane [fr. chicaner, Fr., to wrangle], the use of tricks and artifice.

Chief Baron of the Exchequer, the presiding judge in the Court of Exchequer, and afterwards in the Exchequer Division of the High Court of Justice. In 1881, after the death of Lord Chief Baron Kelly, the office was abolished by Order in Council under s. 31 of the Jud. Act, 1873, and merged in that of Lord Chief Justice of England.

Chief Clerks of Judges in Equity, appointed under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80, s. 16, to act in the place of the abolished Masters in Chancery. They were continued in office, under the judges of the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice, by Jud. Act, 1873, ss. 77-86. In 1897 the title of 'Chief Clerk' was altered to that of 'Master of the Supreme Court.'

See R. S. C., Ord. LV., and Judicature Act, 1925, ss. 110-130.

Chief Justice of England, the presiding judge in the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice, and, in the absence of the Lord Chancellor, President of the High Court, and also an ex-officio judge of the Court of Appeal (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 5; Jud. Act, 1875, s. 6) (now Judicature Act, 1925, s. 6 (2)). The full title is, 'Lord Chief Justice of England,' abbreviated L.C.J.

The 'Lives of the Chief Justices of England' down to that of Lord Mansfield (who was appointed in 1756, resigned in 1788, and died in 1793) was brought out by Lord Campbell in 1849.

Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, the presiding judge in the Court of Common Pleas, and afterwards in the Common Pleas Division of the High Court of Justice, and one of the ex-officio judges of the High Court of Appeal (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 5, and Jud. Act, 1875, s. 4). He had five (formerly four, until 31 & 32 Vict. c. 125, see s. 11) puisne judges associated with him. In 1881, after the promotion of Lord Chief Justice Coleridge to the office of Lord Chief Justice of England, the office was abolished by Order in Council under s. 31 of the Jud. Act, 1873, and merged in that of Lord Chief Justice of England.

Chief-rents [fr. reditus capitales, Lat.], the annual payments of freeholders of manors; also denominated quit rents (quieti reditus), because thereby the tenant goes free of all other services. See MANOR.

Chief, Tenants in, persons who held their lands immediately under the king (in capite), in right of his Crown and dignity.—2 Bl. Com. 60.

Chieftie, a small rent paid to the lord paramount.

Chievance, usury.

Child-bearing. The English law admits of no presumption as to the time when a woman ceases to bear children, though this enters into most other codes, and the practice of the Courts in treating women of a certain age as past child-bearing is not a rule of law but is a mere rule of convenience in the administration of estates; there is no legal impossibility in a woman 100 years old bearing a child; see Farwell on Powers, p. 295 and cases there referred to; Co. Litt. 40 b. The possibility of bearing a child after the age of fifty-four was recognized by the Court of Appeal in Croxton v. May, (1878) 9 Ch. D. 388, in a case where the woman had been married only three years.

Children. The word child in legal documents means a legitimate child unless otherwise declared by statute. See Morris v. Britannic Assurance Co., 1931, 2 K. B. 125. 'Child' is defined by the Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 12), s. 107, as meaning, for the purposes of the Act, a person under fourteen years of age. The Children and Young Persons (Scotland) Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 47), makes provisions for Scotland similar to those of the corresponding English Act.

Registration of Birth, and Vaccination.—It is the duty, by s. 1 of the Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 88), of the father and mother of every child born alive, and in their default of other persons (see BIRTHS), to give information to the registrar within forty-two days; the Public Health Act, 1936, ss. 2 and 3, provides for compulsory notification of births to the Medical Officer of Health (see BIRTHS), and the child must be vaccinated in ordinary cases (see VACCINATION) within six months.

Education.—The Education Act, 1921, now forms a code of the law on the subject of compulsory education for children. See EDUCATION.

Employment.—As to the employment of children under twelve in factories, workshops, etc., see FACTORY, and consult Abraham and Davies, Austin, Bowstead, Redgrave, or Ruegg and Mossop on the Factory Acts.

The Coal Mines Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 91, prohibits the employment in mines below ground of boys under fourteen and girls of any age, and s. 92 regulates the employment of girls and boys above ground.

The employment of boys under sixteen and girls under eighteen in dangerous public performances is punishable under the Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (c. 12), ss. 23, 24, and the employment of children generally is restricted by s. 18 and bye-laws of local authorities under that Act, which prohibits (s. 20) the employment in 'street trading' of a child under sixteen. A local authority may make bye-laws respecting the employment of children under fourteen (s. 18), and as to street trading under eighteen (s. 20), and respecting the employment of persons under eighteen subject to certain exceptions (s. 19). The regulation of the employment of children in public entertainments is dealt with by s. 22. By sub-s. (3) a licence can under certain circumstances be obtained for a child over twelve, and invests any officer charged with the execution of the Act with all the powers of a factory inspector under that Act to enter and examine any place of public entertainment.

Employment abroad.—As to the restrictions on children being taken out of the United Kingdom with a view to singing, playing, performing, or being exhibited for profit, see ss. 25 and 26.

Sale of Liquor.—Intoxicating Liquor (Sale to Persons under Eighteen) Act, 1923 (which repeals s. 67 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910), prohibits the sale to and purchase by persons under the age of eighteen of intoxicating liquor to be consumed on the premises. A person over sixteen may, however, buy beer, porter, cider or perry for consumption with a meal to be consumed in a place usually set apart for the service of meals, i.e., not the bar. The Act also contains provisions to prevent the consumption of intoxicating liquor by persons under eighteen in the bar and the purchase of intoxicating liquor for that purpose.

Sale of Tobacco.—The sale of tobacco to children under sixteen is penalized by s. 7 of the Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (c. 12), which also (sub-s. (3)) allows cigarettes to be taken away from a person under sixteen who is smoking in any street or public place. See TOBACCO.

Infant Life Protection.—The Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 67) (sometimes termed the 'Children's Charter'), as amended by the Children and Young Persons Act, 1932 (c. 46), ss. 65 to 69, consolidates and amends in Part I. thereof the provisions relating to the protection of infant life. A person undertaking (s. 1) for reward the nursing or maintenance of an infant must give notice to the local authority, and provision is made (s. 2) for the appointment of inspectors and visitors. An insurance policy (s. 7) on the life of an infant kept for reward is void, and it is an offence both on the part of the insurer and the insurance company to enter or attempt to enter into such a policy. See also P. H. Act, 1936, Part VII., ss. 200–220.

Cruelty.—The Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (see supra), consolidates and amends in Part I. thereof the law with regard to cruelty to children. Special penalties are provided (s. 1) for the ill-treatment of children under sixteen by persons over sixteen having custody of them (including a father who having deserted his wife fails to pay any part of his earnings for the support of his children: see R. v.

Connor, 1908, 2 K. B. 26), giving power to increase the penalties up to 200l. where the offender is interested pecuniarily in the death of the child; and also penalties for causing (s. 4) children under sixteen to beg in the streets, or exposing (s. 11) children under seven to the risk of burning, or allowing (s. 3) persons between the ages of four and sixteen to be in brothels, or encouraging or favouring (s. 2) the seduction or prostitution, or unlawful carnal knowledge of a girl under sixteen. The Court can presume (s. 99) the age of a child or young person and deal with the case accordingly. See ABUSING CHILDREN.

To unlawfully abandon or expose a child under two to the danger of life or probability of permanent injury to health is a misdemeanour by s. 27 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, as to which see Reg. v. Falkingham, (1870) and Reg. v. White, (1871) L. R. 1 C. C. R. 222, 311.

Evidence.—The admissibility of the evidence of a child of tender years depends upon the degree of understanding it possesses, and the religious education it has received. Under s. 38 of the Children and Young Persons Act, 1933, the evidence of a child not understanding the nature of an oath may be received if he has sufficient intelligence to justify the reception of the evidence and understands the duty of speaking the truth.

Responsibility.—Above fourteen a child is presumed to be doli capax, but between eight and fourteen a child is presumed to be doli incapax; though the rule prevails that 'malitia supplet aetatem.' It is conclusively presumed that no child under eight can be guilty of any offence (s. 50). See AGE.

Punishment.—Sentence of death cannot (s. 3 (1)) be pronounced on or recorded against a person under eighteen and a young person under seventeen cannot (s. 52 (2) (3)) be sent to penal servitude and can only be imprisoned if of an unruly or depraved character, and a child under fourteen can (s. 52 (1)) under no circumstances be sentenced to imprisonment or penal servitude. Sections 53 to 59 give categorically the different methods of dealing with children under sixteen who have committed any offence. See INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS; REFORMATORY SCHOOLS.

As to the custody of children by persons other than their parents, see Reg. v. Barnardo, 1891, 1 Q. B. 194, C. A., and the Custody of Children Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 3), and now ss. 206–220 of the Public Health Act, 1936. This Act also, see ss. 204–206, provides for maternity and child welfare.

Sections 45 to 49 relate to Juvenile Courts created for the purpose of hearing charges against children and young persons; and the court may (s. 55) order the parent or guardian of a child under sixteen to pay the fine, damages, or costs imposed. See JUVENILE COURTS. For responsibility, see AGE.

And see INFANTS; YOUNG PERSON; and Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Infants and Children.'

Child living. The rule extending the meaning of 'child living' to include for the purposes of the child's benefit a child en ventre sa mère does not apply to s. 21 of the Finance Act, 1920, which provides for certain deductions in respect of income tax if a claimant has a child living at the commencement of a financial year: Jackson v. Voss, 39 T. L. R. 445.

Child-stealing. See the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, s. 56, which applies to children under fourteen, and punishes decoying either by force or fraud.

Childwife, the right to take a fine of a bondswoman gotten with child without her lord's consent.—Termes de la Ley; Jac. Law Dict.

Chiltern Hundreds. A member of the House of Commons cannot resign his seat. He may, however, become disqualified by acceptance of an office of profit under the Crown. A member therefore usually vacates his seat by the acceptance of the stewardship of the Chiltern Hundreds, or some other nominal office in the gift of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The practice began about the year 1750; but the duties and profits of the stewardship have long since ceased, and the office is only retained to serve this particular purpose. The Chiltern Hills, a range of chalk eminences separating the counties of Bedford and Hertford, were formerly covered with thick beechwood, and sheltered numerous robbers; to put these marauders down, and protect the inhabitants of the neighbourhood from their depredations, an officer was appointed under the Crown called the Steward of the Chiltern Hundreds, which were Burnham, Desborough and Stoke.

The Crown, for the convenience of the House at large, is ordinarily ready to confer on any member the Stewardship of the Chiltern Hundreds, or of the Manor of Poynings, of East Hendred or Northstead. The office is retained until the appointment is revoked to make way for the appointment of another holder. Acceptance vacates the seat of the member. The office can be granted during a recess, but the statutory power of the Speaker for the issue of a writ during recess to fill up a vacancy caused by acceptance of office does not apply.—May's Parl. Pr.; and see the explanation given by Sir William Harcourt in Parliament on 31st Jan., 1893 (8 Parl. Deb. 4th series, 50; The Times, 1st Feb., 1893, p. 6).

Chimlin [fr. chemin, Fr.], a way, either the King's highway (chiminus regis), or a private way.—Co. Litt. 56.

Chimnage, or Pedagium, toll due by custom for having a way through a forest.—Co. Litt. 56.

Chimney. Sections 30, 31 of the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 89), which are applied to all urban districts by s. 171 of the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), impose penalties (up to 5*l.* and 10*s.* respectively) on any person wilfully setting a chimney on fire, or an occupier allowing a chimney to be on fire—the latter penalty not to be incurred if the occupier prove that the fire was in nowise owing to omission, neglect, or carelessness of himself or his servant.

Minute rules for the construction of chimneys in London are laid down by the London Building Act, 1930 (21 Geo. 5, c. clviii.), ss. 69 to 72. Elsewhere, see Public Health Act, 1875, s. 157, as amended by the Public Health Act, 1936. The funnel of a steam-tug is a chimney (Tough v. Hopkins, 1904, 1 K. B. 804).

Chimney-money, or Hearth-money, a Crown duty for every fireplace in a house.—14 Car. 2, c. 2. It appears to have been a most odious tax (see Macaulay's Hist. of Eng. ch. iii.) and was repealed by 1 Wm. & M. sess. 1, c. 10.

Chimney-sweeps, prohibition for minors to ascend chimneys, requirement of certificates for master chimney-sweepers, and general regulations.—3 & 4 Vict. c. 85; 27 & 28 Vict. c. 37; consolidated with amendments by the Chimney-Sweepers Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 70). The Chimney-Sweepers Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 51), imposes a penalty for noisy solicitation of employment as a chimney-sweeper by ringing a bell or otherwise.

Chinese. The Australian colonies (see especially the Chinese Immigration Restriction Act, 1888, of New South Wales) have passed many Acts restricting Chinese immigration, and in Musgrove v. Chung Teong Toy, 1891, A. C. 272, it was held by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council that a Chinese immigrant or other alien has no right enforceable by action to enter British territory.

Chlp, Cheap, Chipping, signify the place to be a market town, as Chippingham, Chipping Norton, Chipping-Wicomb.—Blount.

Chippinggavel, or Cheapingavel, toll for buying and selling.

Chirhgemot, Chirgemot, Kirmote, a synod, a meeting in a church or vestry.—Blount.

Chirograph [fr. χείρ, a hand, and γράφω, Gk., to write], a deed or other public instrument in writing, which anciently was attested by the subscription and crosses of witnesses: afterwards, to prevent frauds and concealment, people made their deeds of mutual covenant in a script and rescript, or in a part and counterpart, and in the middle between the two copies they drew the capital letters of the alphabet, and then tallied or cut asunder, in an indented manner, the sheet or skin of parchment; which, being delivered to the two parties concerned, were proved authentic by matching with and answering one another. Deeds thus made were denominated syngrapha by the canonists, and with us chirographa, or hand writings. Chirograph was also used for a fine, the manner of engrossing which and cutting the parchment into two pieces was observed in the chirographer's office of the Court of Common Pleas until those assurances by matter of record were abolished by the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74).—2 Bl. Com. 296; 2 Inst. 468; Kenn. Antig. 177; Dugd. Mon. t. 2, p. 94.

Chirographa, writings emanating from a single party, the debtor.—Civil Law.

Chirographer, an officer of the Common Pleas, who kept the fines. Abolished.

Chirographum apud debitorem repertum præsumitur solutum.—(A deed found with the debtor is presumed to be paid.)

Chirurgion [fr. χειρουργός, Gk.], the ancient denomination of a surgeon.

Chivalry, Court of, anciently held as a court of honour merely, before the Earl-Marshall, and as a criminal court before the Lord High Constable, jointly with the Earl-Marshall. It had jurisdiction as to contracts and other matters touching deeds of arms or war, as well as pleas of life or member. It also corrected encroachments in matters of coat-armour, precedence, and other distinctions of families. It has long grown entirely out of use. See 3 Bl. Com. 68, 103; 13 Ric. 2, c. 2.

Chivalry, Guardian In. See TENURE.

Chloroform, administering. It is a felony for any person to administer or attempt to administer chloroform, or other stupefying drug, with intent to enable himself or another to commit, or to assist another in the commission of, any indictable offence.—Offences against the Person Act, 1861, s. 22. Procuring defilement of a woman by administering drugs, see Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69), s. 3.

Choke, Attempt to. See Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 21, and GARROTTING.

Choky, Chokee, a chair, seat, guard, watch. The station of a guard or watchman. A place where an officer is stationed to receive tolls and customs.—Indian.

Cholera Act (2 Wm. 4, c. 10), continued by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 75. It has expired, and has not been revived; but the Public Health Act, 1936, s. 143, replacing s. 134, P. H. Act, 1875, gives power to the Minister of Health to make regulations for the prevention of 'any epidemic disease.'

Chop-church [ecclesiarum permutatio, Lat.], changing benefices.—9 Hen. 6, c. 95.

Chorepiscopi, bishops of the country in the early times of the church.

Chose [Fr., a thing]; it is used in divers senses, of which the four following are the most important:—

(1) Chose local, a thing annexed to a place, as a mill, etc.

(2) Chose transitory, that which is movable, and may be taken away, or carried from place to place.

(3) Chose in action, otherwise called chose in suspense, a thing of which a man has not the possession or actual enjoyment, but has a right to demand by action or other proceeding, as a debt, bond, etc. A well-known rule of the Common Law was that no possibility, right, title, or thing in action, could be assigned to a third party, for it was thought that a different rule would be the occasion of multiplying litigation: as it would in effect be transferring a lawsuit to a mere stranger, though the assignee might, at law, and was assisted in equity to sue the debtor in the name of the assignor. At law, therefore, with the exception of negotiable instruments, an interesse termini, and some few other securities, this until 1873 continued to be the general rule, unless the debtor assented to the transfer; if he assented, then the right of the assignee was complete at law, so that he might maintain an action against the debtor, upon the implied promise to pay him the debt, which results from such assent. In equity, however, this rule of the Common Law was entirely disregarded, and from a very early period choses in action of all kinds were held to be freely assignable for valuable consideration; see Ryall v. Rowles, W. & T. L. C. and notes thereto.

By the L. P. Act, 1925, s. 136 (1), replacing the Jud. Act, 1873, s. 25 (6), any absolute assignment by writing under the hand of the assignor (not purporting to be by way of charge only) of any debt, or other legal thing in action of which express notice in writing has been given to the debtor, trustee, or other person from whom the assignor would have been entitled to claim such debt, etc., is effectual in law (subject to equities having priority over the right of the assignee) to pass and transfer from the date of such notice (a) the legal right to such debt or thing in action; (b) all legal and other remedies for the same; and (c) the power to give a good discharge for the same without the concurrence of the assignor, subject to certain provisions contained in the section. See also the Policies of Assurance Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 144). This s. 136 of the J. A. Act, 1925, is not confined to the assignment of legal choses in action; it includes any right which was properly assignable in equity. See Torkington v. Magee, 1902, 2 K. B. at p. 430, and 1903, 1 K. B. 644, for cases on the construction of the section.

The above enactment does not, however, impair or affect the validity of equitable assignments in any way, and there may still be a good equitable assignment quite outside the statute (William Brandt's Son v. Dunlop Rubber, 1905, A. C. 454); but see Performing Right Society v. London Theatre of Varieties, 1922, 2 K. B. 433, as to parties. As to the assignment of contracts, see Tolhurst v. Portland Cement Manufacturers, 1903, A. C. 414; Kemp v. Baerselman, 1906, 2 K. B. 604. In Re Park Gate Waggon Company, (1881) 17 Ch. D. 234, it was held that a 'thing in action' under s. 95 of the Companies Act, 1862 (see now s. 191 (2) of the Companies Act, 1929), included claims in a winding-up against directors for misfeasance.

Part of a debt is not assignable in law under this enactment but the assignee of the part is entitled to it in equity (Bank of Liverpool & Martins, Ltd. v. Holland, (1926) 43 T. L. R. 29). Section 136, L. P. Act, 1925, transfers the legal right: it should not be confused with the rule on Dearle v. Hall, 3 Rus. 1, and s. 137, which regulates the priorities of assignments without affecting the legal right. See NOTICE, and the section does not apply to assignments which require special formalities by law or under the Companies Act, 1929, such as an assignment of shares, under that Act, if the Memorandum or Articles of Association prescribe the formalities.

(4) Choses in possession, where a person has not only the right to enjoy but also the actual enjoyment of the thing.

Chout, a fourth, a fourth part of sums litigated: Mahratta chout, a fourth of the revenues exacted as tribute by the Mahrattas. —Indian.

Chrematisties [fr. χρημα, Gk.], the science of wealth.

Chrismati denarii [fr. κρίσμα, Gk.], Chrisom pence, paid to the diocesan or his suffragan by the parochial clergy about Easter. It is otherwise called quadragesimals, or paschals, or Easter-pence. Obsolete.

Christian Name, the name given at the font distinct from the surname. It has been said from the bench, that a Christian name may consist of a single letter. See NAME.

Christianity. 'There is abundant authority for saying that Christianity is part and parcel of the law of the land'—per Kelly, C.B., in Cowan v. Milbourn, (1867) L. R. 2 Ex. 230; but the statement must not be taken too literally; see Encyc. of the Laws of England, 2nd ed., vol. iii., and consult Odgers on Libel, 5th ed., pp. 477 et seq.

Christmas-day, a festival of the Christian Church observed on the 25th of December, in memory of the birth of Jesus Christ. It is one of the usual quarter-days for the payment of rent and salaries; it is also a day on which the offices of the Supreme Court are closed (R. S. C. 1883, Ord. LXIII., r. 6), and it is not reckoned in the computation of time where less than six days is limited for doing anything by a rule of the Supreme Court (Ord. LXIV., r. 2). With respect to this, and also to the closing of public-houses, and the payment of bills of exchange, it stands in the same position as Good Friday.

Church. The Church of England is a distinct branch of Christ's Church, and is also an institution of the State (see the first clause of Magna Charta), of which the sovereign is the supreme head by Act of Parliament (1 Eliz. c. 1), but in what sense is not agreed. According to Sir William Anson, the sovereign is head of the Church, 'not for the purpose of discharging any spiritual function, but because the Church is the National Church, and as such is built into the fabric of the State' (Law and Custom of the Constitution). 'The establishment of the Church by law,' says Lord Selborne, 'consists essentially in the incorporation of the law of the Church into that of the realm, as a branch of the general law of the realm, though limited as to the causes to which, and the persons to whom it applies; in the public recognition of its Courts and Judges, as having proper legal jurisdiction; and in the enforcement of the sentences of those Courts, when duly pronounced according to law, by the civil power' (A Defence of the Church of England against Disestablishment, by Roundell, Earl of Selborne, 5th ed., p. 10). These words 'established by law,' as applied to the Church of England, do not mean that the Church was founded, or set up, or moulded into its actual form, by the State; but, that the temporal legislature has recognized and added certain sanctions to the institutions and laws of the Church. One of the leading senses of the word 'establish' is, 'to settle in any privilege or possession, to confirm'; and of the word 'establishment,' 'confirmation of something already done, ratification'; and the use of these words, with reference to the Church of England, in Acts of Parliament and other public documents, has always been according to that sense (ibid. p. 69). The standard of doctrine and practice is settled by the Thirty-nine Articles (see ARTICLES OF RELIGION) agreed on by convocation in London in 1562, and confirmed by 13 Eliz. c. 12, in 1571; by the 141 Canons of 1603 agreed upon by the convocations of Canterbury and York, and ratified by James I.; and by the Prayer Book presented by those convocations to Charles II., and ratified in 1662 by the Act of Uniformity, 14 Car. 2, c. 4, but the State has in various ways acknowledged the existence of non-conforming bodies. See WELSH CHURCH; CLERGY; DISSENTERS.—Consult Cripps's Law of the Church and Clergy; Phillimore's Ecclesiastical Law; Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Church and Clergy'; and Lely's Church of England Position, as appearing from Statutes, Articles, Canons, Rubrics, and Judicial Decisions.

Church Building Acts. For the purpose of building and promoting the building of additional churches in populous parishes numerous Acts, commencing with the Church Building Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), have been passed from time to time. For a list of eighteen of these Acts up to 1869, see the schedule to the New Parishes Acts and Church Building Acts Amendment Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 65).

In the year 1856 the powers of the Church Building Commissioners were, by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 55, transferred to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, a body incorporated by 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 77. See ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSIONERS.

Church Discipline Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 86) (repealing 1 Hen. 7, c. 4), under which 'it shall be lawful for' the bishop of the diocese (but not obligatory on him: see Julius v. Bishop of Oxford, (1880) 5 App. Cas. 214) on the application of any party complaining to proceed against any clerk in holy orders 'charged with offence against the laws ecclesiastical or concerning whom there may exist scandal or offence against the said laws' (whether concerning doctrine (see Voysey v. Noble, (1870) L. R. 3 P. C. 357; Bishop of St. Albans v. Fillingham, 1906, P. 163), ritual or moral misconduct), first by inquiry before commissioners nominated by the bishop, and then if the commissioners report that there is a prima facie case against him, by inquiry before the bishop with assessors, with an ultimate appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council (Bishop of Lincoln v. Wakefield, 1921, A. C. 813). The Act is repealed and superseded as to offences against morality by the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 32), and as to ritual offences it has been, though not repealed, superseded in practice by the Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874 (see that title).

Church of Scotland. The authority and jurisdiction of the Pope were abolished in 1567, and since then, except for some intervals at first, Presbytery has been the form of Church Government in Scotland. The Church has independent power to legislate and to adjudicate finally in all matters of doctrine, worship, government, and discipline within itself. Its Supreme Court is the General Assembly, which consists of ministers and elders elected by the Presbyteries, Universities, and the Royal Burghs and by the Church in India. Its sittings are attended by a Lord High Commissioner, representing the King, and it is presided over by a Moderator, who is nominated each year by a selection committee. The tenure of ecclesiastical property and endowments was reorganized by the Church of Scotland (Property and Endowments) Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 33), the general effect of which was to transfer all ecclesiastical property and endowments, as well as the responsibility, for their maintenance and control, from the heritors to the Church itself.

In 1929 union took place between the Church of Scotland and the United Free Church of Scotland, the latter Church being itself the amalgamation of the greater part of the Free Church, formed in 1843, and of the United Presbyterian Church which represented most of the earlier secession movements.

Churchesset [fr. churchset, ciricseat, Sax.], corn paid to the Church. Fleta says it signifies a certain measure of wheat, which in times past every man, on St. Martin's day, gave to holy church, as well in the times of the Britons as of the English; yet many great persons after the coming of the Romans gave their contributions according to the ancient law of Moses, in the name of first fruits; as in the writ of King Canutus sent to the Pope is particularly contained, in which they call it chirchsed.—Seld. Hist. Tithes, 216.

Church Estate Commissioners, a committee of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. See 13 & 14 Vict. c. 94, ss. 1, 3.

Church Patronage (Scotland) Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 82).

Church-rates, tributes, by which the expenses of the church are to be defrayed; made by the parishioners at large, that is, by the majority of those present at a vestry summoned for that purpose by the churchwardens, formerly recoverable in the Ecclesiastical Court or, if the arrears did not exceed 10*l.* and no questions were raised as to the legal liability, before two justices of the peace.

Compulsory church-rates were abolished by the Compulsory Church Rate Abolition Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 109), except so far as partly applicable to any secular purpose.

The Parochial Church Councils (Powers) Measure, 1921 (11 & 12 Geo. 5, No. 1), gave to Parochial Church Councils power to levy a voluntary church-rate.

Church-seot, customary obligations paid to the parish priest; from which duties the religious sometimes purchased an exemption for themselves and their tenants.

Churchwardens, anciently styled Church Reeves or Ecclesiæ Guardiani, the guardians or keepers of the church, and representatives of the body of the parish; but though in some sort ecclesiastical officers, they are always lay persons. They are a quasi corporation for certain purposes (Withnell v. Gartham, (1795) 6 T. R. 388, 396), and in the City of London they are a corporation for the purpose of holding lands; but beyond that they are only annual officers (Fell v. Official Trustee of Charity Lands, 1898, 2 Ch. 59). They are sometimes appointed by the minister, sometimes by the Vestry and Parochial Church Meeting sitting together (see 11 & 12 Geo. 5, No. 1, s. 13), sometimes by the minister and the meeting together, sometimes one by the minister and another by the meeting, as custom directs. Where there is no custom the election must be according to Canon 89 and s. 13 above, under which they must be chosen by the joint consent of the minister and the meeting, and if they cannot agree, then the meeting is to elect one and the minister nominate the other. By Canon 90 they are to be chosen early in Easter week, and are generally two in number; are obliged when chosen to serve, and are sworn to execute the office faithfully. Several persons are, however, exempted from the office, viz., peers of the realm, members of parliament, sheriffs, acting justices of the peace, clergymen, Roman Catholic clergymen, Dissenting ministers, solicitors, practising physicians and surgeons in London, practising apothecaries, officers in the army, navy, or marines, though on half-pay, registrars of births, etc., officers of the excise or customs or post-office, and persons living out of the parish unless they occupy a house of trade there (Steer's Par. Law; and see R. v. Townson, (1908) 99 L. T. 472). The former duties of the churchwardens relating to the repair of the church and churchyard and the care of the church goods have been transferred by the Parochial Church Councils (Powers) Measure, 1921 (11 & 12 Geo. 5, No. 1) to the Parochial Church Council, but the church goods (such as the organ, bells, Bible, and parish books) are still vested in them. It is their duty to make such order relative to seats in the church and chancel, not appropriated to particular purposes, as the ordinary (who has in general the sole power in this matter) shall direct, and in practice the arrangements are usually made by the churchwardens, even without any special direction from the ordinary. It is incident also to their office to enforce proper and orderly behaviour during divine service; and Canon 19 directs that they 'shall not suffer any idle persons to abide either in the churchyard or church porch during the time of divine service or preaching; but shall cause them either to come in or depart.' If churchwardens waste the goods of the church, or be guilty of other misbehaviour, they are liable to removal ; at the end of the year they are bound to render an account of all their receipts and disbursements. Churchwardens officiate in the collection and application of offerings at the Communion Service—Book of Common Prayer (Rubric)—but other church collections are managed by the incumbent and the Parochial Church Council jointly, see Parochial Church Councils (Powers) Measure, 1921, s. 4. It is also part of their office, unless other persons are appointed by the ordinary for that purpose, to have the care of the benefice during its vacancy, or while it is under sequestration for the debts of the incumbent.—Prideaux's Churchwardens' Guide; Steer's Parish Law. Churchwardens were ex officio overseers of the poor under the Poor Relief Act, 1601 (43 Eliz. c. 2), but overseers were abolished by the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 90), s. 62.

Churchyard is the freehold of the rector or vicar, subject to the right of parishioners to be buried in it.

The Statute of Winchester, 13 Edw. 1, 1285, prohibits fairs or markets in churchyards ; a statute of uncertain date (perhaps 35 Edw. 1), the felling of trees indiscreetly by parsons ; and the Ecclesiastical Courts Jurisdiction Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 32), punishes riotous, violent or indecent behaviour by fine up to 5*l.*, or imprisonment up to two months without option of fine. See preceding title ; BURIAL ; and Whitehead's Church Law.

As to consecration, see Consecration of Churchyards Acts, 1867 and 1868.

A gift for the maintenance of a churchyard is a valid charitable gift (Re Douglas, 1905, 1 Ch. 279).

Churle [fr. ceorl, Sax.], a tenant at will, of free condition, who held lands of the thanes, on condition of rents and services : of two sorts ; one who hired the lord's tenementary estate, like our farmers ; the other that tilled and manured the demesnes (yielding work and not rent), and were called his sockmen or ploughmen.—Spelm.

Ciltre, corruptly Siltre, Chiltern.

Cinematograph, more properly Kinematograph. A contrivance for projecting in rapid succession on a screen a series of instantaneous photographs so as to give the effect of motion (The Concise Oxford Dict.). The Cinematograph Act, 1909, provides that an exhibition of pictures or other optical effects by means of a cinematograph or other similar apparatus for the purpose of which inflammable films are used shall not be given unless the regulations made by the Home Secretary are complied with, or elsewhere than in premises licensed under the Act (s. 1). The Act does not apply, however, to exhibitions in private houses to which the public are not admitted (s. 7 (4)). The exhibition of films by dealers or their agents to intending purchasers or hirers does not amount to an exhibition within the meaning of the Act (Attorney-General v. Vitagraph Co., 1915, 1 Ch. 206). Sunday exhibitions, see Sunday Entertainments Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 51), s. 1. The Celluloid and Cinematograph Film Act, 1922, makes provisions against fire in premises where celluloid or cinematograph films are stored or manufactured. Reference should be made to the above-mentioned Acts and to the orders and regulations made thereunder, especially Cinematograph Regulations, 1923, No. 983, and 1924, No. 403. The Cinematograph Films Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 29), restricts blind booking of films and secures the renting of a quota of British films. See also Williams & Harris on the Act of 1909, and see PATENT ; COPYRIGHT ; QUOTA.

Cinque Ports [quinque portus, Lat.], certain anciently enfranchised havens, lying on the coast towards France. In the time of Edward the Confessor there were only three ports, viz., Dover, Sandwich, and Romney ; but in the time of William the Conqueror Hastings and Hythe were added, making five, whence the name Cinque Ports. Winchelsea and Rye were afterwards added by or before the accession of King John, but the old name, though now become inappropriate, was still retained. The Cinque Ports Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 48), abolishes all jurisdiction and authority of the Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports and Constable of Dover Castle, in or in relation to the administration of justice in actions, suits, or other civil proceedings at law or in equity, but with a saving (s. 10) of his Admiralty jurisdiction and certain other rights. The office of Lord Warden is still one of great dignity, and is always held by some person of eminence.

Circada, a tribute anciently paid to the bishop or archdeacon for visiting the churches.—Du Cange.

Circar, head of affairs ; the state or government ; a grand division of a province ; a headman. A name used by Europeans in Bengal to denote the Hindu writer and accountant employed by themselves, or in the public offices. See SIRCAR.

Circuits (seven, eight formerly), certain divisions of England and Wales, appointed for the judges to go formerly twice a year, in the respective vacations after Hilary and Trinity terms, but more recently oftener, and at no precisely fixed periods, to administer justice in the several counties. Two judges, until 1884, attended at each circuit town, when by a new scheme set on foot by the 'Circuits Order' of that year it was arranged that at the majority of the circuit towns one judge only should attend, with the power, however, under Rule 9 of the Order, of requesting one of the judges in London to proceed to any place on circuit in his aid 'in order to enable the judges, as far as possible, to leave no cause untried at any place on any circuit.' The following were the circuits as altered by Order in Council made pursuant to 26 & 27 Vict. c. 122, viz.: (1) Northern; (2) Home; (3) Western; (4) Oxford; (5) Midland; (6) Norfolk; (7) North Wales; and South Wales.

By the Judicature Act, 1875, s. 22, replaced by Judicature Act, 1925, s. 72, it is provided that by Order in Council regulations may be made for the circuits, altering their arrangement and discontinuing any assizes, etc. The circuits and a-size towns throughout England are regulated periodically by Orders in Council.

(1) Northern Circuit: Counties of Westmoreland, Cumberland, and Lancaster.

(2) North-Eastern Circuit: Counties of Northumberland, Durham, and York, and counties of the town of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and city of York.

(3) Midland Circuit: Counties of Lincoln, Nottingham, Derby, Warwick, Leicester, Northampton, Rutland, Buckingham, and Bedford; the counties of the city of Lincoln and town of Nottingham; the borough of Leicester; and the city of Birmingham.

(4) South-Eastern Circuit: Counties of Norfolk, Suffolk, Huntingdon, Cambridge, Hertford, Essex, Kent, Surrey, and Sussex; and county of the city of Norfolk.

(5) Oxford Circuit: Counties of Berks, Oxford, Worcester, Stafford, Salop, Hereford, Monmouth, Gloucester; and counties of the cities of Worcester and Gloucester and the city of Birmingham.

(6) Western Circuit: Counties of Southampton, Wilts, Dorset, Devon, Cornwall, Somerset; and counties of the cities of Exeter and Bristol.

(7) North and South Wales Circuit: (a) North Wales Division—Counties of Montgomery, Merioneth, Carnarvon, Anglesea, Denbigh, Flint, and Chester. (b) South Wales Division—Counties of Glamorgan, Carmarthen, Pembroke, Cardigan, Brecknock, and Radnor; and counties of the borough of Carmarthen and town of Haverfordwest.

The places, and also, as far as it may be, the days for holding assizes, and various other regulations as to circuits, are from time to time altered by Orders in Council. By Order in Council of 2nd August, 1910 (amending an Order of June 28, 1909), continuous sittings are established for civil business at Manchester and Liverpool, a judge of the K. B. D. being assigned for the purpose. Consequently one circuit judge instead of two now attends at these places and takes the criminal business. But it is provided that the assigned judge is as far as possible to sit at those cities during the whole time that the judge taking criminal business is sitting there. The Circuit Order in Council, 1930, substituted Kingston-on-Thames for Guildford as the Surrey Assize town, and also made provisions for civil business to be taken on the Autumn Circuit at Carlisle, Gloucester, Leicester, Maidstone, Nottingham, Shrewsbury and Winchester. See ASSIZES, and Ency. of the Laws of England. The County Court Circuits, at present 59 in number, are divisions of the country for the purposes of the County Court (q.v.).

Circuity of Action, a longer course of proceeding to recover a thing sued for than is needful—Termes de la Ley; also a general term denoting inter alia a multiplicity of law suits. Wherever the rights of the litigant parties were such that the defendant would be entitled to recover back from the plaintiff the same sum which the plaintiff sought to recover, the defendant might plead the facts which constitute such right as a defence, in order to avoid circuity of action.—Bullen & Leake, Prec. of Plead., 3rd ed., p. 558. Now all the counterclaims may be raised in the defence to an action. See Jud. Act, 1873, s. 24 (3), and Judicature Act, 1925, s. 39; see also ss. 59 (2) and 61 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882. See COUNTERCLAIM.

One of the most beneficial functions of the Chancery Courts was exercised in its concurrent jurisdiction under which all parties concerned were brought before the Court before deciding an action, and see also the third party procedure under R. S. C. Ord. XVI., r. 48, where the defendant claims contribution or indemnity against any person not a party to the action.

Circular Note, a written request by a bank to one of its correspondents abroad to pay a specified sum to a specified person; as to its nature, see Confians Stone Quarry Co. v. Parker, (1867) L. R. 3 C. P. 1.

Circulating Medium, more comprehensive than the term money, as it is the medium of exchanges, or purchases and sales, whether it be gold or silver coin or any other article.

Circumduction, a judicial declaration that the time allowed to either party for leading proof has elapsed.—Scots Law.

Circumspecte agatis (that you act cautiously), the title of a statute, 13 Edw. 1, st. 4, relating to prohibitions, prescribing certain cases to the judges wherein the king's prohibition lies not; 2 Inst. 187; Jac. Law Dict.

Circumstantial Evidence, presumptive proof when the fact itself is not proved by direct testimony, but is to be inferred from circumstances, which either necessarily or usually attend such facts. It is obvious that a presumption is more or less likely to be true according as it is more or less probable that the circumstances would not have existed unless the fact which is inferred from them had also existed; and that a presumption can only be relied on until the contrary is actually proved. Circumstantial evidence has, in some instances, undoubtedly been found to produce a much stronger assurance of a prisoner's guilt than could have been produced by more direct and positive testimony. As a general principle, however, it is true that positive evidence of a fact from credible eye-witnesses is the most satisfactory that can be produced; and the universal feeling of mankind leans to this species of evidence in preference to that which is merely circumstantial. If positive evidence of a fact can be produced, circumstantial evidence ought not to be trusted. Chief Baron Gilbert, therefore, considered it a higher species of proof. He says, 'When the fact itself cannot be proved, that which comes nearest to the proof of the fact is the proof of the circumstances which necessarily or usually attend such facts, and which are called presumptions and not proofs, for they stand instead of the proofs of the fact till the contrary be proved.'—1 Phil. Evid. c. 7, s. 2. See Wills on Circumstantial Evidence; Powell on Evidence.

Circumstantibus, Tales de (so many of the bystanders). In civil and criminal trials, where by reason of the default of the jury, or of challenge, there is not a sufficient number of the jurors impanelled, the judge may direct the sheriff to add to the panel the names of a sufficient number of persons qualified to act as jurymen who may be present or can be found, who are called tales de circumstantibus.—County Juries Act, 1825 (6 Geo. 4, c. 50), s. 37. There is now no statutory limit to the number of jurors who can be impanelled.—County Common Juries Act, 1910 (10 Edw. 7 & 1 Geo. 5, c. 17).

Cirle-Bryce, any violation of the privileges of a church.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Cirle-Sceat [punicitia seminum], church-scot, or shot, an ecclesiastical due, payable on the day of St. Martin, consisting chiefly of corn.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Citatio ad reassumendam causam, a citation which issued when a party died pending a suit, against his heir, to revive the cause.

Citation, a summons to appear, applied particularly to process in the spiritual, probate, and matrimonial courts (see Tristram v. Coote, Probate Pr. and Probate Rules, 1862 and (non-contentious) 1925); a reference to authorities in support of an argument.

Citations, Statute of (23 Hen. 8, c. 9), by which no man can be cited to appear before any spiritual judge out of the diocese in which he dwells, except for a spiritual offence or cause of heresy; and see Canon 94.

City [fr. cité, Fr.], a town corporate, which has usually a bishop and cathedral church. It is called civitas, because it is governed by justice and order of magistracy; oppidum, for that it contains a great number of inhabitants; and urbs, because it is in due form begirt about with walls.—Jac. Law Dict.

City of London Court. The City of London Court was, prior to the County Courts Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 142), s. 55, known as the 'Sheriffs Court of the City of London.' Its procedure was, theretofore, regulated by Acts and Rules peculiar to itself; but by the County Courts Act, 1934, s. 186, replacing s. 185 of the County Courts Act, 1888, it becomes to all intents and purposes a county court. By amalgamation with the Mayor's Court of London, it becomes the Mayor's and City of London Court, and the latter possesses the powers and jurisdiction of both the former Courts. See Mayor's and City of London Court Act, 1920 (c. cxxxiv.). As to sittings of the High Court of Justice in the City of London, see ROYAL COURTS OF JUSTICE.

Civil, may stand, according to the context, for the opposite of criminal, of ecclesiastical, of military, or of political.

Civil Bill Court, a tribunal in Northern Ireland with a jurisdiction analogous to that of county courts in England. The judge of it is also chairman of quarter sessions (where the jurisdiction is more extensive than in England), and performs the duty of revising barrister. The procedure of the Civil Bill Courts is regulated by 27 & 28 Vict. c. 99; 28 & 29 Vict. c. 1; and 37 & 38 Vict. c. 66. This is still true of Northern Ireland: in the Irish Free State the legal organization is regulated by the local law.

Civil Death. A man is said to be civilly dead (civiltiter mortuus) when he has been attainted of treason or felony, and, in former times, when he abjured the realm or went into a monastery. The Forfeiture Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 23), provides that after the passing of that Act no confession, verdict, inquest, conviction, or judgment of or for any treason or felony, or felo de se, shall cause any attainer or corruption of blood, or any forfeiture or escheat.

Civil Engineer. In 1923 the Institution of Civil Engineers was granted a supplemental Royal Charter which gives members and associate members an exclusive right to describe themselves as 'Chartered Civil Engineers.' The term 'engineer' was originally understood to mean military engineer; the word 'civil' was therefore applied to distinguish the institution.

Civil Law, that rule of action which every particular nation, commonwealth, or city has established peculiarly for itself, more properly distinguished by the name of municipal law.

The term 'civil law' is now chiefly applied to that which the Romans compiled from the laws of nature and nations.

The 'Roman Law' and the 'Civil Law' are convertible phrases, meaning the same system of jurisprudence; it is now frequently denominated 'the Roman Civil Law.'

The collections of Roman Civil Law, before its reformation in the sixth century of the Christian era by the eastern Emperor Justinian, were the following:—

(1) Leges Regiæ. These laws were for the most part promulgated by Romulus, Numa Pompilius and Servius Tullius. To Romulus are ascribed the formation of a constitutional government, and the imposition of a fine, instead of death, for crimes; Numa Pompilius composed the laws relating to religion and divine worship, and abated the rigour of subsisting laws; and Servius

Tullius, the sixth king, enacted many wise and good laws to maintain the cause of the poor, and to stop the oppressions of the rich. He also revived many of the obsolete laws of Romulus and Numa Pompilius.

Sextus Publius Papirius, Pontifex Maximus in the reign of Tarquinius Superbus, collected the royal laws, which collection is known by the name of Jus Civile Papirianum. Legislation under the kings must have been extremely simple; very few relics of it, however, have been preserved, and among them it is almost impossible to distinguish the genuine from the spurious. The Leges Regiæ have been edited by Lipsius and other men of learning; and of the supposed laws of Romulus, a separate collection was published by Balduinus.

(2) Leges Decemvirales, or the Laws of the Twelve Tables. The uncertain state of the law, in the Republican era, and the uneasiness occasioned by the continued quarrels of the patricians and plebeians, rendered systematic legislation indispensable, so after great opposition on the part of the patricians, a law was proposed by Caius Terentilius Horsa (B.C. 460, A.U.C. 293) to appoint a commission to draw up a body of laws; and (in B.C. 452, A.U.C. 301) three commissioners are said to have been chosen by the patricians to visit Greece in order to collect materials for a code; upon their return, after an absence of three years, ten commissioners, including the three, were appointed with the title De Legibus Scribendis, whose duty it was to revise, digest, and enforce the new laws. All other magisterial offices were then suspended, and these ten commissioners, or Decemviri, became invested with the sole management of State affairs. The Ten Tables they drew up, having been approved by the senate and comitia, were engraved on metal, and suspended in the Comitium, and all parties were so well satisfied with the result of the first year's administration of the Decemviri, that it was resolved to continue the same sort of government for another year—new members were elected to sit upon this commission, the only one re-elected being Appius Claudius. In the former year the whole ten had been taken from the patrician class, but this year three of them were plebeians. The new laws drawn up by this new commission having been duly approved, and reduced to writing on two supplementary tables, made up the total number of Twelve Tables, by which name they were subsequently known, and under which they became famous. To judge from the fragments of these laws which have survived, they were very epigrammatic and positive in their nature; they formed the catechism of education for the Roman youth; indeed all well-educated persons were expected to know them by heart. Cicero, in his book De Oratore, describes the law of the Twelve Tables as a summary of all that is excellent in the libraries of the philosophers.

The Laws of the Twelve Tables were illustrated by the commentaries of several ancient lawyers, especially Antistius, Labeo, and Caius: the fragments of these laws have been collected and explained by many of the moderns, by Balduinus, Røvardus, Marcellus Augustinus, Gravina, Fuccius, Bouchard, Gothofredus, and others.

(3) Jus Civile Flavianum, and its subsequent edition, Jus Civile Ælianum. This collection consists of the forms of pleadings, called Actiones Juris, adopted in all proceedings and acts of Court. It was compiled about 440 A.U.C. or B.C. 312 by Appius Claudius Cæcus, who, being blind, was obliged to employ an amanuensis, Gaius Flavius, hence the title of the collection.

The Flavian collection, being the first, was naturally imperfect; in consequence of which Sextus Ælius Pætus, surnamed Catus, published about 553 A.U.C. or 200 B.C. a supplement to it, again promulgating the new formulæ subsequently introduced, together with an interpretation of the laws of the Twelve Tables, whence it is called Tripartita, because the first part contained the laws of the Twelve Tables; the second, their interpretation; and the third, the forms of pleadings.

(4) Edictum Perpetuum Juliani. Offilius, in Julius Cæsar's time, made a compilation of the Prætor's Edicts, which was made perpetual by Salvius Julianus, at the command of the Emperor Hadrian, many years later.

(5) The Codes of Gregorius, Hermogenianus, and Theodosius the Younger.

Gregorius, or Gregorianus, appears to have collected the imperial constitutions belonging to the intermediate reigns from Hadrian to Constantine the Great.

Hermogenianus, or Hermogenes, is supposed to have formed a supplementary collection, and the remaining fragments consist entirely of the constitutions of Diocletian and Maximin.

These compilations are to be esteemed as the work of two private lawyers; the fragments which Cujacius (the most celebrated of all the interpreters of the Roman law) has placed at the end of the Theodosian

Code are all that remains of these two productions.

The Theodosian Code collects the constitutions enacted from the time of Constantine the Great (A.D. 312) down to A.D. 438, the year of its publication. It is of considerable magnitude, and is still extant, though unfortunately in an imperfect state. It is probable that this book, having been compiled by imperial command, had the stamp of authority.

This Code was followed until suppressed by Justinian's order, and is not unworthy of the attention of the learned. The editor and expounder of the Theodosian Code is Jacobus Gothofredus, or Godfroy, who is the first and most illustrious of modern civilians. He bestowed his assiduous labour upon this code for thirty years, and left his great commentary to be completed by Antoine Marville, who published it at Lyons in 1665. It is an immense storehouse of judicial and historical knowledge. Ritter published another edition of it some seventy years afterwards. The best modern edition is that of Prof. Mommsen, published at Berlin in 1905.

Such were the several collections of laws before Justinian's reign. Those made by that emperor's order, which compose the body of the Civil Law in its present state, will now be referred to.

The Imperial, or Civil Law, as consolidated by Justinian, consists of four parts:—

(1) The Institutes, in which the elements of jurisprudence are disposed in a didactic form; its chief and leading objects are explained in a regular series, and the whole arranged in such a way as neither to oppress the student with a multitude and a variety of matter, nor yet to leave him destitute of any necessary helps to facilitate his progress in legal knowledge.

These Institutes were composed chiefly from Gaius, and especially from his Aureorum (of important matters), in order to teach the rudiments of the law and the great principles of equity, and were divided so as to form an elementary introduction to legal study. The division is into four Books, each book being divided into several Titles, and every title into several Parts; the first (not numbered) is called Principium, which is the beginning of the title, and those which follow, Paragraphs. The Institutes are quoted with the letter I. or Inst.; thus § si adversus, 12 I. De Nuptiis, is nothing more than 12 paragraphs of the title De Nuptiis, which on reference to the index will be found to be the tenth of the first book ; this is usually now cited I. i. 10, 12.

(2) The Digest or Pandects, which are rules founded on the pure spirit of jurisprudence. The words 'Digest' and 'Pandects' are not synonymous; the former means an abstract of the opinions of lawyers upon certain points of law; the latter, from πᾶν, all, and δέχομαι, to receive, signifies a compendium of the law.

Tribonian received the imperial command De Conceptione Digestorum, A.D. 530, with directions to choose his colleagues; and seventeen were ultimately appointed with absolute power to make such use of preceding works as should appear most conducive to the object in view. Tribonian's library afforded forty of the works of the most renowned civilians, which, with above two thousand other treatises, containing three millions of lines, were abridged into a hundred and fifty thousand; the work was completed in the incredibly short space of three years, and published on the 16th December, A.D. 533, a month after the appearance of the Institutes; its publication having been delayed a month, in order that the elementary work might precede it.—1 Colq. R. C. L. 66.

The Digest is compiled from the decisions, conjectures, questions, and disputes of the most famous lawyers who had existed up to that time; and thus the substance of many thousand treatises is compressed into one work which superseded all the then existing Digests, and rendered unnecessary references, which had become not only laborious but almost impossible. The Pandects were divided into fifty Books, each book containing several Titles, divided into Laws, and the Laws generally into several Parts or Paragraphs.

Besides this distribution of the Digest into fifty Books, it was divided into seven Parts, but the reason that induced the emperor to make this division is not known. Some supposed it was done in order to separate the different matters, and include all that related to one subject in one Part, consisting of several Books. Others attribute it to the superstitious respect of the ancients for the number seven, as the most perfect. This book is variously quoted by the letter D. P. or  $\pi$ , and  $\beta$ , which latter is supposed to be a corruption of the D with a stroke through the middle, or perhaps a corruption of the Greek  $\pi$ . The most ancient method of quotation is by mentioning the initial words of the Law and Paragraph with those of the Book or Title, which necessitates a reference to the general index, with which all modern editions are not furnished; thus, § sin. ver. l. quæsitum est D., De Peculio. The second, by citing the initial words and numbers of the Law or Paragraph, with the initial words of the Book or Title; thus, § sin. ver. 3 l. quæsitum est 30 D., De Peculio. The third, by mentioning the number of the Law or §, with the initial words of the Book or Title; thus, § 3 l. 30 D., De Peculio; which is the method adopted by Heineccius. The modern mode, which avoids all reference to the index, is thus, D. 15, 1, 30, 3. The first paragraph is not numbered, and is usually quoted by the abbreviation in pr. (in principio); in like manner the last paragraph is sometimes quoted by the words in fin. (fine), or § ult. (paragraphus ultimus).—1 Colq. R. C. L. 64 et seq.

(3) The Code, Codex Justinianus. This was commenced, under the imperial Orders, by Tribonian and a body of nine associates in A.D. 528, compiled with great rapidity, and published in the following year, thus preceding in date the Institutes and the Digest. It was compiled from the Gregorian, Hermogenian and Theodosian Codes and from other sources. Within six years of its publication, however, it was suppressed as imperfect and replaced by a new edition entitled the Codex Repetitæ Prælectionis, containing 200 of Justinian's own laws, and the 50 decisions on the most obscure and debatable points of jurisprudence. The Code was divided into twelve books, each book into titles, and each title into laws, each law containing several parts. The first is called Principium, being the beginning of the law, and those which follow, paragraphs. The letter C is the invariable mark of the Codex, which may be variously quoted by the initial words of the paragraph, law, book, or title. The nine first books were emphatically called the Codex; the latter three (tres libri) contained the Jus Publicum, which had been separated from the whole at an early period, as of less practical utility, and often bound up with other works.

(4) The Novels, or New Constitutions (Novellæ Constitutiones), which are explanatory of the Code. After Justinian's decease, some parts of his Novels to the number of 168 were collected and reduced into one volume, together with thirteen of the Greek edicts; which, toge her, make up the fourth and last division of the Corpus Juris Civilis. The greatest part of these Novels was composed in Greek, owing to the seat of the empire being then at Constantinople, where few or none spoke Latin in perfection ; notwithstanding which some of them were published in Latin, and have been noticed by Antonius Augustinus. There are four Latin translations of the Novels. The Novels are quoted by their respective numbers. They are directed either to magistrates, bishops, or citizens of Constantinople, and were of equal force and authority for those private persons to whom they were addressed, and who were enjoined to have them proclaimed and to see them executed according to their form and tenor.

By the Civil Law was governed the greater part of Britain, for the space of about 360 years (from Claudius to Honorius), during which period some of the greatest masters of that law, whose opinions appeared collected in the body of it—as Papinian, Paulus, and Ulpian—sat in the seat of judgment in this island. After the declension of the Roman empire, the Saxon, Danish, and Norman laws superseded a great portion of the Roman Law ; but not very long afterwards it began again to manifest its influence, and entered largely into the composition of the Common Law. Under the influence of the foreign ecclesiastics, who, pouring into this country after the Conquest, long monopolized the administration of the law, great encouragement was given to the adoption of the Civil Law, till the nobility and laity became so jealous of its prosperity, and alarmed at its progress, that a long and fierce feud ensued between the laity, stoutly struggling for the Common Law, and the clergy for the Civil and Canon Law, to which, in the end, they entirely betook themselves ; and, withdrawing from the temporal courts, left them to the superintendence of the common lawyers ; still, however, keeping an ecclesiastic at the head of affairs, in the high station of chancellor, who, as his office gradually increased in influence and power, was enabled, in time, to introduce much of the spirit of the Civil Law into the administration of Municipal Law, especially in the Courts of Equity.

‘The whole body of the Civil Law’ (remarks Chancellor Kent, 1 Comm. 548) ‘will excite never-failing curiosity, and receive the homage of scholars, as a singular monument of wisdom. It fills such a large space in the eye of human reason ; it regulates so many interests of man as a social and civilized being ; it embodies so much thought, reflection, experience, and labour ; it leads us so far into the recesses of antiquity, and it has stood so long against the waves and weathers of time, that it is impossible, while engaged in the contemplation of the system, not to be struck with some portion of the awe and veneration which are felt in the midst of the solitudes of a majestic ruin.’ And see Gib. Dec. and Fall, c. xliv., for an outline of the Roman jurisprudence.

Civil List, an annual sum granted by Parliament at the commencement of each reign, for the expenses of the royal household and establishment, as distinguished from the general exigencies of the state ; it is the provision made for the Crown out of the taxes, in lieu of its proper patrimony, and in consideration of the assignment of that patrimony to the public use. This arrangement has prevailed from the time of the Revolution downwards, though the amount fixed for the civil list has been subject in different reigns to considerable variation. At the commencement of her reign a civil list was settled by the Civil List Act, 1837 (1 Vict. c. 2), upon her late Majesty Queen Victoria for life, to the amount of 385,000*l.* per annum, payable quarterly, out of the consolidated fund, of which the sum of 60,000*l.* was assigned for her Majesty’s privy purse ; in return for which grant it was provided that the hereditary revenues of the Crown (with the exception of the hereditary duties of excise on beer, ale, and cider, which were to be discontinued during the reign, and as to which see the title HEREDITARY DUTIES) should, during the late Queen’s life, be carried to and form part of the consolidated fund.

The Civil List Acts, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 4), provided for similar grants (with modifications) to King Edward VII. ; 1910 (10 Edw. 7 & 1 Geo. 5, c. 15), to King George V. ; and 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 15), to King Edward VIII. ; and 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 32), to King George VI.

Civil List pensions to the amount of 2,500*l.* a year are also and additionally grantable by the Crown, but only to such persons as ‘have just claims on the royal beneficence, or who by their personal services to the Crown, by the performance of duties to the public or by their useful discoveries in science and attainments in literature and the arts, have merited the gracious consideration of their sovereign and the gratitude of their country.’—Civil List Act, 1837, ss. 5, 6 as amended by Civil List Act, 1937, s. 9 (1).

Civil Procedure Acts Repeal Acts, 1879,

1881, and 1883 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 59, 44 & 45 Vict. c. 59, and 46 & 47 Vict. c. 49), repealed by Judicature Act, 1925, repealing amongst other enactments those which had been superseded by the Rules of the Supreme Court under the Judicature Acts; the Act of 1883 in particular repealing all but very small portions of the Common Law and Chancery Procedure Acts in view of the issue of the Consolidated 'Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883.'

Civil Remedy, one open to a private person as opposed to a criminal prosecution.

Civil Service. This term properly includes all service under the Crown except the naval, military and air services. As to pensions, see SUPERANNUATION ACTS. As to a civil servant's right to be a member of a trade union, see TRADE UNION.

Civillan, one that professes the knowledge of the Civil Law.

Civilliter mortuus (civilly defunct, i.e., dead in law). See CIVIL DEATH.

Civilization, a law, act of justice, or judgment, which renders a criminal process civil; which is performed by turning an information into an inquest, or the contrary. Also the assimilation of Common Law to the Civil Law (Oxf. Dict.).

Clades [fr. clida, cleta, cleia, fr. the Brit., clie and clia, Irish], a wattle or hurdle.—Paroch. Antiq. 575.

Claim [fr. clamer, Fr.; clamo, Lat., to call], a challenge of interest of anything which is in another's possession, or at least out of a man's own possession, as claim by charter, descent, etc.—Plow. 359 a. Any assertion of a right to a remedy, relief or property, either general, or before a tribunal, a pleading in an action, see County Courts Act, 1934, and STATEMENT OF CLAIM.

Claim in Equity. In simple cases, where there was not any great conflict as to facts, and a discovery from a defendant was not sought, but a reference to chambers was nevertheless necessary before final decree, which would be as of course, all parties being before the Court, the summary proceeding by claim was sometimes adopted, thus obviating the recourse to plenary and protracted pleadings. This summary practice was created by Orders 22nd April, 1850, which came into operation on the 22nd May following. By Order VIII., Rule 4 of Consol. Ord. 1860, claims were abolished.

Claim of Liberty, a suit or petition to the king in the Court of Exchequer, to have liberties and franchises confirmed there by the attorney-general.

Claims, Court of. A court appointed by the sovereign before a coronation to consider and determine the rights of claimants to perform divers services to the sovereign thereat (as to carry the spurs) in regard of their tenure of divers lands. See the Report of the Court before the Coronation of his late Majesty King Edward the Seventh, by G. Woods Wollaston, Principal Garter King of Arms of the Inner Temple, published by Harrison & Sons in 1903 (p. 330), and note in regard to the Coronation of King George the Fifth in 1911 in Halsb. Laws of Eng. Hailsham Ed., Vol. 6, p. 403. The first Court of Claims was appointed in 1377.

Claim, Statement of. See STATEMENT OF CLAIM.

Clam vi aut precario, by stealth, force or request.

Clame admttenda in itinere per attornatum, an ancient writ by which the king commanded the justices in eyre to admit the claim by attorney of a person who was in the royal service and could not appear in person.—Reg. Brev. 19.

Clandestine Mortgages. By 4 & 5 Wm. & Mary, c. 16, it was enacted that if any person, having once mortgaged his lands for a valuable consideration, shall again mortgage the same lands, or any part thereof, to any person, the former mortgage being in force, and shall not discover in writing to the second mortgagee the first mortgage, such mortgagor so again mortgaging his lands shall have no relief or equity of redemption against the second mortgagee. This Act was repealed by the Law of Property Act, 1925. By s. 183 of the Act of 1925, any person disposing of property or any interest therein for money or money's worth as a purchaser, or his agent, who conceals any instrument or incumbrance material to the title with intent to defraud, is made guilty of misdemeanour punishable by fine and imprisonment and also to an action for damages if sustained. See DECEIT; FRAUD.

Clarendon, Constitutions of, Assize of. At a great council held at Clarendon, in Wiltshire, A.D. 1164, in the tenth year of the reign of Henry II., a code of laws was brought forward by the king, under the title of the ancient customs of the realm, and known as the 'Constitutions of Clarendon'; and as Becket had solemnly promised he would observe what were really such, the king procured the principal propositions in dispute to be enacted, and declared by the council under that denomination. The main provisions of them were that clergy charged with crimes were to be tried in the civil courts, and that a justice of the king should be present in the king's courts; that no prelate was to quit the realm without the king's permission; that prelates were to be subject to feudal burdens; that the king was to hold all vacant benefices and receive their revenues till the vacancies were filled; and that goods forfeited to the Crown were not to be protected by sanctuary.

As in the Constitutions of Clarendon the king had laid down the principles which were to regulate the relations of Church and State, so two years later, in the 'Assize of Clarendon,' he laid down the principles on which the administration of justice was to be carried out. This 'Assize' was in fact a short code of twenty-two articles drawn up for the use of the judges, who were about to proceed on circuit, and containing directions for dealing with criminals and the repression of crime, and was issued by the sole authority of the king, and without any appeal to the sanction of 'custom'; see Mrs. J. R. Green's Henry the Second.

Class. A term for a number of persons who are intended to be indicated as a group—such as the children or issue of a named person. The share of any donee under a gift by will to a class if he predeceases the testator does not lapse but survives to the other members. See Theobalds on Wills and Norton on Deeds.

Classarius [fr. classis, Lat.], a seaman or soldier at sea.

Claud [Brit.], a ditch: claudere, to enclose, or turn open fields into inclosures.—Paroch. Antiq. 236.

Clause Rolls [rotuli clausi, Lat.] contain all such matters of record as were committed to close writs; these rolls are preserved in the Tower. See CLOSE ROLLS.

Clauses Irritant and Resolutive, clauses devised for limiting the right of an absolute proprietor, and making effectual the conditions imposed on him, which otherwise would infer no more than a personal obligation, ineffectual against creditors or singular successors.—Bell's Dict.

Clausulæ Inconuetae semper Inducunt suspitionem, 3 Rep. 81.—(Unusual clauses always excite suspicion.)

Clausum fregit. See CLOSE.

Clausum pasche, the morrow of the utaz (or eight days) of Easter; the end of Easter; the Sunday after Easter-day.—2 Inst. 157.

Clausura huyse, the enclosure of a hedge.

Claves insulæ, the keys of the Isle of Man, or twelve persons to whom all ambiguous and weighty cases are referred.—Cun. Law Dict.

Clavia, a club or mace.—Cun. Law Dict.

Clavigeratus, a treasurer of a church.—Dugd. Mon. tom. 1, p. 184.

Clawa, a close or small measure of land.—Dugd. Mon. tom. 2, p. 250.

Clayton's Case. 1 Mer. 572. The rule in this case is that payments are presumed, primâ facie, to be appropriated to debts in the order in which they are incurred, but see Hallett's Estate, 13 C. D. 696, as to payments by a trustee, and s. 38, Bankruptcy Act, 1914, also APPROPRIATION OF PAYMENTS.

Clearance, a certificate that a ship has been examined and cleared at the Custom House. See s. 101 and other sections of the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 36); Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Customs.'

Clear Days. If a certain number of clear days be given for the doing of any act, the time is to be reckoned exclusively as well of the first day as the last. (Chit. Arch. Pr.) As to the meaning of 'clear,' generally, in deeds, wills, and other documents, see Stroud's Jud. Dict.

Clearance Area. Under the Housing Acts, 1930-35, substantially reproduced by the Housing Act, 1936, the local authority may (see ss. 25 et seq., 1936 Act) declare any area in their district to be a clearance area where they are satisfied that the houses there are by reason of disrepair or sanitary defects or bad arrangement either of the houses or streets dangerous to the health of the inhabitants in the area, and after marking off on a map of the area and excluding from the area any building which is not unfit for human habitation or dangerous and injurious to health, they may, by a clearance order obtained from the Minister of Health (see Errington v. Minister of Health, 1935, 1 K. B. 249) and subject to formalities under ss. 51-53 of the H. Act, 1936, and if the owner has not obtained a certificate of re-conditioning fitness, order the demolition of the buildings in the area or purchase the land compulsorily or by agreement, or themselves secure the demolition of the buildings. A limited compensation is provided for under the Acts.

Clearing, among London bankers a method adopted by them for exchanging the drafts of each other's houses, and settling the difference. At fixed hours, each day, a clerk from each banker attends at the clearing-house, bringing all the drafts on the other bankers which have been paid into his house during the day, and delivers to each of the other clerks the obligations he has against his house, receiving from each the obligations due from his own. Balances are struck at the end of the day, the clerk to the Clearing House making up the accounts between each bank. The balances are not paid to or received from the other bankers as formerly, but are settled with the Clearing House, which keeps an account itself at the Bank of England. There is also a Country Clearing House. Consult McLeod on Banking; Grant's Law of Banking, 6th ed. p. 66.

Clearing-house, the place where the operation termed 'clearing' is carried on, situated in a corner of Post Office Court, in Lombard Street.

Clementines, the collection of decretals or constitutions of Pope Clement V., made by order of John XXII., his successor, who published it in 1317.

Clement's Inn, an Inn of Chancery before the reign of Edward IV., taking its name from the parish church of St. Clement Danes, to which the Inn formerly belonged. Now only the name remains to denote the locality. See INNS OF CHANCERY.

Cler. fil. (clerici filius), the son of a clergyman.

Clergy [fr. clerge, Fr.; clerus, Lat.], the assembly or body of clerks or ecclesiastics set apart from the rest of the people or laity to superintend the public worship of God and the other ceremonies of religion, and to administer spiritual counsel and instruction.

The clergy were before the Reformation divided into (1) regular, who lived under certain rules, being of some religious order, and were called men of religion, or the religious, such as abbots, priors, monks, etc.; and (2) secular, who did not live under any certain rules of the religious orders, as bishops, deans, parsons, etc. Now the term comprehends all persons in holy orders and in ecclesiastical offices, viz., archbishops, bishops, deans and chapters, archdeacons, rural deans, parsons (either rectors or vicars) and curates, to which may be added parish clerks. The clergy are exempt from serving on juries; restrained from farming more than 80 acres, except with the sanction of the bishop, and cannot carry on any trade. It is a misdemeanour to obstruct or assault them while in the exercise of their duties (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 36).

The clergy, by 41 Geo. 3, c. 63, are disqualified from sitting in the House of Commons. By the Ministers of Religion (Removal of Disqualifications) Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 54), they are no longer disqualified for the office of borough councillor; and they may be county councillors, by s. 2 of the Local Government Acts, 1888 and 1933, and may also be parish councillors; but the Clerical Disabilities Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 91) (amended in 1934 by 24 & 25 Geo. 5, No. 1) enables them, by executing and enrolling a deed of relinquishment, to obtain freedom from their disabilities, and generally to assume the status of laymen.

The Church Discipline Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 86), provides for the prosecution of clergymen for offences in matters of doctrine; the Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 85), for offences in matters of ritual; and the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 32), for convictions for crimes or for immoralities therein described: see, e.g., Bishop of Lincoln v. Wakeford, 1921, 1 A. C. 813. And the Benefices (Ecclesiastical Duties) Measure, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, No. 8), contains provisions for dealing with cases where ecclesiastical duties are inadequately performed. See CLERICAL SUBSCRIPTION, infra; also Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Church and Clergy'; Phillimore's Ecclesiastical Law; Dale's Clergyman's Legal Handbook; and Whitehead's Church Law.

Clergy, Benefit of. See BENEFIT OF CLERGY.

Clerical Error, an error in a document which can only be explained by considering it to be a slip or mistake of the party preparing or copying it. Clerical errors in judgments or orders may be corrected by the court or a judge under R. S. C. Ord. XXVIII., r. 11, and in awards, by the arbitrator, under the Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), s. 7; and for the inherent right of a court to correct an error or supply an accidental omission, see Milson v. Carter, 1893, A. C. at p. 640.

As to contracts, clerical errors have frequently been corrected by application of the maxims, Qui hæret in literâ, hæret in cortice, or, Mala grammatica non vitiant chartam. A clerical error in a lease for ninety-four years at a yearly rent 'during the said term of ninety-one years and a quarter' was corrected by the counterpart into ninety-one years and a quarter, in Burchell v. Clark, (1876) 2 C. P. D. 88, by a majority of the Court of Appeal; and see Spyve v. Topham, (1802) 3 East, 115; and other cases showing that courts both of law and equity, where there is a manifest error in a document, will put a sensible meaning on it by reading the error as corrected.

As to Acts of Parliament, clerical errors in them have usually to be corrected by subsequent Acts. See the filling up of a blank in the Parsonages Act, 1838 (1 Vict. c. 23, by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 29), and the substitution of a 'this' by the Burial and Registration Acts (Doubts Removal) Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 2), for a 'that' misprinted for 'this' in s. 11 of the Burial Laws Amendment Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 41); but in a very clear case an error will be read by a court as corrected. See, e.g., Reg. v. Wilcock, (1845) 7 Q. B. 321.

Clerical Subscription. The Clerical Subscription Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 122), s. 4, as amended by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1893, enacts that every person about to be ordained priest or deacon shall, before ordination, in the presence of the archbishop or bishop by whom he is about to be ordained, make the following 'Declaration of Assent':

I assent to the Thirty-nine Articles of Religion, and to the Book of Common Prayer and of the ordering of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons. I believe the doctrine of the Church of England, as therein set forth, to be agreeable to the word of God; and in public prayer and administration of the Sacraments I will use the form in the said book prescribed, and none other, except so far as shall be ordered by lawful authority.

See ARTICLES OF RELIGION; and for an attempt to define 'lawful authority,' see Lely on the Church of England Position, at p. 138.

Oaths of allegiance and of canonical obedience to the bishop have also to be taken.

Clerico capto per statutum mercatorum, etc., a writ for the delivery of a clerk out of prison, who is imprisoned upon the breach of a statute-merchant.—Reg. Brev. 147.

Clerico convicto commissio gaoles in defectu ordinarii deliberando, an ancient writ, that lay for the delivery to his ordinary, of a clerk convicted of felony where the ordinary did not challenge him, according to the privilege of clerks.—Ibid. 69.

Clerico infra sacros ordines constituto, non eligendo in officium, a writ directed to those who have thrust a bailiwick or other office upon one in holy orders, charging them to release him.—Ibid. 143.

Clericum admittendum, a writ of execution directed not to the sheriff, but to the bishop or archbishop, and requiring him to admit and institute the clerk of the plaintiff.—3 Bl. Com. 413.

Clericus non connumeretur in duabus ecclesiis, 1 Rol. R.—(A clergyman should not be appointed to two churches.) See PLURALITY.

Clerk [fr. cleric, Sax.; clericus, Lat.], originally a learned man or man of letters, whence the term is appropriated to churchmen who were called clerks and now clergymen, the nobility and gentry being bred to the exercise of arms, and none left to cultivate the sciences but ecclesiastics. Where the canon law has full power, the word 'clerk' comprehends sacerdotes, diaconi, subdiaconi, lectores, acolyti, exorciste, and ostiarii. The word has been anciently used for a secular priest, in opposition to a religious or a regular.—Jac. Law Dict.

Clerk of Affidavits in Chancery, an office abolished by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, s. 27.

Clerk of Arraignment, an assistant to the Clerk of Assize. His duties are in the Crown Court on circuit.

Clerk of Assize. An officer attached to the assizes who attends to various duties on the civil side, acting as associate (q.v.). As to necessary qualifications, etc., see Clerks of Assize Act, 1869, and s. 21 of the Judicature Act, 1884, and Judicature Act, 1925, s. 79.

Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. See Great Seal (Offices) Act, 1881 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 81), s. 8, by which this officer performs the duties of clerk of the hanaper (see HANAPER) and receives ballot papers, etc., after a parliamentary election from the returning officers under Rule 38 of Schedule I. of the Ballot Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 33).

Clerk of the Custodies of lunatics and idiots; abolished, see 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 111; 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 84; and 5 & 6 Vict. c. 84, s. 10.

Clerk of Justices of the Peace, Clerk of Petty Sessions, Clerk of Special Sessions. The duties of these officers are, by the Justices Clerks Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 43), s. 5, performed by one salaried clerk called in the Act 'clerk of a petty sessional division.' Such clerk must, by s. 7, be either a barrister of not less than 14 years' standing, or a solicitor, or have served for not less than seven years as a clerk to a magistrate or to a metropolitan police court.

Clerk of the Peace. His duties are to officiate at sessions of the peace, to prepare indictments, and to record the proceedings of the justices, and to perform a number of special duties in connection with the affairs of the county. He is also clerk of the county council, by virtue of s. 83 of the Local Government Act, 1888 (applying to London). The offices are separated by Local Government (Clerks) Act, 1931 (21 & 22 Geo. 5, c. 45), s. 1, but by s. 2 usually the same person will be appointed to both. See also Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), s. 101; London County Council General Powers Act, 1930 (c. clix.), ss. 26–28.

Removal is regulated by 1 Wm. & M. c. 21, and Local Government Clerks Act, 1931 (21 & 22 Geo. 5, c. 45), ss. 2, 3, 4.

As to appointment, etc., in a quarter sessions borough, see Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, s. 164.

Clerk of Reports in Chancery, abolished by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, s. 27.

Clerks of the Enrolments in Chancery. Their offices and those of their deputies are abolished by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 103.

Clerks of Records and Writs. Three officers in Chancery first appointed under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 103. See their duties, Dan. Ch. Prac., 7th ed. They were officers of the Supreme Court (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 77). The office is merged in that of the Masters, and see R. S. C. Ord. LXI.

Client [fr. cliens, Lat., said to contain the same element as the verb clueo, to hear or obey, and accordingly compared by Niebuhr with the German word hoeriger, a dependent], a person who seeks advice of a lawyer or commits his cause to the management of one, either in prosecuting a claim or defending a suit in a court of justice; and for meaning, the word (except in relation to non-contentious business) includes any person who as principal or on behalf of another person retains or employs, or is about to retain or employ, a solicitor, and any person who is or may be liable to pay a solicitor's costs (Solicitors Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 37), s. 81). The relation between solicitor and client is a highly confidential one, and the power which his situation gives the former over the latter makes it impossible to be perfectly assured, in certain cases, whether in their transactions the client is a free agent, or under influence and imposition. A Court of Equity, therefore, will not permit a solicitor to take a present from his client, over and above his fees, however reasonable it might appear to be; the solicitor is entitled to his legal remuneration and nothing more. Nor will the Court allow a solicitor to make a purchase from his client, whilst the relation subsists. In short, all dealings, of whatever kind, between solicitor and client, so long as the relation continues, are viewed by the Court with the utmost jealousy, and if impeached the onus of upholding them is thrown on the solicitor; see, as to the general law on this subject, Re Haslam, 1902, 1 Ch. 769; Holman v. Loynes, (1854) 4 De G. M. & G. 270; Wright v. Carter, 1903, 1 Ch. 27.

Among the Romans, nearly all citizens were comprehended into two classes—patron and client. Their relative rights and duties were as follows:—The patron was the legal adviser of the client; he was the client's guardian and protector, as he was the guardian and protector of his own children; he maintained the client's suit when he was wronged, and defended him when another complained of being wronged by him; in a word, the patron was the guardian of the client's interests, both public and private. The client contributed to the marriage portion of the patron's daughter, if the patron were poor; and to his ransom or that of his children, if taken prisoners; he paid the costs and damages of a suit which the patron lost, and of any penalty in which he was condemned; he bore a part of the patron's expenses incurred by his discharging public duties, or filling the honourable places in the State. Neither party could accuse the other or bear testimony against the other, or give his vote against the other. The relationship between patron and client subsisted for many generations, and resembled in all respects a relationship by blood. It was the glory of illustrious families to have many clients, and to add to the number transmitted to them by their ancestors.

Clifford's Inn, an Inn of Chancery. Anciently the town residence of the Barons Clifford, and demised in 1345 to a body of students of law. It was the most important of the Inns of Chancery and numbered among its students Coke and Selden. It was governed by a principal and twelve rulers until late in the last century. In 1902 the Society was dissolved and the property sold. See INNS OF CHANCERY.

Cloere, a prison or dungeon.—Cowel.

Clog on Equity of Redemption. Any provision inserted in a mortgage to prevent redemption on payment or performance of the debt or obligation for which the security was given is called a 'clog' or fetter on the equity of redemption, and is void; see Santley v. Wilde, 1899, 2 Ch. 474. The question as to the exact nature and limits of this old rule of equity has been raised in a number of recent cases, see G. & C. Kreglinger v. New Patagonia Meat Co., 1914, A. C. 25, where will be found a discussion of the whole subject. And see EQUITY OF REDEMPTION; MORTGAGE.

Cloish, an unlawful game, supposed to be the same as skittles, forbidden by the (repealed) 17 Edw. 4, c. 3; and (under the name of clash) by 33 Hen. 8, c. 9, except at Christmas.

Close, a field or piece of land parted off from other fields or common land by banks, hedges, etc. Every entry upon another's land (unless by the owner's leave, or in some very particular cases) is an injury or wrong, for which an action of trespass will lie to recover such damages as a jury may think proper to assess, and this injury is called trespass quare clausum fregit, or trespass for breaking a man's close.

Close Rolls and Writs, royal letters, under the Great Seal, addressed to particular persons for particular purposes, which, because they are not intended for public inspection, are closed and sealed, and recorded in the close rolls; hence their name.—2 Bl. Com. 346.

Close of Pleadings. In a civil action 'as soon as either party has joined issue upon any pleading of the opposite party simply without adding any further or other pleading thereto, the pleadings as between such parties shall be deemed to be closed.' (R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXVII., r. 13.)

Close Season. See GAME.

Closure. See CLOTURE.

Cloth. By 12 Edw. 3, c. 3, no cloth made beyond sea might be brought into the kingdom on pain of forfeiture of the goods and punishment of the importer.

Closure. The procedure in deliberative assemblies whereby debate is closed. Introduced in the English parliament in the session of 1882, and now anglicized into 'Closure.'

Clough, a valley.—Domesday. Also an allowance of two pounds in every hundred-weight for the turn of the scale, on buying goods wholesale by weight.—Lex Mercat. See ALLOWANCE.

Club-law, regulation by force; the law of arms.

Clubs, associations to which individuals subscribe for purposes of mutual entertainment and convenience; the affairs of which are generally conducted by a steward or secretary, who acts under the immediate superintendence of a committee. The members of an ordinary club, merely as such, are not liable for anything beyond their subscriptions (Wise v. Perpetual Trustee Co., 1903, A. C. 139). As to altering the rules of a club, see Thellusson v. Valentia, 1907, 2 Ch. 1; and as to the expulsion of a member, see Baird v. Wells, (1890) 44 Ch. D. 661. Consult Wertheimer on Clubs; Leake on Contracts.

As to working men's clubs, sick clubs, etc., see FRIENDLY SOCIETIES, and especially s. 8 of the Friendly Societies Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 25), and Industrial Assurance and Friendly Societies Act, 1929 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 28). Shop clubs are dealt with by the Shop Clubs Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7, c. 21), which prohibits compulsory membership of unregistered Shop Clubs or Thrift Funds, and regulates such as are duly registered. The expression 'shop club' or 'thrift fund' in that Act means, by s. 7, 'every club and society for providing benefits to workmen in connection with a workshop, factory, dock, shop, or warehouse.'

The sale of intoxicating liquor in clubs is regulated by a system of registration of the clubs under ss. 91 to 98 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 (10 Edw. 7 & 1 Geo. 5, c. 24), by s. 91 of which the secretary of every club occupying premises habitually used for the purposes of a club, and in which any intoxicating liquor is supplied, must have the club registered with the clerk to the justices of the petty sessional division. The register must contain (inter alia) the rules of the club as to the election of members and the admission of temporary and honorary members and friends, the terms of subscription, the opening and closing hours, and the mode of altering the rules. No intoxicating liquor is to be supplied in an unregistered club, and a registered club may under certain circumstances be struck off the register by a Court of Summary Jurisdiction. See also the Licensing Act, 1921 (11 & 12 Geo. 5, c. 42). A club within s. 4 of that Act means the premises of a registered club and not the association of persons who are members of the club (Upton and Another v. Cully, 1926, 2 K. B. 270).

Clypeus, or Clipeus, a shield; metaphorically one of a noble family. Clypei prostrati, noble families extinct.—Mat. Paris, 463.

Coadjutor, an assistant, helper, or ally; particularly a person appointed to assist a bishop, who from age or infirmity is unable to perform his duty; and see SUFFRAGAN.

Coal may be sold by weight only by the Weights and Measures Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 21), s. 20. The seller delivers a weight ticket for the whole quantity sold (Kyle v. Dunadon, 1908, 2 K. B. 293). The weighing is to take place at the premises of the seller, not on delivery at the premises of the purchaser (Knowles v. Sinclair, 1898, 1 Q. B. 170). See WEIGHTS AND MEASURES. As to the validity of bye-laws requiring coal carts to carry weighing machines, see Kent County Council v. Humphrey, 1895, 1 Q. B. 903; Alty v. Farrell, 1896, 1 Q. B. 636.

Coal Mines. The Coal Mines Act 1911, (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 50), repealing and re-enacting, with alterations, a great part of the existing law, and itself amended by the Coal Mines Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 22), contains a set of elaborate enactments for the management, safety, and inspection of coal mines. The employment of boys, girls, and women below ground is prohibited, and their employment above ground carefully regulated. The Act applies to mines of coal, stratified ironstone, shale, and fire-clay. See also the Coal Mines (Weighing of Minerals) Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 9), amending certain provisions of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, and see the Check-weighing in Various Industries Act, 1919 (9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 51).

By s. 1 (1) of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 57), as amended by the Coal Mines Act, 1919, s. 1, 'a workman shall not be below ground in a mine for the purpose of his work and of going to and from his work, for more than seven hours during any consecutive twenty-four hours.' The Coal Mines Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 34), provides for the regulation, supply and sale of coal by owners of coal mines, and constitutes a Coal Mines National Industrial Board. The Act contains elaborate provisions for the re-organisation of the coal-mining industry and restricts the supply and sale of coal. And by the Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912 (2 Geo. 5, c. 2), provision is made for establishing a minimum wage in the case of workmen employed under ground in coal mines; see Lofthouse Colliery v. Ogden, 1913, 3 K. B. 120; Davies v. Glamorgan Coal Co., 1914, 1 K. B. 674; Richards v. Wrexham and Acton Collieries, 1914, 2 K. B. 497. See MINES.

Coal-note, a particular description of promissory note formerly in use in the port of London. See the (repealed) 3 Geo. 2, c. 28, ss. 7, 8.

Coal-whippers, labourers discharging the cargoes of vessels laden with coals in the port of London. See 6 & 7 Vict. c. ci., which established a coal-whipper's register.

Coast-guard. See the Coast Guard Service Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 83), 'to provide for the better defence of the Coasts of the Realm, and the ready manning of the Navy; and to transfer' to the Admiralty 'from the Board of Customs the Government of the Coast Guard,' whereby the Admiralty may raise such number of officers or men from time to time up to 10,000 as it may think fit for the constitution of a Coast-guard. The force was originally formed merely for the prevention of smuggling, in connection with which it has many duties to discharge under the Customs Acts. The Coast-guard Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 88), transfers the control of the Coast-guard service to the Board of Trade, but in case of emergency it can be transferred to the Admiralty.

Coasting Trade. See 12 & 13 Vict. c. 29; 17 & 18 Vict. c. 5; and 18 & 19 Vict. c. 96 (repealed by Customs and Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 36), see ss. 140-148).

Coat Armour. Coats of arms were introduced by Richard I., from the Holy Land, where they were first invented. Originally they were painted on the shields of the Christian knights, who went to the Holy Land during the crusades, for the purpose of identifying them, some such contrivance being necessary in order to distinguish knights when clad in armour from one another.—2 Bl. Com. 306'

Cocaine. See DRUGS, DANGEROUS.

Cocherlings, or Cosherings, Irish exactions or tributes, now reduced to chief rents. See BONAUGHT.

Cocket, a sealed scroll of parchment given to the master of an outward-going ship certifying that the vessel has been duly cleared by the customs officers.—Jac. Law Dict.

Cock-fighting, a criminal offence by s. 1 (c) of the Protection of Animals Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 27).

Cock-pit, a set of apartments built on the site of the old cock-pit of Whitehall Palace. This was converted into the Privy Council offices in the reign of William III.; but the old name remained till modern times.

Cocksetus, a boatman, a cockswain.—Covel.

Cocula, a cogue or drinking-cup.

Code, a collection or system of laws. The collection of laws and constitutions made by order of the Emperor Justinian is distinguished by the appellation of 'The Code' by way of eminence. See CIVIL LAW.

The Code Napoleon, or Civil Code of France, proceeding from the French Revolution, and the administration of Napoleon while First Consul, effected great changes in the laws of that country. Framed in the first instance by a commission of jurists appointed in 1800, this code, after having passed both the tribunate and the legislative body, was promulgated in 1804 as the 'Code Civil des Français.' When Napoleon became emperor, the name was changed to that of Code Napoleon, by which it is still often designated, though it is now styled by its original name of Code Civil. A Code de Procédure Civile, a Code de Commerce, Code d'Instruction Criminelle, and Code Pénal were afterwards compiled and promulgated under Bonaparte's administration. To these was subsequently added a Code Forestier, or regulations concerning the forests, which was promulgated under Charles X. in 1827. All these codes are sometimes called 'Les six Codes.' A Code de la Conscription and a Code Militaire were also promulgated under Napoleon. All these codes under his administration are sometimes confusedly designated by the name of the Code Napoleon.—Life of Napoleon, by Vieusseux; Myer's Esprit des Institutions Judiciaires. There are English translations of the Code Civil by H. Cachard (1895), and E. Blackwood Wright (1908).

In British India the law has been partly codified; in Great Britain the chief 'codifications' are those effected by the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61)—'an Act to codify the law relating to Bills of Exchange, Cheques, and Promissory Notes'; the Partnership Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 39)—'an Act to declare and amend the law of Partnership'; the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71)—'for codifying the law relating to the sale of goods'; and the Marine Insurance Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 41)—'an Act to codify the law relating to Marine Insurance.' There have no doubt been a great many consolidation Acts (see that title) passed in recent years. But consolidation merely reduces into shape the law as already written in many existing statutes; whereas codification not only does that, but fuses into the new whole the Common Law (as laid down by judicial decisions) besides.

A Criminal Code (Indictable Offences) Bill was submitted to parliament in 1878. This Bill, which was drawn by Mr. Justice Stephen when at the Bar, was referred to a Royal Commission. After the Report of the Commissioners the Bill was reintroduced and referred to a select Committee of the House of Commons, whose sittings, however, were cut short by a dissolution of parliament, and the Bill has not since been proceeded with. See Sir Leslie Stephen's Life of Sir J. F. Stephen, p. 379. For a historical sketch of the subject of codification, see Holland's Essays on the Form of the Law, 29.

In New Zealand, a Criminal Code Act, 1893 (No. 56 of 1893), contains 424 sections and repeals 33 Imperial Acts from 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 11 (against Treason), down to 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100 inclusive.

Codex, a roll or volume.

Codex Justinianus. See CIVIL LAW.

Codex Theodosianus. See CIVIL LAW.

Codicil [fr. codicillus, Lat., a little book, tablet, or writing], a supplement to a will, containing anything which the testator wishes to add, or any explanation or revocation of what the will contains. It must be executed with the same formalities as a will under the Wills Act, 1837 (1 Vict. c. 26), by s. 1 of which the term 'will' extends to a codicil, and must be proved with the will.

Codification. The collection of all the principles of any system of law into one body after the manner of the Codex Justinianus and other codes. See CODE.

Co-emptio, the sale of a wife to a husband.—Civil Law. Consult Colquhoun's Roman Civil Law, vol. i. s. 558.

Co-emption, the act of purchasing the whole quantity of any commodity.

Cofferer of the King's Household, a principal officer of the royal establishment, next under the controller, who, in the counting-house and elsewhere, had a special charge and oversight of the other officers, whose wages he paid. He passed his accounts in the Exchequer. Mentioned in 39 Eliz. c. 7.—Cun. Law Dict.

Cognati, relations by the mother's side. In Roman Law, opposed to Agnati (q.v.).

Cognations. See COSENAGE.

Cognisor, and Cognisee. The former is he who passed or acknowledged a fine of lands or tenements to another; the latter is the person to whom the fine of the lands, etc., was acknowledged.—32 Hen. 8, c. 5.

Cognitionalibus mittendis, an abolished writ to a Justice of the Common Pleas, or other who has power to take a fine, who having taken the fine defers to certify it, commanding him to certify it.—Reg. Brev. 68.

Cognitor, a person appointed by a party to a suit to conduct it for him.—Civil Law.

Cognizance, or Conusance, the hearing of a thing judicially ; also an acknowledgment of a fine ; and in replevin it was, before the Judicature Acts, the name for the pleading of a defendant who acted as bailiff, etc., to another in making a distress, by which he alleged the right or title to be in that person by whose command he acted. If the person who ordered the distress was sued, his pleading was called an Avowry.—Steph. Plead. 225.

Consuance of Pleas, is a privilege granted by the Crown to a town or place, to hold pleas of all contracts, etc., within the precinct of the franchise ; and when a person is impleaded for such matters in the King's Court at Westminster, the mayor, etc., may ask cognizance of the plea, and demand that it shall be determined before him.—Termes de la Ley.

Consuance was successfully claimed by the Chancellor of the University of Oxford over an action to which an undergraduate was defendant in Ginnett v. Whittingham, (1886) 16 Q. B. D. 761, though the plaintiff resided in London, and had no connection with the University.

Cognizance (Judicial), knowledge upon which a judge is bound to act without having it proved in evidence : as the public statutes of the realm, the ancient history of the realm, the order and course of proceedings in parliament, the privileges of the House of Commons, the existence of war with a foreign state, the several seals of the King, the Supreme Court and its jurisdiction, and many other things. A judge is not bound to take cognizance of current events, however notorious, nor of the law of other countries. See Roscoe's Evidence at Nisi Prius.

Cognovit actionem (he has confessed the action), a defendant's written confession of an action brought against him, to which he has no available defence. It is usually upon condition that he shall be allowed a certain time for the payment of the debt or damages, and costs. It is supposed to be given in court, and it impliedly authorizes the plaintiff's solicitor to do everything necessary in order to obtain judgment.

By the Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), s. 24, a warrant of attorney to confess judgment in any personal action, or cognovit actionem given by any person, is not of any force unless there is present some solicitor of the Supreme Court on behalf of such person, expressly named by him, and attending at his request to inform him of the nature and effect of such warrant or cognovit before the same is executed, which solicitor must subscribe his name as a witness ; and the same Act also contains various provisions in regard to the filing of warrants of attorney, cognovits, and judge's orders.—2 Chit. Arch. Proc.

Co-heir, one of several to whom an inheritance descended.

Co-heiress, a woman who had an equal share of an inheritance with another woman.

Cohuagium, a tribute paid by those who meet promiscuously in a market or fair.—Du Cange.

Coif [fr. coiffe, Fr.], the badge of serjeants-at-law, who were called serjeants of the coif, from the lawn coif they wore on their heads under their caps when created serjeants.—Cowel. See SERJEANT, and consult Pulling's State and Degree of the Coif.

Colgne, horse-meat, man's meat, and money at pleasure.—Irish Term.

Coln [fr. coign, Fr. ; cuneus, Lat., a wedge], a piece of metal stamped with certain marks and made current at a certain value. The coining of money is in all states the prerogative of the sovereign power ; and, as money is the medium of commerce, it is the Crown's prerogative and monopoly, as arbiter of domestic commerce, to give it authority or make it current.

By the Coinage Offences Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 99), it was made a felony to counterfeit coin ; to colour or gild, so as to make a resemblance to gold or silver coin ; to impair or lighten coin ; to have in unlawful possession filings or clippings produced by impairing or lightening coin ; to buy or sell or import or utter counterfeit coin. There were numerous other provisions tending to the suppression of the manufacturing, importing and uttering of counterfeit coin. See the Counterfeit Currency (Convention) Act, 1935 (25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 25), an Act to enable effect to be given to an International Convention for the suppression of counterfeiting Currency, to apply to foreign coin certain enactments relating to British coin, and to assimilate the penalties for importing and exporting counterfeit coin, and see now the Coinage Offences Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 and 1 Edw. 8, c. 16), a consolidating Act.

The Coinage Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 10), consolidated and amended the laws relating to coinage and his Majesty's Mint. This Act was amended by the Coinage Acts of 1891 and 1920. The Gold Standard Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 29), made a return to the Gold Standard, but the Gold Standard is now suspended until by Proclamation directed otherwise, see Gold Standard (Amendment) Act, 1931 (21 & 22 Geo. 5, c. 46). See TENDER and CURRENCY AND BANK NOTES ACT.

Coke, Sir Edward, often, but incorrectly, styled Lord Coke, born in 1551, called to the Bar by the Inner Temple in 1578, counsel in Shelley's case (see that title), Speaker of the House of Commons, Solicitor-General and Attorney-General under Queen Elizabeth, knighted by James I. shortly after his accession in 1603, made Chief Justice of the Common Pleas in 1606 and of the King's Bench in 1613, 'taking particular delight,' writes Lord Campbell in his Lives of the Chief Justices, 'in styling himself "Chief Justice of England,"' was deprived of office and committed to the Tower by Charles I., for his support of the Petition of Right. Coke was bitterly hostile to the injunction of equity. The controversy between Coke and Lord Ellesmere, the Chancellor, was acute. James I. referred the whole matter to Bacon, the Attorney-General, and others learned in the law. Acting upon the recommendations of this committee of counsel, James I. decided the matter in favour of Chancery. It should be mentioned to Coke's credit that he stood up manfully against King James upon the question of the Law Officers interfering with the judges, and also that he strongly protested against 'the cursed gallows tree' so frequently in use in his day. He died in 1634. Author of the Institutes and The Reports (see those titles), and of an edition of Littleton's Treatise on Tenures. A famous text-writer and reporter among English lawyers, one of whose great characteristics, however, has been not unjustly said by Sir James Stephen in his Digest of the Criminal Law, 3rd ed. 1883, at p. 364, to be an 'utter incapacity for anything like correct language or consecutive thought.' Lord Campbell, however, writes that his First Institute (being the Commentary on Littleton) 'may be studied with advantage, not only by lawyers, but by all who wish to be well acquainted with the formation of our polity and with the manners and customs prevailing in England in times gone by.'

Collberts, tenants in socage, particularly such villeins as were manumitted or made freemen; but they had not an absolute freedom, for though their condition was better than that of servants, yet they had superior lords, to whom they paid certain duties, and in that respect they might be called servants, though they were of middle condition, between freemen and servants.—Du Cange.

Collate. See COLLATION.

Collateral, indirect, sideways, that which hangs by the side; applied in several ways, thus:—collateral assurance, that which is made over and above the deed itself; collateral consanguinity or kindred, which descend from the same stock or ancestor as the lineal relation, but do not descend one from the other, as the issue of two sons; collateral issue, where a criminal convict pleads any matter allowed by law, in bar of execution, as pregnancy, pardon, an act of grace, or diversity of person, viz., that he or she is not the same that was attainted, etc., the issue upon which when taken is tried by a jury instantly; collateral security, where a deed is made of other property, besides that already mortgaged, for the better safety of the mortgagee (see Re Athill, (1880) 16 Ch. D. 211) or a bill of exchange given, or pledge deposited to secure a pre-existing debt; and collateral contract, where a contract by word of mouth co-exists (see e.g., Morgan v. Griffiths, (1871) L. R. 6 Ex. 70; De Lassalle v. Guildford, 1901, 2 K. B. 215) with a contract in writing made at the same time, notwithstanding the general rule that an oral merges in a written contract. See WARRANTY.

Collateral Warrants, abolished by the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74), s. 14, was where the heir's title to the land neither was, nor could have been, derived from the warranting ancestor, as where a younger brother released to his father's disseisor with warranty, this was collateral to the elder brother. The whole doctrine of collateral warranty is repugnant to justice; and even its technical grounds are so obscure that the ablest legal writers are not agreed upon the subject.—Wright's Tenures, 168; Gilbert's Tenures, 143.

Collatio bonorum (a contribution of goods). Where a portion or money, advanced by the father to a son or daughter, is brought into hotchpot (q.v.), in order to have an equal distributory share of his personal estate at his death, according to the intent of the Statute 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 10 (the Statute of Distribution). Repealed and replaced by the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, ss. 46, 47, and 49.

Collation, the comparison of a copy with its original to ascertain its correctness; or the report of the officer who made the comparison.

Collation of Seals, when upon the same label one seal was set on the back or reverse of the other.

Collation to a Benefice, where the bishop and patron are one and the same person, in which case the bishop cannot present the clergyman to himself, but does, by the one act of collation or conferring the benefice, the whole that is done in common cases both by presentation and institution.

Collatione facta uni post mortem alterius, a writ directed to justices of the Common Pleas, commanding them to direct their writ to a bishop, for the admitting a clerk in the place of another presented by the King, who during the suit between the King and the bishop's clerk is departed this life; for judgment once passed for the King's clerk, and he dying before admittance, the King may bestow his presentation to another.—Cun. Law. Dict.; Reg. Brer. 31 b.

Collatione Heremitagii, a writ whereby the King conferred the keeping of a hermitage upon a clerk.—Cun. Law Dict.; Reg. Brer. 303, 308.

Collative Advowson. See ADVOWSON.

Collecting Society, a friendly society or branch, whether registered or unregistered, which receives contributions by means of collectors at a greater distance than ten miles from the registered office or principal place of business of the Society; see Collecting Societies and Industrial Assurance Act, 1923 (13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 8), and Industrial Assurance and Friendly Societies Act, 1929 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 28).

Collections, Street, in the Metropolitan Police District, are regulated by the Street Collections Regulations, 1923 (No. 1133), made under the Police, Factories, etc. (Miscellaneous Provisions), Act, 1916. No collection of money (other than at an open-air meeting) or sale of any article in any street or public place is permitted unless the persons responsible have obtained a permit from the Commissioner of Police. The regulations contain provisions regulating the conduct of collectors and vendors, who must be unpaid and 18 years of age or over. An audited return of the amount received and expenses has to be rendered in a prescribed form.

Collective Work. As to the meaning of the term for the purposes of the Copyright Act, 1911, see s. 35 of this Act.

Collegatary, a person who has a legacy left to him in common with other persons.

College [fr. colligo, Lat., to bring to], a corporation, company, or society of men, having certain privileges and endowed with certain revenues, founded by royal license.

An assemblage of several colleges is called a University.

College of Justice. Those persons who take part in the administration of justice in the Court of Session in Scotland are known collectively as the College of Justice, the Canon Law status of a Collegium having been conferred upon them by Pope Paul III.

Collegia, the guild of a trade.—Civil Law.

Collegiate Church, a church built and endowed for a society, or body corporate, consisting of a dean or other president and secular priests, as canons or prebendaries in such church. There were many of these societies distinguished from the religious or regulars before the Reformation, and some are still subsisting, as Westminster, Windsor, Southwell and others.—Jac. Law Dict.

Colliery. See COAL MINES.

Colligenda bona, Letters ad. In default of relatives or creditors to administer, the Probate Court may grant letters to collect the goods of the deceased, and may give the grantee the full powers of an administrator during the time he is to act; see Whitehead v. Palmer, 1908, 1 K. B. 151; Re Roberts, 1898, P. 149.

Collision of Ships, the striking or running foul of one ship against another. The remedy is either an action at law or a suit in the Admiralty Division. The possibilities under which a collision may occur, and the rules acted on by the Court of Admiralty, have been thus stated by Lord Stowell in The Woodrop-Sims, (1815) 2 Dodson, 85:—'In the first place, it may happen without blame being imputable to either party: as where the loss is occasioned by a storm or any other vis major, in that case the misfortune must be borne by the party on whom it happens to light, the other not being responsible to him in any degree. Secondly, a misfortune of this kind may arise where both parties are to blame, where there has been a want of due diligence or of skill on both sides: In such a case, the rule of law is, that the loss must be apportioned between them, as having been occasioned by the fault of both of them. Thirdly, it may happen by the misconduct of the suffering party only, and then the rule is that the sufferer must bear his own burthen. Lastly, it may have been the fault of the ship which ran the other down, and in that case the injured party would be entitled to an entire compensation from the other.'

In a Court of Common Law the same rule prevailed in the 1st, 3rd, and 4th cases; but in the 2nd, viz., where both parties are to blame, the rule was that if the negligence of both substantially contributed to the accident, neither could maintain an action against the other; but that if one of them by the exercise of ordinary care might have avoided the consequences of the other's negligence, the former was liable for any injury that the latter might have sustained. See Tuff v. Warman, (1857) 2 C. B. N. S. 740. But by the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25 (9), it was provided that in any cause or proceeding for damages arising out of a collision between two ships, if both ships were found to have been in fault, the rules hitherto in force in the Court of Admiralty, so far as they had been at variance with the rules in force in the Courts of Common Law, should prevail. The Maritime Conventions Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 57), repealed this, and enacts that where by the fault of two or more vessels, damage or loss is caused to one or more of those vessels to their cargoes or freight or to any property on board, the liability to make good the damage or loss shall be in proportion to the degree in which each vessel was at fault, see s. 1 of the Act. This rule is subject to the limitation of liability under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, according to the size of the vessel. See LIMITATION OF LIABILITY.

The 418th section of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, authorizes the King in Council, on the joint recommendation of the Admiralty and the Board of Trade, to make regulations for the prevention of collisions at sea, and thereby regulate the light to be carried and exhibited, the fog signals to be carried and used, and the steering and sailing rules to be observed by ships (see Regulations, 1910), and s. 471 of the Act provides for inquiries to be held by order of the Board of Trade.

Collistrigium, a pillory.

Collitigant, one who litigates with another.

Collocation, the order in which creditors are placed and paid.—Fr. Law.

Colloquium, 1. A talking together; a conversation. 2. An old term in pleading applied to the statement in declaration for libel or slander that the libellous or slanderous imputation had reference to the plaintiff.

Collusion [fr. collusio, Lat., fr. colludo, to unite in the same play or game, and thus to unite for the purposes of fraud or deception], an agreement or compact between two or more persons to do some act in order to prejudice a third person, or for some improper purpose. Collusion in judicial proceedings is a secret agreement between two persons that the one should institute a suit against the other, in order to obtain the decision of a judicial tribunal for some sinister purpose, and appears to be of two kinds: (1) When the facts put forward as the foundation of the sentence of the Court do not exist; (2) When they exist, but have been corruptly preconceived for the express purpose of obtaining the sentence. In either case the judgment obtained by such collusion is a nullity. See The Duchess of Kingston's case, (1776) 2 Sm. L. C. Collusion between the petitioner and either of the respondents in presenting or prosecuting a suit for dissolution of marriage is a bar to such suit by the Judicature Act, 1925, s. 178, replacing the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (c. 85), ss. 30 and 31; and a collusive penal action is no bar to a bonâ fide penal action by virtue of 4 Hen. 7, c. 20; Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Penal Action'; and see Girdlestone v. Brighton Aquarium Co., (1878) 3 Ex. D. 137.

Colonial Attorneys Relief Acts, 1857, 1874, and 1884 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 39, 37 & 38 Vict. c. 41, and 47 & 48 Vict. c. 24). These Acts provided for the admission, to practise as solicitors in the Supreme Court in England, of all persons, being subjects of the British Crown, who have been duly admitted and enrolled as attorneys and solicitors in any colony. These Acts were repealed by the Colonial Solicitors Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 14), which was in turn repealed by the Solicitors Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 37), and s. 35 enacts:—

(1) A solicitor of a Superior Court in a British possession to which this section applies who has been in practice before such Court for not less than three years may—

- (a) on giving due notice and the prescribed proof of his qualifications and good character; and
- (b) on passing the prescribed examination or, in the prescribed cases, without examination; and
- (c) after service under articles during the prescribed period or, in the prescribed cases, without such service; be admitted as a solicitor upon payment of the prescribed amount in respect of stamp duties and fees.

(2) Where as respects a Superior Court in a British possession His Majesty in Council is satisfied on the report of a Secretary of State—

- (a) that the regulations respecting the admission of solicitors of that Court are such as to secure that these solicitors possess proper qualifications and competency ; and

- (b) that by the law of that possession solicitors of the Supreme Court will be admitted as solicitors of the Superior Court in that possession on terms as favourable as those on which it is proposed to admit solicitors of that Superior Court in pursuance of this section as solicitors of the Supreme Court,

His Majesty may by Order in Council apply this section to the said Superior Court and British possessions subject to any exceptions, conditions and modifications specified in the Order, and by the same or any subsequent Order in Council may, as respects that Court and possession, provide for all matters authorized by this section to be prescribed and for all matters appearing to His Majesty to be necessary or proper for giving effect to the Order and to this Act. See Chit. Stat., tit. 'Colonies.'

Colonial Clergy. As to the position of clergy ordained in the colonies, when they come to England, see the 'Colonial Clergy Act, 1874,' 37 & 38 Vict. c. 77.

Colonial Coinage. By s. 11 (8) of the Coinage Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 10), replacing the Colonial Branch Mint Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 65) (which applied to gold coins only), the King in Council may make coins coined in the colonies legal tender in England, and may revoke such order, and see Coinage Act, 1920 (10 Geo. 5, c. 3), s. 1. See TENDER.

Colonial Laws. The validity of laws passed by colonial legislature is established by the Statute of Westminster, 1931, which enacts, subject to the provisions of the Act, that the Colonial Laws Validity Act, 1865, shall not apply to any law made after December 11th, 1931, by the Parliament of a Dominion. Also that no law made by the Parliament of a Dominion be void on the ground that it is repugnant to the law of England. The Colonial Laws Validity Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 63) enacts that no colonial law shall be void for repugnancy to the law of England, unless it be repugnant to the provisions of some Act of Parliament extending to the colony, or to any Order made under authority of such Act, or having in the colony the force and effect of such Act. In the case of such repugnancy the colonial law shall be void to the extent thereof and not otherwise. By the same Act all colonial legislatures are empowered to establish courts of judicature, and to abolish and re-constitute the same, and to make laws respecting the constitution, powers, and procedure of the legislature in each colony respectively, in accordance with the requirements of any Act of Parliament in force in every such colony.

Colonial Marriages Validity Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 64). All the laws made or to be made by the legislature of any of his Majesty's possessions for the purpose of establishing the validity of marriages previously contracted therein, are to have the same effect within all parts of his Majesty's dominions as within the place where they were made.

Colonial Office, the department of state through which the sovereign appoints colonial governors, etc., and communicates with them. Until the year 1854, the administration of Colonial and military affairs was combined, but after the Crimean War an additional Secretary of State was appointed for the administration of military affairs only. See WAR OFFICE.

Colonial Register (Companies). See DOMINION REGISTER.

Colonial Stock Acts. Colonial stocks were not authorized as trustee investments by the Trustee Act, 1893, but by the Colonial Stock Acts of 1877, 1892, 1900 and 1934. Colonial stocks registered in the United Kingdom, and with respect to which certain prescribed conditions have been observed, are (unless expressly forbidden by the instrument of trust : Trustee Act, 1925, s. 1 (o) available as investments for trustees ; see Colonial Stock Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 62), and subsequent Acts ; Re Maryon-Wilson, 1912, 1 Ch. 55.

Colonus, a husbandman or villager, who was bound to pay yearly a certain tribute ; or, at certain times in the year to plough some part of the lord's land ; hence 'clown.'

Colony [fr. colo, Lat., to cultivate], a settlement in a foreign country possessed and cultivated, either wholly or partially, by immigrants and their descendants, who have a political connection with and subordination to the mother-country whence they emigrated. In other words, it is a place peopled from some more ancient city or country.

England was not the first among European nations that planted settlements in parts beyond Europe. But by her own colonization, and by the conquests of the settlements of other nations, she has now acquired a more extensive dominion of colonies and dependencies than any other nation. The colonies of Great Britain exceed in number, extent, and value those of every other country.

In an Act of Parliament passed after 1889 the expression 'colony' means by s. 18 (3), of the Interpretation Act, 1889, 'any part of her Majesty's dominions, exclusive of the British Islands and of British India, and where parts of such dominions are under both a central and a local legislature, all parts under the central legislature shall, for the purposes of this definition, be deemed to be one colony.' But, by the Statute of Westminster, 1931 (22 Geo. 5, c. 4), s. 11, notwithstanding anything in the Interpretation Act, 1889, the expression 'Colony' shall not, in any Act of Parliament of the United Kingdom passed after 11th December, 1931, include a Dominion or any Province or State forming part of the Dominion.

Colonies are acquired either (1) by conquest, (2) by cession under treaty, (3) by occupancy, as Newfoundland, New South Wales, and Van Diemen's Land, or (4) by hereditary descent. By far the greater part of the colonies was acquired by conquest or cession. In the first two cases the territory retains its former laws until they are altered by the home government, i.e., the King in Council, yet subordinate to the authority of Parliament. The alterations may be general or partial, leaving the old laws still in force touching matters unprovided for. In the third case (which is strictly a plantation), the English laws, so far as they are applicable to the condition of an infant colony, are ipso facto in force in such a colony, for there can be no existing laws to contest the superiority; and besides, the occupants could not have any power to establish laws independently of the mother-country, to whom their allegiance is still due; and they also carry with them the laws of their country, which are their inalienable birthright. Such a colony is, then, not subject to legislation by the Crown, nor is a country which comes to the Crown by title of descent. Such colonies retain their own laws till changed by the act of the Imperial Parliament, to whose legislative authority every kind of colony is subject, as portions of the British dominions, and whose protection they have a right to demand, for the resistance of hostile aggression, and the peaceful possession of their territory. As a general rule an Act of Parliament must name the colony in order to bind it, but see Statute of Westminster, 1931 (22 Geo. 5, c. 4). Clark's Col. Law; Burge's Col. and For. Law. See COLONIAL LAWS.

Colorado Beetle. An insect indigenous to Colorado, one of the United States of America, so destructive to vegetables that the Destructive Insects Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 68), was passed to prevent its introduction into Great Britain by means of orders (see Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Agriculture') prohibiting or regulating the landing of potatoes, etc., likely to introduce it, and giving powers to destroy crops on which it may be found, and compensation to persons whose crops may be destroyed accordingly.

Colour, a term of the ancient rhetoricians, and early adopted into the language of pleading. It was an apparent or prima facie right; and the meaning of the rule, that pleadings in confession and avoidance should give colour, was that they should confess the matter adversely alleged, to such an extent, at least, as to admit some apparent right in the opposite party, which required to be encountered and avoided by the allegation of new matter. Colour was either express, i.e., inserted in the pleading, or implied, which was naturally inherent in the structure of the pleading.—Steph. Plead. 233. Express colour was abolished by C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 64.

Colour of Office, when an act is unjustly done by the countenance of an office, being grounded upon corruption, to which the office is as a shadow and colour.—Plowd. 64.

Colourable Alteration. An alteration or imitation calculated to deceive or otherwise conceived for the purpose of passing off goods as goods of a different make or to evade copyright or trade marks or other rights or property.

Colpieces, young poles, which being cut down are made into levers or lifters.—Blount.

Colpo, a small wax candle.

Combarones, the fellow-barons or commonalty of the Cinque Ports.—Jac. Law Dict.

Combat, Trial by Single. See BATTEL.

Comba terræ [fr. cumbe, Sax.; kum, Br.; comb, Eng.], a valley or piece of low ground between two hills.—Ken. Glos.

Combe (cwm, W.), a narrow valley.

Combination, a banding together of persons for any particular purpose, as of workmen for the purposes of a strike. See Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), by which (s. 3) 'an agreement or combination by two or more persons to do or procure to be done any act in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute between employers and workmen shall not be indictable as a crime if such act committed by one person would not be punishable as a crime.' See TRADE DISPUTE.

Combustio Pecuniae. The ancient way of trying mixed and corrupt money by melting it down.—Jacob.

Come ceo ; as well for this.

Comes, a count or superior officer of a county.

Cominus, or more correctly Cominus [Lat.], hand-to-hand ; in personal contact.

Comitatu commissio, a writ or commission whereby a sheriff is authorized to enter upon the charge of a county.—Reg. Brev. 295.

Comitatu et castro commissio, a writ by which the charge of a county, together with the keeping of a castle, is committed to the sheriff.—Ibid.

Comitatus, a county. See POSSE COMITATUS.

Comites, earls, courtiers, or companions.

Comitissa [Lat.], a countess.

Comitiva, a companion or fellow-traveller ; also a troop or company of robbers.

Comity of Nations, the most appropriate phrase to express the true foundation and extent of the obligation of the laws of one nation within the territories of another. It is derived altogether from the voluntary consent of the latter, and is inadmissible when it is contrary to its known policy or prejudicial to its interests. In the silence of any positive rule affirming or denying or restraining the operation of foreign laws, courts of justice presume the tacit adoption of them by their own government, unless repugnant to its policy or prejudicial to its interests. It is not the comity of the courts, but the comity of the nation, which is administered and ascertained in the same way, and guided by the same reasoning, by which all other principles of the municipal law are ascertained and guided.—Story's Conflict of Laws, s. 38, and see Westlake's Pr. Intern. Law.

Commandeer, a thing is said to be commandeered when the government of the owner's country seize or require it to be placed at their disposal for military purposes, not for general political purposes. See Capel v. Souidi, 1916, 1 K. B. 439.

Commander-in-Chief. The army was originally under the personal command of the sovereign, but in 1793 this command was delegated to a Commander-in-Chief appointed by patent. The command was divided in the middle of the nineteenth century between the Commander-in-Chief and a Secretary of State for War. The latter gradually became predominant, which led to the abolition of the former office in 1904, the Commander-in-Chief's duties being divided between the Army Council and the Inspector-General, the Secretary of State for War being responsible for the Army as a whole.

Commandery, a manor or chief messuage with lands and tenements thereto appertaining, which belonged to the priory of St. John of Jerusalem, in England ; he who had the government of such a manor or house was styled the commander, who could not dispose of it but to the use of the priory, only taking thence his own sustenance, according to his degree. The manors and lands belonging to the priory of St. John of Jerusalem were given to Henry the Eighth by 32 Hen. 8, c. 20, about the time of the dissolution of abbays and monasteries ; so that the name only of commanderies remains, the power being long since extinct.

Commandite, Partnerships en, partnerships in France which are limited, where the contract is between one or more persons, who are general partners, and jointly and severally responsible, and one or more other persons, who merely furnish a particular fund or capital stock, and thence are called commanditaires or commanditaires, or partners en commandite.—The salient features of that system in its simplest form are these : There is a managing partner, who manages the affairs of the partnership and is under unlimited liability to creditors, and there is a sleeping partner, who contributes, or agrees to contribute, capital of specified amount for the purposes of the partnership. His liability is limited to the amount of his capital, and he is not allowed to take part in the management of the business. Particulars are registered. Sometimes there are several managing partners and several sleeping partners. See Pollock on Partnership, 9th ed. p. 207 ; Code of Commerce of France, arts. 23, 24 ; Pothier tr. de la Société, n. 60, 102. These partnerships are allowed in several of the states of America.—3 Kent's Com. 35. See LIMITED PARTNERSHIP.

Commandments, Table of Ten. By Canon Law (Canon 82) churchwardens are under an obligation to provide fittings and space for a table of the Ten Commandments in every church or chapel.

Commencement of Business. See COMPANY.

Commarchio, the confines of the land.

Commendatam is a benefice or ecclesiastical living which, being void, is commended by the Crown to the care of a clerk until it may be conveniently supplied with a pastor. Not only dignitaries and benefices, but deaneries, prebends, headships of colleges and hospitals, have been granted in commendam. The acceptance by a beneficed clerk of a second living vacated the one he already held, and to avoid this a dispensation, called a commendam retinere, had to be obtained either from the Pope, or in later times from the King. See Mirehouse on Adv. c. vii. s. 6.

By the Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 77), s. 18, which abolished commendams by bishops (with a saving for those at the passing of the Act), every commendam, whether to retain or to receive, and whether temporary or perpetual, became absolutely void.

Commenda est facultas recipiendi et retinendi beneficium contra jus positivum a suprema potestate. Moore, 905.—(A commendam is the power of receiving and retaining a benefice contrary to positive law, by supreme authority.)

Commendators. During Popery the commendator was the person by whom the fruits of a benefice were levied during a vacancy. He was properly a steward or trustee; but the Pope, who was entitled to grant the higher benefices in commendam, abused the power, and gave them to commendators for their lives.—Bell's Dict.

Commendatory, he who holds a church living or preferment in commendam.

Commendatory Letters, those written by one bishop to another on behalf of any of the clergy, or others of his diocese travelling thither; or that the clerk may be promoted; or necessities administered to others, etc.

Commendatum. See DEPOSIT.

Commendatus, one who lives under the protection of a great man.—Spelm.

Commerce [fr. commutatio mercium, Lat.], the intercourse of nations in each other's produce and manufactures, in which the superfluities of one are given for those of another, and then re-exchanged with other nations for mutual wants. Commerce relates to our dealings with foreign nations, colonies, etc.; trade, to mutual dealings at home.—See McCull. Com. Dict.

Commercial Court, the name given to a court presided over by a single judge for the trial, as expeditiously as may be, of cases set down in a commercial list at the Royal Courts of Justice. The list was established in 1896 (not by any Rule of the Supreme Court, but by inherent power of the High Court or any Division of it to arrange its business—see Barry v. Peruvian Corporation, 1896, 1 Q. B. at p. 109)—and Mr. Justice Mathew was the first judge. The particular circumstances and the question in issue must be considered in order to decide whether a case should be made a commercial cause (Sea Insurance Co. v. Carr, 1901, 1 K. B. 7). See Annual Practice, part vi., 'Commercial Causes,' and Encyclopædia of the Laws of England.

Commercium jure gentium commune esse debet, et non in monopolium et privatum paucorum quæstum convertendum. 3 Inst. 181.—(Commerce by the law of nations ought to be common, and not converted to monopoly and the private gain of a few.)

Commissariat, the whole body of officers in the commissaries' department.

Commissary, one who is sent or delegated to execute some office or duty as the representative of his superior. In ecclesiastical law, an officer of the bishop, who exercises spiritual jurisdiction in distant parts of the diocese. In military affairs, an officer who has the charge of furnishing provisions, clothing, etc., for an army.

Commissary Court. The name of the Court in Canterbury which exercises the functions of a Consistory Court (q.v.).

Commission, the warrant or letters-patent which all persons exercising jurisdiction, either ordinary or extraordinary, have, to authorize them to hear or determine any cause or action, or do other lawful things, as the commission of the judges, etc. There was formerly a High Commission Court founded on 1 Eliz. c. 1, but it was abolished by the Act of 16 Car. 1, c. 11, though an impotent attempt was made to re-establish it during the succeeding reign.

In commerce, the order by which any one traffics or negotiates for another; also, and much more frequently, the percentage given to factors or agents for transacting the business of others.

Earning Commission.—Commission may be earned by bringing contracting parties together, although an actual contract may not be made (Green v. Bartlett, (1863) 32 L. J. C. P. 261). From a contract to employ for a time certain on commission may be implied a contract to give opportunity to earn the commission throughout the time (Turner v. Goldsmith, 1891, 1 Q. B. 544; Warren v. Agdeshman, 38 T. L. R. 588).

Commission from the other Party.—That an agent employed by his principal to sell or otherwise to negotiate with another take a pecuniary or other benefit from that other for himself as part of the negotiation, expressly or impliedly, the benefit belongs to the principal and he can recover it from the agent (De Bussche v. Alt, (1878) 8 Ch. D. 286), and the secret taking of such a benefit works a forfeiture of the agent's legal commission (Andrews v. Ramsay, 1903, 2 K. B. 635), and justifies dismissal (Boston Deep Sea Fishing Co. v. Ansell, (1888) 39 Ch. D. 339). See also the Prevention of Corruption Acts, 1906 and 1916, and the Prevention of Corruption Order, 1918, No. 321. And see CORRUPTION and BRIBE.

Commission of Anticipation, an authority under the Great Seal to collect a tax or subsidy before the day.—15 Hen. 8. See now Provisional Collection of Taxes Act, 1913.

Commission of Array, issued to send into every county officers to muster or set in military order the inhabitants. The introduction of commissions of lieutenantcy, which contained in substance the same powers as these commissions, superseded them.—2 Steph. Com.

Commission of Assize. See ASSIZE.

Commission of Bankruptcy, the authority formerly given by the Lord Chancellor to certain commissioners, empowering them to proceed in the bankruptcy of a trader. Abolished by 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 56, s. 12; as to construction of unrevoked Acts mentioning it, see Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 131.

Commission of Charitable Uses, issued out of Chancery to the bishop and others to inquire into misapplication of lands given to charitable uses.—43 Eliz. c. 4. See CHARITABLE USES.

Commission Day, the opening day of the assize; so called because on that day the Royal Commission to the judges was formerly read in court—a ceremony dispensed with by Rule 14 of the Circuits Order, 1884, Rule 13 of which Order provides for the postponement of Commission Day. Till that Order, court business was never transacted on Commission Day, whereas now it very frequently is.

Commission del Credere, where an agent of a seller undertakes to guarantee to his principal the payment of the debt due by the buyer. The phrase del credere is borrowed from the Italian language, in which its signification is equivalent to our word guarantee or warranty.—Story's Agency, 28.

Commission of Delegates, issued under the Great Seal to certain persons, usually lords, bishops and judges, to sit upon an appeal to the King in the Court of Chancery, where a sentence was given in any ecclesiastical cause by the archbishop.—25 Hen. 8, c. 19, repealed by 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 92.

Commission of Oyer and Terminer. See ASSIZE.

Commission of Rebellion, an attaching process, formerly issuable out of Chancery, to enforce obedience to a process or decree; abolished by Order of 26th August, 1841.

Commission of the Peace, issues under the Great Seal for the appointment of justices of the peace in a form settled in 1590, which continues with little alteration at the present day.

Commission to examine Witnesses, was, under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 36, issued in Chancery suits, where the witnesses resided abroad; and at Common Law under the 1 Wm. 4, c. 22, s. 4. See now R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXXVII., r. 5. See DE BENE ESSE and LETTERS OF REQUEST.

Commission to inquire of Faults against the Law, anciently set forth on extraordinary occasions and corruptions.

Commission Merchant. A factor is commonly said to be an agent employed to sell goods or merchandise, consigned or delivered to him by or for his principal for a compensation commonly called factorage or commission. Hence he is often called a commission merchant or consignee; and the goods received by him for sale are called a consignment.—Story's Agency, 28.

Commissioner, a person authorized by letters-patent, Act of Parliament, or other lawful warrant, to examine any matters, or execute any public office, etc. The Commissioners Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 16), regulates the qualification, etc., of commissioners, who under an Act of Parliament execute undertakings of a public nature; and in particular enacts by s. 60 that they are not to be personally liable.

Commissioners Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 16), consolidates the usual statutory clauses constituting and regulating commissioners for regulating public undertakings.

Commissioners in Lunacy. Now Board of Control. See UNSOUND MIND.

Commissioners for Oaths. Masters extraordinary in Chancery acted in very early times as commissioners to administer oaths to persons making affidavits (see that title) before them concerning Chancery suits, and the judges of the Common Law courts were authorized, under 29 Car. 2, c. 5, by commission to empower 'what and as many persons as they should think fit and necessary' to take affidavits for one shilling fee concerning Common Law actions. The Masters in Chancery were succeeded by solicitors under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 78, appointed by the Lord Chancellor, the fee being one shilling and sixpence.

The Commissioners for Oaths Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 10), which amends and consolidates twenty-four enactments on the subject, enacts by s. 1 that the Lord Chancellor may, from time to time, by commission signed by him, appoint practising solicitors or other fit and proper persons to be commissioners for oaths; with power, in England or elsewhere, to administer any oath or take any affidavit for the purpose of any court or matter in England, etc. But it is provided that a commissioner may not act in any proceedings in which he is solicitor to any of the parties to the proceeding, or in which he is interested, and to the same effect is R. S. C. Ord. XXXVIII., r. 16.

The ordinary minimum qualification is in London, and other large towns, six years' continuous practice as a solicitor from the date of the first certificate (but this rule is under special circumstances sometimes relaxed), or if he has been a barrister, from the date of his call to the Bar (Solicitors Act, 1932, s. 73), and each application must be supported by two barristers, two solicitors, and at least six neighbours of the applicant. See Memorandum of Lord Chancellor issued in January, 1894. The appointment must be registered with the Law Society or their Appointee, Solicitors Act, 1932, s. 72.

The fees for Court business, two shillings for each oath, and one shilling and fourpence for each exhibit, are given by Supreme Court Fees Order, 1930, and it has been usual to take similar fees for business not in court. See also R. S. C. Ord. LXV., r. 8, Appendix N.

The Commissioners for Oaths Act, 1891, allows persons to take oaths before commissioners for oaths instead of justices of the peace, in matters arising under the Pawnbrokers Act, 1872, and other Acts therein mentioned.

Commissioners of Crown Lands, the name of the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, see the Forestry (Transfer of Woods) Act, 1923, and Order in Council, 1924, S. R. O., 1924 (No. 1370). The Commissioners were incorporated by the Crown Lands Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 231); their powers and duties are provided for by this Act. The Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries is an ex-officio commissioner (6 Edw. 7, c. 28).

Commissioners of Customs and Excise.

The constitution and powers of these Commissioners are provided for by the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 36), and amending Acts. See the Excise Transfer Order (S. R. O. 1909, No. 197), by which excise duties were transferred to these Commissioners from the Inland Revenue.

Commissioners of Inland Revenue. The appointment and powers of these Commissioners are regulated by the Inland Revenue Regulation Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 21), and see preceding title.

Commissioners of Sewers, directed to see drains and ditches well kept and maintained in the marshy parts of England for the better conveyance of the water into the sea, and the preservation of the grass upon the land, by 13 Eliz. c. 9 and subsequent Acts. The office of Commissioners of Sewers was abolished by 20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 44. The powers and duties of the Commissioners are to be transferred to Catchment Boards. See LAND DRAINAGE.

Commissioners of Woods. See COMMISSIONERS OF CROWN LANDS.

Commissioners of Works. The Works and Public Buildings Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 84), as amended, regulates the incorporation, powers and duties of these Commissioners, and see the Ancient Monuments Acts, 1913 and 1931.

Commissioners, Perpetual, for taking acknowledgments of married women under the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74), and the Married Women's Reversionary Interests Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 5), Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Fines and Recoveries.' See s. 81 of the Act, by which as amended by s. 25 of the Judicature Act, 1881, proper persons were appointed such Commissioners by the Lord Chief Justice of England from time to time. The Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 167, has abolished the statutory requirements for acknowledgments by married women as respects settlements executed after 1925.

Commissoria lex, the term applied to a clause often inserted in conditions of sale, by which a vendor reserved to himself the privilege of rescinding the sale, if the purchaser did not pay his purchase-money at the time agreed on.—Dig. 18, tit. 3.

Commitment, (1) the sending a person to prison by warrant or order, either for a crime, contempt, or contumacy (see the Debtors Act, 1869, for the abolition of imprisonment for debt, 32 & 33 Vict. c. 62, s. 5). In the county court, judgment debts which the debtor has the means (Re A Debtor, 1906, 1 K. B. 374) to, but will not pay, can be enforced by commitment for a term not exceeding six weeks. This procedure can be applied to an award under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (Bailey v. Plant, 1901, 1 K. B. 31); see ATTACHMENT, and R. S. C. Ord. XLIV.; and (2) the sending to prison, pending his trial at Assizes or Quarter Sessions, by justices of the peace, under the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 42), of a person charged with an indictable offence, in a case where the evidence is sufficient.

Committal. See COMMITMENT.

Committee, certain persons elected or appointed to whom any matter or business is referred, either by a legislative body or by any corporation or society; e.g., a Committee of a Town Council under the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, ss. 22 and 190, and Local Government Act, 1933 (c. 51), s. 75, or of directors under the Companies Clauses Act, 1845, s. 95. See also PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE.

Committee of a Person of Unsound Mind or Idiot, the person to whom the care and custody of the person and estate, or either, of a person of unsound mind is committed by the Court. Separate committees may be appointed (a) of the person, (b) of the estate, and joint committees may be appointed for either or both of these purposes. See Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), s. 120. A committee can only be appointed after a formal inquisition. In practice, receivers are generally appointed under the Lunacy Acts, 1890 (53 Vict. c. 5), s. 116; 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 47), s. 1, and 1922 (12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 60).

Committee of Inspection. In bankruptcy (after the making of a receiving order) the creditors may appoint a committee to supervise the administration of the bankrupt's property by the trustee (Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 20). As to the necessity for the trustee to obtain the committee's consent and to follow its directions, see Bankruptcy Act, 1914, ss. 56 and 79. In companies winding up, a similar committee may be appointed by the creditors and contributors: see Companies Act, 1929, ss. 187, 188, 196-199, 212 and 230.

Committitur Plece, an instrument in writing on parchment, which charges a person, already in prison, in execution at the suit of the person who arrested him.—2 Ch. Arch.

Commodatum. He who lends to another a thing for a definite time, to be enjoyed and used under certain conditions, without any pay or reward, is called commodans; the person who receives the thing is called commodatarius, and the contract is called commodatum. It differs from locatio and conductio in this, that the use of the thing is gratuitous.—Dig. 13, tit. 6; Instit. iii. 2, 14.

Commodum ex injuriā suā nemo habere debet. Jenk. Cent. 161.—(No person ought to have advantage from his own wrong.)

Common, a profit which a man has in the land of another; it derives its name from the community of interest which thence arises between the claimant and the owner of the soil, or between the claimant and other commoners entitled to the same right; all which parties are entitled to bring actions for injuries done to their respective interests, and that both as against strangers and against each other. It is called an incorporeal right, which lies in grant, as if originally commencing in some agreement between lords and tenants, for some valuable consideration which, by lapse of time, being formed into a prescription, continues, although there be no deed or instrument in writing which proves the original contract or agreement. It differs from a rent, principally in freedom of enjoyment on the one hand, and in freedom from obligation on the other; which the law expresses by the quaint antithesis that it lies not in render but in prender. It is also incidentally distinguished by its fruits being always taken in kind, and being in general not otherwise measured than by limiting the instruments of enjoyment. The Prescription Act (2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 71), s. 1, enacts that after thirty years' enjoyment a right of common cannot be defeated by merely showing it commenced within time of memory, and after sixty years' enjoyment the right shall be absolute and indefeasible, unless it appear that the same was taken and enjoyed under some deed or writing.

There are four sorts of common, viz. :—

(1) Common of pasture, limited or unlimited, which is the right of feeding one's beasts in another's land, and this is subdivided into :

(a) Appendant, which is a privilege belonging to the owners or occupiers of arable land holden of a manor, to put upon its wastes their commonable beasts, viz., horses, kine, or sheep, such as either plough or manure the arable land granted.

(b) Appurtenant, which arises from no connection of tenure, nor from any absolute necessity, but may be extended to other beasts besides such as are generally commonable, as swine, goats, or geese. This can only be claimed by grant, or by title of prescription, which supposes a now forgotten grant.

(c) Because of vicinage or neighbourhood (pur cause de vicinage), which takes place where the tenants of two adjoining townships have suffered their cattle to range indiscriminately over both wastes, and it seems that either lord may put an end to it by erecting a fence. In close connection with this, and substantially of the same kind, is common of shack, or the right of persons occupying lands lying together in the same common field, to turn out their cattle after harvest, to feed promiscuously in that field.

(d) In gross or at large, which is neither appendant nor appurtenant to land, but is annexed to a man's person by granting it to him and his heirs by deed, or it may be claimed by prescriptive right, as by a parson of a church or a corporation sole. The right cannot be granted for an unlimited number of cattle.

(2) Common of piscary, a liberty of fishing in another's water. It is either appendant, appurtenant, or in gross.

(3) Common of turbary, a license to dig turf upon the land of another, or in the lord's waste; it may be either appendant or appurtenant, i.e., appendant or appurtenant to a house, and not to lands, for turfs are to be burnt in the house, or it may be in gross.

(4) Common of estovers or estouviers, or necessities, a liberty of taking necessary wood, for the use or furniture of a house or farm from off another's estate. The Saxon word bote is used by us as synonymous with the French estovers. House-bote is a sufficient allowance of wood to repair, or to burn in the house; which latter is sometimes called fire-bote; plough-bote and cart-bote are wood to be employed in making and repairing all instruments of husbandry; and hay-bote or hedge-bote is wood for repairing of hays, hedges, or fences.—See 2 Bl. Com. 32; Williams on Rights of Common.

The inclosure of commons is regulated by the Inclosure Acts, but these Acts contain (see especially the Inclosure Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 118), s. 30) many provisions for the protection of commoners and the formation of 'recreation grounds' and 'field gardens.'

The regulation of commons, for many years mainly provided for by the Commons Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 56), is now mainly provided for by the Commons Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 30), which, though it does not repeal the Act of 1876, will probably supersede it as being too cumbrous and expensive in its procedure. The Act of 1899 enables urban and rural district councils to make regulations under the supervision of the Board of Agriculture. A district council may delegate its powers of management to a parish council, and a parish council may contribute to the expenses of management. Compensation, to be ascertained under the Lands Clauses Acts, is given for interests taken away or injuriously affected by any scheme under the Act.

The Commons Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 44), enables the persons entitled to turn out animals on a common to make regulations as to the turning out of entire animals, but the regulations must be confirmed by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries, and see the Horse Breeding Act, 1918, s. 10.

The Law of Property Act, 1925, ss. 193 and 194, contains provisions for lands which are Metropolitan Commons within the meaning of the Metropolitan Commons Acts, 1866 to 1898, or manorial waste, or commons which are wholly or partly situated within a borough or urban district and any lands which on the 1st January, 1926, were subject to rights of common and become assimilated to the above-mentioned commons by the lord of the manor or person entitled for the purposes of s. 193. That section sets out and regulates the right of public access for the purposes of air and exercise under statutory conditions. Section 194 restricts building and fencing on commons. Under par. 4 of the 12th Sched. of the L. P. Act, 1922, an enfranchisement of copyhold lands under that Act shall not deprive a tenant of a commonable right in respect of the enfranchised land and such right is to continue notwithstanding that the land has become freehold.

As to damage, see title MALICIOUS DAMAGE ACT.

Common Assurances, the legal evidences of the translation of property, whereby every person's estate is assured to him. These common assurances are of four kinds:—(1) By matter in pais, or deed, which is an assurance transacted between two or more private persons, in pais, in the country; that is (according to the old Common Law) upon the very spot to be transferred. (2) By matter of record, or an assurance transacted only in the sovereign's public courts of record, or under the authority of a public board or commission empowered by Act of Parliament to record its proceedings. (3) By special custom obtaining in some particular places and relating only to some particular species of property : which three are such as take effect during the life of the party conveying or assuring. (4) The fourth takes no effect till after his death, and that is by devise, contained in his last will and testament.—2 Bl. Com. 294.

Common Bench [fr. banc., Sax., bench], a name of the Court of Common Pleas. Thus the 'Common Bench Reports' are the reports of the cases decided in the Court of Common Pleas. See COMMON PLEAS.

Common Council, the councillors of the City of London. See COUNCIL.

Common Counts. The indebitatus (see that title) counts in a declaration for goods sold and delivered, or bargained and sold, for work done, for money lent, for money paid, for money received to the use of the plaintiff, for interest or for money due on an account stated, were so called.—Superseceded by the Judicature Acts. See STATEMENT OF CLAIM.

Common Employment. The general rule that a master is liable for damage caused by the negligence of his servant has the exception that where the person injured is the fellow-servant of and engaged in common employment with the person whose negligence causes the injury, the master is not liable in an action at common law. The principle upon which the exception rests is that 'a servant who engages for the performance of services for compensation does as an implied part of the contract take upon himself, as between himself and his master, the natural risks and perils incident to the performance of such services; the presumption of law being that the compensation was adjusted accordingly, or, in other words, that these risks are considered in the wages' (per Blackburn, J., Morgan v. Vale of Neath R. Co., (1864) 5 B. & S. at p. 578). For review of cases, see Bray, J., in Cribb v. Kynoch, Ltd., 1907, 2 K. B. 548. The doctrine applies in spite of difference in rank or grade between the two servants, e.g., a miner injured by the negligence of the general manager (Wilson v. Merry, (1868) L. R. 1 H. L. (Sc.) 326); or difference in the occupations of the servants, e.g., collier injured by negligence of mason and engineer (Coldrick v. Partridge, 1910, A. C. 77). 'One who volunteers to associate himself with the defendant's servant in the performance of his work, and that without the consent or even knowledge of his master, cannot stand in a better position than those with whom he associates himself in respect of their master's liability' (per Erle, C.J.,

Potter v. Faulkner, (1861) 1 B. & S. at p. 806). It seems that if the injured person be an infant of such tender years as to make it unreasonable to assume that he wittingly undertook the risk of negligence of his fellow-servant, the doctrine does not apply: a boy of 14 is not of such tender years (Bass v. Hendon U. D. C., (1912) 28 T. L. R. 317 (C. A.)). The master is of course liable to his servant for his own acts of negligence, and, further, the defence of common employment will not be available to him if the negligence alleged consists in a breach of a statutory duty (Groves v. Wimborne (Lord), 1898, 2 Q. B. 402; David v. Britannic Co., 1909, 2 K. B. 146); nor in respect of claims under the Workmen's Compensation Acts (q.v.).

The doctrine of Common Employment has been modified by the Employers Liability Act, 1880, which entitles a workman to compensation for injuries caused as follows as if 'the workman had not been a workman of, nor in the service of the employer, nor engaged in his work':—

(i.) By reason of a defect in the condition of the works or plant connected with or used in the business of the employer (Fanton v. Denville, 1932, 2 K. B. 309) (defect in machinery—negligence of fellow-servant—duty of employer); or (ii.) by reason of the negligence of any person in the service of the employer who has any superintendence entrusted to him whilst in the exercise of such superintendence; or (iii.) by reason of the negligence of any person in the service of the employer to whose orders or directions the workman was bound to conform where the injury resulted from the workman conforming to such orders or directions; (iv.) by reason of the act or omission of any person in the service of the employer done or made in obedience to rules of the employer or to rules made with authority on his behalf; or (v.) by reason of the negligence of any person in the service of the employer who has charge or control of any signal, points, or train on a railway.

The Act, however, limits (i.) and (iv.) above by providing that in the case of (i.) the employer shall not be liable unless the defect arose or was not discovered or remedied by the negligence of the employer or of his servant entrusted with the supervision of the works, plant, etc., and in the case of (iv.) that the injury must result from a defect or impropriety in the rules, and that rules made or accepted by a Government department are not to be deemed defective, and, further, that the workmen must have drawn the employer's attention to the defect or negligence, if he knew of its existence, unless he was aware that the employer already knew. The amount recoverable is limited to three years' earnings, and the time within which actions may be brought is limited to six months from the date of the accident, or in the case of death 12 months from the date of death. Notice of injury must be given within six weeks. The action can only be brought in a County Court. Consult the Act itself and Clerk and Lindsell on Torts; and see MASTER AND SERVANT and WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACTS.

As to scienter and common employment, see Knott v. L.C.C. (1933), 175 L. T. 282.

Common Fine, a small sum of money paid to the lords by the residents in certain leets.—Fleta, l. 7, c. xlviii.

Common Hall, a court in the city of London, at which all the citizens, or such as are free of the City, have a right to attend.

Common Informer, a person who prosecutes others for breaches of penal laws, or furnishes evidence on criminal trials for no other reason than to get the penalty or a share of it; for a recent instance of an action to recover penalties, see Forbes v. Samuel, 1913, 3 K. B. 706. Statutes occasionally provide that no proceedings shall be taken without the leave of the Attorney-General, see, e.g., the Larceny (Advertisements) Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 65), and the Public Health (Officers) Acts, 1884 and 1885. Sometimes, too, as by the Larceny (Advertisements) Act, 1870, the informers have lost the benefit of their penal action by a retrospective enactment that proceedings therein be stayed in payment of their costs out of pocket. See PENAL STATUTE.

Common Law (lex communis, Lat.). The phrase 'common law' is used in two very different senses. It is sometimes contrasted with equity; it then denotes the law which, prior to the Judicature Act, was administered in the three "superior" Courts of law at Westminster, as distinct from that administered by the Court of Chancery at Lincoln's Inn. At other times it is used in contradistinction to the statute law, and then denotes the unwritten law, whether legal or equitable in its origin, which does not derive its authority from any express declaration of the will of the Legislature. This unwritten law has the same force and effect as the statute law. It depends for its authority upon the recognition given by our Law Courts to principles, customs, and rules of conduct previously existing among the people. This recognition was formerly enshrined in the memory of legal practitioners and suitors in the Courts; it is now recorded in the voluminous series of our law reports which embody the decisions of our judges together with the reasons which they assigned for their decisions.—Odgers on the Common Law, p. 59.

The distinction between written and unwritten law is adopted from the Romans, who borrowed it from the Greeks (Inst. l. 1, t. 2, ss. 3, 9, 10). In this distinguishing our own laws into the scriptæ or statute, and non scriptæ or common, we use the latter in a peculiar and restrained sense; signifying by it nothing more than the original institution and authority of the law are not set down in writing, as is the case with Acts of Parliament; but that it receives its binding powers, as a law, from long and immemorial usage, and universal reception throughout the realm. The authenticity of these customs, rules, and maxims rests entirely upon reception and usage, as declared by our judges, who are the sworn depositaries and interpreters of our law. This Common Law is properly distinguished into three kinds: (1) General customs, or those applicable to and governing the whole kingdom, comprehending the law of nations and the law merchant. (2) Particular customs, i.e., affecting the inhabitants of particular districts. (3) The Civil and Canon Laws, properly denominated the ecclesiastical, military, maritime, and academical laws.—See Hale's Hist. of the Com. Law, c. iii.; Mackintosh's England, 274; 1 Kent's Com. 447, 468.

By the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 24, replaced by the Judicature Act, 1925, s. 36, all branches of the Supreme Court of Judicature are to administer law and equity concurrently; and by s. 25, and Jud. Act, 1875, s. 10, see now Judicature Act, 1925, s. 36, the rules of law on certain points are altered.

Common Lodging-House. See LODGING HOUSES, COMMON.

Common Pleas, the Court of, so called because its original jurisdiction was to determine controversies between subject and subject, one of the three Superior Courts of Common Law at Westminster, presided over by a lord chief justice and five (formerly four) puisne judges. It was detached from the King's Court (Aula Regis) as early as the reign of Richard I., and the 14th clause of Magna Charta enacted that it should not follow the King's Court, but be held in some certain place. Its jurisdiction was altogether confined to civil matters, having no cognizance in criminal cases, and was concurrent with that of the King's Bench and Exchequer in personal actions and ejectment. It had a peculiar or exclusive jurisdiction in the following cases :—

(I.) Formal or plenary.

(1) Real actions, under the C. L. P. Act, 1860, s. 26.

(2) Under the Parliamentary Elections Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 125), over petitions complaining of an undue return or undue election of a member of parliament.

(II.) Summary.

Under the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 31).

(III.) Auxiliary.

(1) Registration of judgments, annuities, etc. (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110; 2 & 3 Vict. c. 11; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 82; 18 Vict. c. 15).

(2) Under the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74), respecting the fees connected with conveyances executed by virtue of the Act, and also with the examination of married women concerning their assurances.

(IV.) Appellate.

Appeals from the Revising Barristers' Courts, under the Parliamentary Registration Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 18).

By Jud. Act, 1873, s. 34, replaced by Judicature Act, 1925, s. 18, the exclusive jurisdiction of this court was retained for the 'Common Pleas Division' which represented it; but by Order in Council of December 16, 1880, under s. 31 of that Act, that division was merged in the Queen's (now King's) Bench Division.

Common Seal, a seal used by a corporation as the symbol of their incorporation, and see CORPORATION.

Common Serjeant, a judicial officer of the Corporation of the City of London, appointed by the Crown (Loc. Gov. Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 42 (14).), and one of the judges of the Central Criminal Court (q.v.); an assistant to the Recorder. See Pulling on the Laws and Customs of London.

Common Vouchee. Obsolete. See RECOVERY.

Commonable Beasts, such as are necessary for the ploughing or manuring of land, as horses, oxen, cows, and sheep.

Commonalty [populus, plebs, communitas, Lat.], the people of England.—2 Inst. 539.

Commonance. the commoners, or tenants and inhabitants, who have the right of common or commoning in open field.

Commons, House of. See HOUSE OF COMMONS; PARLIAMENT.

Commonwealth, 1. The social state of a country, without regarding its form of government; also a republic, or that form of government in which the administration of public affairs is open to all, with few, if any, exceptions. 2. The period of the administration of the Parliamentary Army, and the Protector Cromwell. The journals of this parliament are found along with the rest. See DE JURE and UPPER BENCH.

Commorancy, or Commorant, an abiding, dwelling, continuing, or lying in a certain place.

Commorientes, persons who die by the same accident or upon the same occasion. By English law, there was no presumption of survivorship in such a case, whereas by the Code Napoleon, and the Civil Law generally, there is a presumption that the physically stronger survive the physically weaker. See Wing v. Angrave, (1860) 8 H. L. C. 183, in which a husband, a strong man who could swim well, was swept off the deck of a ship by the same wave which swept off his delicate wife who could not swim.—Best on Evidence, s. 410: but now by s. 184 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, in all cases where after 1925 two or more persons have died in circumstances rendering it uncertain which of them survived the other or others, such deaths shall (subject to any order of the Court) for all purposes affecting the title to property be presumed to have occurred in the order of seniority and accordingly the younger shall be deemed to have survived the elder.

Commorth, or Comorth [fr. cymmorth, Brit.; subsidium, Lat.], a contribution which was gathered at marriages, and when young priests said or sung the first masses, by 4 Hen. 4, c. 27, and prohibited in Wales and the Marches, 26 Hen. 8, c. 6.—Jacob.

Commote, half a cantred or hundred in Wales, containing fifty villages.—Stat. Wallial, 12 Edw. 1. Also a great seigniorship or lordship, and may include one or divers manors.—Co. Litt. 5.

Commune Concilium Regni Angliæ, the common council of the king and people assembled in parliament.

Communi custodia, an obsolete writ which anciently lay for the lord, whose tenant, holding by knight's service, died, and left his eldest son under age, against a stranger that entered the land, and obtained the ward of the body.—Reg. Brev. 161.

Communis placita non tenenda in Scaccario, an ancient writ directed to the Treasurer and barons of the Exchequer, forbidding them to hold pleas between common persons (i.e., not debtors to the king, who alone originally sued and were sued there) in that court, where neither of the parties belongs to the same.—Reg. Brev. 187.

Communion, Holy. As to the doctrine and practice of the Church of England in reference to the celebration of the Holy Communion, see Sheppard v. Bennett, (1870) L. R. 3 Ad. & Ec. 167; L. R. 4 P. C. 350, 371; Read v. Bishop of Lincoln, 1891, P. 9; 1892, A. C. 644, and the authorities there referred to. As to the right of the clergyman to repel from Holy Communion, see Rex v. Dibdin, 1910, P. 57; 1912, A. C. 533.

Communis error facit jus.—4 Inst. 240. (Common error makes law.) 'A maxim to be applied with very great caution.' See Broom's Legal Max., where common recoveries (see RECOVERY) are given as an example of its application, as also is the practice of the courts of adhering to erroneous, because long-established, views of the law. See PRECEDENTS.

Commutation, conversion; the change of a penalty or punishment from a greater to a less; or giving one thing in satisfaction of another—as commuting tithes into a rent-charge, copyhold services into money payments, etc., annual payments into one lump payment, as under the Pensions Commutation Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 36).

Commutative Contract, one in which each of the contracting parties gives and receives an equivalent.

Companage, all kinds of food, except bread and drink.—Spelm.

Company [fr. compagnia, Ital., which word is still printed on Bank of England notes as 'comp<sup>y</sup>'], a body of persons associated for purposes of business, sometimes, but not now so frequently as some years ago, styled a Joint Stock Company.

A company has its origin either (1) in a charter, as the Bank of England and many insurance companies; or (2) in a special Act of Parliament, with which, as authorizing an undertaking of a public nature such as a railway, the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 16), is necessarily incorporated; or (3) in registration under the Companies Acts, 1862 and subsequent Acts, now consolidated into the Companies Act, 1925 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 23).

By s. 13 of the Act of 1925 (1) on the registration of the memorandum of a company the registrar shall certify under his hand that the company is incorporated and, in the case of a limited company, that the company is limited. (2) From the date of incorporation mentioned in the certificate of incorporation, the subscribers of the memorandum, together with such other persons as may from time to time become members of the company, shall be a body corporate by the name contained in the memorandum, capable forthwith of exercising all the functions of an incorporated company, and having perpetual succession and a common seal, but with such liability of the members to contribute to the assets of the company in the event of its being wound up as is mentioned in the Act.

Companies having a share capital are not entitled to commence business before the registrar has delivered a certificate that the company is so entitled. This does not apply to private companies or to any company registered before 1901 or any company registered before 1st July, 1908, which has not issued a prospectus for public subscription of shares, see s. 94.

The main distinction between ordinary partnerships for business purposes and company partnerships is that a duly constituted company is a 'person' in law (see CORPORATION), while a mere partnership is not a legal entity, although the partners may sue and be sued in the firm's name, and the consequence is that in ordinary partnerships the whole property of each partner is liable for the debts of the partnership, whereas in limited company partnerships the liability of the partners—or shareholders, as they are called—is limited either by the charter, Act of Parliament, or memorandum of association. For though companies may be and have been registered with unlimited liability since that principle was first, in 1855, applied to ordinary companies, so few unlimited companies now remain, since the conversion of unlimited into limited companies was allowed in 1879, and see now s. 16 of the Companies Act, 1929, that unlimited companies may be practically disregarded. But if a limited company carries on business for more than six months after with less than seven members, each member having knowledge of the reduction below the minimum becomes severally liable for the whole of the debts contracted during the period of reduction. In the case of private companies the minimum number is two (Companies Act, 1929, s. 28).

Before the 1929 Act, the Act of 1862 had been frequently amended, chiefly as the result of close and careful expert examination as to the best means of remedying certain defects in the working of the Acts which enabled persons to make use of them for dishonest purposes. The Act of 1929, by ss. 357 and 358, requires registration of every company, association or partnership of more than ten persons for banking and of more than twenty persons for carrying on any other business having for its object the acquisition of gain, unless it be formed under special Act of Parliament, or letters-patent, or be a mining company subject to the jurisdiction of the Stannaries (see STANNARY).

The first section provides for incorporation and is as follows:—

2. (1) Any seven or more persons or where the company to be formed will be a private company, any two or more persons associated for any lawful purpose may, by subscribing their names to a memorandum of association and otherwise complying with the requirements of this Act in respect of registration, form an incorporated company, with or without liability.

(2) Such a company may be either—

(i) A company having the liability of its members limited by the memorandum to the amount, if any, unpaid on the shares respectively held by them (in this Act termed a 'company limited by shares'); or

(ii) A company having the liability of its members limited by the memorandum to such amount as the members may respectively thereby undertake to contribute to the assets of the company in the event of its being wound up (in this Act termed a 'company limited by guarantee'); or

(iii) A company not having any limit on the liability of its members (in this Act termed an 'unlimited company').

Companies incorporated outside Great Britain which carry on business within Great Britain are subject to Part XI. (ss. 343-353) of the Companies Act, 1929. This part of the Act applies to all such companies which have established or establish a place of business in Great Britain in extension of s. 74 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, which only applied to companies establishing a place of business here after 1st April, 1909. The meaning of establishing a place of business was discussed in Lord Advocate v. Huron & Erie Loan Co., 1911, S.C. 612, see also s. 90 as to charges by such companies or acquired by them.

Companies limited by shares or by guarantee must add the word 'limited' after their name whenever used, but in some cases the licence of the Board of Trade to dispense with limited may be obtained, see Companies Act, 1929, s. 18. All companies subject to the Act must have a registered office (s. 92, ibid.). As to name, see ss. 17 to 19.

As to registration under the Companies Act, 1929, of companies not formed under that Act, see ss. 321-336 ibid.

Consult Palmer; See ASSOCIATION; DIRECTORS; FOREIGN COMPANY; PRIVATE COMPANY; SUBSIDIARY COMPANY; STANNARY.

Comparative Legislation, Society of. A body formed for the purpose of studying and circulating information respecting the laws and legislation of various countries. The Society issues journals to its subscribers two or three times a year, one of them each year containing an account of the legislation of the whole British Empire for a previous year.

Comparison of Handwriting. See Criminal Procedure Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 18) (applicable to civil as well as to criminal cases), and HANDWRITING.

Comparuit ad diem (he appeared at the day).

Compassing [fr. compasser, Fr., to encircle, con, with, and passus, a step, Lat.], imagining or contriving. To compass or imagine the death of the king, of his queen, or of their eldest son and heir is treason by 25 Edw. 3, c. 2. 'Compassing' or 'imagining' are here synonymous terms, the word 'compass' signifying the purpose or design of the mind or will, and not, as in common speech, the carrying such design to effect; but this compassing or imagining, being an act of the mind, cannot fall under any judicial cognizance unless it be demonstrated by some open, or overt, act.—See 4 Bl. Com. 78.

Compaternity, spiritual affinity.

Compellativus, an adversary or accuser.—Leg. Athel.

Compendia sunt dispendia. (Abbreviations are detriments.) 'It is ever good to rely upon the book at large, for many times compendia sunt dispendia, and melius est petere fontes quam sectari rivulos.'—Co. Litt. 305 b. This passage from Coke is taken as the motto to Smith's Leading Cases.

Compensatio Criminum (compensation of offences), a term used by the canonists. Where husband and wife had both been guilty of adultery, there was, according to the doctrine of the Canon Law, a compensatio criminum, i.e., the guilt of the one was neutralized by that of the other, and both were restored to the position of innocent persons. See DIVORCE.

Compensation, making things equivalent, satisfying or making amends, a reward for the apprehension of criminals; also that equivalent in money which is paid to the owners and occupiers of lands taken or injuriously affected for public purposes and under Act of Parliament, e.g., the Lands (Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), but where the land is acquired compulsorily by a Government Department or any local or Public Authority the compensation is regulated by the Acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation) Act, 1919 (9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 57) and Rules of 1919, and see Housing Act, 1936, ss. 40 and 42 and Schedules, and Lloyd or Cripps on Compensation, 7th ed. Also (in Scots Law) a sort of right by set-off or stoppage, whereby a person who has been sued for a debt demands that the debt may be compensated with what is owing to him by the creditor.

See INTOXICATING LIQUORS; WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION; VALUATION; AGRICULTURAL HOLDING; and LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Comptorium, a judicial inquest in the Civil Law, made by delegates or commissioners to find out and relate the truth of a cause.—Paroch. Antig. 575.

Complainant, one who urges a suit or commences a prosecution against another.

Complaint. This term is most generally used with reference to Courts of Summary Jurisdiction where proceedings are commenced 'on information,' but is also sometimes used to describe a claim in an action of a civil or quasi-civil character. See STATEMENT OF CLAIM. As to when a 'complaint' made to a third person and not in the presence of the accused is admissible as evidence, see R. v. Osborne, 1905, 1 K. B. 551, and as to statements made in the presence of the accused, see R. v. Norton, 1910, 2 K. B. 496.

Complice, one who is united with others in an ill-design; an associate; a confederate; an accomplice.

Compos mentis (of sound mind).

Composition. 1. An amicable arrangement of a law-suit. See COMPROMISE.

2. An agreement between a parson, patron, or ordinary, and the owner of lands, for commutation of tithes, e.g., that such lands shall for the future be discharged from payment of tithes, by reason of some land or other real recompense given to the parson in lieu and satisfaction thereof. Tithe Act, 1832, s. 2, and see TITHES.

3. Also an agreement made between an insolvent debtor and his creditors, by which the latter accept a part of their debts in satisfaction of the whole. See ARRANGEMENTS.

Compositio mensurarum, the title of an ancient ordinance for measures, not printed.

—Jac. Law Dict.

Compost, several sorts of soil or earth and other matters mixed, in order to make a fine kind of mould for fertilizing lands.

Compound Householder. The payment of rates was formerly one of the ingredients in the qualification for the parliamentary franchise; but modern statutes have enabled the owners of small houses to pay the rates for the occupiers and receive a composition for so doing. To prevent the occupiers being disfranchised by this process, it was enacted that they might claim to be rated themselves, and such householders so claiming became commonly known as 'compound householders,' as appears from the title to the Act, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 14, now repealed, see Representation of People Act, 1918, Schedule 8.

Compound Interest, interest upon interest, i.e., when the interest of a sum of money is added to the principal, and then bears interest, which thus becomes a sort of secondary principal. It is ordinarily not recoverable at law; see Ferguson v. Fyffe, (1840) 8 Cl. & F. 121, and Wrigley v. Gill, 1906, 1 Ch. 165. See INTEREST.

Compound Settlement. Two or more dispositions including Acts of Parliament affecting the same piece of land by way of settlement either comprehensively or derivatively, that is, in particular without affecting the comprehensive settlement. By the proviso to s. 1 of the Settled Land Act, 1925, land which is the subject of a compound settlement is governed for the purposes of the Act by its provisions relating to a settlement unless the context otherwise requires.

Compounding, arranging, coming to terms; compounding a felony is where the party robbed not only knows the felon, but also takes his goods again, or other amends, upon an agreement not to prosecute; this offence was denominated theft by agreement. It is a misdemeanour and is punishable by fine and imprisonment. See Reg. v. Burgess, (1885) 16 Q. B. D. 141.

It is no offence to compound a misdemeanour unless the offence is virtually an offence against the public, for the party injured may maintain an action to recover compensation in damages. See Keir v. Leeman, (1844) 6 Q. B. 308; (1846) 9 Q. B.

371; Odgers on the Common Law. And compounding offences only cognizable before magistrates on summary jurisdiction is not within 18 Eliz. c. 5.

Corruptly to take reward for helping a person to recover stolen goods is felony (Larceny Act, 1916, s. 34); and to advertise a reward for the return of things stolen by an advertisement representing that no questions will be asked, etc., incurs a penalty of 50*l.* (Larceny Act, 1861, s. 102).

Where it is an implied term of an agreement that there shall be no prosecution of an offender, the agreement is void as being founded on an illegal consideration; see Jones v. Merionethshire Building Society, 1892, 1 Ch. 173.

Penal actions by common informers may be compounded by leave of the court; this leave of the Court, however, is not necessary in actions by the party grieved.

Comprint, a surreptitious printing of another bookseller's copy of a work, to make gain thereby, which was contrary to common law, and is illegal. See COPYRIGHT.

Compromise, an adjustment of claims in dispute by mutual concession; also a mutual promise of two or more parties at difference to refer the ending of their controversy to arbitrators. As to the authority of counsel to compromise an action, see Neale v. Gordon-Lennox, 1902, A. C. 465; and of solicitor, see Fray v. Voules, (1859) 1 E. & E. 839; and Macaulay v. Polley, 1897, 2 Q. B. 122.

Compromissum, a submission to arbitration.—Civ. Law.

Comptroller, one who observes and examines the accounts of collectors of public money; an officer of the royal household; also the Comptroller-general of patents, designs, and trade-marks, who has the immediate control of the Patent Office under the superintendence and direction of the Board of Trade. See the Patents and Designs Acts, 1907 to 1932. The 1907 Act sets out (ss. 73–76) the powers and duties of the Comptroller.

Comptroller in Bankruptcy, an officer appointed under the repealed Bankruptcy Act, 1869, ss. 55–58, for the purpose of receiving and examining the accounts of trustees.

Comptrollers of the Hanaper, officers of the Court of Chancery; their offices were abolished by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 103.

Compulsory Pilot. See PILOT.

Compurgator, one who by oath justifies another's innocence. The compurgatores mentioned in Anglo-Saxon records have been supposed to be the origin of trial by jury.—Comyns's Dig.; Du Cange.

Compute, a writ to compel a bailiff, receiver, or accountant, to yield up his accounts, founded on the Statute of Westminster II., c. 12.—Reg. Brev. 135.

Conacre (Corn-acre), a sub-letting by an Irish tenant, for a season, of a part of his holding ready ploughed and prepared for a crop.—Oxf. Dict.

Concealers, such as were used to find out concealed lands, i.e., such lands as are privately kept from the king by common persons, having nothing to show for their title or estate therein.—39 Eliz. c. 23.

Concealment, to the injury or prejudice of another. This must amount, in order to be deemed a fraud or to be a ground for rescission of the contract, to the suppression or non-disclosure of facts, which one, under the circumstances, is bound, both legally and equitably, to disclose to another, the latter having an undoubted right to be put in possession of such facts, as in the case of contracts of insurance. See Ionides v. Pender, (1874) L. R. 9 Q. B. 531, as to marine insurance; and London Assurance Co. v. Mansel, (1879) 11 Ch. D. 363, as to life insurance, and as to contracts for the sale of land, see Flight v. Booth, 1 Bing. N. C. at p. 377; Terry v. White, 32 C. D. at p. 29; and PROSPECTUS.

Concealment (Criminal). (1) Of birth, see BIRTH. (2) Of documents of title to land, or of testamentary instruments, felony by Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), ss. 28, 29, and see L. P. Act, 1925, s. 183, as to fraudulent concealment of documents, and DIRECTORS and PROSPECTUS.

Concessit (I have granted), a word of frequent use in conveyances. By s. 59 (2) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, replacing the Real Property Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106), s. 4, the word 'grant' in a deed executed after 1st October, 1845, shall not imply any covenant in law, save as otherwise provided by statute.

Concessimus (we have granted).

Concessit solvere (he agreed to pay), an action of debt upon a simple contract. It lies by custom in the Mayor's Court, London, and Bristol Tolzey Court. The defence to a count sur concessit solvere was 'never indebted.' See Glyn and Jackson, Mayor's Court Practice.

Concessor, a grantor.

Conciliation, the settling of disputes without litigation, as (1) disputes between railway companies and freighters of goods, by the Minister of Labour under s. 31, commonly called the 'conciliation clause,' of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 25); or (2) disputes between employers and workmen by a conciliator appointed by the Minister of Labour under the Conciliation Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 30), as amended by the New Ministers and Secretaries Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 68), s. 2, and S. R. & O. 1917, No. (46), p. 419. The Minister is empowered to register 'conciliation boards' for a similar purpose. The Conciliation Act repealed the Masters and Workmen (Arbitration) Act, 1824, the Councils of Conciliation Act, 1867, and the Arbitration (Masters and Workmen) Act, 1872, the Act of 1824 not having been enforced for half a century and the Acts of 1867 and 1872 not having been enforced at all. Consult Howell's Handy Book of the Labour Laws; Cohen and Howell's Trade Union Law.

Concillium, a court; a time and place of meeting. Prior to the Reg. Gen. of T. T. 1853 (r. 15), a motion of rule for a concilium was required before the argument of a demurrer.

Conclonatores, common council men, free-men.

Concluded, prevented from.

Conclusion, a binding act; also the end of a pleading or conveyance. In Scottish practice, that part of a summons which defines what the Court is asked to order or declare.

Concord, an agreement between parties, who intend to levy a fine of lands one to the other, how and in what manner the lands shall pass; it was the foundation and sustenance of the fine taken and acknowledged by the party before one of the judges of the Court of Common Pleas, or before commissioners in the country; also an agreement made between two persons, one of whom has a right of action against the other. It is of two kinds, concord executory and concord executed.—Plowd. 5, 6, 8.

Concordat, a treaty or public act of agreement between the Pope and any prince relative to some collation of benefices.

Concubaria, a fold, pen, or place where cattle lie.

Concubean, lying together.

Concubinage, an exception against a woman suing for dower, on the ground that she was a concubine and not the wife.—Britt. c. 107.

Concurrent, acting in conjunction; agreeing in the same act; contributing to the same event; contemporaneous. As to concurrent writs of summons, which are used for service abroad, etc., and of which a plaintiff can have on payment as many as he pleases, see R. S. C., 1883, Ord. VI. Concurrent sentences, if newly passed, can always be given, but a sentence cannot be given to a prisoner convicted whilst out on ticket of leave to run concurrently with his unexpired sentence: per Hawkins, J., in R. v. King, 1897, 1 Q. B. at p. 218.

Concurrent jurisdictions, the jurisdiction of several different tribunals, both authorized to deal with the same subject-matter at the choice of the suitor. In equity, the jurisdiction was concurrent where no complete relief was obtainable at law. It was exercised in order to avoid circuity of action or multiplicity of suits. See UNSOUND MIND.

Condescendence, a part of the proceedings in a cause setting forth the case of the pursuer or plaintiff.—Scots Law.

Condictio is an actio stricti juris attributed to a party of a negotium stricti juris, and derived from the Civil Law. Appellantur in personam actiones quibus dare fieri oportere intendimus, condictiones. The condictio was certa or incerta according as a definite or an indefinite thing was demanded. The judge had merely to decide the question submitted to him, without taking into account consideration of equity.—Sand. Just. See ACTIO BONÆ FIDELI.

Condictio indebiti, an action for the recovery of a sum of money or other thing paid by mistake.—Civil Law.

Condition, a repetition.

Condition. An event upon which a right under contract or to property may arise, become altered, or cease. Condition has been used in connection with personal obligations to distinguish one kind of obligation from another in the same transaction and to limit property. In their primary meaning, conditions precedent are events, but for the happening of which, rights will not arise.

A condition subsequent puts an end to a state of things which, but for its happening, would have continued. Dependent or collateral conditions depend upon their mutual fulfilment as in a contract for sale of land where, unless otherwise agreed, the payment of the purchase money is conditional upon the conveyance and vice versâ.

Conditions may be imposed by the parties, either expressly or by necessary implication arising out of the construction of the document or agreement, or they may be implied by law according to the nature of the transaction.

A peculiarity of conditions precedent is that an illegal or impossible condition will, as a rule and excepting bequests of personality (Williams on Executors), avoid the obligation which has been entered into, or the estate which has been granted subject to the conditions, but if the condition precedent has been made impossible by the person who imposed it, the condition will generally be disregarded. While a condition subsequent, if illegal or impossible, has, in general, no effect on the existing obligation or estate, see Co. Litt. 206 a, i, or 218 a., also Re Richardson, 1904, 2 Ch. 77. Conditions subsequent are almost universally found in connection with leasehold estates or the grant of a rentcharge, such as a condition for non-payment of rent or breach of covenants. A lease determinable upon a condition of this kind will, however, never be determined by the mere happening of the condition if the Court can gather from the document that the parties intended the lease to be voidable only upon entry by the lessor, see LEASES and RENTCHARGES.

Condition inherent, such as descends to the heir with the land granted, etc.

Conditions are, likewise, affirmative, which consist of doing an act; negative, which consist of not doing an act; restrictive, for not doing a thing; compulsory, as that the lessee shall pay rent, etc.; single, to do one thing only; copulative, to do divers things; and disjunctive, where one thing of several is required to be done. See Jac. Law Dict.; Shep. Touch. 117; 2 Com. Dig. And see CONDITIONS OF SALE.

Conditio beneficiæ, quæ statum destruit, benigne secundum verborum intentionem est interpretanda; odiosa autem quæ statum destruit, striete secundum verborum proprietatem accipienda. 8 Rep. 90. (A beneficial condition, which creates an estate, ought to be construed favourably according to the intention of the words; but a condition which destroys an estate is odious, and ought to be construed strictly according to the letter of the words.)

Conditio dicitur cum quid in casum incertum qui potest tendere ad esse aut non esse confertur. Co. Litt. 201.—(It is called a condition when something is given on an uncertain event which may or may not come into existence.)

Conditions and Warranties. See CONTRACT.
Conditio si testator sine liberis decesserit.

When a general settlement makes no provision for children born to the testator after its date, there is a presumption in the Law of Scotland that it is meant to be subject to the condition that no such children will be born. If that condition is not fulfilled, the settlement is presumed in the absence of rebutting evidence to be revoked.

Conditional Fee. This species of formerly inheritable freehold (now, equitable interest, except under Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 8) is marked, as to its duration or time of continuance, by an event beyond which it is not to endure. The event is the qualification which gives a name to this estate, and ascertains its determination. A fee qualified is frequently called a fee base, i.e., impure, defective, and circumscribed. There is hardly any event, provided it be lawful, and do not violate the rule against perpetuity, which may not be made the cause of the determination of this fee.

The following events are specimens of qualifications, which may be expressly annexed to this estate.

A limitation to A. and his heirs;

- (1) Peers of the realm;
- (2) Lords of the manor of Blackacre;
- (3) Tenants of the manor of Dale;
- (4) During the time whilst a particular tree shall stand;
- (5) Till the marriage of a certain person takes place;
- (6) Till certain debts be paid;
- (7) Till default be made in payment of a given debt, at a certain time;
- (8) Until a minor shall attain his majority.

When these events terminate, or the acts are done or omitted to be done, according to the meaning of the given restrictions, the fee qualified will cease; but it may possibly, as is obvious, continue for ever, in those instances especially where the qualification is not certain to take place. The estates will then continue precisely in the same manner, as if no collateral event, giving to the estate a determinate character, had been annexed to it. A base-fee may arise in the absence of any express qualification when it is made determinable by construction of law, on a certain event, such as an estate restrained to some particular heirs, exclusive of others, as to the heirs of a man's body, by which only his lineal descendants were admitted, in exclusion of collateral; see BASE FEE. A qualified fee confers a limited power of alienation, entitling the owner to give an interest of the same extent and continuance only to another person which he has in himself. So that the estate will, notwithstanding the transfer, be determinable, and, into whose hands soever it may come, will cease on the happening of the events upon which such qualified fee depends.

Conditional Legacy, a bequest whose existence depends upon the happening or not happening of some uncertain event, by which it is either to take effect or to be defeated.

Conditional Limitation partakes of the nature both of a condition and a remainder. At the Common Law whenever either the whole fee or a particular estate, as an estate for life or in tail, was first limited, no condition or other quality could be annexed to this prior estate, which would have the double effect of defeating the estate, and passing the lands to a stranger, for as a remainder it was void, being an abridgment or defeasance of the estate first granted, and as a condition it was void, as no one but the donor or his heirs could take advantage of a condition broken; and the entry of the donor or his heirs unavoidably defeated the livery upon which the remainder depended. On these principles it was impossible by the old law to limit by deed, if not by will, an estate to a stranger upon any event which might abridge or determine an estate previously limited. But the expediency of such limitations, assisted by the revolution effected by the Statute of Uses, at length established them, in spite of the maxim of law that a stranger cannot take advantage of a condition. These limitations are now become frequent, and their mixed nature has given them the name of conditional limitations; they so far partake of the nature of conditions, as they abridge or defeat the estates previously limited, and they are so far limitations, as upon the contingency taking effect the estate passes to a stranger.—Harg. note 1 to Co. Litt. 203 b. These limitations can, with some exceptions, only take effect now as equitable interests, see L. P. Act, 1925, s. 1.

Conditions of Sale. The terms set forth in writing upon which an estate or interest is to be sold by auction, tender, or private treaty. Together with the particulars (q.v.) the conditions constitute the offer for sale. Conditions of sale will be construed so as to collect the meaning of the parties without encumbering them with the technical meaning of words; for, as Lord Hardwicke declared, 'there is no magic in words.' But the conditions should be accurate, for they cannot be contradicted by parol at the sale; 'the babble of the auction room,' as Lord Eldon termed it, being inadmissible as evidence, and this although the purchaser by the written agreement bind himself to abide by the conditions and declarations made at the sale. If the conditions require alteration, they should be so altered in writing before the sale. See AUCTION; CONTRACT OF SALE. In sales of land, conditions of sale usually refer to the following matters:—Bidding at the auction, payment of deposit, date of completion, possession, and apportionment of outgoings, rights to interest or rents and profits, upon delay or completion after the fixed day, delivery of the abstract, commencement of title, time for making the purchaser's objections or requisitions to the title shown, and replies thereto. Rights of vendor to rescind, preparation of the conveyance, completion and powers of the vendor upon default by the purchaser, and any special conditions which may be necessary or advisable owing to the state of the property or the title and any defects or difficulties in proving it, incumbrances affecting the property, or otherwise. The following conditions are wholly void in a sale to a purchaser for money or money's worth, under s. 42 of the L. P. Act, 1925:—(a) that the purchaser of a legal estate shall accept a title with the concurrence of any person entitled to an equitable estate if a title can be made free from the equity without consent under a trust for sale, or the L. P. Act or the Settled L. Act, 1925, or any other statute; (b) that the purchaser shall pay or contribute towards the cost of certain formalities required to give effect to the vendor's title; and (c) in regard to contracts for sale or exchange made after 1925, that the purchaser shall bear the cost of tracing or getting in the legal estate or that he shall not object to its remaining outstanding. See generally, ss. 40–50 of the L. P. Act, 1925; K. & E. or Prid. Conv. Pr.; Webster on Conditions of Sale. Under s. 46 of the L. P. Act, 1925, by S. R. & O., 1925, No. 779/L14. Statutory conditions are made to apply to contracts of sale of land by correspondence. These may be varied by agreement or applied to any contract for sale of land; see also Law Society's Conditions of Sale.

Condonation, a pardoning or remission. In cases of adultery it is forgiveness, legally releasing the injury, by virtue of Judicature Act, 1925, s. 178, replacing the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, s. 30: Keats v. Keats, (1859) 28 L. J. P. & M. 57. When cruelty by a husband is condoned, it is revived by subsequent adultery on his part (Norman v. Norman, 1908, P. 6).

Conduct-money, money paid to a witness for his travelling expenses. Testes qui postulat debet dare eis sumptus competentes. (He who requires witnesses must find their expenses to a sufficient extent).—Reg. Jur. Civ. A witness whose expenses are not paid may refuse to give evidence, it being provided by the still unrepealed 5 Eliz. c. 9, that a witness 'having tendered to him, according to his countenance or calling, such reasonable sums of money' for his expenses, 'as having regard to the distance of the places is necessary,' is to forfeit 10*l.*, and yield further recompense to the party grieved, etc.; and see Hallett v. Mears, (1810) 13 East, 15; 12 R. R. 296, and note to the effect that unless the whole necessary expenses of the journey to and from the place of trial, and of the witness's necessary stay there, be tendered with the subpoena, the Court will not grant a subpoena for the non-attendance of the witness at the place of trial.

Conductio, a hiring.

Coney [fr. cuniculus, Lat.], a rabbit. See s. 31 of the Game Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 32), as to arrest of trespasser in pursuit of 'game or woodcocks, snipes, quails, land-rails, or coney,' if he refuse to quit or give his name and address; and see GAME; GROUND GAME ACT; and RABBIT.

Confederacy, a combination of two or more persons to do some damage or injury to another, or to commit some unlawful act. See TRADE DISPUTE.

Confederation, a league or compact for mutual support, particularly of princes, nations, or states.

Conference, a meeting between a counsel and solicitor to advise on the cause of their client.

Confessing Error, the affirmative plea to an assignment of error.

Confession and Avoidance, Plea of, a plea in bar, admitting the facts alleged in the declaration to be true, but showing some new facts, tending to obviate their legal effect. All matters in confession and avoidance had before the Judicature Acts to be specially pleaded (Reg. Gen. H. T. 1853, r. 8), and must be so still under the present system of pleading. See STATEMENT OF DEFENCE; CIRCUTY OF ACTION.

Confession by Culpit, the acknowledgment by a criminal of the offence charged against him when charged by any person or called upon to plead to the indictment. A confession before trial, if given without any inducement of favour or threat of punishment, is evidence against the person charged even though he may be in custody (R. v. Best, 1909, 1 K. B. 692), and by the Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (c. 86), s. 12, replacing Indictable Offences Act, 1848, s. 18, and the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, s. 13 (2), justices of the peace are directed to give an accused person 'clearly to understand that he has nothing to hope from any promise of favour, and nothing to fear from any threat which may have been held out to him' to make any confession of guilt. See ACCUSEE.

Confession of Defence. Where defendant alleges a ground of defence arising since the commencement of the action, the plaintiff may deliver confession of such defence and sign judgment for his costs up to the time of such pleading, unless it be otherwise ordered. (R. S. C. 1883, Order XXIV., r. 3.)

Confession, Judgment by. See COGNOVIT.

Confession of Plea. A plea containing a defence arising after the commencement of an action, or after the last pleading, might be confessed by the plaintiff.—Reg. Gen. H. T. 1853, rr. 22, 23. See previous title.

Confession to a Priest. The English law does not recognize the duty of a priest (whether Roman Catholic or Anglican) to keep secrets revealed to him in his religious character (Normanshaw v. Normanshaw, (1893) 69 L. T. 468; Wheeler v. Le Marchant, (1881) 17 Ch. D. 681); but some judges have disapproved of extorting such secrets (see, e.g., per Best, C.J., in Broad v. Pitt, (1828) 3 C. & P. 518). The practice of the law on this subject is very uncertain, and in Phillimore's Ecclesiastical Law as edited by Phillimore, L.J., when at the bar, the view is taken that it is not improbable that an English Court would decide the question in favour of the inviolability of confession and expand the law into harmony with that of other Christian states. See Best, Ev.; Taylor, Ev. The 113th Canon provides that 'if any man confess his secret and hidden sins to the minister for the unburdening of his conscience, and to receive spiritual consolation and ease of mind from him,' he 'do not reveal to any person whomsoever any crime so committed to his trust and secrecy (except they be such as by the laws of this realm his own life may be called into question for concealing the same) under pain of irregularity.'

Confesso, Bill taken pro, an order which the Court of Chancery made, when the defendant did not file an answer, that the plaintiff might take such a decree as the case made by his bill warranted. See now DEFAULT; PLEADING.

Confidence Trick. Where A. persuaded B. by a trick to deposit money or property with A. or a third party in order to show that B. trusts A. or the third party. Usually a preliminary to some joint but fictitious undertaking promising enormous benefits to B. Where the possession of money or goods is obtained under a contract induced by fraud, the person so fraudulently obtaining possession may be convicted of larceny. In order to reduce the taking under such circumstances from larceny to fraud the transaction must be incomplete. The term 'confidence trick' is also familiarly applied to other cases, of which there are many examples. See R. v. Russell, 1892, 2 Q. B. 312, in which the prisoner purported to sell a horse for 23*l.*, and required the buyer to pay 8*l.* forthwith and the balance on delivery of the horse, but never in fact delivered the horse or intended to do so; R. v. Buckmaster, (1887) 20 Q. B. D. 182, 'welching' on a racecourse.

Confidential Communication. See PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATION.

Confinement Solitary. See SOLITARY CONFINEMENT.

Confirmatio Chartarum, the 25 Edw. 1, A.D. 1297. This statute, being in the form of a charter, was sealed with the king's Great Seal, at Ghent, in Flanders, on November 5th, as appears by a memorandum upon the roll. It re-enacts Magna Charta, with the addition of giving that security to personal property which Magna Charta gave to personal liberty, and must be referred to for the terms of Magna Charta, in the 'Statutes of the Realm' and the 'Revised Statutes.'

Confirmation, a species of conveyance by which a voidable estate is made valid and unavoidable, or by which a particular estate is increased. Estates which are void cannot be confirmed, but only those which are voidable.—Watkins's Conv. 321. A confirmation may make a voidable or defeasible estate good, but it cannot work upon an estate that is void at law.—Co. Litt. 295 b.

Confirmation in Scotland is the ratification by a competent Court of an appointment of executors, and confers a title to uplift, administer, and dispose of the personal estate of the deceased. When the appointment of the executor has been made by the deceased, the appointee is called an executor-nominate and the confirmation a testament testamentor. When the appointment has been made by the Court, the appointee is called an executor-dative, and the confirmation a testament-dative.

Confirmation of Bishop, the ratification by the archbishop of the election of a bishop by dean and chapter under the king's letter missive prior to the consecration of the bishop by the archbishop, as directed (see CONGÉ D'ESLIRE) by 25 Hen. 8, c. 20. It was undecoded, from 1848 to 1902, whether this ceremony be ministerial or judicial, i.e., whether the archbishop can refuse to confirm. See The Queen v. The Archbishop of Canterbury, (1848) 11 Q. B. 483, in which the Court of four judges was equally divided in discharging a rule for a mandamus to hear objections, on the ground of heterodoxy, to the confirmation of Dr. Hampden, as Bishop of Hereford. Since then objection has been many times taken to a confirmation:—to that of Dr. Prince Lee as Bishop of Manchester, in 1848; to that of Dr. Temple as Bishop of Exeter, in 1869; to that of Dr. Temple as Archbishop of Canterbury, in 1896; to that of Dr. Creighton as Bishop of London, in 1897; to that of Dr. Ingram as Bishop of London, in 1901; and to that of Canon Gore as Bishop of Worcester, in 1902, when for the first time opposers appeared by counsel, and it was held by three judges of the High Court, in Reg. v. Archbishop of Canterbury, 1902, 2 K. B. 503, that the confirmation could not be opposed on the ground of alleged heterodoxy, although objectors were called upon by proclamation in general terms to oppose.

Confiscation, the condemnation and adjudication of property to the public treasury, as of goods seized under the Customs Acts. See FORFEITURE.

Confitens reus, an accused person who admits his guilt.

Conflict of Laws. In the case where a suit is brought in one country, and the parties, or one of them (or the subject-matter of the suit), belongs more or less to another, and the laws of the two countries upon the subject are at variance, there is said to be a conflict of laws. See LEX LOCI CONTRACTUS; and also the case of Simonin v. Mallac, (1860) 29 L. J. Prob. & Mat. 97, where the marriage of two French persons who came to England for the express purpose of celebrating a marriage which would have been void if celebrated in their own country was declared valid. 'Either nation may refuse to surrender its laws to those of the other, and if either is guilty of any breach of the comitas or jus gentium, that reproach shall attach to the nation whose laws are least calculated to ensure the common benefit and advantage of all.' See Dicey's or Story's Conflict of Laws; Chitty on Contracts, citing Kaufman v. Gerson, 1904, 1 K. B. 591. See RENVOI and Halsbury, Laws of England, Hailsham ed., title Conflict of Laws.

Conformity, Bill of. When an executor or administrator found the affairs of his testator or intestate so much involved that he could not safely administer the estate, except under the direction of the Court of Chancery, he filed this bill against the creditors to have their claims adjusted, and a decree settling order and payment of assets made. This bill was so called, probably because the executor or administrator undertook to conform to the decree, or the creditors were compelled by the decree to conform to it.—1 Story's Eq. Jur. 440.

Confratrie, a fraternity, brotherhood, or society.

Confrères, brethren in a religious house, fellows of one and the same society.

Confusion, a mode of extinguishing a debt, in the French law, by the concurrence in the same person of two qualities which mutually destroy one another. This may occur in several ways, as where the creditor becomes the heir of the debtor, or the debtor the heir of the creditor, or either accedes to the title of the other by any other mode of transfer.—Pothier on Oblig. by Evans, n. 505-609.

Confusion of Boundaries, was a jurisdiction of equity, concurrent with the Common Law. The Civil Law was far more provident than ours upon the subject of boundaries. It considered that there was a tacit agreement or duty between adjacent proprietors to keep up and preserve the boundaries between their respective estates, and it enabled all persons having an interest to bring a suit to have the boundaries between them settled; and this, whether they were tenants for years, usufructuaries, mortgagees, or proprietors. The action was called actio finium regundorum; and if the possession were also in dispute, that might be ascertained and fixed in the same suit, and indeed was incident to it. Equity adopts this general rule, not to entertain jurisdiction in cases of confusion of boundaries upon the ground that the boundaries are in controversy, but to require that there should be some equity superinduced by the act of the parties; such as some particular circumstances of fraud, or some confusion, where one person has ploughed too near another, or some gross negligence, omission, or misconduct on the part of persons whose special duty it is to preserve or perpetuate the boundaries. Where there is an ordinary legal remedy there is certainly no ground for the interference of equity, unless some peculiar equity supervenes which the law does not take notice of or protect.—Story's Eq. Jur.

Confusion, Property by. Where goods of two persons are so intermixed that the several portions can no longer be distinguished; if the intermixture be by consent, it is supposed that the proprietors have an interest in common, in proportion to their respective shares; but if one wilfully intermix his money, corn, or hay, with that of another man, without his approbation or knowledge, or cast gold in like manner into another's melting-pot or crucible, our law allows no remedy in such a case, but gives the entire property without any account to him whose original dominion or property is invaded, and endeavoured to be rendered uncertain without his consent.—2 Bl. Com. 405. See also Vin. Abr. Justification (B) and Instit. of Justin. l. ii. tit. 1, ss. 27-34.

As to the position where a person pays money held by him in a fiduciary character into his own banking account, see Re Hallett's Estate, (1879) 13 Ch. D. 696; Sinclair v. Brougham, 1914, A. C. 398.

By the Solicitors Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 24), the Council of the Law Society has power to make rules as to the opening and keeping by solicitors of accounts at banks for clients' money. The intention is to keep such accounts separate.

The general rule, that, as against an agent who has mixed the property of his employer with his own, so as to render it undistinguishable, the whole may, both at Law and in Equity, be taken to be the property of the employer, is well settled; but the same rule does not, in all cases, hold against the creditors of such agent: for instance, if an agent pay money belonging to his employer into his own banking-house, and to his general account, this money may not be distinguishable; but should the agent become bankrupt, the whole sum which appears to be due to him from the bankers will go to his assignees, and his employer can only come in as a general creditor under the bankruptcy. So, if the bankers had an account with the agent by way of set-off, that set-off would equally affect the money of his employer paid into the agent's account as it would the agent's own money, supposing the bankers to have no notice, displacing their equity.—Ex parte Townshend, (1809) 15 Ves. 470; Massey v. Banner, (1820) 1 J. & W. 241, 248.

Congeable [fr. congé, Fr., leave], lawful, done with permission.

Conge d'Accorder, leave to accord or agree.—8 Edw. 1.

Conge d'Eslire, or d'Elire (leave to elect). The king's licence or permission sent to a dean and chapter to proceed to the election of a bishop or archbishop, when the office becomes vacant. By 25 Hen. 8, c. 20, the sovereign may grant this licence 'with a letter missive containing the name of the person whom they shall elect and choose,' and it is enacted that the dean and chapter shall elect the said person and none other, and that if they defer their election above twelve days, the sovereign at his liberty and pleasure shall appoint such person to the office as he shall think able and convenient for the same. See R. v. Archbishop of Canterbury, 1902, 2 K. B. 503.

Congregationalist, a name for the sect formerly called Independents. See DISSENTERS.

Congress, an assembly of envoys, commissioners, deputies, etc., from different courts, who meet to concert measures for their common good, or to adjust their mutual concerns.

Conjoints, persons married to each other.

Conjugal rights, the right which husband and wife have to each other's society. The suit for restitution of conjugal rights is a matrimonial suit, cognizable in the Divorce Court, which is brought whenever either the husband or wife is guilty of the injury of subtraction, or lives separate from the other without any sufficient reason; in which case the Court will decree restitution of conjugal rights (Judicature Act, 1925, s. 186), but will not enforce it by attachment, substituting however for attachment, if the wife be the petitioner, an order for periodical payments by the husband to the wife, s. 187.

Conjugal rights cannot be enforced by the act of either party, as was held by the Court of Appeal in the case of a husband who had seized and detained his wife by force, in Reg. v. Jackson, 1891, 1 Q. B. 671.

Conjuratio [fr. conjuro, Lat.], an oath.

Connivance, consent, express or implied, by one spouse to the adultery of the other. If a petitioner be found guilty of connivance, the Court will not decree dissolution of the marriage.—Judicature Act, 1925, s. 172, replacing Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (c. 85), ss. 29, 30.

Conquest [fr. conquerir, Fr., to acquire; conquiro, Lat., to seek for], the feudal term for purchase. As to the use and meaning of the term in Scots Law, see Diggens v. Gordon, (1867) L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. 136; Mackenzie v. Allardes, 1905, A. C. 285.

Consanguineo. See COSENAME.

Consanguineus frater, a brother by the father's side; in contradistinction to frater uterinus, the son of the same mother.

Consanguinity, or Kindred, the connection or relation of persons descended from the same stock or common ancestor. It is either lineal or collateral. Lineal is that which subsists between persons, of whom one is descended in a direct line from the other, as between son, father, grandfather, great-grandfather, and so upwards in the direct ascending line; or between son, grandson, great-grandson, and so downwards in the direct descending line. Collateral agree with the lineal in this, that they descend from the same stock or ancestor, but differ in this, that they do not descend one from the other. See MARRIAGE (Prohibited Degrees).

Conscience Clause. Section 7 of the Education Act, 1870, prohibits the imposing of an obligation to attend religious worship as a condition of attending a public elementary school, and allows a child to be withdrawn while any religious instruction is being given. See now the Education Act, 1921, s. 72. And see COWPER-TEMPLE CLAUSE; KENYON-SLANEY CLAUSE.

Conscience, Courts of, tribunals for the recovery of small debts, constituted by Acts of Parliament in the City of London and other towns. The ordinary constitution of these courts, which were generally for causes of debt to the amount of 40s. only, but often to the amount of 5*l.*, was to examine in a summary way, by the oath of the parties, or other witnesses, and make such order therein as was consonant to equity and good conscience. The county courts established in 1846 have superseded them.

Conscription. Compulsory enrolment of men (usually in fixed numbers and of fixed ages) for military service, practised by the Romans and from early times in France and other European countries. A species of conscription long existed under the Militia Acts, now suspended by the temporary Militia Ballot Suspension Act, 1865. See MILITIA. During the Great War compulsory military service was imposed: the first Act was the Military Service Act, 1916; for subsequent war legislation extending compulsory military service, see Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Army.'

Consecrate, to dedicate to sacred purposes, as a bishop by imposition of hands, or a church or churchyard by prayers, etc. Consecration is performed by a bishop or archbishop. See BISHOP.

Consensus, non concubitus, facit matrimonium. Co. Litt. 323.—(Consent, not cohabitation, constitutes marriage.)

Consent is necessary to matrimony, and therefore persons non compotes mentis, or a boy under 14 or a girl under 12, or a person under coercion (see Scott v. Sebright, (1886) 12 P. D. 21), cannot enter into this, or indeed any other contract. But see now Age of Marriage Act, 1929 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 36), which avoids any marriage of persons under 16, and see MARRIAGE.

Consensus tollit errorem. Co. Litt. 126.—(Consent [acquiescence] removes mistake.) See Broom's Max. and title WAIVER.

Consent, an act of reason accompanied with deliberations, the mind weighing, as in a balance, the good or evil on either side. Consent supposes three things—a physical power, a mental power, and a free and serious use of them. Hence it is that if consent be obtained by intimidation, force, meditated imposition, circumvention, surprise, or undue influence, it is to be treated as a delusion, and not as a deliberate and free act of the mind. In relation to Criminal Law, see Criminal Law Amendment Acts, 1885–1922, and see AGE; ABDUCTION.

Consent-rule, a superseded instrument, in which a defendant in an action of ejectment specified for what purpose he intended to defend, and undertook to confess not only the fictitious lease, entry, and ouster, but that he was in possession.

Consequential Damages. See DAMAGES.

Conservancy of the Thames. See Thames Conservancy Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. clxxxvii., Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Thames,' and THAMES, post.

Conservator, a protector, preserver, or maintainer; or a standing arbitrator chosen and appointed as a guarantee, to compose and adjust differences that should arise between two parties, etc.—Paroch. Antiq. 513.

Conservators of the Peace, officers appointed by the Common Law for the maintenance of the public peace. Of these, some had and still have this power annexed to other offices which they hold; others had it merely by itself, and were thence called custodes or conservatores pacis. Those that were so, virtute officii, still continue; but the latter sort are superseded by the justices of the peace, first established in the reign of Edw. III. by 1 Edw. 3, st. 2, c. 16.

Conservators of the Truce and Safe Conducts, officers appointed to hear and determine questions relating to the breaking of the king's truce and safe conducts upon the main sea, out of the liberties of the Cinque Ports. It was enacted by 18 Hen. 6, c. 4, that if any of the king's subjects attempt or offend upon the sea, or in any port within the king's obeisance, against any stranger in amity, league, or truce, or under safe conduct, and especially by attacking his person, or spoiling him, or robbing him of his goods, the Lord Chancellor, with any of the justices of either the King's Bench or Common Pleas, should cause full restitution and amends to be made to the party injured.—Jac. Lav. Dict.

Consideratio curiæ, the judgment of the Court.

Consideration. Any act of the promisee (the person claiming the benefit of an obligation) from which the promisor (the person burdened with the obligation) or a stranger derives a benefit or advantage, or any labour, detriment or inconvenience sustained or suffered by the promisee at the request, express or implied, of the promisor. See Laythorpe v. Bryant, 3 Scott 250; 2 Wms. Saund. 137 h; Currie v. Misa, (1875) L. R. 10 Exch. 153.

Consideration is one of the facts which the Courts require as evidence of intention, (a) that a person intends his promise to be binding on him, or (b) that he intends to divest himself of a beneficial interest in property. In its widest sense consideration is the price, motive or inducement for a promise or for a transfer of property from one person to another. The nature or quality of the consideration which will be sufficient for these purposes varies with the nature of the transaction and in the absence of consideration the Courts will, except in the case of simple contract, accept other evidence from which intention will be inferred. A simple contract, that is to say, a promise by word of mouth or in writing which is not a deed, requires valuable consideration to support it, but if the promise is by deed, even the expressed absence of any consideration will not affect its validity either in law or equity (except for some kinds of equitable relief, see infra), because the execution of a deed is attended by formalities from which a deliberate intention to make a binding promise is presumed. Valuable consideration may be described as the very life and soul of a simple contract or parole agreement.

Valuable consideration may be :—

(a) Benefit to the promisor or loss or injury sustained by the promisee. It is not necessary that the consideration and promise should be equivalent in actual value, for it would be impossible precisely to determine whether, in a given case, the consideration were adequate, without a psychological investigation into the motives of the parties. If the consideration, however, be so insufficient as to 'shock the conscience,' equity would quash the contract, upon the ground that such great inequality betokens mutual mistake, or fraud or undue advantage on the one side, or mental incompetency on the other, and, in equity, inadequacy may be a reason for refusing specific performance, Pegler v. White, 33 Beav. 403.

(b) Forbearance for a time to institute a suit upon a well-founded claim, or even upon one which is doubtful, but not upon one utterly unfounded, is sufficient, since it is a benefit to the one party and a prejudice to the other. If the time of forbearance be stated, it must be a reasonable time, and an agreement to forbear per breve aut paululum tempus, or pro aliquo tempore, will not be sufficient, inasmuch as the party promising may, in such case, sue immediately after the promise is made.

(c) Mutual promises are concurrent considerations, and will support each other if they be made simultaneously, unless one or the other be void.

Considerations which are insufficient for the purposes of a simple contract and may be insufficient for the validity of other transactions may be found :—

(a) In so-called gratuitous or voluntary promises which are void for want of a reciprocal return however obligatory they may be in morals or in honour. A moral consideration founded upon mere affection or gratitude will not support a simple contract, as was held in Eastwood v. Kenyon, (1840) 11 A. & E. 438, after many conflicting decisions on the subject. Other instances of insufficient consideration or absence of consideration may be found in :—

Cooke v. Ozley, (1790) 3 T. R. 653, and other authorities (see Chitty on Contracts, 15th ed. at pp. 9, 10), showing that if an offer be made with liberty to consider it for a limited time, it may nevertheless be revoked at any time before such limited time has expired.

Foakes v. Beer, (1884) 9 App. Cas. 605, showing, in accordance with the old law, that if A. owes B. 100*l.* and B. agrees to take and takes 90*l.* in full satisfaction for the debt, without any other or fresh consideration, B. can nevertheless sue A. for the remaining 10*l.* See also Williams v. O'Keefe, 1910, A. C. 186, and a promise to pay by instalments is not sufficient consideration for extending time for a payment which is due immediately. See Foakes v. Beer, L. R. 9 A. C. 605, and ACCORD AND SATISFACTION.

(b) Illegal and impossible consideration. A contract may be illegal because it contravenes the principles of the Common Law, or the special requirements of a statute. The former illegality exists whenever the consideration is founded upon a transaction which violates public policy or morality :— as a contract to commit, conceal, or compound a crime ; a contract for illicit cohabitation ; or a contract in fraud of the rights and interests of third parties. The illegality created by statute exists when the act is either expressly prohibited, or when the prohibition is implied from the nature and object of the statute. A contract founded upon an impossible consideration is void ; for the law will not compel a man to attempt to do that which is not within the limits of human capacity. Lex neminem cogit ad vana aut impossibilia ; see ILLEGALITY.

(c) Executed consideration, i.e., already performed before the making of the defendant's promise, but if the past or executed consideration was furnished upon an express or implied request by the promisor from which a promise to pay or perform the promise would be implied, see Lampleigh v. Braithwaite, Sm. L. C., the contract will be upheld, otherwise an executed consideration will not support a promise.

Consideration has also been divided in regard to the time when it operates into 1st, executed (in another sense), i.e., if the consideration has been completed before the corresponding promise has been performed ; 2nd, executory, or something to be done after the promise ; 3rd, concurrent, as in the case of mutual promises ; and 4th, continuing, i.e., executed in part only. The three last classes are sufficient to support a contract not void for other reasons.—Story on Contracts, 71.

(d) Considerations moving from third per- sons. It is a general rule that in cases of simple contract, if one party make a promise to another for the benefit of a third, as no consideration moves from such third person, it is only the party to whom it is made, and not the party for whose benefit it is made, who may maintain an action upon it. See Tweedle v. Atkinson, (1861) 1 B. & S. 393; Re Empress Engineering Co., (1880) 16 Ch. D. 125; but if a trust be created for the third party, there is a departure from the rule and the third party can sue: see Gregory v. Williams, (1817) 3 Mer. 582; Gandy v. Gandy, (1884) 30 Ch. D. 57.

A promise under seal, such as a covenant or bond, does not require any consideration to be enforceable at law by an action upon the covenant or by damages for breach or any other remedy or defence in law, but the claim is always open to any defences arising out of want of any consideration in fact or otherwise available to the covenantor in equity, and equity will not enforce a covenant without consideration unless the covenant has been executed in law, or a trust had been declared in performance of the promise, Jefferys v. Jefferys, 1 Cr. & Ph. 138. If the promisor cannot show a reason in equity why he should not execute his promise according to his deed in law, equity will not intervene to help him, but if the promisee cannot show more than a promise in legal form, equity will not exert its auxiliary jurisdiction in his favour.

In regard to the transfer of property, as distinguished from contract to transfer property of any description, consideration plays an important part as evidence of the intention of the transfer. In the absence of consideration or an express or implied trust, the solemnity of the transfer, whether by feoffment in former days, or by deed or registration now, the legal completion of the transaction did and does not, as between the grantor and grantee, import either consideration or evidence that the grantor intended to divest himself of the beneficial ownership. Before 1926 in the absence of consideration implying or raising a use or of any declaration of a use or of a trust, a resulting use or trust would be presumed (Fowkes v. Pascoe, L. R. 10 Ch. 343; Beckwith's Case, (1589) 2 Co. Rep. 56b and 58b) in favour of the grantor, see also Norton on Deeds, ch. Resulting Trusts. This implication has been removed, in regard to deeds executed after 1925 by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 60, which provides that in a voluntary conveyance made after that year a resulting trust will not be implied merely because the property is not conveyed for the use or benefit of the grantee, see also Law of Property Act, 1925, 1st Schedule, Part II., paragraph 3, and the L. P. Amendment Act, 1926, but it is still open to the persons beneficially entitled to prove that the transfer was intended to be in trust for him. In the absence of an express declaration of trust or of circumstances in which the transferee is presumed to hold on trust, the consideration required to give a conveyance its expressed effect or to raise a use which was not expressed were money, money's worth, blood or marriage, see Norton on Deeds, and even where consideration is expressed, e.g., by the words in consideration of five shillings though the transfer might be complete in law, it is open to the grantor to prove that the consideration was merely nominal. The consideration of marriage covers all beneficiaries within the consideration, that is to say, the children of the marriage. It is not the same as 'consideration of blood' which as between grantor and grantee may support a simple or bare conveyance to the grantee. 'Blood' may mean a child or blood relation. Considerations such as 'love and affection' or gratitude for past services are also merely voluntary against creditors, see VOLUNTARY CONVEYANCES.

Consideratum est per curiam (it is considered by the Court), the formal and ordinary commencement of a judgment.

Consignation [fr. consigno, Lat., to write down], the deposit of a thing owed with a third person, under the authority of the Court.—Civil Law.

Consignment, the sending of goods to another for sale or purchase; also the goods themselves so sent. He who consigns the goods is called the consignor, and the person to whom they are sent is called the consignee.

Consistory Court, the prætorium, or tribunal of every diocesan bishop, held in their several cathedrals for the trial of all ecclesiastical causes arising within their jurisdiction. The bishop's chancellor, or his commissary, is the judge, and from his sentence an appeal lies, by virtue of 24 Hen. 8, c. 12, to the archbishop of each province respectively.

Consistorial Causes. In Scotland, actions concerning the matrimonial relations.

Consolato del mare, a code, ascribed to the fourteenth century and Barcelona, of the usages governing the intercourse of the maritime communities of the Mediter-reanean; see Encyc. of Eng. Law, where the authorities are referred to.

Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom, a repository of public money, which now comprises the produce of customs, excise, stamps, and several other taxes, and some small receipts from the royal hereditary revenue, surrendered to the public use. It constitutes almost the whole of the public income of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. See 56 Geo. 3, c. 98. This fund is pledged for the payment of the whole of the interest of the national debt of Great Britain and (now Northern) Ireland (see s. 6 of the National Debt Act, 1870); and besides this is liable to several other specific charges imposed upon it at various periods by Act of Parliament, such as the civil list, and the salaries of the judges and ambassadors and other high official persons; after payment of which the surplus is to be indiscriminately applied to the service of the United Kingdom under the direction of Parliament. See 10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 57, and as to Northern Ireland (establishment of separate consolidated fund there; Irish Free State (Agreement) Act, 1922 (12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 4); and Irish Free State Constitution Act, 1922 (13 Geo. 5, c. 1).

Consolidating Actions. If several actions between the same parties were brought, and were pending for the same cause, or substantially so, the Court may stay the proceedings in all but one. And if two or more actions were brought by the same plaintiff, at the same time, against the same defendant, for causes of action which might have been joined in the same action, the Court or a judge, if they deemed the proceeding vexatious or oppressive, would in general compel the plaintiff to consolidate them. Chitty's Arch. Pr. Under the Rules of the Supreme Court, actions may be consolidated by order as before (R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XLIX., r. 8).

Consolidation, in the Civil Law, the uniting possession, occupancy, or profits, etc., of land with property, and vice versâ; in the Ecclesiastical Law, the uniting two benefices by assent of the ordinary, patron, and incumbent; in the Statute Law, the fusing many Acts of Parliament into one.

Consolidation Acts. Acts by which several Acts upon the same subject are reduced into one. Of such a character are the Larceny Act, 1861, now largely repealed and replaced by the Larceny Act, 1916, and other Criminal Law Consolidation Acts of 1861, the Public Health Act, 1875, the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, the Sheriffs Act, 1887, the Arbitration Act, 1889, the Factors Act, 1889, the Lunacy Act, 1890, the Stamp Act, 1891, the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, the Friendly Societies Act, 1896, the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, the Coal Mines Act, 1911, the Forgery Act, 1913, the Companies Act, 1929, the Poor Law Act, 1930, the Local Government Act, 1933, the County Court Act, 1934.

The Interpretation Act, 1889 (see that title), by s. 38 (1) enacts that—

Where this Act or any Act passed after the commencement of this Act repeals and re-enacts, with or without modification, any provisions of a former Act, references in any other Act to the provisions so repealed shall, unless the contrary intention appears, be construed as references to the provisions so re-enacted.

This is a generalization of a modern common form in Consolidation Acts: see, e.g., s. 13 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and see also Stevens v. Gen. Steam Navigation Co., 1905, 1 K. B. 890.

Compare the title CODE.

Consolidation of Mortgages. When different properties are mortgaged by the same mortgagor to the same mortgagee for different debts, it was formerly the right of the mortgagee to refuse to allow the mortgagor to redeem one of the mortgages without also redeeming the others, the effect being to throw the whole of the debts on the whole of the properties and thus 'consolidate' the mortgages. This right of the mortgagee was an application of the maxim, 'He who seeks equity must do equity'; it was not considered fair to the mortgagee to allow the mortgagor to pay off one mortgage, which perhaps was well secured, and leave the mortgagee with another mortgage on his hands which might be very insufficiently secured. But though the doctrine was not unfair or unreasonable as originally applied, it came to be extended to cases where, owing to devolutions of title having taken place, its application was manifestly unjust, and attempts were made by the Courts to limit its exercise. Finally, the right was abolished by s. 17 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, as replaced and amended by s. 93 of the Law of Property Act, 1925 (where the mortgages or one of them are or is made after the 31st December, 1881), but only in cases where a contrary intention is not expressed in the mortgage deeds or one of them, and it is not unusual to exclude the operation of the section, thus preserving the rights of the mortgagee as defined by the decided cases. For the general law, see Jennings v. Jordan, (1881)

6 App. Cas. 698; Pledge v. White, 1896, A. C. 187; Fisher on Mortgages. 'Consolidation' must not be confounded with 'tacking' which arose where successive mortgages have been created upon the same estate, whereas consolidation arises where there have been separate mortgages on different estates. See TACKING.

Consols, funds formed by the consolidation (of which word it is an abbreviation) of different Government annuities, payable by way of interest to persons who had lent money to the Government on the security of different taxes, or for the maintenance of different parts of the public service. See CONSOLIDATED FUND, and CONVERSION OF STOCK.

Consortium. The marital right of cohabitation and mutual service. An action for damages lies for loss of consortium or of the services of the spouse if that loss is caused by any wrongful act such as enticement, slander, assault or negligence, see Jackson v. Watson & Sons, 1909, 2 K. B. 193; and see ENTICEMENT.

Conspiracy. 'A conspiracy is an agreement by two or more persons to carry out an unlawful common purpose, or to carry out a lawful common purpose by unlawful means. It is a misdemeanour at common law, punishable with fine and imprisonment to any extent; and also with hard labour in the case of "any conspiracy to cheat or defraud, or to extort money or goods, or falsely to accuse of any crime, or to obstruct, prevent, pervert or defeat the course of public justice"' (14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 29); see Odgers on the Common Law, 2nd ed. p. 255. 'If in carrying into effect a criminal conspiracy the conspirators inflict loss and damage on a private individual, he will have a private action for the particular damage which he has thus separately suffered'; ibid. pp. 256, 625. There are also, it seems, what may be called civil conspiracies, i.e., conspiracies which may be the foundation of an action, though not of an indictment; and there are undoubtedly cases in which two or more persons can render themselves liable to civil proceedings by combining to injure the plaintiff, although if one of them did the same act by himself he would escape all liability (ibid. p. 629); but see, as to the limits of this rule, Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, 1892, A. C. 95; Quinn v. Leatham, 1901, A. C. 495; Pratt v. British Medical Association, 1919, 1 K. B. 244; Sorrell v. Smith, 1923, 2 Ch. 32. Actions of this kind, however, have generally arisen in connection with trade disputes, and the law as to them now depends principally on the two statutes of 1875 and 1906 (as amended by the Act of 1927) next referred to, which have greatly altered the old law of conspiracy. By the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), s. 3, as amended by the Trade Disputes Act, 1906, an agreement or combination by two or more persons to do or procure to be done any act in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute shall not be indictable as a conspiracy if such act committed by one person would not be punishable as a crime. And by the Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (s. 1), an act done in pursuance of an agreement or combination by two or more persons shall, if done in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute, not be actionable unless the act, if done without any such agreement or combination, would be actionable. But the Trade Disputes and Trade Unions Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 22), s. 1, declares what is an illegal strike or lockout, and that the 1906 Act shall not apply in the case of an illegal strike.

See Chitty's Statute, tit. 'Master and Servant,' and TRADE DISPUTE.

Conspiracy to murder. Misdemeanour, by the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, s. 4, punishable by penal servitude not exceeding ten years, or by imprisonment; see R. v. Most, (1881) 7 Q. B. D. 244.

Conspirations, the writ that lay against conspirators.—Reg. Brev. 134; Fitz. N. B. 114.

Conspirators, those who bind themselves by oath, covenant, or other alliance, that each of them shall aid the other falsely and maliciously to indict persons; or falsely to move and maintain pleas, etc.—33 Edw. 1, st. 2. Besides these, there are conspirators in treasonable purposes: as for plotting against the Government.

Constable [fr. comes stabuli, Lat., in the eastern empire a superintendent of the imperial stables, or the emperor's master of the horse, who at length obtained the command of the army], an officer to whom our law commits the duty of maintaining the peace, and bringing to justice those by whom it is infringed.

Provision is made for the abolition of the office of High Constable by the High Constables Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 67), and of that of Parish Constable by the Parish Constables Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 92), which Act, however, still allows of their appointment in exceptional cases.

By the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, s. 191, in all boroughs to which that Act applies, 'borough constables' are appointed by the Watch Committee, but the Local Government Act, 1888, has, in the case of boroughs having a population of less than 10,000, transferred the appointments to the county councils.

In counties constables were appointed by the justices of the peace under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 88; and 19 & 20 Vict. c. 69, the County and Borough Police Act, 1856, by which provision was made for the consolidation of the county and borough police; but the Local Government Act, 1888, has transferred the appointments to joint committees of the justices and the county councils.

The Police Act, 1919, empowers the Home Secretary to make regulations as to the pay, allowances, pensions, conditions of service, etc., of all police forces within England and Wales, which regulations are binding on every police authority. The Act also makes provision for the establishment of an organization called the Police Federation for the purpose of enabling members of the police forces of England and Wales to consider and bring to the notice of the Home Secretary all the matters affecting their welfare and efficiency, other than questions of discipline and promotion, and further contains a prohibition against joining trade unions. By the Police (Weekly Rest-Day) Act, 1910, a constable is to be off duty at least 52 days in the year, and as far as practicable to have one day's rest in seven. By the Police (Appeals) Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 19), a member of a police force dismissed or called upon to resign has a right of appeal to a Secretary of State.

Scotland.—See the Police (Scotland) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 67), and the Amendment Act, 1910 (10 Edw. 7 & 1 Geo. 5, c. 10); and the Police (Scotland) (Limit of Age) Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 69).

Special constables may be appointed by two or more justices of the peace under the Special Constables Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 41), on particular occasions, upon it being made to appear to them on the oath of any credible witness that 'any tumult, riot, or felony has taken place' in any place, and the justices being of opinion that the ordinary officers appointed for preserving the peace are not sufficient for that purpose. Under this Act very numerous appointments were made in November, 1887, on the occasion of public meetings being held in Trafalgar Square, and in August, 1914, on the outbreak of the war with Germany; see the Special Constables Act, 1914, as made perpetual and slightly amended by 13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 11, and the Special Constables Order, 1923, No. 905; and as to Scotland, the Special Constables (Scotland) Acts, 1914 and 1915. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Police.'

Canals (Offences) Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 50), provides for the appointment of special constables for keeping peace on canals and navigable rivers, see also POLICE and METROPOLITAN POLICE.

The relation of master and servant is created by a railway company appointing special constables (Lambert v. G. E. Ry., 1909, 2 K. B. 776).

Constablewick, the jurisdiction of a constable.

Constat, a certificate which the Clerk of the Pipe and auditors of the Exchequer made, at the request of any person who intended to plead or move in that Court, for the discharge of anything. The effect of it was the certifying what appears (constat) upon record touching the matter in question. It was held to be superior to an ordinary certificate, because it did not contain anything but what appeared on record. An exemplification of the enrolment of letters-patent under the Great Seal is called a constat.—Co. Litt. 225; Page's case, 5 Rep. 52.

Constat, it appears. See NON CONSTAT.

Constituent, (1) one who appoints an agent, particularly (2) one who, by his vote, constitutes or elects a member of parliament.

Constitution, any regular form or system of government. Also a particular law, ordinance, or regulation made by the authority of any superior; as the Novel Constitutions of Justinian and his successors; the Constitutions of Clarendon; the Ecclesiastical Constitutions, etc.

Constitutor, a person who has promised to pay the debt of another.

Constraint, duress. See DURESS.

Constructio legis non facit injuriam. The construction of the law does not do any injury.

Construction, interpretation.

As to construction of statutes, see ACT or PARLIAMENT; and of contracts, see Chitty on Contracts, ch. v.; and of deeds, see Norton on Interpretation of Deeds.

Partem aliquam recte intelligere nemo potest, antequam totum, iterum atque iterum, perlegerit. 3 Rep. 52.—(No one can rightly understand any part until he has read the whole again and again.)

In contractibus benigna; in testamentis, benignior; in restitutionibus, benignissima interpretatio facienda est. Co. Lit. 112.—(In contracts, the construction ought to be liberal; in wills, more liberal; in restitutions, most liberal.)

Construction, Court of. The High Court in its Chancery or King's Bench Division, as the case may be, is called the Court of Construction with regard to wills, as opposed to its Probate, etc., Division, whose duty is to decide whether an instrument be a will at all.

Constructive Notice. The knowledge which is imputed to a party: (a) if he omits to make the usual and proper inquiry into the title of property which he has purchased; (b) if he omits to investigate some fact which has been brought to his notice suggesting the existence of such title or claim; (c) if he deliberately refrains from inquiry in order to avoid notice. See Halsbury, L. E., vol. 13, and the person affected with constructive notice takes, if at all, subject to the title or claim, whether he knew of it or not; for instance, a purchaser of land who is satisfied to take a shorter title than he could call for by statute is affected by notice of all trusts and equities of which he would have had notice if he had seen the full title. See Cox and Neve's Contract, 1891 2 Ch. 109. Patman v. Harland, (1881) 17 C. D. 353 illustrates the doctrine. It was there held that: (a) notice of a material document is notice of its contents, and (b) although the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 78), s. 2, enacted that, subject to any stipulation to the contrary, an intended lessee was not entitled to call for the title to the freehold reversion upon a contract for the lease, a lessee who had omitted to make the special stipulation and was bound by the prohibition in the section, had intentionally shut his eyes to the freehold title which was subject to restrictive covenants and was affected by notice of the covenants. Section 45 of the L. P. Act, 1925, sub-ss. (2), (3) and (4), has replaced the corresponding section in the V. & P. Act, 1874, as extended in regard to leasehold reversions by the C. Act, 1881, s. 3, but sub-s. (5) of s. 44 of the Act of 1925, provides that where, under sub-ss. (2), (3) and (4) of that section, an intended lessee or assign is not entitled to call for the title to the freehold or leasehold reversion, he shall not, where the contract is made after 1925, be affected with notice of any matter or thing, of which, if he had contracted that such title should be furnished he might have had notice. To that extent Patman v. Harland is overruled but the principle remains that a purchaser will be affected by constructive notice if he omits to take reasonable precautions which are not less required because the law facilitates his disregard of them, or if he obtains actual notice of a defect in title. The facts from which constructive notice will be deemed to arise are not necessarily documentary. Absence of title deeds or the possession of a tenant gives notice of the tenant's interest, Taylor v. Stibbert, (1794) 2 Ves. 437, but not necessarily of an adverse claim to the reversion, see Barnhart v. Greenshields, (1853) 9 Moo. P. C. C. 18, unless there is notice that the rent is paid to another than the vendor, in which case there is constructive notice of the adverse claimant's interest. The doctrine of constructive notice has been relaxed or disregarded in commercial transactions, e.g., debentures, Re Standard Rotary Machine Co., (1906) 95 L. T. 829.

The doctrine has received statutory interpretation, s. 44 (8) of the L. P. Act, 1925, provides that a purchaser shall not be deemed to be or ever to have been affected with notice of any matter, or thing, of which, if he had investigated the title, or made enquiries in regard to matters prior to the period of commencement of title fixed by that Act, or any other statute or by any rule of law he might have had notice, unless he actually makes such investigation or enquiries. Contracts for less than the statutory or other legally producible length of title still fix the purchaser with notice of any defect which would have been disclosed if he had stipulated the full length of title. By s. 199 of L. P. Act, 1925, replacing the C. Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 39), s. 3:—

(1) A purchaser shall not be prejudicially affected by notice of:—

(i) Any instrument or matter capable of registration under the provisions of the Land Charges Act, 1925, or any enactment which it replaces which is void or not enforceable as against him under that Act or enactment by reason of the non-registration thereof.

(ii) Any other instrument or matter or any fact or thing, unless (a) it is within his own knowledge, or would have come to his knowledge if such enquiries and inspections had been made as ought reasonably to have been made by him ; or (b) in the same transaction with respect to which a question of notice to the purchaser arises, it has come to the knowledge of his counsel, as such, or of his solicitor or other agent, as such, or would have come to the knowledge of his solicitor or other agent, as such, if such enquiries and inspections had been made as ought reasonably to have been made by the solicitor or other agent.

(2) Paragraph (ii) of the last sub-section shall not exempt a purchaser from any liability under or any obligation to perform or observe any covenant, condition, provision, or restriction contained in any instrument under which his title is derived, mediately, or immediately ; and such liability may be enforced in the same manner and to the same extent as if that paragraph had not been enacted.

(3) Nothing in s. 198 is to affect a purchaser in cases where he would not have been affected by notice if the section had not been enacted.

By s. 205 of the same Act, 'notice' includes constructive notice. See also NOTICE.

Constructive Total Loss, a term used in the law of marine insurance to denote a loss which entitles the assured to claim the whole amount of his insurance, on giving to the assurers notice of abandonment. Generally there is a constructive total loss when the subject-matter assured has not actually perished or lost its form or species, but has, by one of the perils insured against, been reduced to such a state or placed in such a position as to make its total destruction, though not inevitable, yet highly imminent, or its ultimate arrival under the terms of the policy, though not utterly hopeless, yet exceedingly doubtful. In such a case the assured, by giving notice within a reasonable time to the assurers of abandonment, i.e., the relinquishment of all his right to whatever may be saved, is entitled to recover against them as for a total loss.

If notice is not given, the loss is treated as a partial loss unless the ship in fact has become a total loss or if there would be no possibility of benefit to the insurer if notice were given to him. See Marine Insurance Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 41) ss. 55-263.

One test is that a wrecked ship has become a constructive total loss if the cost of repairing her would exceed her value when repaired. The other is that she will become so when a prudent uninsured owner would not repair her having regard to all the circumstances : in the case of a wreck the owner is entitled to take into account the break-up value, as well as the estimated cost of repairs, in reckoning whether there has been a constructive total loss (Macbeth v. Maritime Insee. Co., 1908, A. C. 144). As to a total loss by capture, see Andersen v. Marien, 1908, A. C. 334. See Arnould on Marine Insurance.

Constructive Treason, an attempt to establish treason by circumstantiality, and not by the simple genuine letter of the law, and therefore highly dangerous to public freedom.—Erskine's Defence of Lord George Gordon ; 3 Hall, Const. Hist. c. xv. See TREASON.

Constructive Trust, a trust which the Court elicits by a construction put upon certain acts of parties. It arises upon a vendor's lien or charge upon land sold for unpaid purchase money, and generally, when an estate is subject to a trust or equitable interest or lien, and a person purchases it for value, with either actual or constructive notice of it, the estate will still be subject to the trust or equitable interest in the hands of such a purchaser.

The doctrine of constructive trusts also arises upon the renewal of a lease by a trustee, or person having a limited interest, in his own name, even in the absence of fraud and upon the refusal of the lessor to grant a new lease to the cestui que trust or expectant ; for such renewed lease is held upon trust for the person beneficially entitled to the old lease or the expectant, in order to prevent persons in fiduciary situations from acting so as to take a benefit for themselves. This doctrine is extended to the renewal of leases by one of several persons or partners jointly interested, by an agent, mortgagor, or mortgagee, or by a person jointly interested with an infant, but, if the renewed lease turn out not to be beneficial, the person renewing must sustain the loss ; if beneficial, the infant can claim his share of the benefit to be derived from it.

A renewing trustee, and a volunteer claiming under him, as well as a purchaser from him with notice, will be directed to assign the lease free from incumbrances, except a bonâ fide lease made by him at the best rent, and to account for the mesne rents and profits ; but he will be entitled to be indemnified against his covenants with the lessor, and will have a lien upon the estate for the costs of renewal, and the expenses of lasting improvements with interest. See Keech v. Sandford, otherwise called the Rumford Market Case, (1726) 1 W. & T. L. C. : Lewin on Trusts, ch. x. Reference to trusts in the Settled Land Act, 1925, include constructive trusts, s. 117 (xii) ibid., and see the definition in the T. Act, 1925, s. 68 (17).

Consuetudinarius, a ritual or book, containing the rights and forms of divine offices, or the customs of abbeys and monasteries.

Consuetudinibus et serviciis, a writ of right close, which lay against a tenant who deforced his lord of the rent or service due to him.—Reg. Brev. 159 ; Fitz. N. B. 151 ; and New Nat. Brev. 330.

Consuetudo debet esse certa ; nam incerta pro nulla habentur. A custom should be certain, for uncertain things are held as nothing.

Consuetudo est altera lex. 4 Rep. 21.—(Custom is another law.)

Consuetudo ex certa causa rationabili usitata privat communem legem. A custom based upon a certain reasonable cause supersedes the Common Law. See CUSTOM.

Consuetudo loci observanda est. Litt. s. 169. (The custom of a place is to be observed.)—See CUSTOM ; CUSTOM OF THE COUNTRY.

Consuetudo regni Angliæ est lex Angliæ. Jenk. Cent. 119.—(The custom of the kingdom of England is the law of England.)

Consul, an officer appointed by competent authority to reside in a foreign country, to facilitate and extend the commerce carried on between the subjects of the country which appoints him and those of the country or place in which he is to reside. The office appears to have originated in Italy, about the middle of the twelfth century, and was generally established all over Europe in the sixteenth century. British consuls were formerly appointed by the Crown, upon the recommendation of great trading companies, or of merchants engaged in trade with a particular country and place ; but they are now directly appointed by Government, without requiring any such recommendation, though it, of course, is always attended to when made. The right of sending consuls to reside in foreign countries depends either upon a tacit or express convention.

The duties of a consul, even in the confined sense in which they are commonly understood, are important and multifarious. It is his business to be always on the spot, to watch over the commercial interests of the subjects of the State whose servant he is ; to be ready to assist them with advice on all doubtful occasions ; to see that the conditions in commercial treaties are properly observed ; that those he is appointed to protect are subjected to no unnecessary or unjustifiable demands in conducting their business ; to represent their grievances to the authorities at the place where they reside, or to the ambassador of the sovereign appointing him, at the Court on which the consulship depends, or to the Government at home ; in a word, to exert himself to render the condition of the subjects of the country employing him, within his consulship, as comfortable, and their transactions as advantageous and secure, as possible.

Any person, whether he be a subject of the State by which he is appointed, or of another, may fill the office of consul, provided he be approved and admitted by the Government in whose territory he is to reside. In most instances, however, but not always, consuls are the subjects of the state appointing them.—McCull. Com. Diet. See also Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and subsequent years ; Air Force and Army Acts, as to enlistment. Administration of Oaths and Notaries Acts under 52 & 53 Vict. c. 10, and 54 & 55 Vict. c. 50 ; various forms of registration and other duties, see e.g. next title.

Consular Marriage Acts of 1849 and 1868, (12 & 13 Vict. c. 68), and (31 & 32 Vict. c. 61), for the marriage of British subjects abroad by consuls, extended by the Marriage Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 47), and Regulations made by Order in Council thereunder, and amended by the Foreign Marriage Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 74) ; but all these Acts are repealed and with amendment re-enacted by the Foreign Marriage Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 23).

Consulta ecclesiæ, a church full or provided for.—Cowel.

Consultary Response, the opinion of a Court of law on a special case.

Consultation, a writ in the nature of a procedendo, whereby a cause, having been removed by prohibition from the Ecclesiastical Court to the King's Court, is returned thither again ; for if the judges of the King's Court, upon comparing the libel with the suggestion of the party, find the suggestion false or not proved, and therefore the cause to be wrongfully removed from the Ecclesiastical Court, then upon this consultation or deliberation they decree it to be returned, whereupon the writ in this case obtained is called a consultation.—Reg. Brev. 44.

Also a meeting of two or more counsel and the solicitor instructing them for deliberating or advising. A similar meeting of the solicitor with a junior counsel is called a conference.

Consummation, (1) the completion of a thing; (2) the completion of a marriage between wedded persons by cohabitation.

Consummation of tenancy by the curtesy is when a husband, upon his wife's death, becomes entitled to hold her lands in fee simple or fee tail, of which she was seised during the marriage, for his own life, provided he has had issue by her, capable of inheriting. His estate becomes initiate upon birth of a child.

Contagious Diseases. See ANIMALS; INFECTIOUS DISEASES; PUBLIC HEALTH.

Contagious Diseases Prevention Acts (29 Vict. c. 35, and 32 & 33 Vict. c. 96). These Acts, sometimes termed the C. D. Acts, were passed to prevent 'venereal diseases, including gonorrhœa,' by the medical examination and detention of prostitutes. They were in force at certain naval and military stations, and were repealed in 1886 by 49 & 50 Vict. c. 10. See Amos on the Laws for the Regulation of Vice.

Contango. See CARRY OVER.

Contemner, one who has committed contempt of Court.

Contemporanea expositio est optima et fortissima in lege. 2 Inst. 11.—(A contemporaneous exposition is the best and most powerful in law.)—2 Inst. 211. A maxim applicable both to ancient grants and statutes: see Broom's Legal Maxims.

Contempt of Court. A disobedience to or disregard of the rules, orders, process, or dignity of a Court, which has power to punish for such offence by committal. Contempts are either direct, which only insult or resist the powers of the Court, or the persons of the judges who preside there; or consequential, which, without such gross insolence or direct opposition, plainly tend to create a universal disregard of their authority. Contempts may be divided into acts of contempt committed in the Court itself (in facie curiæ) and out of Court. Among the former are all unseemly behaviour (for which, and which only (see Reg. v. Lefroy, (1873) L. R. 8 Q. B. 134), there is an express power to punish by s. 162 of the County Courts Act, 1888), as talking boisterously, applauding any part of the proceedings, refusing to be sworn or to answer a question as a witness, interfering with the business of the Court on the part of a person who has no right to do so, and refusing to acquiesce in the ruling of the Court or speaking disrespectfully of or to the judge or jury or any other person on the part of one who has a right to speak properly, i.e., either of the parties or his representative. Among the latter is the attempting by intimidation to cause any suitor to discontinue his action, kidnapping or corrupting witnesses or attempting to do so, corrupting or attempting to corrupt jurors, obstructing or attempting to obstruct the officers of the Court on their way to their duties, speaking or writing disrespectfully of the authorities of the Court, and commenting on pending proceedings.

Every judge of a court of record has power immediately to commit for a contempt committed in his presence, but the power of an inferior court to commit for contempt does not extend to contempt out of Court (Reg. v. Lefroy, supra). In the case of contempt out of Court, the individual is called upon to show cause why he should not be committed, and is allowed to file affidavits in the matter. See R. v. Castro (Onslow and Whalley's case), (1873) L. R. 9 Q. B. 219; McLeod v. St. Aubyn, 1899, A. C. 549; and Reg. v. Gray, 1900, 2 Q. B. 36, in which the defendant was fined 100l. and 25l. costs for contempt in very insultingly and intemperately criticizing in the Birmingham Daily Argus a warning of Mr. Justice Darling at the Stafford Assizes to the Press not to publish a report of a trial for the delivery of an indecent lecture, the criticism appearing the day after the trial. The High Court has power to attach for contempt any one who publishes improper comments upon a case which though it has not come before the High Court, subsequently may do so (R. v. Parke, 1903, 2 K. B. 432; R. v. Davies, 1906, 1 K. B. 32). As to the principles upon which the Court acts in such cases, see R. v. Payne, 1896, 1 Q. B. 580. See Odgers on Libel, 5th ed. pp. 535 et seq.; Oswald's Contempt of Court; and CRIME.

Contempt of Parliament. Any violation of the privileges of either House of Parliament may be punished by the House by committal. See May's Parliamentary Practice; Hall, Const. Hist. ch. xvi.

Contentement, a man's countenance or credit, which he has with, and by reason of, his freehold; or that which is necessary for the support and maintenance of men, agreeably to their several qualities or states of life.—Jac. Law Dict.

Contentious Business, the business of legal practitioners where there is a contest, as opposed to non-contentious business when there is no such contest ; the latter term is most frequently used in connection with obtaining probate or administration, but is also applied to business in the Chancery Division where there are no facts in dispute, and the aid of the Court is only invoked to determine some point of law or construction, or to direct trustees or executors in the discharge of their duty.

Contentious Jurisdiction, jurisdiction to hear and determine any matter in dispute between party and party in an action or other judicial proceeding.

Contestatio litis, the plea and joinder of issue in the Ecclesiastical Courts.

Contestatio litis eget terminos contradictorios. Jenk. Cent. 117.—(The joinder of issue in a suit needs contradictory terms.)

Contestation, an issue or controversy.

Contingency with a Double Aspect, is a kind of executory interest which may be termed an alternative interest. This is an 'interest that is only to vest in case the next preceding interest should never vest in any way, through the failure of the contingency on which such preceding interest depends. As when a testator devises to A. for life ; and if he have issue male, then to such issue male and his heirs for ever ; and if he die without issue male, then to B. and his heirs for ever ; or, where a testator bequeaths personal estate to the first son of A., and if A. should have no son, then to B.' These interests, considered in conjunction with those for which they are substitutionary, are sometimes termed 'contingencies with a double aspect.'—Smith's Compendium of Real and Personal Property, 6th ed. p. 376.

Contingent Legacy, one bequeathed on a contingency ; e.g., if the legatee attain twenty-one.

The contingency may only relate to the disposal of the fund, or it may relate to the position or existence of the beneficiary ; in the first case as in a bequest to be paid or payable to A. when he shall attain twenty-one years, the legacy is vested and not contingent and although he may never attain the age his personal representatives will be entitled to the legacy, but if the words 'paid' or 'to be payable' are omitted and the legacy is to A. on attaining twenty-one years of age his personal representatives will not be entitled to the legacy if he dies under that age. These are said to be positive rules of construction, Williams on Executors and Administrators, 12th ed. p. 794, but the prima facie inference may be negated by the context of the will taken as a whole. There are certain other guides to construction, e.g., in general, a gift of interest in the interim or a direction to pay maintenance points to a vested and not a contingent gift and where a previous interest is given to one for life and after his decease to another, the interest of the second legatee is vested even if he predeceases the first ; legacies which are charged on land, as a rule, however, are not vested until the contingency happens, but this last rule is not applied to proceeds of sale of land and in the case of a direction to pay out of a mixed fund where the proceeds of sale are to be mixed with personalty the legacy is payable according to the rules applicable to personalty. Where legacies are charged on both real and personal estate the rule relating to real estate only arises after the personal estate has been exhausted.

The rule that contingent gifts which cannot vest within a life or lives in being and 21 years afterwards are void not only in regard to gifts to particular persons but in regard to the whole class if it includes some in whom the gift would not vest within the period has been mitigated by s. 163 of the L. P. Act, 1925, which provides that in cases where more than 21 years of age of an unborn donee has been fixed for vesting, the gift is to take effect as if 21 years had been fixed. See also MAINTENANCE and PERPETUITIES.

Contingent Remainder, a remainder limited so as to depend on an event or condition which may never happen or be performed, or which may not happen or be performed till after the determination of the preceding estate.—Fearne, Cont. Remainders.

The legal estate in contingent remainders has been abolished by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 1. Section 4, however, provides that they can take effect as equitable interests, and any instrument creating a contingent remainder has become a settlement under s. 1 (ii) of the S. L. Act, 1925. See SETTLED LAND.

In Smith d. Dornor v. Parkhurst, (1740) 18 Vin. Abr. 413 ; 6 Bro. Cas. Par. 351, the Court held that, in every case where an estate is given to A. for life, the grantor has an interest remaining in him to enter upon the estate, if it should determine by any act of the tenant amounting to a forfeiture ; that this right is inherent in the grantor, from the nature of the estate itself, and may be conveyed to trustees ; and that, when it is conveyed to them, it vests in them as a vested remainder for the life of A. On this ground, the limitation (usual in old settlements) to trustees 'for preserving contingent remainders' was held to confer on them a vested estate and not a contingent remainder.

The interposition of trustees to preserve contingent remainders was rendered unnecessary in most cases by the Real Property Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106), s. 8, which enacts 'that a contingent remainder existing at any time after the 31st day of December, 1844, shall be, and, if created before the passing of this Act, shall be deemed to have been capable of taking effect, notwithstanding the determination by forfeiture, surrender, or merger of any preceding estate of freehold, in the same manner, in all respects, as if such determination had not happened.'

Contingent remainders, it will be observed, were not preserved by this statute in all possible cases of the determination of the particular estate; they were only preserved against those destructive acts by or with the concurrence of the owner of the particular estate which prematurely determine it, and a contingent remainder still failed of effect, if the particular estate regularly and naturally expired before the contingency happened, upon which the remainder vested.

As to contingent remainders created by any instrument executed after 2nd August, 1877, however, the Contingent Remainders Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 33), provides that every contingent remainder shall, in the event of the particular estate determining before the contingent remainder vests, be capable of taking effect in all respects as if the contingent remainder had originally been created as a springing or shifting use or executory devise or other executory limitation. Contingent remainders are subject to the rule against perpetuities (Re Ashforth, 1905, 1 Ch. 535).

Before the Act of 1877 was passed the rules for the creation of a contingent remainder, said Mr. Joshua Williams, might be reduced to two :—

1. The seisin, or feudal possession, must never be without an owner, i.e., every contingent remainder of an estate of freehold must have a particular estate of freehold to support it.

This rule has disappeared with the abolition of the legal estates for life and remainder under the L. P. Act, 1925, and has been supplanted by the modern doctrine of an 'estate owner with power to alienate the entire fee simple or term of years in the property.

2. An estate cannot be given to an unborn person for life followed by any estate to any child of such unborn person; for in such a case the estate given to the child of the unborn person is void.—Williams on Real Property; and see, as to this second rule, Whitby v. Mitchell, (1890) 44 Ch. D. 85; Re Nash, 1910, 1 Ch. 1.

This rule has been subjected to very strong criticism. It is apparently an extreme extension of the meaning of the original rule that the law will not give effect to a possibility upon a possibility such as a gift to an unborn person if his name shall be Nicodemus, and it has been applied to cases where the gift complied with the rules against perpetuities in every other respect. A gift to A. for life remainder to the right heirs of B., a living person, is good, but the heirs are not ascertainable until B.'s death and might well be unborn children of unborn children of B. So far as a remainder or gift in an instrument taking effect after 1925 may be limited to the unborn children or issue of an unborn child the rule has been abrogated by the L. P. Act, 1925, s. 161 (1). See also s. 163 of that Act.

The only rule now is that the remainder must vest within lives in being at the date of settlement or at the death of the testator and twenty-one years thereafter plus a period of gestation, and see also CONTINGENT LEGACY, and s. 163 L. P. Act, 1925.

The whole subject of contingent remainders, together with that of executory limitations, is elaborately dealt with in a celebrated treatise by Charles Fearn, of the Inner Temple (see a good account of him in the Dictionary of National Biography), first published as a comparatively short essay in 1772, expanded into two volumes by the author shortly before his death in 1794, and edited in that form by Charles Butler, and afterwards by Josiah Smith, who in his preface to the 10th and last edition, published in 1844, spoke of the 'justly celebrated treatise of the profound Fearn.' An epitome by 'H. W. C.' appeared in 1878, and the Law of Real Property, by the late H. W. Challis, published in 1892, contains a chapter on 'Contingent Remainders' which is recommended for careful perusal.

Contingent Use, is a use limited in a conveyance of land, which may or may not happen to vest, according to the contingency expressed in the limitation of such use: see Cun. Law. Dict.; 1 Rep. 121; Gilbert on Uses, 3rd ed. by E. B. Sugden, p. 164 n.

Continual Claim, a claim made annually to land in order to prevent the claim from being barred by the Statute of Limitations (32 Hen. VIII., c. 2), abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 11.

Continuance, Notice of Trial by, when notice of trial had been given, and the plaintiff was not ready to proceed, instead of countermanding his notice, he might continue it to any sitting by notice of trial by continuance (R. 36, H. T. 1853). It could be given only once in a term.—1 Chit. Arch. It is now obsolete, notice of trial not being given now for any particular sittings. See NOTICE OF TRIAL.

Continuances, the successive entries (after the first) which in former days were made on the record as the pleadings proceeded; abolished by Reg. Gen. H. T. 1853, r. 31. See Odgers on Pleading, 7th ed. pp. 75, 232.

Continuando, a word which was formerly used in a special declaration of trespass when the plaintiff would recover damages for several trespasses in the same action; and, to avoid multiplicity of actions, a man might in one action of trespass recover damages for many trespasses, laying the first to be done with a continuando to the whole time in which the rest of the trespasses were done; which was in this form, continuando (by continuing) the trespasses aforesaid, etc., from the day aforesaid, etc., until such a day, including the last trespass.—Termes de la Ley.

Continuation Clause. In English time policies it has been usual to provide by a clause attached to the policy, called the continuation clause, that if at the end of the period of insurance the ship is at sea, the insurance may be extended until her arrival at some port.—Arnould's Marine Insurance, 8th ed. p. 570. The Finance Act, 1901, (1 Edw. 7, c. 7), s. 11, provides that a policy of sea insurance shall not be invalid on the ground only that by reason of such a clause it may become available for a period exceeding twelve months, and a continuation clause is for this purpose defined as an agreement to the effect that in the event of the ship being at sea or the voyage otherwise not completed on the expiration of the policy, the subject-matter of the insurance shall be held covered until the arrival of the ship, or for a reasonable time thereafter not exceeding thirty days.

Continuous Voyage. See CONTRABAND.

Contors. See COUNTORS.

Contra bonos mores, against good morals.

Contra formam collationis, a writ that issued where lands given in perpetual alms to any late houses of religion, as to an abbot and convent, or to the warden or master of any hospital and his convent, to find certain poor men with necessaries, and do divine service, etc., were alienated, to the disherison of the house and church. By means of this writ the donor or his heirs could recover the lands.—Reg. Brev. 238; Fitz. N. B. 210.

Contra formam feoffamenti, a writ that lay for the heir of a tenant enfeoffed of certain lands or tenements, by charter of feoffment from a lord, to make certain services and suits to his court, who was afterwards distrained for more services than were mentioned in the charter.—Reg. Brev. 176; Old Nat. Br. 162.

Contra formam statuti, contrary to the form of the statute [in such case made and provided]. The usual conclusion of every indictment, etc., brought for an offence created by statute prior to the Indictments Act, 1915. The Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (repealed by the Act of 1915), provided that no indictment be had for the insertion of the words 'against the form of the statute' instead of the words 'against the form of the statutes.' See Sched. I. of the Indictments Act, 1915, for examples of indictments now in use.

Contra pacem (against the peace). It was formerly necessary, in indictments to allege that the offence was committed against the peace of our Lord the King (or Lady the Queen).—Criminal Procedure Act, 1851, s. 24. See now Indictments Act, 1915.

Contraband [fr. contra, Lat., against; and bando, Ital., edict], such goods as are prohibited to be imported or exported, bought or sold, either by the laws of a particular state or by special treaties; also a term applied to designate that class of commodities which neutrals are not allowed to carry during war to a belligerent power.

It is a recognized general principle of the law of nations, that ships may sail to and trade with all kingdoms, countries, and states in peace with the princes or authorities whose flags they bear; and that they are not to be molested by the ships of any other power at war with the country with which they are trading, unless they engage in the conveyance of contraband goods. But great difficulty has arisen in deciding as to the goods comprised in this term.

In order to obviate all disputes as to what commodities should be deemed contraband, they have sometimes been specified in treaties or conventions. But this classification is not always respected during hostilities. See DECLARATION OF LONDON.

Where goods which would be contraband if carried to an enemy port are being carried to a neutral port, they can be seized as contraband if it be proved that they are intended to be forwarded by land or sea from that neutral port to an enemy country. This doctrine was first applied by the American Prize Courts during the American Civil War, and is known as the doctrine of 'Continuous Voyage.' For recent application of the doctrine, see The Bonna, 1918, P. 123.

The right of visitation and search is a right inherent in all belligerents; for it would be absurd to allege that they had a right to prevent the conveyance of contraband goods to an enemy, and to deny them the use of the only means by which they can give effect to such right.—Vattel, b. 3, c. vii., s. 114. The object of the search is twofold: first, to ascertain whether the ship is neutral or an enemy, for the circumstance of his hoisting a neutral flag affords no security that it is really such; and secondly, whether it has contraband articles or enemies' property on board.—McCull. Com. Dict. See The Jonge Margareta, (1799) 1 C. Rob. 189; Tudor's L. C. in Merc. & Mar. Law, pp. 981 et seq.; and Hall, or Smith and Sibley, on International Law; VISIT AND SEARCH.

Contracausator, a criminal; one prosecuted for a crime.

Contract, an agreement between competent parties, to do or to abstain from doing some act. For numerous other definitions, see Chalmers's Sale of Goods Act, App. II., where it is said that the 'disposition of the best modern writers appears to be to define "contract" as an agreement enforceable at law,' but contended that this definition seems rather too narrow.

Every contract is founded upon the mutual agreement of the parties; the other essentials are legality, capacity (depending on age, mental ability, sex and status) a mutual identity of consent (consensus ad idem), and form. When an agreement is stated either verbally or in writing, it is usually called an express contract; when the agreement is matter of inference and deduction, it is called an implied contract. (See IMPLIED CONTRACT.)

Contracts may be classified in various ways.

As to their form, they may be divided into (1) contracts of record, e.g., a recognizance; (2) contracts under seal, otherwise called 'specialty contracts'; (3) simple contracts, which may be either in writing or by parol, or may arise by implication of law from the acts of the parties. All simple contracts require a consideration to support them.

Contracts are also distinguished into executed and executory: executed, where nothing remains to be done by either party, and where the transaction is completed at the moment that the arrangement is made; as where an article is sold and delivered, and payment for it is made on the spot; executory, where some future act is to be done; as where an agreement is made to build a house in six months, or to do an act on or before some future day, or to lend money upon a certain interest payable at a future time.

There is also another distinction, namely, that between entire and severable contracts. An entire contract is one the consideration of which is entire on both sides. The entire fulfilment of the promise by either is a condition to the fulfilment of any part of the promise by the other. Whenever, therefore, there is a contract to pay a gross sum for a certain and definite consideration, the contract is entire. 'If a man engages to carry a box of cigars from London to Birmingham, it is an entire contract, and he cannot throw the cigars out of the carriage half-way there, and ask for half the money; or if a shoemaker agrees to make a pair of shoes, he cannot offer you one shoe, and ask you to pay one half the price' (Re Hall, (1878) 9 Ch. D. p. 545, per Jessel, M.R.). A severable contract, on the other hand, is one the consideration of which is, by its terms, susceptible of apportionment on either side, so as to correspond to the unascertained consideration on the other side, as a contract to pay a person the worth of his services so long as he will do certain work; or to give a certain price for every bushel of so much corn as corresponds to a sample. As to the evidence required to prove certain kinds of contracts, see FRAUDS, STATUTE OF; Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), s. 17, Copyright Act, 1911. Acknowledgments of debt barred by the Statute of Limitations. Representations as to credit, 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, s. 1; guarantee, Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 13. L. P. Act, 1925, s. 40, partly replacing s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds and Companies Act, 1929, and as to contracts generally, see the works on Contracts of Addison, Anson, Chitty, Leake, Pollock, Pothier, or Story. See also CONSIDERATION, COMMON

SEAL, CORPORATION, COMPANY, ILLEGALITY, IMPOSSIBILITY.

Contract, Breach of, Inducement of. In the case of seamen it is by s. 236 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, an offence to persuade or attempt to persuade seamen or apprentices to desert or absent themselves from duty. As to whether such inducement can, apart from any statutory provision, be an actionable wrong, see Lumley v. Gye, (1853) 2 E. & B. 216, and Temperton v. Russell, 1893, 1 Q. B. 715; but the principles laid down in these cases were commented on in Allen v. Flood, 1898, A. C. 1. An act done by a person in contemplation or furtherance of a 'trade dispute,' q.v. as defined by the Trades Disputes and Trade Unions Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 22), is not actionable on the ground only that it induces some other person to break a contract of employment (Trade Disputes Act, 1906, s. 3).

Contract for Sale. A sale implies a consideration in money or money's worth in return for the thing sold and consequently consideration is an integral part of a contract for sale. The legal incidents of a contract for sale of goods have been embodied and codified in the Sale of Goods Act, 1893. See SALE.

Contract for Sale of Land. The incidents of a contract for sale of land are regulated partly by statute and partly by the practice of conveyancers. A contract for sale of land must be in writing, L. P. Act, 1925, s. 40. See FRAUDS, STATUTE OF. If the contract is a simple, unconditional, or open contract for sale of land, it is implied that the vendor is to make a good title to the land for an estate in fee simple free from incumbrances. Hughes v. Parker, 8 M. & W. 344. He is under an obligation to show a good title (in ordinary circumstances for the thirty years preceding the date of contract, see ABSTRACT), and to prove that title by sufficient evidence. The expenses of showing the title, i.e., the abstract, falls on the vendor and so also the expenses of production of material documents in his possession or in that of his trustees and mortgagees. The expenses of production for verification of those which are not in such possession are to be borne by the purchaser, L. P. Act, 1925, s. 45. It is incumbent upon the vendor to disclose the incumbrances, if any, material to the title on the land such as leases, mortgages, and easements, rights and defects of title which could not have been discovered by inspection of the property, Hardman v. Child, 28 C. D. 712, and on that account it has sometimes been said that a contract for sale of land is a contract uberrimæ fidei. This doctrine apparently only relates to the title; the rule caveat emptor is generally applicable to the physical nature or qualities of the land sold, apart from any representations or the plain and expressed intentions of the contract. From the date of the contract of sale the property belongs in equity to the purchaser and is at the purchaser's risk, see INSURANCE, but until the date of completion or other agreed data such as when a good title has been shown the fruits belong to the vendor and the outgoings are payable by him and he is under a duty to take reasonably good care of the property on behalf of the purchaser. From and after that date the vendor becomes accountable for the rents and profits, and the purchaser as a rule is accountable for interest on the unpaid price. See further CONDITIONS OF SALE, VENDORS LIEN, NOTICE, LAND CHARGES.

Contracting out of a statute. In accordance with the maxim, Quilibet potest [or Cuiuslibet licet] renunciare juri pro se introducto, persons for whose benefit a statute has been passed may contract with others in such a manner as to deprive themselves of the benefit of the statute, as, for instance, the benefit of the Employers Liability Act, 1880; see Griffiths v. Earl of Dudley, (1882) 9 Q. B. D. 357.

Certain Acts prohibit 'contracting out' or impose limitations. For example, by s. 1 (3) of the Workmens Compensation Act, 1925, contracting out of the Act is allowed upon the certificate of the Registrar of Friendly Societies that a proposed scheme of compensation is not less favourable to the workmen than the scheme of compensation provided by the Act. See also s. 45 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923; and s. 146 (12) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, which provides for relief against the forfeiture of a lease; and also ss. 95 and 96 as to mortgages which exclude contracting out, whereas s. 93 (1) allows it. Again, s. 9 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, excludes contracting out except for adequate consideration. See CONTRACT, FREEDOM OF.

Contract, Freedom of. Modern legislation has frequently interfered with freedom of contract, as, e.g., by invalidating contracts exempting railway companies from their liabilities as carriers of goods by the 7th section of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, or depriving a tenant of his right to kill hares and rabbits under the Ground Game Act, 1880; and see a list of such invalidations in Chitty on Contracts, 18th ed., 778.

Contract Note, a short statement of the effect of a contract. The expression is defined in s. 77 (3) of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, as follows:—

For the purposes of this Part of this Act, the expression 'contract note' means the note sent by a broker or agent to his principal, or by any person who by way of business deals, or holds himself out as dealing, as a principal in any stock or marketable securities, advising the principal or the vendor or purchaser, as the case may be, of the sale or purchase of any stock or marketable security, but does not include a note sent by a broker or agent to his principal where the principal is himself acting as broker or agent for a principal, and is himself either a member of a stock exchange in the United Kingdom or a person who bonâ fide carries on the business of a stockbroker in the United Kingdom, and is registered as such in the list of stockbrokers kept by the Commissioners.

The same section imposes stamp duties on contract notes varying with the value of the stock or marketable security dealt with. Thus if the value is between 5*l.* and 100*l.* the stamp is 6*d.*, while the maximum is 1*l.* for values exceeding 20,000*l.* The duties may be denoted by adhesive stamps, and may be added to the charge for brokerage or agency.

Contract of Benevolence, a contract made for the benefit of one of the contracting parties only, as a mandate or deposit.

Contradiction in Terms, a phrase of which the parts are expressly inconsistent, as e.g., 'murder but not wilful,' 'a fee-simple for life.'

Contrafaction, a counterfeiting.—Blount.

Contramandatio placiti, a respiting or giving a defendant further time to answer, or a countermand of what was formerly ordered.—Leg. Hen. 1, c. 59.

Contramandatum, a lawful excuse, which a defendant in a suit by attorney alleges for himself to show that the plaintiff has no cause of complaint.—Blount.

Contrapositio, a plea or answer.

Contrarients, used temp. Edw. 2, to signify those who were opposed to the king, though it was not thought fit, in respect of their great power, to call them rebels or traitors.—Jac. Law Dict.

Contratenere, to withhold.

Contravention, an act done in violation of a legal condition or obligation; particularly any act by an heir of entail in opposition to the provisions of the deed of entail; also, the action founded on the breach of law-burrows.

—Bell's Dict.

Contribution, the performance by each of two or more persons, jointly liable by contract or otherwise, of his share of the liability. It frequently arises between sureties, who are bound for the same principal, when, upon his default, one of them is compelled to pay the money, or to perform any other obligation for which they all became bound; the surety, who has paid the whole, being entitled to receive contribution from all the others, or from the solvent sureties, if any of them become insolvent, for what he has done in relieving them from a common burthen. See Dering v. Earl of Winchelsea, (1787) 1 Cox, 318; 1 W. & T. L. C. and notes; Rowlatt on Principal and Surety.

By the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 97), s. 5, a co-surety or co-debtor is entitled on payment of the debt to a transfer of the securities held by the creditor.

Legatees are sometimes compelled to refund and contribute for the payment of debts. In like manner, contribution lies between partners for any excess, which has been paid by one partner beyond his share, if, upon the winding-up of the partnership affairs, such a balance appears in his favour; or if, upon a dissolution, he has been compelled to pay any sum for which he ought to be indemnified. It also lies between joint-tenants, tenants-in-common, and part owners of ships, and other chattels, for all charges and expenditures incurred, for the common benefit.—1 Story's Equity, 393-415. So there is contribution between co-defendants in contract, if the goods of one be taken by fi. fa. for the whole amount of judgment.

There was no contribution among wrongdoers (Merryweather v. Nixan, (1799) 8 T. R. 186; 2 Sm. L. C.), unless the person seeking contribution did not know that he was doing an unlawful act (Clerk and Lindsell on Torts; Palmer v. Wick, etc., Co., 1894, A. C. 318), or a special right of action existed by statute, as by s. 37 of the Companies Act, 1929; but see LAW REFORM. In equity, however, there may be contribution as between trustees who have concurred in a breach of trust (Blyth v. Fladgate, 1891, 1 Ch. 337, and cases there cited).

In an action in the High Court, where a defendant claims to be entitled to contribution over against any other person, such other person may be brought in as a 'third party' and relief obtained against him. See THIRD PARTY.

Contributio facienda, a writ where tenants in common were bound to do some act, and one was put to the whole burthen, to compel the rest to make contribution.—Reg. Brev. 175 : Fitz. N. B. 162.

Contributory, a person liable to contribute to the assets of a company in the event of it being wound up. See also Re Aidall Ltd., 1933, Ch. 323. Two lists of contributories are prepared by the liquidator, viz., one (the 'A list') of those who are shareholders at the time of the winding-up order, and who are primarily liable to contribute, and another (the 'B list') of those who have ceased to be shareholders but have been shareholders within the twelve months previously, and who are liable in a secondary degree. A shareholder may sometimes avoid liability by transfer to a pauper. See Re Discoveries Finance Corporation, 1910, 1 Ch. 312, but see Hyam's Case, (1859) 1 De 9 F. & J. 75. Directors with unlimited liability of a limited company are (in addition) liable as if they were members of an unlimited company unless they have ceased to hold office for a year or upwards before the commencement of the winding-up. See generally Companies Act, 1929, ss. 157-192; COMPANY, and LIMITED LIABILITY.

Contributory Mortgage, a mortgage in which the money secured is advanced by two or more lenders in separate amounts. It is not available for trustees in the absence of an express power (Webb v. Jonas, (1888) 39 Ch. D. 660).

Contributory Negligence, negligence on the part of a plaintiff disentitling him to recover. 'Sometimes, however, he [the defendant] is driven to admit that he was guilty of some negligence, which may have been one of the causes conducing to the plaintiff's injury. But at the same time he asserts that the plaintiff was himself negligent, and that it was this negligence on the part of the plaintiff, and not his own, that was the proximate or decisive cause of the injury for which the plaintiff now seeks to recover damages from him. This is called the defence of contributory negligence.'—Odgers on the Common Law, 2nd ed. p. 497. See NEGLIGENCE.

Controller [fr. contrôle, Fr., the copy of a roll of accounts], an overseer or officer appointed to examine and verify the accounts of other officers, also Controller under Patents Act, 1911.

Contubernium, the union of slaves with their masters' consent; the children of such unions were the property of their parents' owners.—Sand. Just.

Contumace capiendo. Excommunication in all cases of contempt in the spiritual courts is discontinued by 53 Geo. 3, c. 127, s. 2, and in lieu thereof, where a lawful citation or sentence has not been obeyed, the judge has power, after a certain period, to pronounce such person contumacious and in contempt, and to signify the same to the Court of Chancery, whereupon a writ de contumace capiendo issues from the High Court of Justice (Chancery Division).—2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 93; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 93, and Clergy Discipline Act, 1892, s. 7. See Ex parte Bell Cor., (1887) 20 Q. B. D. 1; CONTEMPT OF COURT.

Contumacy (contumacia), a refusal to appear in court when legally summoned; or disobedience to the rules and orders of a court.

Consuance of Pleas, a privilege that a city or town has to hold pleas. See COGNIZANCE.

Consuant [fr. connaissant, Fr.], knowing or understanding.

Convent, the fraternity of an abbey or priory, as societas is the number of fellows in a college. More generally applied to a sisterhood of religious nuns in the Roman Catholic Church.

Conventicle, a private assembly or meeting for the exercise of religion; forbidden by Canons 12, 13, and 73. See DISSENSERS.

By the Conventicle Act, 22 Car. 2, c. 1, repealed by 52 Geo. 3, c. 155, all meetings of five or more persons, exclusive of the family, for nonconforming worship, were prohibited.

Conventio, an agreement or covenant.

Conventio in unum, the agreement between the two parties to a contract upon the sense of the contract proposed. It is an essential part of the contract, following the pollicitation or proposal emanating from the one, and followed by the agreement of the other.—Civil Law. If the second party does not assent to the proposal in the sense in which it is made, he is not bound by his assent unless his mistake (q.v.) is unreasonable.

Conventio privatorum non potest publico juri derogare. Wing. 746.—(An agreement of private persons cannot affect public right.)

Convention, an extraordinary assembly of the Houses of Lords and Commons, without the assent or summons of the sovereign. It can only be justified ex necessitate rei, as in the case of the Convention Parliament which restored Charles II., and that which disposed of the crown and kingdom to William and Mary in 1688. Also a treaty or agreement with a foreign government. See EXTRADITION.

Conventional Estates, estates for life which are created by the express acts of the parties, i.e., by deed or grant, in contradistinction to those which are legal, or created by construction and operation of law.—2 Bl. Com. 120.

Conventione, a writ for the breach of any covenant in writing, whether real or personal.—Reg. Brev. 115; Fitz. N. B. 145.

Conventual Church, one which consists of regular clerks professing some order of religion; or of dean and chapter; or other societies of spiritual men.

Conventuals, religious men united in a convent or religious house.—Cowel.

Converse (in logic), the transposition of the subject and predicate in a proposition. The proposition 'X is Y,' converted, becomes 'Y is X.' 'By far the most fertile source of purely syllogistic fallacies is the tendency of the mind to convert universal affirmatives without limitation.'—Bain's Logic, Deduction, p. 114.

Conversion. Where a man who is, lawfully or unlawfully, in possession of the goods of another deals with them in a manner which is inconsistent with the dominion of the owner over them, he is guilty of a conversion. It must be 'an unauthorized act which deprives another of his property permanently or for an indefinite time' (Hiort v. Bott, (1874) L. R. 9 Ex. 89). The taking possession of the goods of another is a trespass, as distinct from a conversion, though the latter term is often used to include both. Refusal to restore the goods is prima facie sufficient evidence of a conversion, though it does not amount to a conversion.—10 Rep. 56. See Fouldes v. Willoughby, (1841) 8 M. & W. 540; Hollins v. Fowler, (1875) L. R. 7 H. L. 757; Union Credit Bank Cases, 1899, 2 Q. B. 205; Clerk and Lindsell on Torts, 7th ed., ch. xi.; and TROVER.

Conversion, Equitable. It is an established principle that money directed to be employed in the purchase of realty, and realty directed to be sold and turned into money, are considered in equity as that species of property into which they are directed to be converted; and this, in whatever manner the direction is given; whether by will, or contract, marriage articles, settlement, or otherwise; and whether the money is actually deposited, or only covenanted to be paid, or whether the land is actually conveyed, or only agreed to be conveyed (Fletcher v. Ashburner, (1779) 1 Bro. C. C. 497; 1 W. & T. L. C.). This principle is governed by the doctrine of equity, that that which ought to be done shall be deemed as actually done.

The property thus equitably transmuted by anticipation will possess all the qualities, incidents, and peculiarities of that kind of property into which it is destined to be changed. See 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74, s. 71.

But the beneficiary, or all the beneficiaries together, provided they are sui juris and unanimous, may elect to take the property in its existing shape before the actual conversion has taken place, and the property is then said to be 'reconverted' (Re Davidson, (1879) 11 Ch. D. 341). Slight evidence of an intention so to elect will be sufficient (Re Lewis, (1885) 30 Ch. D. 656). Thus, when a person entitled to the fee simple of an estate to be purchased with trust money causes some of the securities for the money to be changed and held in trust for himself, his executors and administrators (Lingen v. Souray, (1711) 1 P. Wms. 172); or where a person entitled absolutely to the money to arise by the sale of real estate makes a lease of the estate, reserving rent payable to himself, his heirs and assigns (Crabtree v. Bramble, (1747) 3 Atk. 680), these circumstances have been considered to amount to an election.

The nature of the property cannot be altered by the election of a trustee or an infant. Before 1926 money equitably converted into land descended to the heir upon an intestacy and land converted into money to the personal representatives. The importance of this distinction has been diminished in the case of deaths occurring after 1925, the rule of descent of realty and personalty having been assimilated, s. 45, A. E. Act, 1925, except as to the rights of descent under the old law of the heirs of a lunatic who had attained the age of 21 in 1925 and died intestate without having recovered his testamentary capacity (s. 51 (2) ibid.) and otherwise, cf. ss. 51 (1) and 51 (3) ibid. The doctrine is still of importance in regard to the question whether the property is subject to a trust for sale or whether it is settled land and the rights of persons entitled as residuary devisees or legatees under wills or settlements.—Consult Lewin, Goddefroy, or Underhill on Trusts.

Conversion of Shares into Stock and Reconversion. This may be effected; see Companies Act, 1929, s. 50.

Conversion of Stock, the change of it from one denomination to another, generally from a higher to a lower, as was done in the case of a small part of the National Debt, under the National Debt (Conversion of Stock) Acts, 1884 and 1933, and nearly 2000 millions of War Loan, 1929-1947, by the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1931.

Conveyance, an instrument which transfers property from one person to another, defined for the purposes of the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 205, as including 'mortgage charge, lease, assent, vesting declaration, vesting instrument, disclaimer, release and every other assurance of property or of any interest therein by any instrument, except a will.' See CONVEYANCING ACT; DEED; LAW OF PROPERTY; TRUSTS.

Conveyancers, persons who, being neither barristers nor solicitors, employ themselves solely in the preparation of deeds or assurances of property. They must, by the Stamp Act, 1891, s. 44, and Sched. I, take out yearly a certificate upon which a stamp duty of 4*l.* 10*s.* for the first three years, and 9*l.* afterwards, is payable if they carry on business in London, Edinburgh, or Dublin, and 3*l.* for the first three years, and 6*l.* afterwards, if they carry on business elsewhere.

Conveyancing, the art of the alienation of property, by means of appropriate instruments or 'conveyances.' See next title.

Conveyancing Acts. See LAW OF PROPERTY. These Acts, of which the principal were the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 78), the C. Act, 1881, as amended by the Acts of 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 39), 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 13), 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 37), were all repealed, and partly replaced and extended by the Law of Property Act, 1925. The Conveyancing Act, 1881, was a simplifying and codifying Act introduced by Lord Cairns. It embodied the provisions of previous statutes, the effect of legal decisions, and the practice of conveyancers much of which had already been crystallized in common form. Some of the old forms were very lengthy, and required to be inserted with or without modification in every important conveyance of land. The Act of 1881 related inter alia to contracts, conveyances, mortgages, leases, dispositions by married women, or on behalf of infants or other persons under incapacity.

Conveyancing Counsel. The Lord Chancellor may nominate any number of conveyancing counsel in actual practice, not less than six who have practised as such for ten years at least, to be the conveyancing counsel upon whose opinion the Court or any judge thereof may act; see Court of Chancery Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 80), s. 40; Dan. Ch. Pr. No special provision is made for these counsel by the Jud. Acts, 1873 and 1875; except in so far as they can retain their offices as officers of a court whose jurisdiction is transferred to the Supreme Court (Jud. Act, 1873, ss. 77 et. seq.). See now Judicature Act, 1925, s. 217. See R. S. C. 1883, Ord. LI., rr. 7 to 13.

Convictum, anything which publicly insults another.—Civil Law.

Convict, a person found guilty of a crime or offence alleged against him, either by a verdict of a jury or other legal decision. The Forfeiture Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 23), for abolishing forfeitures for treason and felony enables the Crown to appoint administrators of the property of any convict sentenced to death or penal servitude for any treason or felony. The administrator has an absolute discretionary power of dealing with the convict's property (Carr v. Anderson, 1903, 2 Ch. 279).

Conviction, the act of a legal tribunal adjudging a person guilty of a criminal offence. Thus a person will have been 'convicted' even though no punishment follows, e.g., where he is let out on his own recognizances to come up for judgment when called on (R. v. Blaby, 1894, 2 Q. B. 170). As to the powers of justices to convict summarily, see the Summary Jurisdiction Acts of 1848 and 1879, amended by the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914, Criminal Justice Act, 1925, and the Summary Jurisdiction Rules of 1886. Schedule to Summary Jurisdiction Rules, 1915, and Summary Jurisdiction Rules, 1932, 1933. Consult Paley on Summary Convictions.

When a person previously convicted is tried for a subsequent offence, proof of his previous conviction cannot be given until after a finding of guilty of such subsequent offence, unless evidence of his good character be given.—Previous Conviction Act, 1836, (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 111); Larceny Act, 1861, s. 116. A previous conviction is proved by producing a record or extract of it, and by giving proof of the identity of the person against whom the previous conviction is sought to be proved with the person appearing in the record or extract of conviction to have been convicted. Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 112), s. 18. And see PREVIOUS CONVICTION; PROBATION

Convivium, the same among the laity as procuratio with the clergy, viz., when a tenant, by reason of his tenure, is bound to provide meat and drink for his lord once or oftener in the year.—Blount.

Convocation, an assembly of the clergy protected from molestation by 8 Hen. 6, c. 1. Its purpose is stated to be the enactment of canon law, subject to the license and authority of the sovereign (as required by the Act of Submission (25 Hen. 8, c. 19)), and the examination and censure of all heretical and schismatical books and persons. It is held during the session of parliament, and is convened by the sovereign. There are two convocations, one for the province of Canterbury, the other for that of York. Convocation consists of an upper and a lower house. In the upper sit the bishops and in the lower all the deans, the senior archdeacons, and the proctors of the clergy. A canon made in 1922 provides in detail for the consolidation of the lower houses. Convocation, by express license from the Sovereign, may legislate by making canons, which bind the clergy only. See Steph. Com., book 4, c. vi.; Hook's Church Dictionary, tit. 'Convocation'; Reg. v. Archbishop of York, (1888) 20 Q. B. D. 740. See NATIONAL ASSEMBLY OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Convoy, ships of war which accompany merchantmen in time of war, to protect them from the attacks of the enemy. There are five things essential to sailing with convoy:—viz. (1) It must be with a regular convoy under an officer appointed by government; (2) it must be from the place of rendezvous appointed by government; (3) it must be a convoy for the voyage; (4) the master of the ship must have sailing instructions from the commanding officer of the convoy; (5) the ship must depart and continue with the convoy till the end of the voyage, unless separated by necessity. See Naval Discipline Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 109), and s. 46 of the Naval Prize Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 25), by which the master of a ship deserting a convoy is liable to a penalty of 500*l.* and one year's imprisonment. See Hall or Wheaton on International Law.

Coolie, porter, labourer.—Indian.

Coopertio, the head or branches of a tree cut down; though coopertio arborum is rather the bark of timber trees felled, and the chumps and broken wood.—Cowel.

Coopertura, a thicket or covert of wood.—Chart. de Forest.

Co-ordinate and Subordinate are terms often applied as a test to ascertain the doubtful meaning of clauses in an Act of Parliament. If there be two, one of which is grammatically governed by the other, it is said to be subordinate to it; but if both are equally governed by some third clause, the two are called co-ordinate.

Coparceners or Parceners. The name given to persons who until 1926 inherited an inheritable estate by virtue of descents from the ancestor which conferred on them all an equal title to it. It arose by act of law only, i.e., by descent, which, in relation to this subject was of two kinds:—(1) Descent by the common law, which took place where an ancestor died intestate, leaving two or more females as his co-heiresses; these, according to the canon of real property inheritance, all took together as coparceners or parceners, the law of primogeniture not obtaining among women in equal relationship to their ancestor: they were, however, deemed to be one heir; and (2) descent by particular custom, as in the case of gavelkind lands, which descended to all the males in equal degree, as the sons, brothers, or uncles of the deceased intestate ancestor; in default of sons, they descended to all the daughters equally.

Coparceners had a unity though not an entirety, or necessarily an equality, of interest; if there were two only, each was properly entitled to the whole of a distinct moiety; and being seised in moiety there was no jus accrescendi between them, for on the death of one of them intestate, her moiety descended to her heir-at-law, who held, subject to curtesy (if any), with the surviving parcener in coparcenary, although such heir might be a male and a collateral. Indeed, their estates are held in coparcenary so long as they claimed by descent. As soon as any part was severed by conveyance, from the title of the remaining part, the part so severed was held in common.

Between the alienee and the other coparceners there was a tenancy in common. The remaining coparceners would, as between themselves, continue to hold in coparcenary.

They were seised both jointly and severally, and possessed a unity of title, but the estate might vest in them at different periods.

Coparcenary was like joint-tenancy so far as the same unity of title and similarity of interest was common to both, but they differed in this, that while coparceners always must have claimed by descent (for if two sisters purchased an estate to hold to them and their heirs they were not parceners, but joint-tenants), joint-tenants always claimed by act of parties.

This estate might be dissolved in any of the following modes :—

(1) By deed of partition, as

(a) Where coparceners agreed to divide the estate into equal parts in severalty, each to have a determinate portion.

(β) Where they appointed some third person to divide the estate, and after a division by him, each coparcener, according to seniority of age, or as should be agreed between them, selected her own portion. The privilege of seniority was in this case personal; for if the eldest sister were dead, her issue should not choose first, but the next sister. But if an advowson descended in coparcenary, and the sisters could not agree in the presentation, the eldest and her issue, nay, her husband, or her assigns, should present alone, before the younger. And the reason given is, that the former privilege of priority in choice upon a division arose from an act of her own, the agreement to make partition, and therefore was merely personal; the latter, of presenting to the living, arose from the act of the law, and was annexed not only to her person but to her estate also.

(λ) Where the eldest coparcener divided the estate, in which case she took the portion remaining after her sisters have made their choice.

(δ) Where they agreed to cast lots for their shares.

(2) By the alienation of one of the parties which destroyed the unity of title.

(3) By all the estate at last descending to one person, which reduced it to a severalty; and

(4) By a compulsory partition or sale under the Partition Acts. See PARTITION.

The legal estate in coparcenary was abolished by the L. P. Act, 1925, s. 1, the entirety of the legal estate becoming vested in trustees for sale under s. 34 of that Act, but as from the 1st January, 1926, coparceners retain all their equitable rights in the proceeds of sale and in the land until sold as equitable interests under s. 39 and the 1st Sched. Part I. of the Act. Further the future creation of equitable interests in coparcenary has been prevented by A. E. Act, 1925, s. 45, which abolished descent to the heir, since the tenure depended on that descent except in cases where the heir is still ascertainable by under the old law, under s. 132 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, see Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 51, or by descent (a) of an entailed estate in certain cases, and (b) on death of a lunatic who had attained 21 years of age in or before 1925, as provided by the A. E. Act, 1925, s. 51 (a). Coparceners in whom the legal estate was vested on the 1st January, 1926, in general, if not more than four in number, hold the legal estate as joint tenants upon the statutory trusts, see 1st Sched. Part II. of the Act. As to partition by the court or otherwise, see PARTITION.

Copartnership. See PARTNERSHIP.

Cope, a custom or tribute due to the Crown or lord of the soil, out of the lead mines in Derbyshire; also a hill, or the roof and covering of a house; a church vestment, by Canon 24 to be worn in cathedral churches by those that administer the Holy Communion.

Copeman, or Copesman, a chapman.

Copemate [fr. koopman, Du., fr. koop, chaffer, exchange], a merchant, a partner in merchandise.

Copia libelli deliberanda, a writ that lay where a man could not get a copy of a libel at the hands of a spiritual judge, to have the same delivered to him.—Ref. Brev. 51.

Coppa, a cop or cock of grass, hay, or corn, divided into titheable portions, that it may be more fairly and justly tithed.—Jac. Law Dict.

Copploe, or Copse, [fr. couper, Fr., to cut], a small wood, consisting of underwood, which may be cut at twelve or fifteen years' growth for fuel.

Copra, the dried kernel of the coco-nut, prepared and exported for the expression of coco-nut oil.—Orf. Dict.

Copula, the corporal consummation of marriage. See PER VERBA DE PRÆSENTI.—Copula (in logic), the link between subject and predicate contained in the verb.

Copy [copia, Lat.], the transcript or double of an original writing; as the copy of a patent charter, deed, etc. As to when copies certified or examined are admissible in evidence, see Taylor on Evidence, ss. 1323 et seq.

Copyhold. Tenure in copyhold has been abolished under the L. P. Acts, 1922 and 1925, and the Amending Acts of 1924 and 1926, but the greater part of the former title on this subject has been retained verbatim in view of the importance of the subject in examining titles. In the previous edition of this work, copyhold was described as a base tenure founded upon immemorial custom and usage; its origin is undiscoverable, but it is said to be the ancient villeinage modified and changed by the commutation of base services into specified rents, either in money or money's worth.

A copyhold estate is a parcel of the demesnes of a manor held at the lord's will, and according to the custom of such manor. The tenant may have the same quantities of interest in this tenure as he may enjoy in freeholds, as an estate in fee-simple or (by particular custom) fee-tail, or for life, and he may have only a chattel interest of an estate for years in it. By the custom of some manors, the estate devolves upon the heir on the ancestor's death, and is called a copyhold of inheritance. As far as the quantity and modification of interest are concerned, the tenant's estate partakes of the nature of a freehold, but because it is held by a base instead of a free tenure, it is called a copyhold. Viewing his estate, then, through the medium of its holding or tenure, the tenant is merely a tenant-at-will; but it is to be remarked that his tenancy-at-will must be according to custom, which always regulates the copyholder's interest, upon which interest the lord has no power whatever to encroach. Free copyholds or customary freeholds, however, are held according to the custom of the manor, and altogether independently of the will of the lord, while copyholds of base tenure are held merely at the lord's will. The law certainly considers the freehold to be in the lord (except in the case of strict customary freeholds, when the freehold is in the tenant), and the tenant to possess his customary estate according to the quantity of interest it is intended he should possess, but the law will protect the copyholder, and will not permit him to be at the will or wayward caprice of the lord. The minerals in copyhold land belong to the lord, and so does the timber, whence the maxim, 'The oak scorns to grow save on free land.'

There are four circumstances necessary to the existence of a copyhold estate:—(1) A manor; (2) a court; (3) the land must be parcel of the manor; and (4) it must have been demised or demisable by copy of court roll from time immemorial.

A manor is essentially necessary, for all copyholds must be parcels of manors; and so is a court, for a copyholder has no other evidence of his title than the rolls of the court, which he can inspect and take copies of to use as he may think proper; and the Court of Queen's Bench (now the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice) will order the lord to allow such inspection, and if the lord then refuse, he will be attached. There are two courts incident to every manor —a court baron or freeholder's court, and a customary court, which only relates to the copyholders, who form the homage and transact the necessary business, the lord or his steward presiding as judge. Although these courts are essentially distinct, yet they are usually held at the same time, and the same roll serves to record the proceedings of both. In the court-baron the suitors are judges. In the customary court the suitors are assistants to the lord, or his steward, who is the judge. It is obvious that the lands granted must be parcel of a manor, seeing that a copyhold is part of the demesnes of a manor, but it is not absolutely necessary that the lands should continue parcel of the manor. And because this tenure derives its whole force from custom, the lands must have been demisable by copy of court roll from time immemorial, for the two pillars, upon which every custom rests, are common usage and existence time out of mind. No copyhold estate can, therefore, be created at the present day.

Copyhold customs are divided into two species:—(1) General, which extend to all manors in which there are copyholders, and are warranted by the common law, and of which the courts of law take judicial notice, without being specially pleaded; and (2) Particular, which prevail in some manors only, and which must be specially pleaded. They are construed strictly, and when they are contrary to reason, morality, or justice, or cannot be reduced to a certainty, the courts will not give effect to them.

The following services and incidents are by general custom annexed to copyholds:—

(1) Fealty, but the oath of fealty is now generally resented.

(2) Suit of Court, for every copyholder is bound to attend the lord's court, and be sworn of the homage.

(3) The copyholder is entitled to estovers, i.e., housebote, hedgebote, and ploughbote, unless restrained by particular custom.

(4) He cannot commit any kind of waste, unless there exists a particular custom to warrant it.

(5) Copyholds of inheritance are descendible according to the rules of the common law, unless the custom be otherwise, in which case custom must prevail. Subject to any such custom, the alterations effected by the Inheritance Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 106), are applicable to this species of tenure.

(6) Copyholds are alienated by surrender, according to general custom, followed by admittance at the hands of the lord or his steward, and they are devisable.

(7) A copyholder by general custom may make a lease for a year, and with the lord's licence he may lease for any number of years.

(8) Copyholds are liable to all sorts of debts, by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 104, and the Judgments Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110).

(9) The widow of a copyholder, according to a particular custom, is entitled to a certain portion of her husband's lands, which varies in quantity, as a half, a third, a fifth, or the whole. It is called her free-bench. It is generally an estate for life, but is forfeited by a second marriage or incontinency.

The widow's free-bench is barred by a jointure, whether legal or equitable; or by the alienation of the copyhold lands by the husband, or even by an agreement to convey, or by forfeiture, or by a grant of the freehold by the lord to the husband, for then the copyhold is destroyed, or by a devise expressed to be in satisfaction of it.

(10) Copyholds, by special custom, are subject to curtesy, and, by the custom of some manors, the husband is entitled to curtesy, though he have no issue by his wife, but is forfeitable on a second marriage.

(11) Upon every descent of a copyhold estate, a sum of money or fine is due to the lord from the heir upon his admission, as a consideration for the renewal of a grant. If the heir refuse to be admitted, the lord may seize the estate to his own use. The lord is also entitled to fines upon all voluntary grants, upon the admission of tenants by the curtesy, the free-bench, and indeed upon alienation generally, the only exception being in case of bankruptcy. No fine is due upon the admission of a remainderman, unless by special custom, because the admission of the tenant for life is generally deemed the admission of the remainderman, nor are fines due upon a mere change of the tenant's interest, nor upon a covenant or agreement to surrender, because it is only due upon an actual admittance. Tenants in common pay this fine apportionably, each according to his share. Joint-tenants and coparceners pay a single fine for all. The practice as to the payment of the fine on the admittance of joint-tenants is this: two years' value is paid for the first life, half of that on the second, and a half of that half on the third, and so on, according to the number of the tenants. Joint tenants succeed each other by right of survivorship and without a new admittance, and fines are not due but upon admittance;

therefore, of the general rule to the case of joint-tenants would be unfair to the lord. By the custom of many manors, fines are due from copyholders on every change of the lord which happens by the act of God. The quantum of all these fines is not to exceed two years' value of the lands, which is recoverable by action of debt. See FINES IN COPYHOLDS.

(12) Besides a fine, a heriot is due to the lord on his tenant's death, though he be only a tenant for life, provided he be a legal and not an equitable tenant. It is usually the best beast or averium; it is sometimes the best chattel, as a jewel or a piece of plate, but it must be a personal chattel. Heriots are in some manors commuted to a customary composition in money, but it must be an indisputably ancient custom. See HERIOT.

Copyholds were forfeited to the lord of the manor, and not to the Crown, unless by the express words of an Act of Parliament, by the tenant being attainted of treason or felony; and are still so by his attempting to alienate his estate by any mode which is contrary to custom, or by committing any kind of waste, or by disclaiming the tenure, or by refusing to perform the services.

Copyholds may be enfranchised, i.e., converted into free tenure, in several ways:—

(1) If the copyholder surrender his estate to the rightful lord, to the use of the lord.

(2) If the copyholder release all his right and interest to the lord.

(3) If the lord convey the freehold of the copyhold to a stranger, and the copyholder release to the stranger.

(4) If the lord convey to the copyholder the land for an estate of freehold, or even for a term of years.

(5) The efforts of the Legislature have been much directed to the facilitation of enfranchisement, but the Copyhold Act, 1841 (4 & 5 Vict. c. 35), and its amending Acts were purely permissive, and merely facilitated the commutation and enfranchisement by the establishment of the 'Copyhold Commissioners' as a tribunal to determine differences between lords and tenants.

The Act of 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 51), afterwards amended by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 94 (the Act of 1858), and more materially by the Act of 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 73), provided for compulsory enfranchisement by either lord or tenant, preserving, however, under s. 43 of the Act of 1852, the lord's right of way and sporting and to minerals, and also the lord's right in case of escheat for want of heirs.

By the Act of 1887 a notice of the tenant's right to enfranchise 'upon paying the lord's compensation and the steward's fees' was directed to be given by the steward of the manor to every tenant admitted in or after 1888, rent-charges were made redeemable, limited owners of enfranchised land might charge the land with the money paid for the enfranchisement, and the 'Land Commissioners' were directed (see s. 30) to 'frame and cause to be printed and published such a scale of compensation for the enfranchisement of land as in their judgment would be fair and just and would facilitate enfranchisement,' and also a scale of allowances to valuers, and 'all such directions for the guidance of lord, tenant, and valuers, as the commissioners might deem necessary,' it being expressly provided that these scales were 'to be for guidance only.'

The Copyhold Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 46), as amended, consolidated the above Acts without any amendment of the law, by substituting the Board of Agriculture (q.v.) for the Land Commissioners in accordance with the Board of Agriculture Act, 1889.

Under the Law of Property Acts, 1922, (Amendment) 1924, 1925, and (Amendment) 1926, copyhold and customary tenures have been converted into a qualified form of freehold or leasehold, land formerly copyhold being in any event still subject to certain rights of the lord of the manor in regard to which the parties are free to make their own terms. These rights are the lord's right (if any) to mines, minerals, limestone, clay, stone and gravel pits or quarries; also rights, franchises, royalties, or privileges of the lord in respect of fairs, markets, chase, warren, fishery or other rights of shooting, fishing, hunting or fowling. But subject to the lord's rights to minerals and access thereto, the enfranchised owner may disturb or remove the soil so far as is necessary for the purpose of making roads or drains or erecting buildings or obtaining water, L. P. Act, 1922, 12th Sched., s. 5.

Notwithstanding enfranchisement copyholds were, until 1935, still subject until extinguishment to the manorial incidents: (1) Quit and Chief Rents; (2) Fines, Reliefs and Heriots; (3) Customary or reasonable fines on alienation (see s. 130 (1) of the L. P. Act, 1922 and 13th Sched. Part II. para. 13 ibid., and L. P. Amendment Acts, 1924 and 1926); (4) Forfeiture upon any ground subject to right of relief (L. P. Act, 1922, s. 132); (5) The lord's right to timber, all, if he had the right of entry: half, if he had no right of entry; (6) All fees payable to the steward. These manorial incidents could be extinguished by compensating the lord either by agreement with or notice to him at any time before the 1st January, 1936. Compensation might be paid in cash within thirty days after agreement or if exceeding 20*l.* by agreement or by 20 annual instalments including interest at 5½ per cent. secured by a charge on the enfranchised land, or by mortgage (L. P. Act, 1922, s. 139). In exceptional cases the compensation may be agreed with 5½ per cent. interest, under Part II. of the Copyhold Act, 1894 (L. P. Act, 1922, s. 138 (3)). No stamp is required if the agreement is made before 1st January, 1936, L. P. Act, 1922, s. 139 (1) (vii.).

After 1935 these incidents became extinguished automatically unless the Minister of Agriculture extend the time, but a right to partial compensation for loss of profits or rights accruing before 1936 is still available.

Unless and until the manorial incidents have been extinguished the legal estate will not pass upon conveyance unless the assurance has been produced to the steward of the manor within six months from the date of execution and duly endorsed by him, see L. P. Act, 1922, ss. 129 and 130. Subject to these provisions copyholds are now held as freeholds or leaseholds. The latter include life estates which have been converted to terms for ninety years determinable by notice upon cesser of the life or lives, see L. P. Acts, 1922, s. 133 and 1925, s. 149; and where leases for lives or years were perpetually renewable by custom the tenure is converted into a fee simple, L. P. Act, 1922, s. 135. Under s. 145 of the L. P. Act, 1925, leases with a perpetual right of renewal by lease or grant from the copyholder have been converted into long terms of 2,000 years. All customary modes of descent were abolished in regard to deaths happening after 1925 and also all customary modes of conveyance made after the same date.

The scale of compensation payable upon extinguishment of manorial incidents is regulated by L. P. Act, 1922, Part VI. and the 13th Sched. as amended by the L. P. Acts, 1924 and 1926, and see also S. R. & O., 1925, No. 810, Manorial Incidents (Extinguishment) Rules. The 14th Sched. of the L. P. Act of 1922, sets out the scale of the steward's compensation, and solicitor's remuneration is regulated by S. R. & O., 1926, No. 1071, L. 24.

The Court Rolls and other manorial documents have been placed under the superintendence of the Master of the Rolls, but the possession and care of these documents remains in the lord of the manor (L. P. Act, 1924, 2nd Sched.). Consult Scriven on Copyholds, Elton on Copyholds, and Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Copyhold.'

Copyhold Commissioners. The tithe commissioners for England and Wales, appointed under the Copyhold Act of 1841 to be the commissioners for carrying that Act into execution.

Copyhold, Inclosure, and Tithe Commissioners, a board constituted under the Inclosure Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 118). The powers of these commissioners, of the copyhold commissioners, and of the tithe commissioners, were by s. 48 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, vested in one board called 'the Land Commissioners,' whose powers were in their turn transferred to the Board of Agriculture (now the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries), by the Board of Agriculture Act, 1889.

Copyright, an incorporeal right, being the exclusive privilege of printing, reprinting, selling, and publishing his own original work which the statute law first gave to an author in 1709, by 8 Anne, c. 19, for the term of fourteen years. Whether the right existed at Common Law is a long-vexed and still undetermined question. See Jeffries v. Boosey, (1854) 4 H. L. C. 815. There is no copyright in an illegal or immoral publication (Southey v. Sherwood, (1817) 2 Mer. 435; Stockdale v. Onwhyn, (1826) 5 B. & C. 173).

The law of copyright now depends mainly on the Copyright Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 46) (July 1, 1912), and 'no person shall be entitled to copyright or any similar right in any literary, dramatic, musical, or artistic work, whether published or unpublished, otherwise than under and in accordance with the provisions of this Act, or of any other statutory enactment for the time being in force' (s. 31).

By sub-s. 2 of s. 1 of this Act 'copyright' is thus defined:—

'For the purposes of this Act "copyright" means the sole right to produce or reproduce the work or any substantial part thereof in any material form whatsoever, to perform, or in the case of a lecture to deliver, the work or any substantial part thereof in public; if the work is unpublished, to publish the work or any substantial part thereof, and shall include the sole right—

'(a) to produce, reproduce, perform or publish any translation of the work (see Byrne v. Statist Co., 1914, 1 K. B. 622);

'(b) in the case of a dramatic work, to convert it into a novel or other non-dramatic work;

'(c) in the case of a novel or other non-dramatic work, or of an artistic work, to convert it into a dramatic work, by way of performance in public or otherwise;

'(d) in the case of a literary, dramatic, or musical work, to make any record, perforated roll, cinematograph film, or other contrivance by means of which the work may be mechanically performed or delivered, and to authorize any such acts as aforesaid.'

Save as otherwise expressly provided by the Act, the term for which copyright subsists is the life of the author and fifty years after his death (ss. 3, 31, 24). The owner may assign his right wholly or partially, and may grant any interest in it by license, but any such assignment or grant must be in writing and signed by him or his agent (s. 5 (2)); and there is a provision for the granting of compulsory licenses, after the death of the author, in certain cases (s. 4). The author of a work is prima facie the first owner of the copyright; but see s. 5. As to what acts amount to an infringement, see s. 2; and as to the civil remedies for infringement, see ss. 6-10; in certain cases a summary remedy is provided (ss. 11-13). Special provisions apply in the case of joint-authors (s. 16), posthumous works (s. 17), Government publications (s. 18), mechanical contrivances for reproducing sounds (s. 19); and see Chappell & Co. v. Columbia Gramophone Co., 1914, 2 Ch. 745; Monckton v. Pathé Frères, 1914, 1 K. B. 395), political speeches (s. 20); and see Waller v. Lane, 1900, A. C. 539; photographs (s. 21), designs registrable under the Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (s. 22), works of foreign authors (s. 23), and existing works (s. 24). As to the application of the Act to British Possessions, see ss. 25-28; and as to the position with respect to copyright of a trustee in bankruptcy, see Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 60. The Act of 1911 repeals a great number of statutes relating to copyright, but the Musical (Summary Proceedings) Copyright Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7, c. 15), and the Musical Copyright Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 36), authorizing the seizure and destruction of pirated copies, are left unrepealed; and so are s. 7 and (with slight alteration) s. 8 of the Fine Arts Copyright Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 68), under which penalties may be recovered for infringement of copyright. As to International Copyright, see Part II. of the Copyright Act, 1911. International copyright has in modern times been very generally recognized, but until 1891 the United States of America refused to recognize it. In that year, however, an Act was passed granting it, but with the very serious restriction, in the case of books, that the books must have been printed from type set within the limits of the United States. See the Treaty of Berne, and Sarpy v. Holland, 1908, 2 Ch. 198.

Consult Macgillivray's Copyright Act, 1911 ; and Copinger on Copyright ; and see PUBLISHER.

Coraage, an extraordinary imposition, upon some unusual occasion ; it seems to be of certain measures of corn.—Blount.

Coram nobis (before us ourselves) [the king, i.e., in the King's Bench].

Coram non iudice (in presence of a person not a judge). When a suit is brought and determined in a Court which has no jurisdiction in the matter, it is said to be coram non iudice, and the judgment is void.

Coram paribus (before his peers).

Cord of Wood, a quantity of wood eight feet long, four feet broad, and four feet high.

Cordwalner, or Cordliner [fr. cordonnier, Fr., fr. cordouan, Old Fr., originally leather from Cordova], a shoemaker.

Co-respondent, the man charged with adultery. The Judicature Act, 1925, s. 177, enacts that, on a petition for divorce presented by the husband or in the answer of a husband praying for divorce, the petitioner or respondent, as the case may be, shall make the alleged adulterer a co-respondent unless he is excused by the Court on special grounds from so doing. On a petition for divorce presented by the wife the Court may, if it thinks fit, direct that the person with whom the husband is alleged to have committed adultery be made a respondent.

By s. 189, the husband may claim damages from any person on the ground of adultery with the wife ; and the claim for damages shall, subject to the provisions of any enactment, relating to trial by jury in the court, be tried on the same principles and manner as actions for criminal conversation were tried before the commencement of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (partly repealed), and the provision of that Act with reference to the hearing and decision shall so far as necessary apply to the hearing and decision on petition on which damages are claimed.

Coretes [fr. cored, Brit.], pools, ponds, etc.

Corium forisfacere, to forfeit one's skin, applied to a person condemned to be whipped ; anciently the punishment of a servant. Corium perdere, the same. Corium redimere, to compound for a whipping.—Jac. Law Dict.

Corn Production Act, 1917, was an Act for encouraging the production of corn, and provided, inter alia, for State payments to growers where the average price of wheat or oats fell below a minimum. It was amended by the Agricultural Act, 1920, and repealed by the Corn Production Acts (Repeal) Act, 1921. As to the Wheat Commission, Fund and Quota, see the Wheat Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 24) ; and see CORN SALES ACT, 1921.

Corn-rent. A rent paid either in corn, or on a sliding scale in accordance with the price of corn. See Kendall v. Baker, (1852) 11 C. B. 842. It was directed by 18 Eliz. c. 6, that one-third of the whole rent then paid on college leases should be reserved in wheat or malt, reserving a quarter of wheat for each 6s. 8d., or a quarter of malt for every 5s. ; or that the lessees should pay the same according to the price that wheat or malt should be sold for in the market next to the respective colleges ; but this Act, though specially saved by s. 7 of the Ecclesiastical Leases Act, 1800 (39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 41), was repealed by the Universities and College Estates Act, 1925.

Corn Returns. By the Corn Returns Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 37), consolidating with amendments 5 & 6 Vict. c. 14, and 27 & 28 Vict. c. 87, certain towns as named by Order in Council from time to time and being not less than 150 nor more than 200 in number, supply through 'inspectors of corn returns' weekly returns of the purchases of British corn made in such towns. The inspectors make up these returns from the dealers and corn factors, etc., who are bound by s. 11 of the Act to supply particulars under a penalty not exceeding 20*l*. Averages are computed by the Board of Trade from the weekly returns, and published in the London Gazette. The Corn Sales Act, 1921, ss. 2, 4, makes a minor amendment to the Act of 1882.

Corn Sales Act, 1921, provides, with certain exceptions, that all sales of corn (i.e., wheat, barley, oats, rye, maize, and the bran and meal therefrom) shall be by weight and in terms of and by reference to the one hundredweight of 112 imperial standard pounds, otherwise transactions are null and void. The Act also applies to dried peas, dried beans, linseed and potatoes, and to the seeds of grass, clover, vetches, swedes, field turnips, rape, field cabbages, field kale, field kohlrabi, mangels, beet and sugar-beet, flax and sainfoin. By s. 5 ibid. the price and value under any Act, award, or instrument of an imperial bushel shall have effect as if the price or value were calculated on that of sixty imperial pounds of wheat, fifty of barley and thirty-nine of oats.

Corn Tax Abolition Act, 10 & 11 Vict. c. 46. This Act, however, left a duty of 1s. a quarter (measure) remaining—a duty repealed by the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 14), s. 4, reimposed under the guise of 3d. per cwt. by the Finance Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7. c. 7), s. 1, but taken off again by the Finance Act, 1903 (3 Edw. 7. c. 8), s. 1.

Cornage [fr. cornu, Lat., a horn], a kind of tenure in chief serjeanty, the service of which was to blow a horn when any invasion of the Scots was perceived; and by this tenure many persons held their lands northward about the place commonly called Picts' Wall. This old service of horn-blowing was afterwards paid in money, and the sheriffs accounted for it under the title of Cornagium.—Camd. Brit. 609.

Cornare, to blow on the horn.

Cornwall, Duke of, one of the titles of the eldest son of the reigning sovereign of the United Kingdom. He is Duke of Cornwall by inheritance, and is usually made Prince of Wales and Earl of Chester by special creation and investiture. Cornwall is a Royal Duchy, the revenues of which belong to the eldest son of the sovereign for the time being, and are administered under the Duchy of Cornwall Management Acts, 1863 and 1868 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 49), (31 & 32 Vict. c. 35), s. 25 of the earlier Act abolishing leases for lives (see LIVES). The special jurisdiction and powers of the Vice-Warden of the Stannaries Court (see Stannaries Acts, 1836 and 1837) were abolished by the Stannaries Court (Abolition) Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 45), the jurisdiction and powers being transferred to the County Court of Cornwall, see County Courts Act, 1934

(24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 53); Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Local Courts,' See also STANNARY.

Corodio habendo, a writ to exact a corodry of an abbey or religious house.—Reg. Brev. 264.

Corodry, or Corrodry [fr. conredium, corredium, conrodium, corrodium, Monk. Lat.; corredare, Ital., to fit out], a sum of money or allowance of meat, drink, and clothing due to the Crown from the abbey or other religious house, whereof it was founder, towards the sustentation of such one of its servants as is thought fit to receive it. It differs from a pension in that it was allowed towards the maintenance of any of the King's servants in an abbey; a pension being given to one of the king's chaplains, for his better maintenance, till he may be provided with a benefice.—Fitz. N. B. 250.

Corollary, a collateral consequence.

Corona mala, the clergy who abused their character were so called.—Blount.

Coronare illum, to make one's son a priest. Homo Coronatus was one who had received the first tonsure, as preparatory to superior orders, and the tonsure was in form of a corona, or crown of thorns.—Cowel.

Coronation Oath. At the public ceremony of crowning a sovereign of this kingdom in acknowledgment of his right to govern the kingdom, the sovereign swears to observe the laws, customs, and privileges of the kingdom, and to maintain the Protestant reformed religion. The exact form of the oath was prescribed by 1 W. & M. s. 2, c. 2, but was altered in 1910: see BILL OF RIGHTS.

Coronatore eligendo, the writ issued before the commencement of the Local Government Act, 1888, to the sheriff, commanding him to proceed to the election of a coroner.

Coronatore exonerando, a writ for the removal of a coroner, for a cause which is to be therein assigned, as that he is engaged in other business, or incapacitated by years or sickness, or has been guilty of extortion.

Coroner. A very ancient officer at the Common Law, so called because he has principally to do with pleas of the Crown, appointed in boroughs by the Borough Council under ss. 171-174 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, and in counties by the County Council, under s. 5 of the Local Government Act, 1888, prior to which Act county coroners were elected by the freeholders in each county.

An early definition of his duties was provided by the statute 'De Officio Coronatoris,' 4 Edw. 1, repealed by the consolidating Coroners Act, 1887, which codifies the law as follows :—

Where a coroner is informed that the dead body of a person is lying within his jurisdiction, and there is reasonable cause to suspect that such person has died either a violent or an unnatural death, or has died a sudden death of which the cause is unknown, or that such person has died in prison, or in such place or under such circumstances as to require an inquest in pursuance of any Act, the coroner, whether the cause of death arose within his jurisdiction or not, shall, as soon as practicable, issue his warrant for summoning not less than 12 nor more than 23 good and lawful men to appear before him at a specified time and place, there to inquire as jurors touching the death of such person as aforesaid.

The coroner also has jurisdiction to inquire concerning 'treasure trove' (see that title), and acts as substitute for the sheriff when that officer is incapacitated by interest.

The law relating to coroners and their rights and duties is now regulated by the Coroners (Amendment) Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 59), and the Coroners Rules, 1927.

As to coroners' inquests on deaths from accidents in mines, see Coal Mines Act, 1911, ss. 84, 102 (6); on deaths from accidents connected with petroleum spirit, see Petroleum Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 25).

A coroner is required to give a special certificate to permit cremation of a body upon which he has held an inquest, Cremation Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7, c. 8).

The dead body of a person may not be removed out of England until the local coroner has been informed. See Removal of Bodies from England Regulations, 1927.

See Jervis on Coroners; Encyc. of the Laws of England, vol. iii.

Coroner of the King's Household hath an exempt jurisdiction within the verge which the coroner of the county cannot intermeddle with.—2 Hawk. P. C. c. 9, s. 15.

Corporal, an epithet for anything applying to the body, also a non-commissioned rank in the Army.

Corporal Oath, so called because the party taking it laid his hand on the New Testament; 3 Inst. 165. See KISSING THE BOOK; OATH.

Corporate Name. When a corporation is created a name is always given to it, or supposing none to be actually given, will attach to it by implication, and by that name alone it must sue and be sued and do all legal acts, and see COMPANY; ASSOCIATION.

Corporate Office, in Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), s. 305, means the office of 'mayor, alderman, councillor, or elective auditor of a borough.'

Corporation or Body Politic, an artificial person established for preserving in perpetual succession certain rights, which being conferred on natural persons only would fail in process of time. It is either aggregate, consisting of many members, or sole, consisting of one person only, as a parson. It is also either spiritual, created to perpetuate the rights of the Church, or lay—subdivided into civil, created for many temporal purposes, and eleemosynary, to perpetuate founders' charities. It is by virtue of the sovereign's prerogative exercised by a charter, or of an Act of Parliament, or of prescription, that the artificial personage called a corporation, whether sole or aggregate, civil or ecclesiastical, is created. The royal charter gives it a legal immortality, and a name by which it acts and becomes known. It has power to make bye-laws for its own government, and transacts its business under the authority of a common seal—its hand and mouthpiece; it has neither soul nor tangible form, so it can neither be outlawed nor arrested; it only enjoys a legal entity, sues and is sued by its corporate name, and holds and enjoys property by such name. A corporation can sue or be sued for a libel, but it cannot one in respect of an imputation of murder, or incest, or adultery, because it could not commit those crimes (Odgers on Libel). The several members of a corporation and their successors constitute but one person in law. The duty of a corporation is to answer the ends of its institution—to enforce which it may be visited: if spiritual, by the ordinary; if lay, by the founder or his representatives; viz., the civil by the king (who is the fundator incipiens of all), represented in the King's Bench Division of the High Court: the eleemosynary, by the endower (who is the fundator perficiens of such), or by his heirs or assigns. The distinction between corporations and trading partnerships is, that in the first the law sees only the body corporate and knows not the individuals, who are not liable for the contracts of the corporation in their private capacity, their share in the capital only being at stake: but in the latter the law looks, not to the partnership, but to the individual members of it, who are therefore answerable for the debts of the firm to the full extent of their assets.

As to the difference at Common Law between the powers of a corporation created by the king's charter and those of a corporation created by statute, see Baroness Wenlock v. River Dee Co., (1887) 36 Ch. D. 685 n., per Bowen, L.J.

It is a general rule that a corporation must contract under its common seal, but whenever the observance of this rule would occasion great inconvenience, or tend to defeat the very purpose of the business, it is not observed: e.g., the retainer of an inferior servant, the acceptance of bills of exchange, or making of promissory notes by companies incorporated for the purpose of trade, or the doing of acts frequently occurring; in these cases, the affixing of the common seal is not necessary; and see s. 97 of the Companies Clauses Act, 1845, s. 174 of the Public Health Act, 1875; Young v. Corporation of Leamington, (1883) 8 App. Cas. 517; Lawford v. Billericay Rural Council, 1903, 1 K. B. 772; Douglass v. Rhyl U. D. C., 1913, 2 Ch. 407; Nixon v. Erith U. D. C., 1924, 1 K. B. 87; and by the Companies Act, 1929, s. 29, a contract made by a company must be under seal if required to be under seal between private persons, or signed, if signature only would be required between private persons; or by parol, if parol is sufficient between private persons; these respective contracts must be made by authorized persons. Further, s. 74 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, provides alternative methods of execution by corporations of deeds after 1925 in favour of a purchaser, of appointment of agents to sign instruments after 1925 not under seal, of the execution of conveyances by the corporation as or by attorney.

By s. 19 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, the word 'person' in any Act passed in or after 1890 includes any body of persons corporate or unincorporate. See, however, Hirst v. West Riding Bank, Ltd., 1901 2 K. B. 560, and cases there cited. See also TRUST; CORPORATION.

Corporation Act, 13 Car. 2, s. 2, c. 1, by which no person could thereafter be elected to office in any corporate town who should not within one year previously have taken the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper according to the rites of the Church of England.—An obligation to subscribe a declaration was substituted for the necessity of taking the Sacrament by 9 Geo. 4, c. 17, and the Corporation Act itself, with a body of similar Acts, was repealed by 34 & 35 Vict. c. 48.

Corporations, Municipal. The many statutes affecting these bodies are consolidated by the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882. See also Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), which repeals many of the previous Acts, except as to London, and codifies the enactments relating to England and Wales. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

Corporation Profits Tax, an annual tax of 5 per cent. imposed by the Finance Act, 1920, ss. 52–56, on the profits of all limited companies with a few exceptions, e.g., gas, water, dock and railway companies, and the like. Subsequent legislation extended the exceptions in favour of companies which are prohibited from distributing profits to members. The tax was reduced to 2½ per cent. in 1923 and abolished in 1924.

Corporation Property Duty. A 5 per cent. duty on income in lieu of death duties is imposed on corporations and bodies not incorporated, including fellowships, trustees, etc., by the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 51), ss. 11–20. The exceptions include property of the Crown, Local Authorities, religious, charitable, educational bodies, friendly societies, and the capital of a body corporate or incorporate established for any trade or business, or of a body whose capital stock is so divided as to be liable to be charged for legacy or succession duties.

Corporeal Hereditaments, those subjects of tangible property which are comprised under the denomination of things real.—Fearne, Reading on the Statute of Inrolments.

Corps Diplomatique [Fr.], the body of ambassadors and diplomatic persons.

Corpse. Removing a corpse from a grave is a misdemeanour at Common Law (Reg. v. Sharpe, (1857) 26 L. J. M. C. 47; R. v. Kenyon, (1901) 36 L. J. News. 571). Refusing to bury dead bodies by those whose duty it is to do so is punishable by the temporal courts, independently of spiritual censures, on indictment or information. There is no property in a dead body (Williams v. Williams, (1882) 20 Ch. D. 659).

Dissection.—The Anatomy Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 75), makes dissection legal. See DISSECTION.

As to post-mortem examinations, see Public Health Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 49), ss. 161 to 163, and Public Health (London) Act, 1936; for disposing of infectious bodies, see the same Acts respectively.

A gaoler cannot detain the dead body of a person in his custody under a ca. sa. (capias ad satisfaciendum) until the executors of the deceased person satisfy his pecuniary claims upon the deceased (R. v. Fox, (1841) 2 Q. B. 246; S. C. Re Wakefield, (1841) 1 G. & D. 566). See BURIAL and CREMATION.

Corpus Christi Day, the 2nd June, a feast instituted in 1264 in honour of the Blessed Sacrament, and on which fairs and markets are prohibited by the still unrepealed 27 Hen. 6, c. 5, but which is omitted from the list of 'hollie daies' prescribed and limited by 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 2. By 32 Hen. 8, c. 21 (repealed by Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1873), a full Trinity Term was directed to begin on the Friday next after Corpus Christi Day.

Corpus cum causâ, a writ issuing out of Chancery to remove both the body and record touching the cause of any man lying in execution on a judgment for debt into the King's Bench, there to lie till he have satisfied the judgment.—Fitz. N. B. c. 21.

Corpus juris canonici. See CANON LAW.

Corpus juris civilis. The three great compilations of Justinian, the Institutes, the Pandects, and the Code, together with the Novellæ, form one body of law, and were considered as such by the glossatores, who divided it into five volumina. The Pandects were distributed into five volumina, under the respective names of Digestum Vetus, Infortiatum, and Digestum Novum. The fourth volume contained the first nine books of the Codex Repetitæ Prælectionis. The fifth volume contained the Institutes, the Liber Authenticorum or Novellæ, and the three last books of the Codex. The division into five volumina appears in the oldest editions; but the usual arrangement now is the Institutes, Pandects, the Codex, and Novellæ. The name Corpus Juris Civilis was not given to this collection by Justinian, nor by any of the glossatores. Savigny asserts that the name was used in the twelfth century: at any rate, it became common from the date of the edition of D. Gothofredus of 1604.—Smith's Dict.

Correction, House of. See HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

Corrector of the Staple, a clerk belonging to the staple, to write and record the bargains of merchants there made.—27 Edw. 3, stat. 2, cc. 22, 23.

Corregidor, a Spanish magistrate.

Corresponding Societies Acts. (1) The Unlawful Societies Act, 1799 (39 Geo. 3, c. 79), by which certain societies, including the London Corresponding Society, having treasonable objects, and all societies 'of which the names of the members or of any committee should be kept secret from the society at large,' etc., were declared to be unlawful combinations. (2) The Seditious Meetings Act, 1817 (57 Geo. 3, c. 19), which repeated the provisions of the above Act, with amplifications. Friendly societies (see that title) are exempted from the provisions of these Acts by s. 32 of the Friendly Societies Act, 1896, if in the society or branch or at any meeting no business is transacted but that which directly and immediately relates to the objects of the society or branch as declared in the rules thereof.

Corroboration, evidence in support of principal evidence, e.g., in addition to that of the mother, to charge the father of an illegitimate child under the Bastardy Acts. See AFFILIATION.

In an action for breach of promise of marriage the plaintiff may give evidence, but cannot recover a verdict unless corroborated by other material evidence in support of the promise.—32 & 33 Vict. c. 68, s. 2. See MARRIAGE, PROMISE OF. Corroboration is also required in certain cases under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69), ss. 2, 3, and 4, and also by s. 15 (1), (2) of the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904 (4 Edw. 7, c. 15). By the Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 12), s. 38, the evidence of children of tender years, though not given on oath, needs corroboration. See UNUS NULLUS RULE.

Corrosive Fluid. Throwing corrosive fluid with intent to do serious bodily harm is an offence under the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 29.

Corrupt Practices. At elections these are treating, undue influence, bribery, personation, making a false declaration as to election expenses, and incurring election expenses without the election agent's written authority. See Parliamentary Elections Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 125), s. 3; Corrupt and Illegal Practices Prevention Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 51), ss. 1-3, 33 (7); Municipal Corporations Act, 1882; Municipal Elections (Corrupt and Illegal Practices) Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 70), ss. 2, 21 (5); Local Government Acts, 1888 (s. 75) and 1894 (s. 48); Representation of the People Act, 1918, ss. 34, 35, 38, and R. of the P. Act (No. 2), 1922. The Municipal Elections (Corrupt and Illegal Practices) Act, 1911, makes it an illegal practice to publish certain false statements concerning a candidate. See also Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), ss. 79 et seq.

Corrupt practices at parliamentary elections are offences punishable by fine or imprisonment, conviction in respect of which disqualifies for membership of the House of Commons and from voting at parliamentary elections or from holding public or judicial office for seven years. Corrupt practices at municipal and local government elections entail similar consequences.

Corrupt practices by or in connection with members of public bodies, such as town councils, county councils, local boards, vestries, etc., are punishable under the Public Bodies Corrupt Practices Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 69), by which any member of such body soliciting or receiving, and any person promising or giving any member of such body any advantage as an inducement to do or not to do anything in respect of a transaction in which the public body is concerned, are alike punishable.

See BRIBE and ELECTION PETITIONS; and consult Archbold, Crim. Pleading and Practice, tit. 'Corrupt, etc., Practices at Elections,' and Fraser on Parliamentary Elections, etc., and Houston on Electioneering.

Corruption. See BRIBE and preceding title.

Corruption of Blood (now abolished), one of the immediate consequences of attainder for treason or felony. The blood of the attainted person was said to be corrupted or tainted both upwards and downwards, so that he could neither inherit lands nor hereditaments, retain the possession of those in his possession, nor transmit them by descent to any heir, but the same escheated to the lord of the fee, subject to the king's superior right of forfeiture.—4 Bl. Com. 388. See ATTAINDER.

Corselet [fr. corpusculum, Lat., a little body], ancient armour which covered the body.

Corsepresent [fr. corps, Fr., body], a mortuary, thus termed because when a mortuary became due on the death of a man, the best or second-best beast was, according to custom, offered or presented to the priest, and carried with the corpse; see 21 Hen. 8, c. 6. In Wales a corsepresent was due upon the death of a clergyman to the bishop of the diocese till abolished by 12 Anne, st. 2, c. 6. See 2 Bl. Com. 425.

Corsned Bread [fr. corsian, to curse, and snaed, a morsel, A.S.; panis conjuratus, or offa execrata, Lat., the morsel of execration, or ordeal bread]. It was a kind of superstitious trial or ordeal used among the Saxons, to purge themselves of any accusation, by taking a piece of barley bread and eating it with solemn oaths, curses, and execrations, that it might prove poison, or their last morsel, if what they asserted, or denied, were not true. 4 Bl. Com. 345, 414; and see Norton's City of London, 3rd ed. 36, 265.

Cortes, the assembly of the estates of Spain or Portugal, answering in some measure to the parliament of Great Britain.

Cortils, a court or yard before a house.

Cortularium, or Cortarium, a yard adjoining to a country farm.—Old Records.

Corvee [Fr.], a feudal service, as to repair roads, etc.

Cosduna, custom or tribute.—Dugd. Mon. tom. 1, p. 562.

Cosenage, or Cosnage, kindred, cousinship. Also a writ that lay for the heir where the tresail, i.e., the father of the besail, or great-grandfather, was seised of lands in fee at his death, and a stranger entered upon the land and abated.—Fitz. N. B. 221.

Cosening, Cozenage [fr. cosen], cheating, defrauding.

Coshering, a feudal custom, whereby the lords may lie and feast themselves and their followers at their tenants' houses, etc., forbidden by many Acts of the Irish Parliament. Compare SORNER.

Cosmos [fr. κοσμος, Gk.], clean.—Blount.

Coss, a term used by Europeans in India to denote a road-measure of about two miles, but differing in different parts.

Costard, a head.—Shaksp. Also a kind of apple.

Costera, sea coast.

Cost-book Mining Companies. The statutory regulations relating to these Companies are contained in the Stannaries Acts, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 19) and 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 43), and the Companies Act, 1929. The latter Act (s. 357) has preserved the then existing provisions of the earlier Acts. Subject to the statutory provisions, it may be said that these companies are formed thus:—A number of adventurers, who have obtained permission from the landowner to work a lode, assemble: they decide on the number of shares into which their capital is to be divided, and the number to be allotted to each; they appoint an agent, commonly called a purser, for the purpose of managing the affairs of the mine, and enter in a book, called the cost-book, the minutes of their proceedings, which are signed by all present. A license to try for ores, for twelve months, or some short period, is then obtained; followed, if the search be promising, by a sett, that is, a lease of the minerals, or a license to dig, or both, granted by the landowner to the purser, or to one or two of the adventurers, without any declaration of trust on their part for the rest, or for any other person, for a term of years, commonly twenty-one, but with a stipulation for the annual payment to the landowner of some portion of the ore raised.

The cost-book contains the names of all the shareholders, and the number of shares held by each is set opposite to his name. In a cost-book partnership, a shareholder may get rid of his shares, and with them his liabilities, so far as his partners are concerned, without their consent, either by transfer or simple relinquishment, provided the cost-book regulations do not prohibit such a course; in the former case the fact of transfer being entered by the purser in the cost-book, and in the latter notice being given to the purser of his having so relinquished his shares, and all his claims upon the mine.

Although there are several theories of the cost-book principle of working mines, the meaning of which the Courts are not bound to take judicial notice of (Re Gl. Cambrian, Hawkins' case, (1856) 2 K. & J. 253), yet it appears clear that, whatever may be the rules and regulations between the adventurers themselves, each shareholder is liable to be sued by a creditor who has furnished the mine with necessaries for its due working, ordered according to the customary course in such concerns, and this whether the creditor knew at the time of crediting the mine that he was a shareholder or not. — See MacSwinney on Mines.

Co-stipulator, a joint promisee.

Costs, expenses incurred in litigation or professional transactions, consisting of money paid for stamps, etc., to the officers of the Court, or to the counsel and solicitors, for their fees, etc.

Costs in actions are either between solicitor and client, being what are payable in every case to the solicitor by his client, whether he ultimately succeed or not; or between party and party, being those only which are allowed in some particular cases to the party succeeding against his adversary, and these are either interlocutory, given on various motions and proceedings in the course of the suit or action, or final, allowed when the matter is determined.

Neither party was entitled to costs at Common Law, but the Statute of Gloucester (6 Edw. 1, c. 4), gave costs to a successful plaintiff, and 2 & 3 Hen. 8, c. 6, and 4 Jac. 1, c. 3, to a victorious defendant; see Garnett v. Bradley, (1878) 3 App. Cas. 944.

In proceedings between the Crown and a subject the general rule is that the Crown neither receives nor pays costs, but there are many statutory exceptions, as, for example, in petitions of right (Petitions of Right Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 34), s. 12) and in revenue cases, where the position is as between subject and subject. See R. v. Archbishop of Canterbury, 1902, 2 K. B. at p. 571; Thomas v. Prichard, 1903, 1 K. B. 212; Johnson v. The King, 1904, A. C. at p. 824; Rowland v. Air Council, 1923, W. N. 72; Re Carbonit, 1923, W. N. 208.

Several Acts have also been passed to restrain the bringing of vexatious actions, and needless costliness in litigation. See (43 Eliz. c. 6, s. 2; 22 & 23 Car. c. c. 9; 8 & 9 Wm. 3, c. 11, s. 4; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24); modern enactments aiming at this end are the County Courts Act, 1934, s. 47, reproducing s. 11 of the County Courts, 1919, as amended by s. 20 of the Administration of Justice Act, 1925, which substituted a new s. 116 of the County Courts Act, 1888; the Slander of Women Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 51); and the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61).

In equity costs rested entirely in the discretion of the Court, for the prima facie claim of the successful litigant to costs might be rebutted by the particular circumstances of the case, and it was for the Court to decide whether those circumstances were or were not sufficient to rebut the claim. See Morgan and Wurtzburg on Costs; Johnson on Costs.

High Court Costs.—By R. S. C. 1883, Ord. LXV., r. 1, 'the costs of and incident to all proceedings in the Supreme Court, including the administration of estates and trusts, shall be in the discretion of the Court'; but there is a saving for the right of a trustee, mortgagee, or other person to costs out of a particular estate or fund. The discretion given by this rule is made subject by the Judicature Act, 1925, s. 50, replacing the Judicature Act, 1890, s. 5, to the express provision of any other Act. The discretion conferred by the rule is very wide, but must be exercised judicially (see Sharpe v. Wakefield, 1891, A. C. 173, and cases referred to in the notes in Annual Practice to the above-mentioned rule). For the cases in which a judge sitting without a jury can deprive a wholly successful defendant of costs, see Ritter v. Godfrey, 1920, 2 K. B. 47. As to what constitutes 'good cause,' see Roberts v. Jones, 1891, 2 Q. B. 194, and notes to above-mentioned rule in Annual Practice. The general rule is that the successful party gets his costs (The Ophelia, 1911, P. 46; Cooper v. Whittingham, (1880) 15 C. D. 501).

A plaintiff who makes several distinct claims in an action may be ordered to pay the defendant's costs of the issues upon which he fails (Foster v. Farquhar, 1893, 1 Q. B. 564; see also Reid, Hewitt & Co. v. Joseph, 1918, A. C. 717).

County Courts Act, 1934 (c. 53), s. 47, regulates the costs of actions of contract or tort (s. 59, Admiralty proceedings) commenced in the High Court which could have been commenced in the County Court.

(1) Where an action is commenced in the High Court which could have been commenced in a County Court, then, subject to the provisions of sub-s. (3) and sub-s. (4) of this section :—

(a) if the plaintiff recovers a sum less—

(i) in the case of an action founded on contract, than forty pounds; or

(ii) in the case of an action founded on tort, than ten pounds;

he shall not be entitled to any costs of the action.

(b) if the plaintiff recovers—

(i) in the case of an action founded on contract, a sum of forty pounds or upwards, but less than one hundred pounds; or

(ii) in the case of an action founded on tort, a sum of ten pounds or upwards, but less than fifty pounds;

he shall not be entitled to any more costs of the action than those to which he would have been entitled if the action had been brought in a county court.

(2) When a plaintiff is entitled to costs on a county court scale only, the taxing master shall have the same power of directing on what county court scale and under what column in the scale costs are to be allowed, and of allowing any items of costs as the judge would have had if the action had been brought in a county court.

(3) In any such action as aforesaid, whether founded on contract or tort, the High Court or a judge thereof (or when the matter is tried before a referee or officer of the Supreme Court, that referee or officer) if satisfied :—

(a) that there was sufficient reason for bringing the action in the High Court; or

(b) that the defendant or one of the defendants objected to the transfer of the action to the county court; may make an order allowing the costs or any part of the costs thereof on the High Court scale or on such one of the county court scales and under such one of the columns in the scale as he may direct.

(4) If in any action the claim is for a debt or liquidated demand for a sum of twenty pounds or upwards, and—

(a) the defendant pays the amount claimed or a sum of not less than twenty pounds within the time limited in that behalf by the endorsement made on the writ in accordance with the rules of the Supreme Court; or

(b) the plaintiff, within twenty-eight days after the service of the writ, or within such further time as may be allowed by the High Court or a judge thereof, obtains judgment in default of appearance or of defence for a sum of twenty pounds or upwards; or

(c) the plaintiff, within twenty-eight days after the service of the writ, or within such further time as may be allowed by the High Court or a judge thereof, obtains, under any rule of the Supreme Court providing for summary judgment without trial, an order empowering him to sign judgment for a sum of twenty pounds or upwards, either unconditionally or unless that sum is paid into court or to the plaintiff's solicitor :

the plaintiff shall, unless otherwise ordered by the High Court or a judge thereof, be entitled to costs on such scale as may be prescribed by the rules of the Supreme Court.

(5) This section applies only to the costs of the proceedings in the High Court, and shall have effect subject to the provisions of section fifty-nine of this Act (that section relates to costs in Admiralty proceedings).

(6) This section shall not apply in the case of any proceedings by the Crown.

The costs of an appeal are in the discretion of the court which hears the appeal, and as a rule follow the event of the appeal.

County Court Costs.—County Court costs of any action or matter are by s. 113 of the County Courts Act, 1888 (if not otherwise provided for by that Act), to be paid by or apportioned between the parties in such manner as the Court shall think just, and in default of any special direction are to abide the event. See also County Court Rules, 1936, Ord. XLVII.

Costs in Criminal Cases.—The costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908 (c. 15), as amended by the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914 (c. 58), s. 10 (4), and the Poor Prisoners Defence Act, 1930 (c. 32), now contains all the provisions relating to this matter, and by ss. 1 and 2 provides as follows :—

1.—(1) The following courts, namely,—

(a) a court of assize or a court of quarter sessions before which any indictable offence is prosecuted or tried, and

(b) a court of summary jurisdiction by which an indictable offence is dealt with summarily under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, and

(c) any justice or justices before whom a charge not dealt with summarily is made against any person for an indictable offence (in this Act referred to as the examining justices) may on any such proceedings by order direct the payment of the costs of the prosecution or defence or both in accordance with the provisions of this Act out of the funds of the county or county borough out of which they are payable under this Act (in this Act referred to as local funds).

(2) The costs which may be so directed to be paid are such sums as, subject to the regulation of the Secretary of State under this Act, appear to the court reasonably sufficient to compensate the prosecutor for the expenses properly incurred by him in carrying on the prosecution, and to compensate any person properly attending to give evidence for the prosecution or defence, or called to give evidence at the instance of the court, for the expense, trouble, or loss of time properly incurred in or incidental to the attendance and giving of evidence, and the amount of any costs so directed to be paid shall be ascertained as soon as practicable by the proper officer of the court.

(3) [Repealed by Poor Prisoners Defence Act, 1930.]

(4) No expenses to witnesses, whether for the prosecution or defence, shall be allowed at a court of assize or quarter sessions before which any indictable offence is prosecuted or tried, if such witnesses are witnesses to character only, unless the court shall otherwise order.

2. As soon as the amount due to any person in respect of costs directed by a court of assize or a court of quarter sessions to be paid out of local funds has been ascertained, the proper officer shall make out and deliver to that person, or to any person who appears to the proper officer to be acting on behalf of that person, an order upon the treasurer of the county or borough out of the funds of which the costs are payable under this Act for the payment of that amount.

Section 6 also empowers the Court to order the convicted person to pay the costs of the prosecution, or in certain cases the prosecutor to pay the costs of an acquitted person.

Section 3 of the Poor Prisoners Defence Act, 1930, provides for costs where a defence certificate or legal aid certificate has been granted. These include in the case of a defence certificate, the fees of counsel and solicitor and the cost of a copy of the depositions, and in the case of a legal aid certificate, the fees of a solicitor. Other expenses properly incurred may be included.

See also Summary Jurisdiction Acts, 1848 and 1879, ss. 18 and 54 respectively, which give justices power to order the unsuccessful party to pay the costs of his opponent in both civil and criminal matters within these Acts.

As to taxation of costs, see TAXATION.

As to charging order for solicitor's costs, see CHARGING ORDER. See also SCALES OF COSTS. As to costs as between the client and his own solicitor, see SOLICITOR.

Costs de incremento, costs of increase, i.e., those extra expenses incurred which do not appear on the face of the proceedings, such as witnesses' expenses, fees to counsel, attendances, court fees, etc.

Co-surety, a fellow-surety.

Cotarius, a cottager, who held in fee socage, and paid a stated fine or rent in provisions or money, with some occasional personal services.

Cote, or Cot [fr. koti, Fin.], cottage.

Cotellus, or Coteria, a small cottage, house, or homestead.

Coterellus, a servile tenant, who held in mere villenage; his person, issue, and goods were disposable at the lord's pleasure.—Paroch. Antiq. 310.

Coteswold [fr. cote and wold, Sax.], a place where there is no wood.—Jac. Law Dict.

Cotland and Cotsethland, land held by a cottager, whether in socage or villenage.

Cotsethla, or Consetle, the little seat or mansion belonging to a small farm.

Cotsethus, a cottage-holder, who by servile tenure was bound to work for the lord.

Cottage, a small house without lands belonging to it. By 31 Eliz. c. 7 (repealed by 15 Geo. 3, c. 32, itself repealed by Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1871), 'An Act against the erecting and maintaining of cottages,' the building of any manner of cottage for habitation without four acres of ground to be continually occupied and manured therewith, was prohibited under a penalty of 10*l.* for each offence. As to cottage allotments for the poor, see ALLOTMENTS.

Cottier Tenure, one where a labourer makes his contract for land without the intervention of a capitalist farmer, and where the conditions of the contract, especially the amount of rent, are determined not by custom but by competition. Also a class of sub-tenants who rent a cottage and an acre or two of land from small farmers.—Irish. 1 Mill's Pol. Eco. 383.

Cotton Cloth Factories. These are specially regulated by the Factory and Workshop (Cotton Cloth Factories) Act, 1929 (c. 15), and the regulations made under that Act; the Cotton Cloth Factories Regulations, 1929 (S. R. & O. 1929, No. 300). This Act repeals the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 22), ss. 90–96, and Sched. IV., so far as it relates to cotton cloth factories which took the place of the repealed Cotton Cloth Factories Act, 1889, in respect to restricting the amount of moisture in the atmosphere, the admission of fresh air, and the prevention of the inhalation of dust.

Cotuca, coat armour.

Cotuchans, husbandmen.—Domesday.

Couchant, lying down; squatting.

Coucher, or Courcher, a factor who continues abroad for traffic, 37 Edw. 3, c. 16; also the general book wherein any corporation, etc., registered their acts.—3 & 4 Edw. 6, c. 10.

Council, an assembly of persons for the purposes of concerting measures of state or municipal policy—hence called councillors.

A municipal council, commonly called a town council, consists of the mayor, aldermen, and councillors, the councillors being elected by the ratepayers (women included), and the aldermen being elected by the councillors, the term of office of a councillor being three years, and that of an alderman six. One-third of the councillors go out every year, and one-half of the aldermen (who always number one-third of the councillors) in every third year. See Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), ss. 17-23, which repeal and replace (except as to London) Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), ss. 10-14. As to Army Council, county councils, district councils, and parish councils, see those titles.

Council of Legal Education, a body consisting of twenty benchers, five nominated by each of the four Inns of Court, to whom is entrusted the business of superintending the education and examination of students in order to their being called to the Bar. The members remain in office for two years, and each Inn has power to fill up any vacancy that may occur in the number of its nominees during that period. See the 'Consolidated Regulations' of the Inns of Court.

Counsel, or Counsellor, a person retained by a client to plead his cause in a court of judicature; a barrister; an advocate. See BARRISTER.

Count. The different parts of a declaration, each of which, if it stood alone, would constitute a ground of action, were called the 'counts' of the declaration. Used also to signify the several parts of an indictment, each charging a distinct offence.

Count, or Countee [fr. comite, Fr.; comes, Lat.], the most eminent dignity of a subject before the Conquest. He was praefectus or praepositus comitatûs, and had the charge and custody of the county; but this authority is now vested in the sheriff.—9 Rep. 46.

Countenance [fr. contenance, Fr., contineo, Lat., to hold together], credit; estimation.

Counter, the name of two prisons in London, the Poultry Counter and Wood Street Counter, afterwards consolidated into one new-built prison, for the use of the city, to confine debtors, peace-breakers, etc.—Cowel.

Counterclaim. By R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XIX., r. 3, under the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 24 (3); replaced by the Judicature Act, 1925, s. 39 (1) (a), subject to the provisions of Rule 15, Order XXI. (exclusion of counterclaim), a defendant in an action may set off, or set up by way of counterclaim, against the claims of the plaintiff, any right or claim, whether such set-off or counterclaim sound in damages or not, and such set-off or counter-claim shall have the same effect as a cross action, so as to enable the Court to pronounce a final judgment in the same action, both on the original and on the cross claim. (As amended by R. S. C. No. 1, 1929). See SET-OFF.

As to counterclaim in an inferior court involving matters beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, see Jud. Act, 1925, s. 203, replacing Jud. Act, 1873, s. 90.

Counter-deed, a secret writing, either before a notary or under a private seal, which destroys, invalidates, or alters a public one.

Counterfeit, an imitation of something, made without lawful authority and with a view to defraud by passing off the false for the true. As to counterfeiting coin, see CORN.

Counterfeisance [Fr.], the act of forging.

Countermand, the revocation of an act; where a thing done is afterwards, by some act or ceremony, made void by the person who did it, it is either express, or implied by law. No notice of trial may be countermanded except by consent or by leave of the Court or a judge, which leave may be given subject to such terms as to costs or otherwise as may be just (R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXXVI., r. 19). See NOTICE OF TRIAL.

Countermark, a sign put upon goods already marked; also the several marks put upon goods belonging to several persons, to show that they must not be opened but in the presence of all the owners or their agents.

Counterpart, the corresponding part or duplicate; the key of a cipher. When the several parts of an indenture (as is almost invariably the case with a lease) are interchangeably executed by the several parties, that part or copy which is executed by the grantor is usually called the original, and the rest are counterparts. If a lease and counterpart differ, the ordinary rule is that the lease prevails; but the rule may be departed from if the mistake be clearly in the lease (Burchell v. Clark, (1876) 2 C. P. D. 88; Matthews v. Smallwood, 1910, 1 Ch. 777). The lessee cannot without agreement be made to pay the costs of the counterpart (Re Negus, 1895, 1 Ch. 73).

Counterplea. When the tenant in any real action, tenant by the courtesy or in dower, in his answer and plea vouched any one to warrant his title, or prayed in aid of another who had a larger estate, as of him in reversion, etc.; or where a stranger to the action came and prayed to be received to save his estate; then that which the demandant alleged against it, why he should not be admitted, was called a counterplea; it was a replication to aid prier, and was called counterplea to the voucher. But when the voucher was allowed, and the vouchee came and demanded what cause the tenant had to vouch him, and the tenant showed his cause, whereupon the vouchee pleaded anything to avoid the warranty, that was termed a counterplea of the warranty.—Termes de la Ley. Obsolete.

Counter-rolls, the rolls which sheriffs have with the coroners, containing particulars of their proceedings, as well of appeals as of inquests, etc.—3 Edw. 1, c. 10.

Counter Security, a security given to one who has entered into a bond or become surety for another; a countervailing bond of indemnity.

Counter-sign, the signature of a secretary or other subordinate officer to any writing signed by the principal or superior to vouch for the authenticity of it; e.g., the order of a town council for payment of money out of the borough fund must be signed by three members of the town council, and counter-signed by the town clerk, by Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), s. 187, replacing (except as to London) Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, s. 141. Also the password in response to a military challenge by a sentinel or guard.

Counting-house of the King's Household, usually called the Board of Green Cloth, where sit the lord-steward and treasurer of the king's house, the comptroller, master of the household, cofferer, and two clerks of the Green Cloth, for daily taking the accounts of all expenses of the household, making provisions, and ordering payment for the same.—39 Eliz. c. 7. See Jac. Law Dict.

Counters, or Contors [fr. contours, Fr.], serjeants-at-law, whom a man retains to defend his cause and speak for him in court, for their fees.—See Co. Litt. 17 a.

Country, a name for the jury, as coming from the neighbouring country or surrounding parts of the country.

Country, Custom of the. See CUSTOM.

County [fr. comitatus, Fr.; comitatus, Lat.], a shire or portion of country comprehending a great number of hundreds. England is divided into forty counties or shires, Wales into twelve and Scotland into thirty. It seems probable that the realm was originally divided into counties with a view to the convenient administration of justice, the judicial business of the kingdom having, in former times, been chiefly despatched in local Courts held in each different county, before the sheriff as its principal officer. His duties are now more ministerial than judicial.

All the English counties except Rutland are subdivided for purposes of parliamentary representation.

As to the divisions of counties for holding petty and special sessions, see the Division of Counties Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 43), the Petty Sessional Divisions Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 12), and the Petty Sessional Divisions Act, 1859, Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Justices (Sessions).'

By Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), s. 305, county means administrative county.

County Boroughs. The 83 boroughs which are named in Part II. of the First Schedule of the Local Government Act, 1923 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), which replaces the Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), Sched. III., which named 61. As to the adjustment of financial relations between a county and borough, see Durham County Council and West Hartlepool Borough Council, 1905, 2 K. B. 340. See LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

County Corporate. To certain cities and towns the sovereigns of England have, out of special grace and favour, granted the privilege to be counties of themselves, and not to be comprised in any other county, but to be governed by their own sheriffs and other magistrates, so that no officers of the county at large have any power to intermeddle therein. Twelve cities and five towns are counties of themselves, and have, consequently, their own sheriffs. The cities are London, Chester, Bristol, Coventry, Canterbury, Exeter, Gloucester, Lichfield, Lincoln, Norwich, Worcester, York. The towns are Kingston-upon-Hull, Nottingham, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Poole, Southampton.

County Councils. The elective bodies established by the Local Government Act, 1888 (c. 41), to manage certain specified administrative business of each county (see LOCAL GOVERNMENT), formerly managed by the justices of the peace (who are nominated by the Crown) in quarter sessions, and other administrative business mentioned in the Act, and consisting of 'the chairman, aldermen, and councillors.' The Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), consolidates with amendments the enactments relating to local authorities.

The councillors are elected, for separate 'electoral divisions,' the qualification for electors being that required under the Representation of the People Acts, and the qualification for being elected similar to that required for election to office on any local authority. Ministers of religion are not disqualified, and peers owning property in the county and persons registered as parliamentary voters in respect of the ownership of property in the county are qualified, as also by s. 8 of the Army Act, 1891, are officers in the army. Women may be elected (the Qualification of Women (County and Borough Councils) Act, 1907 (c. 33)); and see infra. The qualifications and disqualifications for election are set out in Local Government Act, 1933, ss. 57-59. The councillors are elected for three years, and then retire together. The ordinary day of election and retirement, which by the Local Government Act, 1888, was the 1st of November, was, by the County Councils (Elections) Act, 1891, reproduced by Local Government Act, 1933, s. 9, changed to the 8th of March.

The aldermen, who are termed 'county aldermen,' are elected by the councillors as borough aldermen are, from amongst the councillors or persons qualified so to be, the qualification for being elected being similar to that of county councillors. The number of aldermen shall be one-third of the whole number of county councillors. They are elected for six years, and one-half of the number goes out in every third year.

The chairman corresponds to the mayor in a borough council, and is elected by the council from among the aldermen or councillors, or persons qualified to be such.

Meetings and proceedings, see the regulations in Local Government Act, 1933, Sched. III., Part I.

By the County and Borough Councils (Qualification) Act, 1914, as amended by the Sex Disqualification (Removal) Act, 1919, the qualification to be elected in county councils has been extended.

The administrative business transferred to the county councils includes:—

- (1) Making of rates;
- (2) Borrowing of money;
- (3) Supervision of county treasurer;
- (4) Management of halls, offices and other buildings;
- (5) Licensing of houses for music and dancing and of racecourses;
- (6) Maintenance and management of hospitals and rate-aided mental hospitals.
- (7) Education and maintenance of schools;
- (8) Management of roads and bridges;

(9) Regulation of fees of inspectors and other officers;

(10) Control of officers paid out of the county rate;

(11) Coroner's salary, fees, and district;

(12) The execution as local authority of Acts relating to destructive insects, to fish conservancy, to wild birds, to weights and measures, to gas meters and of the Local Stamp Act, 1869;

(13) Any matters arising under Riot (Damages) Act, 1886;

(14) Registration of rules of scientific societies, under Scientific Societies Act, 1843; registration of charitable gifts, under Charitable Donations Registration Act, 1812; certifying and recording of places of religious worship, under Places of Religious Worship Act, 1812; the confirmation and record of the rules, under Loan Societies Act, 1840;

(15) Any other business transferred by Local Government Act, 1888, as amended by the 1933 Act.

Other administrative business assigned to county councils is the appointment of coroners (which is transferred from the freeholders of each county), the licensing of theatres, and the supervision of the trade in explosive substances (which are transferred from the justices of the peace out of session), and the maintenance of county roads.

The powers of justices out of session of appointing, etc., the county police belong to the quarter sessions and the county council jointly, and are exercised by a standing joint committee of the two bodies.

In addition to this business ipso facto transferred, the Act of 1933 by s. 270 empowers the Minister of Health by provisional order (which must be submitted to Parliament for confirmation, s. 285) to transfer to the County Council any functions arising within the county of any conservators or other public body (not being the council of a county district) as are conferred by any enactment.

The 15th section of the Act of 1888 conferred on county councils powers to oppose bills in parliament, and the County Councils (Bills in Parliament) Act, 1903 (3 Edw. 7, c. 9), extends these powers by authorizing the council to promote bills as well as to oppose them (replaced by the 1933 Act, s. 253). For the powers of a county council to borrow by the way of mortgage on debentures, see the 1933 Act, ss. 195 et seq. See also LOCAL GOVERNMENT; HOUSING; PUBLIC HEALTH.

The County Council is also constituted the local authority under various Acts, chief of which are the Education Act, 1921, and Education (Local Authorities) Act, 1931 (c. 6); Roads Act, 1920; Mental Deficiency Act, 1913 (c. 28); and Poor Law Acts.

County Courts. The old County Court was a tribunal incident to the jurisdiction of a sheriff, but was not a Court of Record. Proceedings were removable into a superior court by recordari facias loquelam, or writ of false judgment. Outlawries of absconding offenders were here proclaimed.

Far more important inferior tribunals have now been established throughout England. They were first established in 1846 by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, 'the Act for the more easy recovery of Small Debts and Demands in England,' repealed and re-enacted with fourteen amending Acts by the consolidating and amending County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), an Act very materially but very shortly amended by the County Courts Act, 1903 (3 Edw. 7, c. 42), which came into operation on the 1st January, 1905, and raised the common law jurisdiction from 50*l.* (to which amount it had been raised by an Act of 1850 from the original 20*l.* under the Act of 1846) to 100*l.* The number of jurors was also raised from five to eight. The County Courts Act, 1919, introduced further important amendments. The County Courts Acts have been amended and consolidated by the County Courts Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 53), which enacts as follows :—

Area.—The area for each court is as fixed by order of the Lord Chancellor from time to time (s. 2).

Judges.—The judges, who are appointed by the Lord Chancellor, and may not exceed sixty in number (s. 4 (1) (b)), must be barristers of at least seven years' standing (s. 5), who must not practise at the Bar, or act as arbitrators for any remuneration to themselves, and are incapable of being elected as M.P.'s (s. 6), and when permanently infirm and desirous of resigning may receive pensions (s. 9). Section 7 reproducing the County Court Judges (Retirement Pensions and Deputies) Act, 1919, a County Court judge must retire at 72 unless permitted to stay on by the Lord Chancellor to an age not exceeding 75. Sections 11–15 provide for the appointment and payment of a deputy to carry out the duties of a judge unavoidably absent.

Jurisdiction.—The subject matters of the general jurisdiction are all personal actions where the debt, demand or damage claimed is not more than 100*l.* except libel, slander, seduction, or breach of promise of marriage, ejectment where either the value of the lands or the rent exceeds 100*l.* a year, and actions in which 'the title to any corporeal or incorporeal hereditaments, or to any toll, fair, market, or franchise shall come in question' (ss. 40, 48). Also all actions by creditors or legatees for administration of the estate of a deceased person, or for execution of trusts, or for redemption of a mortgage, or for specific performance of an agreement for sale or lease of property, or under the Trustee Relief Acts, or Trustee Acts, or relating to the maintenance of infants, or for the dissolution of partnership, or for relief against fraud or mistake, provided in each of these actions that the subject-matter does not exceed in value the sum of 500*l.* (s. 52). By agreement all actions assigned to the King's Bench Division can be tried in any County Court (s. 43).

There are also, in addition to the general jurisdiction, varied and extensive jurisdictions under about 70 special Acts, including the Bills of Sale Act, 1882, the Inebriate Acts, the Agricultural Holdings Acts, the Charitable Trusts Acts, the Settled Land Acts, the Law of Distress Amendment Acts, and the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, by s. 17 of which, in any question between husband and wife as to the title to or possession of property, either party, or any such corporation or company as therein mentioned, may apply in a summary way to any judge of the High Court or (at the option of the applicant irrespectively of the value of the property in dispute) to the judge of the County Court of the district, and the judge of the High Court or of the County Court may make such order with respect to the property in dispute and as to costs as he thinks fit; and the section gives an appeal from the County Court to the High Court and a power of removal to the High Court.

By County Courts Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 53), ss. 45, 50, reproducing County Courts Act, 1919, s. 1 (which replaced s. 65 of the Act of 1888), the Court may remit to the County Court any action brought in the High Court—(1) where the claim does not exceed 100*l.*, whether the counterclaim (if any) does or does not exceed 100*l.*; (2) where the only matter remaining to be tried is a counterclaim, founded either on contract or tort, where the matter in dispute does not exceed 100*l.*; (3) where the plaintiff's claim is for the recovery of land (with or without rent or mesne profits) by a landlord against a tenant, or person claiming through or under a tenant, whose title has been duly determined and the action could have been brought in the County Court. Any action of tort in the High Court may in like manner be remitted unless the plaintiff give security for the defendant's costs, or satisfy a judge of the High Court that he has a cause of action fit for the High Court (1934 Act, s. 46).

Jury.—The judge is the sole judge of all questions of fact and law (s. 87). In certain cases trial with a jury may be prescribed on application to the Court (s. 91).

Appeals now lie to the Court of Appeal instead of the Divisional Court. Administration of Justice (Appeals) Act, 1934 (c. 40), s. 2, and by County Courts Act, 1934, s. 90.

Any party dissatisfied with the determination of the judge in point of law or equity, or upon the admission or rejection of any evidence, may appeal to the Court of Appeal, but where the sum claimed does not exceed 20*l.*, only if the judge grant leave to appeal, unless there is a claim for an injunction (Bourne v. James, 1898, 1 Q. B. 417).

The bringing of unimportant actions in the High Court rather than in a County Court is discouraged by the provisions that if in an action of contract which could have been commenced in a County Court the plaintiff recover less than 40*l.* (tort 10*l.*), he shall not be entitled to any costs, and if he recover 40*l.* or more, but less than 100*l.* (tort 10*l.* or more, but less than 50*l.*), he shall not be entitled to more costs than he would have if the action had been brought in a County Court, unless the Court or judge certify that there was sufficient reason for bringing the action in the High Court (County Courts Act, 1934, s. 47, replacing County Courts Act, 1919, s. 11).—See Costs.

Right of Audience.—Section 86 of the Act of 1934 provides that in any proceedings in a County Court any of the following persons may address the Court, namely:—

- (a) any party to the proceedings;
- (b) a barrister retained by or on behalf of any party;
- (c) a solicitor acting generally in the proceedings for a party thereto, but not a solicitor retained as an advocate by a solicitor so acting;
- (d) any other person allowed by leave of the Court to appear instead of any party:

Provided that—

- (i) the right of a solicitor to address the Court shall not be excluded by reason only that he is in the permanent and exclusive employment of any other solicitor; and
- (ii) a Court may refuse to hear a person claiming to address the Court as a solicitor, unless that person has signed and delivered to the Court a statement of his name and place of business and the name of the firm (if any) of which he is a member.

(A managing clerk being a qualified solicitor and having entire charge of proceedings is not 'acting generally in the action,' R. v. Oxfordshire County Court Judge, 1894, 2 Q. B. 440.

By s. 185 no person other than a solicitor is entitled to have or recover any fee or reward for appearing or acting on behalf of any other party in any proceeding: provided that nothing in the Act contained is to affect the right of any barrister to appear or act in any court, or of any solicitor to recover costs in respect of his employment of a barrister to appear or act as aforesaid.

Rules of practice are made by the Rules Committee, consisting of five County Court judges and three other persons, a barrister, a registrar and a solicitor, and must be submitted to the Lord Chancellor and be concurred in by the Rules Committee of the Supreme Court; see County Courts Act, 1934, s. 99, and County Court Rules.

Admiralty.—The County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Acts, 1868 and 1869, provided for the appointment of County Courts for Admiralty purposes. Between 40 and 50 courts have been so appointed, and have jurisdiction to deal with claims in Admiralty matters up to 300*l.*, and by consent to any amount. See new County Courts Act, 1934, s. 56.

Bankruptcy.—As to the extensive jurisdiction in bankruptcy exercised by County Courts, see Bankruptcy Act, 1914, ss. 96, 98 and 99.

County Debentures Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 35), repealed and replaced by the Local Loans Act, 1875.

County Electors Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 10), provided for the qualification and registration of the electors of the county authorities established by the Local Government Act, 1888, by extending the qualification for burgesses. Repealed by the Representation of the People Act, 1918.

County Franchise. This was conferred by the Representation of the People Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 102), on all county householders, and by the Representation of the People Act, 1884, on all county householders and lodgers in lodgings up to 10l. a year in value. See Representation of the People Act, 1918, Part I., for extent of local government franchise, and ELECTORAL FRANCHISE.

County Palatine [fr. palatium, Lat., a court]. There were three of these counties—Chester, Durham, and Lancaster. The two former were such by immemorial custom; the last was created by Edward III. The Bishop of Durham and the Duke of Lancaster had royal power within their respective counties. They could pardon treasons, murders, and felonies; they appointed judges and magistrates; all writs and indictments ran in their names, and offences were said to be done against their peace and not contra pacem domini regis. The Act (11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 70), abolished the Court Session of the County Palatine of Chester, and subjected the county in all things to the jurisdiction of the superior Courts at Westminster. By the Judicature Act, 1925, s. 18, replacing Judicature Act, 1873, s. 16, the jurisdiction of the Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster and of the Court of Pleas at Durham is transferred to the High Court of Justice. But the jurisdiction of the Chancery Courts of these counties is retained (Judicature Act, 1925, s. 19). (See In re Conolly Bros., Wood v. Conolly Bros., 1911, 1 Ch. 731 C. A. (concurrent proceedings; injunction).) By a number of statutes the practice and proceedings in the Court of Common Pleas and of Chancery, at Lancaster and at Durham, were respectively regulated and made conformable, in most particulars, to those of the superior Courts. See LANCASTER and DURHAM.

The counties palatine are now in the hands of the Crown: the jurisdiction of Durham is vested, as a separate franchise and royalty, in the Crown, by 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 19; Lancaster was vested in the Crown by Henry IV., separated indeed from the other possessions of the Crown in order and government, but united in point of inheritance.

County Rate, an imposition levied on the occupiers of lands, and applied to many miscellaneous purposes; among which are those of defraying the expenses connected with prisons, reimbursing to private parties the costs they have incurred in prosecuting public offenders, and defraying the expenses of the county police. See County Rate Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 81), and Rating Valuation Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 90).

County Sessions. They are the general quarter sessions of the peace for each county, and are held four times a year; by the Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 86), s. 22, they shall instead of being held at the times prescribed by s. 35 of the Law Terms Act, 1830, be held at such times within the period of 21 days immediately preceding or immediately following March 25th, June 24th, September 29th, December 25th.

In London County (see S. R. & O., 1932, No. 418) Quarter Sessions shall be held at Newington January, April, July and October, and the first sessions held in each of these months shall be General Quarter Sessions; Adjourned Quarter Sessions shall also be held in all months at intervals of not less than two weeks or more than three weeks after the beginning of each preceding Quarter Sessions or Adjourned Quarter Sessions. See QUARTER SESSIONS.

Coupons [fr. couper, Fr., to cut], interest and dividend certificates; also those parts of a commercial instrument which are to be cut, and which are evidence of something connected with the contract mentioned in the instrument. They are generally attached to certificates of loan, where the interest is payable at particular periods, and, when the interest is paid, they are cut off and delivered to the payer. A coupon does not require a stamp; it is nothing more than an I.O.U.

Courier [fr. courir, Fr., to run], an express messenger of haste; a travelling attendant.

Courracler, a horse courser.—2 Inst. 719.

Course, Order of, an order in the Chancery Division to which no opposition can be offered, and which is drawn up without any direct application to the judge. See Dan. Ch. Pr.

Coursing. The chasing of an animal with dogs who follow by sight and not by scent and capture it by their swiftness. As to the coursing of captive animals, see the Protection of Animals Act, 1911, s. 1, sub-s. 3 (b); Aplin v. Porritt, 1893, 2 Q. B. 57; Waters v. Meakin, 1916, 2 K. B. 111; Jenkins v. Ash, (1929) 93 J. P. 229. As to dog racing on licensed tracks, see 24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 28.

Court [fr. curia, Lat.; cour, Fr.; keort, Dut.]. 1. The person and suite of the sovereign; the place where the sovereign sojourns with his regal retinue, wherever that may be. The English Government is spoken of in diplomacy as the Court of St. James's, because the Palace of St. James is the official palace.

2. The place where the sovereign administers justice by his judge or a bishop, as the Supreme Court of Judicature, divided into the High Court of Justice and the Court of Appeal, the High Court of Parliament, to which an appeal lies from the Court of Appeal, the County Court, the Courts of Summary Jurisdiction, the Courts of Quarter Sessions, the Court of Arches, the Consistory Court.

Courts are either of record, where their acts and judicial proceedings are enrolled for a perpetual memorial and testimony, and they have power to fine and imprison; or not of record, being courts of inferior dignity, and in a less proper sense the King's Courts—and these are not entrusted by law with any power to fine or imprison the subjects of the realm, unless by the express provision of some Act of Parliament. Their proceedings are not enrolled or recorded. See Oggers on the Common Law, pp. 1028 et seq.; Stephen's Commentaries, chap. x.; Blackstone's Commentaries, III. p. 24; Jac. Law Dict.

Court-baron, a court which, before 1926 (see COPYHOLDS), although not one of record, was incident to every manor, and could not be severed therefrom. It was ordained for the maintenance of the services and duties stipulated for by lords of manors, and for the purpose of determining actions of a personal nature, where the debt or damage was under forty shillings.

This court might be held at any place within the manor, giving fifteen days' notice, including three Sundays, of the day when the court will be held; but three or four days' notice have been deemed sufficient. It was frequently held together with the court-leet, and generally assembled but once a year.

The freehold tenants alone were suitors to the Court-baron; and it was essential to the existence of the court that there should be two suitors at the least; for since freemen can only be tried by their peers or equals, should there be but one freeman, he could then have no peer or judge, and consequently he had to appeal to the court of the lord paramount. The court was held before the freeholders who owed suit to the manor, the steward being rather the registrar than the judge. Neither the lord nor his steward could fine or imprison, and see 1 Ja. 1, c. 5 (Ruff) as to profits.

The tenants of a manor might make bye-laws touching their commons and the like, to bind such tenants as assented thereto, unless they were made by prescription or under an immemorial custom. These laws could never bind strangers. The penalty for the breach of a bye-law was in the nature of a fine rather than amercement, and was not affeerable, i.e., assisable. Consult Scriven on Copyholds, 4th ed. pp. 600 et seq.

Courts-baron do not appear to have been affected by the Law of Property Act, 1922 (abolishing copyhold tenure), and are included in the general words implied in the conveyance of a manor, see Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 62 (3); but not being courts of record, were practically abolished as regards their jurisdiction as Courts of Common Law by the County Court Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 142), s. 28, which provided that no action which could be brought in any county court should thenceforth be maintainable in any inferior court not being a court of record.

Court Christian. The ecclesiastical judicature, opposed to the civil court or lay tribunal; and as in secular courts human laws are maintained, so in the Court Christian the laws of Christ should be the rule. And therefore the judges are divines, as archbishops, bishops, archdeacons, etc.—2 Inst. 488.

Courtesy. See CURTESY.

Court for Crown Cases Reserved. See CROWN CASES RESERVED.

Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes. See MATRIMONIAL CAUSES.

Court-lands, domains or lands kept in the lord's hands to serve his family.

Court-leet. [Coke says leet is a Saxon word, and comes from the verb gelathian, or gelethian (g being added euphonia gratiâ), i.e., convenire, to assemble together, unde conventus.—4 Inst. 261. For other opinions as to the derivation of the word, see Lex Man. 131; Rüson on Courts-leet; and Scriv. on Copyholds.] This court is expressly kept up by s. 40 of the Sheriffs Act, 1887, though for all but formal purposes it has long since fallen into desuetude, and there is still an annual Court-leet of the Manor and Liberty of Savoy which meets at St. Clement Danes Vestry Hall, the High Steward of the Manor presiding, a jury being empanelled one month after Easter and serving for a year from that date, the court being held 'for the purpose of preventing small offences in the nature of a common nuisance,' and still having 'power to impose fines for certain offences, such as the stopping up of ways': Solicitors' Journal, vol. 49, p. 493.

The Court-leet is a court of record appointed to be held once a year within a particular hundred, lordship, or manor, before the steward of the leet, being the King's Court granted by charter to the lords of those hundreds or manors. Its original intent was to view the frank pledges, that is, the freemen within the liberty who, according to the institution of Alfred, were all mutually pledged for the good behaviour of each other. It was anciently the custom to summon all the king's subjects, as they respectively grew to years of discretion and strength, to come to the Court-leet, and there take the oath of allegiance to the king. The other general business is to present by jury all crimes whatsoever that happen within their jurisdiction; and not only to present, but also to punish all trivial misdemeanours, as all trivial debts were recoverable in the Court-baron and county court.—Steph. Com., Book VI., ch. xiv. The lord was compellable to hold a court by mandamus, and a leet was forfeited by nonuser and by acts of abuser. By the Law of Property Act, 1922, s. 128, and the 12th sched. the jurisdiction of Courts-leet in certain matters, e.g., relating to works for the protection or benefit of any manor and registering any liability (under the Land Charges Act, 1925) is transferred to the High Court.

The steward of a Court-leet is an essential officer, and should be indifferent between the lord and the law (see Powell on Courts-leet, p. 43), for he is the judge, and presides in the court wholly in a judicial character; the ministerial acts of the court, such as empanelling the jury, are executed by the bedel or bailiff, sworn to a due performance of his duty. The steward may fine or imprison, and may take a recognizance of the peace. The steward may not retain the profits, 1 Ja. 1, c. 5 (Ruff), he cannot appoint a deputy, unless he be so empowered in his patent or deed of appointment, or there exist an established custom for it. All fines are recoverable by action of debt or by distress. A fine is imposed by the court, but an amercement is generally the act of the jury; it must always be affeered in open court by two or more persons appointed by the steward and duly sworn, and is then recoverable by distress or action.

Bye-laws, embodied in the presentments and verdicts of the jury and homage, may be good by custom.

In some manors, the jury of the Court-leet chose the mayor, port-reeve, or other chief municipal officer of the borough or town to which the leet jurisdiction was appended; but the Municipal Corporations Act, 1883, reorganized all such boroughs as were left untouched by the Municipal Corporations Act of 1835.

All offences cognizable in the leet are inquired of and presented by the suitors of the court, sworn and charged as a jury for that purpose; and all presentments may be removed, by certiorari, into the King's Bench and there traversed. Consult Scriven on Copyholds, 4th ed. pp. 669 et seq.

Court-martial, a court for the trial of military offences, under the authority of the Crown and the Army Act, 1881; the ordinary law of evidence must be applied in its proceedings (ibid. s. 128, and Rules of Procedure, r. 73). There are general, district, and regimental courts-martial. See JUDGE ADVOCATE. Their jurisdiction does not, however, exempt any officer or soldier from being proceeded against by the ordinary course of law.—Consult Manual of Military Law and the King's Regulations; Clode's Military Forces of the Crown.

As to Naval Courts-martial, see Navy Discipline Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 109), ss. 58-69; JUDGE ADVOCATE.

Court of Claims. See CLAIMS, COURT OF. Court Rolls, a book, or series of books, in which an account of all the proceedings and transactions of the customary court of a manor was entered by a person duly authorized. The person who makes the entries is the steward, and the court rolls are kept by him, but subject to the right of the tenants to inspect them.

Copyhold tenure was abolished by the Law of Property Act, 1922, but the Law of Property (Amendment) Act contains provisions for the preservation and superintendence of Court Rolls, ibid. 2nd Sched. II. See MANORIAL DOCUMENTS; Williams on Real Property. Consult Scriven or Elton on Copyholds.

Courts (Emergency Powers) Acts empowered the Courts (inter alia) to defer execution, the levying of distress, realization of securities, etc., during the war. The policy of protecting certain classes of tenants and mortgagors was continued and extended by the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (War Restrictions) Act, 1915, since replaced by various Acts which have been superseded by the Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Acts, 1920 to 1935. See too INCREASE OF RENT ETC. ACTS, 1920-1935.

Cousenage. See COSENAGE.

Cousin [fr. cousin, Fr.; cugino, It.; consobrinus, Lat., whence cusdrin, susrin; sabrino, Sp.]. A cousin is any collateral relation except brothers and sisters, and their descendants, and the brothers and sisters of any ancestor. The child of A.'s uncle or aunt is called his cousin-german, or first cousin, and the child, grandchild, etc., of such cousin is called his first cousin once, twice, etc., removed. The grandchild of A.'s great-uncle is his second cousin, and the child, grandchild, etc., of such cousin is his second cousin, once, twice, etc., removed, and so on. This distinction between first cousins once removed and second cousins is well recognized by the law (see Re Parker, (1881) 17 Ch. D. 262). The word 'cousin' properly means the children of brothers and sisters and implies consanguinity, but it is sometimes used in a loose and vague sense without any such implication, as when the sovereign addresses a nobleman, or a member of the Privy Council, as a 'cousin,' and when we speak of our 'country cousins' (Re Taylor, (1886) 34 Ch. D. p. 260, per Fry, L.J.). In old English it often means any collateral relative. As to the meaning of 'half cousin,' see Re Chester, 1914, 2 Ch. 280.

In consequence of drastic changes which were introduced by s. 45 of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, all kindred of an intestate more remote than first cousins and their issue have been debarred from any claim to the beneficial interest in property either real or personal on the death of the intestate with a few exceptions, see DEVOLUTION OF PROPERTY ON DEATH, the share of the excluded kindred goes to the Crown or the Duchy of Lancaster or Duke of Cornwall, who may make certain ex gratia distributions, see s. 46 of the A. E. Act, 1925.

Couthutlaugh [fr. couth, Sax., knowing, and ulaugh, an outlaw], a person who willingly and knowingly received an outlaw and cherished or concealed him; for which offence he underwent the same punishment as the outlaw himself.—Bract.

Covenable, convenient or suitable.

Covenant [fr. covenant, Fr.], any agreement, convention, or promise of two or more parties, by deed in writing, signed, sealed, and delivered, by which either of the parties pledges himself to the other that something is either done or shall be done, or stipulates for the truth of certain facts.

He who thus promises is called the covenantor; and he to whom it is made the covenantee. A covenant being part of a deed is subject to the general rules for the construction of such instruments; as, first, to be always taken most strongly against the covenantor and most in favour of the covenantee; secondly, to be taken according to the intent of the parties; thirdly, to be construed ut res magis valeat quam pereat; fourthly, when no time is limited for its performance, that it be performed in a reasonable time.

Covenants are personal obligations; formerly they did not bind the heirs of the covenantor unless the heirs were named and in that case only to the extent of the lands descended, but if made after 31st December, 1881, the real estate became bound as well as the personal estate (s. 58, C. Act, 1881, reproduced and extended by the L. P. Act, 1925, s. 80 (1)), descent to heir being abolished at the same time by the A. E. Act, 1925, s. 45.

The R. P. Act, 1845, s. 5, enabled persons in existence at its date (Kelsey v. Dodd, 52 L. J. Ch. 34) who were not parties to a deed to take the benefit of any interest, right or covenant respecting land, and this was extended by s. 56 of the L. P. Act, 1925, to any property. It should be observed that this enactment relates to interests or covenants of which the benefit would otherwise pass to such persons and refers to those covenants only which run with the land (see below).

The benefits of covenants which come within the category of choses in action may be assigned, see L. P. Act, 1925, and ASSIGNMENT.

A deed addressed to all the world, sometimes called a deed poll, was not within the rule that only parties to the deed could take advantage of it, Co. Litt. 26 a, 231.

Covenants running with the land are express or implied covenants which touch and concern the land and do not create an active personal obligation in connection with the land. Implied covenants relate to covenants implied in the words or nature of the grant. The Real Property Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106), abolished the implications in words such as 'dedi,' 'concessi'; but certain covenants (see infra) are still implied in technical expressions or arise out of the nature of the transaction. In a conveyance by deed of real or leasehold property certain qualified covenants for title, quiet enjoyment and further assurance are implied if the person conveying is expressed to convey, such as 'beneficial owner,' 'trustee,' 'settlor,' 'mortgagee'; see s. 76, and the 2nd sched. of the L. P. Act, 1925, as to covenants implied in a conveyance (not a mortgage) for value of land subject to a rentcharge or an assignment for value of a lease similarly subject, see s. 77; but the section does not refer to the demise or letting of land on a lease for rent.

For covenants implied as between lessor and lessee, see Woodfall's Landlord and Tenant, and for covenants implied in perpetuity leases converted into long terms of 2,000 years by the Law of Property Act, 1922, s. 145, see the 15th Sched. to that Act.

The benefit to the covenantee of a covenant running with the land now ensures to his successors in title and the persons deriving title under him or them, s. 78, L. P. Act, 1925. The burden relating to the land of the covenantor now falls on his successor in title and the persons deriving title under him or them, s. 79, ibid. It is no longer necessary that heirs, executors, administrators and assigns should be referred to in the framing of covenants.

Covenants by a person with himself and another have been validated whether made before or after the L. P. Act, 1925, by s. 82, and see Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 68, in regard to leases by a tenant for life as estate owner with himself as tenant for life in equity.

Restrictive covenants bind all persons (including owners and occupiers for the time being, see s. 79 (3), L. P. Act, 1925) who take with notice of the restriction under the rule in Tulk v. Moxhay, 2 Ph. 774, and these covenants if made after 1925 must be registered as a land charge, see L. C. Act, 1925, s. 10, Class C. As to the discharge or modification of Restrictive Covenants, see s. 84 of the L. P. Act, 1925. See also APPORTIONMENT; RUN WITH THE LAND.

No particular technical words are requisite to create a covenant, for any words or form of expression which import an agreement will suffice (Re De Ros' Trust, (1885) 31 Ch. D. 88). A covenant to do a thing which upon the face of it appears to be prejudicial to the public interest, or otherwise contrary to law, is absolutely void, as is an impossible covenant, if the impossibility existed at the time of making it.

The time within which an action must be brought for damages for breach of a covenant is twenty years (Civil Procedure Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42), s. 3).

A covenant is either express or implied—it subsists either in fact or in law. An express covenant, or one in fact, is expressed in words; an implied covenant, or one in law, is that which the law implies though not expressed in words. Express covenants are taken more strictly than implied. As to what covenants shall be construed to be precedent or not, it has been laid down that the dependence or independence of covenants must be collected from the sense and meaning of the parties; and that in whatever order covenants may stand in a deed, their precedency must depend on the order of time which the intent of the transaction requires.

Covenants are inherent that tend to the support of the land or thing granted, or are collateral to it; affirmative, or negative; executed, or that which is already done; executory, or that which is to be done.—Shep. Touch. 160; Bac. Abr. Covenant (G); Com. Dig. Covenant (F); Vin. Abr. Covenant (O). Third report of R. P. Comrs., 1 Dav. Conv., also CONSIDERATION; CONTRACT; RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

Covenant, Action of, a form of action in which the plaintiff claimed damages for breach of a promise under seal. Abolished by the Judicature Acts.

Covenant, Writ of (abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 36), a writ for claiming damages for breach of covenant, superseded by the action of covenant where the damages were unliquidated and by the action of debt where liquidated; both of these forms of action have now been abolished. See ACTIONS and preceding title.

Covent Garden Market. For its regulation by the Covent Garden Market Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 113), see Bedford (Duke of) v. Ellis, 1901, A. C. 1, in which the respondent and five other growers of fruit, etc., were held to have a locus standi to sue for infringement of preferential rights.

Coventry Act (22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 1), by which it was made a capital felony to disable with intent to disfigure, so called because it was passed in consequence of an assault upon Sir John Coventry. Repealed by 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 1.

Covert-baron, said of a wife who is under the protection of her husband.

Coverture, the condition of a woman during marriage, because she was then presumed to be under the influence of her husband, so as to be excused from punishment for crimes committed in his presence, except treason, murder, and manslaughter (see Reg. v. Manning, (1849) 2 C. & K. at

p. 903); but the presumption may be rebutted (Reg. v. Torpey, (1871) 12 Cox, C. C. 45). The Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (c. 86), s. 47, abolishes this presumption of coercion by the husband, but on a charge for any offence other than treason or murder, it shall be a good defence to prove that the offence was committed in the presence of, and under the coercion of the husband. See further HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Covin is a secret assent determined in the minds of two or more to the prejudice of another—Termes de la Ley. And see Co. Litt. 357 b; Girdlestone v. Brighton Aquarium, (1878) 3 Ex. D. 137; 13 Eliz. c. 5.

Covinous, fraudulent, 27 Eliz. c. 4; Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Conveyancing.'

Cowper-Temple Clause. Section 14 (2) of the Elementary Education Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 75), whereby 'no religious catechism or religious formulary, which is distinctive of any particular denomination,' might be taught in a school provided by a School Board, and therefore may not be taught in any of the schools provided by local education authorities who have succeeded the School Boards. Re-enacted by the Education Act, 1921 (11 & 12 Geo. 5, c. 51), s. 28 (2).

Craft, a guild; a small boat.

Cran, a barrel or basket used as a measure for buying or selling fresh herrings. Regulations as to determining the capacity of and branding these measures are contained in the Cran Measures Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 17).

Cranage, a liberty to use a crane for landing goods from vessels at creeks or wharves and to make profit of it; also the money paid and taken for the same.

Crassa negligentia, gross negligence. Negligence, however great, does not of itself constitute fraud (Le Lievre v. Gould, 1893, 1 Q. B. 498). Consult Beven on Negligence in Law.

Crastino, the morrow after.

Crates, an iron gate before a prison.—1 Vent. 304.

Cravare, to impeach.—Leg. Hen. 1, c. 30.

Craven, or Cravant, a word of disgrace and obloquy, pronounced on either champion, in the ancient trial by battle, proving recreant, i.e., yielding. Glanville calls it infestum et inverecondum verbum. His condemnation was amittere liberam legem, i.e., to become infamous, and not to be accounted liber et legalis homo, being supposed by the event to have been proved foresworn, and not fit to be put upon a jury or admitted as a witness.

Cream. By the Artificial Cream Act, 1929 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 32), 'cream' is defined as natural milk rich in milk fat which has been separated, and 'artificial cream' as containing no ingredient which is not derived from milk except water and substances allowed by the Food and Drugs (Adulteration) Act, 1928, in cream. The sale of any substance for human consumption under the word 'cream' is prohibited unless it is cream or artificial cream.

Creamer, a foreign merchant, but generally taken for one who has a stall in a fair or market.—Blount.

Creansor, a creditor.—Old Nat. Br. 66. 38 Edw. 3, c. 1.

Creast. See CREST.

Credit, a transfer of goods in confidence of future payment; that side of an account or any item set down in favour of one party against any sums or matters ('debit') which are set against him.

Creditor [Lat.], one who trusts or gives credit, correlative to debtor. A creditor is entitled to take out letters of administration if there be no next of kin, or the next of kin will not. And see BANKRUPTCY, ADMINISTRATION OF ASSETS, and COMPANY.

Creditrix, a female creditor.

Cremation, the disposal of a dead body by burning instead of by burial. This is not illegal, unless it be done so as to cause a nuisance, or with the intention of preventing a coroner's inquest (Reg. v. Price, (1884) 12 Q. B. D. 247). But it is the duty of executors to bury the body of their testator, although the will may direct some other person to cause it to be burnt (Williams v. Williams, (1882) 20 Ch. D. 659). If burial in consecrated ground and cremation are both desired, cremation should precede and not follow burial, and the Burial Service may be read in connection with the burial of the ashes; see Re Dixon, 1892, P. 394, where an application to exhume, after 18 years' burial, for the purpose of cremation, was refused. The Cremation Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7, c. 8), empowers burial authorities (see BURIAL) to establish crematoria on plans approved by the Minister of Health and certified to be in accordance therewith by the Secretary of State, but no crematorium may be nearer than 200 yards to any dwelling house without the written consent of the owner. The incumbent of the parish where the deceased died is not bound to perform a funeral service. See Chitty's Statutes, and the elaborate official regulations required by the 7th section of the Act, ibid. See CREMA- tion Regulations, 28th October, 1930 (S. R. & O., 1930, No. 1016).

A coroner is required to give a special certificate to permit cremation of any body on which he has held an inquest.

Crementum comitatus (the increase of a county). The sheriffs of counties anciently answered in their accounts for the improvement of the king's rents, above the viscontiel rents, under this title.—Jac. Law Dict.

Crepare oculum, to put out an eye. An offence punishable among the Saxons by a fine of 50s., the highest fine.—Turner's Anglo-Saxons, v. ii., ap. iii., c. ii., p. 515.

Crepusculum [Lat.], the twilight.

Crest, in heraldry, signifies the devices set over a coat of arms.

Creteus, a sudden stream or torrent.

Cretio, the period fixed by a testator within which the heir must have formally declared his intention to accept.—Civil Law.

Crier—Of the Court of Chancery, abolished by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, s. 27. In the Courts of Common Law one of the judge's clerks acted as crier.—15 & 16 Vict. c. 73, s. 8. Continued under Jud. Act, 1873, s. 77. (See Judicature Act, 1925, s. 226 (2)).

Crime is a word, of which the interpretation has varied with the philosophic bias of the writer; it has been described as the violation of a right, when considered in reference to the evil tendency of such violation, as regards the community at large, but this definition is too wide; and would include any evil act or movement whether or not it is punishable by law. The Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 112), s. 5, defines crime for the limited purposes of the Act as either felonies or specified offences or misdemeanours, while 'offence' means any act which is not a 'crime' and is punishable on indictment or summary conviction. In our law misdemeanour is generally used in contradistinction to felony, and comprehends all indictable offences which do not amount to felony, as perjury, battery, libels, conspiracies, etc. See OFFENCE, and consult Russell on Crimes, and Mellor v. Denham, (1880) 5 Q. B. D. 467, and other cases decided upon the meaning of 'criminal cause or matter' in Judicature Act, 1925, s. 31 (1) (a), replacing s. 47 of the Judicature Act, 1873, which in Mellor v. Denham, ubi supra, was held to include a conviction for breach of a bye-law under the Education Act, 1870, s. 74. The question as to what is a 'criminal cause or matter' is important when there is an intention to appeal. Contempt of Court, if a substantive offence, will come within the words (Lewis v. Owen, 1894, 1 Q. B. 102), but not if the contempt is the mere non-compliance with an order made in civil proceedings (Church's Trustee v. Hibbard, 1902, 2 Ch. 784).

Crimen falsi, forgery.

Crimen falsi dicitur, cum quis illicitus, cui non fuerit ad hæc data auctoritas, de sigillo regis rapto vel invento, breviam cartasue consignaverit. Fleta, 1, c. xxiii.—(The crime of forgery is when any one illicitly, to whom power has not been given for such purposes, has signed writs or charters with the king's seal, either stolen or found.) See FORGERY.

Crimen furti, theft. See LARCENY.

Crimen incendii, arson. See ARSON.

Crimen læsæ majestatis, the crime of injured majesty; treason. See TREASON.

Crimen raptus, rape. See RAPE.

Crimen roberiæ, robbery. See ROBBERY.

Criminal, a person indicted for a public offence and found guilty.

Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 23), came into force on the 19th April, 1908. For a great number of years the merits and demerits of criminal appeal have been discussed in this country.

In 1844 Sir Fitzroy Kelly, in a remarkable speech in the House of Commons, advocated criminal appeal, the claim to which has also been recognized by Starkie, Sir John Holker, and Chief Baron Pollock; and even Blackstone, with whom, as Mr. Lecky has observed, admiration of our national jurisprudence was almost a foible, passed some severe criticisms on the state of the criminal law of his day. In more recent times Lord James of Hereford (then Sir Henry James) introduced a criminal appeal bill into the House of Commons, which was supported by Lord Russell of Killowen (then Sir Charles Russell). And in 1889 Lord Fitzgerald, when introducing a measure into the House of Lords, said that the absence of any provision for rectifying errors and mistakes in criminal cases constituted a blot upon the criminal jurisdiction of England which did not exist in any civilized country. The importance of the subject was well stated by Sir John Lawson Walton when he said that the criminal law and its administration constituted 'the absolute condition of individual happiness and welfare on the part of every member of the community throughout all classes of our population.' The Criminal Code Commission, which sat in 1878, made proposals as to criminal appeal on a point of law and on a question of fact, and these proposals have been adopted by most of our colonies; and Lord James of Hereford said (House of Lords, March 27th, 1906) that in every nation in Europe, and certainly in America, there were courts of criminal appeal. The passing of this Act was probably brought about by the public concern and sensation which was aroused by two cases: first, the Beck case, which resulted in the Beck Commission of 1904 (and as to which see Best on Evidence, 10th ed. at p. 438); and, secondly, the Edalji case.

The Court of Criminal Appeal, which is constituted by the Act, consists of the Lord Chief Justice of England and all the judges of the King's Bench Division (altered from eight judges by the Criminal Appeal (Amendment) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 46)).

The right of appeal is contained in s. 3, which is as follows:—

3. A person convicted on indictment may appeal under this Act to the Court of Criminal Appeal—

- (a) against his conviction on any ground of appeal which involves a question of law alone; and
- (b) with the leave of the Court of Criminal Appeal or upon the certificate of the judge who tried him that it is a fit case of appeal against his conviction on any ground of appeal which involves a question of fact alone, or a question of mixed law and fact, or any other ground which appears to the court to be a sufficient ground of appeal; and
- (c) with the leave of the Court of Criminal Appeal against the sentence passed on his conviction, unless the sentence is one fixed by law.

A parent or guardian may appeal to the Court of Criminal Appeal under s. 3 against an order made by a Court of Assize or Quarter Sessions under the Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 12), s. 55. Also a woman charged with murder and the jury find her not pregnant, see Sentence of Death (Expectant Mothers) Act, 1931 (21 & 22 Geo. 5, c. 24), s. 2.

'A person convicted' includes a person who, upon the trial of an indictment, has been found insane (R. v. Ireland, 1910, 1 K. B. 654).

The Court has power (s. 4, see R. v. Ettridge, 1909, 2 K. B. 24) to increase the sentence on the prisoner, and the prisoner has (s. 11) the right to be present on the hearing of his appeal, except where it is on 'some ground involving a question of law alone' (R. v. Dunleavy, 1909, 1 K. B. 200). The procedure of stating a case for the opinion of the Court under the Crown Cases Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 78), is preserved (s. 20 (4)), but writs of error and motions for new trials are abolished (s. 20 (1)). See NEW TRIAL. Regarding an appeal to the Court of Appeal from a conviction in relation to non-repair of a highway, a saving was inserted in the Criminal Appeal Act, s. 20 (3), and the Judicature Act, 1925, s. 29, replaces this sub-section. In order to assist the Court of Criminal Appeal in coming to a determination, s. 16 contains provisions for taking shorthand notes, and is as follows:—

16.—(1) Shorthand notes shall be taken of the proceedings at the trial of any person on indictment who, if convicted, is entitled or may be authorized to appeal under this Act, and on any appeal or application for leave to appeal a transcript of the notes or any part thereof shall be made if the registrar so directs, and furnished to the registrar for the use of the Court of Criminal Appeal or any judge thereof: Provided that a transcript shall be furnished to any party interested upon the payment of such charges as the Treasury may fix.

(2) The Secretary of State may also, if he thinks fit in any case, direct a transcript of the shorthand notes to be made and furnished to him for his use.

(3) The cost of taking any such shorthand notes, and of any transcript where a transcript is directed to be made by the registrar or by the Secretary of State, shall be defrayed, in accordance with scales of payment fixed for the time being by the Treasury, out of moneys provided by Parliament, and rules of court may make such provision as is necessary for securing the accuracy of the notes to be taken and for the verification of the transcript.

Many of the matters in the Act are governed by the rules made under it (see Criminal Appeal Rules, April, 1908).

The decision of the Court is final, unless the Director of Public Prosecutions, or the prosecutor or the defendant, obtains the certificate of the Attorney-General that the Court's decision involves a point of law of exceptional public importance, and that it is desirable in the public interest that a further appeal should be brought, when appeal may be brought to the House of Lords (s. 1 (6), Act of 1907).

In Scotland, the Criminal Appeal (Scotland) Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 15), gives a right to a person convicted on indictment—whether before a sheriff or before a judge of the High Court of Justiciary—to appeal to the High Court of Justiciary against conviction and/or against sentence. The grounds of appeal must be that the conviction is unreasonable or cannot be supported having regard to the evidence, that there has been a wrong decision by the trial judge on any question of law, or that there has been a miscarriage of justice. The Court may vary the verdict and/or the sentence.

Criminal Conversation, adultery. See ADULTERY. The action for this (called crim. con.) was nominally abolished by the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict.

c. 85), s. 59; but s. 33 (replaced by the Judicature Act, 1925, s. 189) gives a husband the right to claim damages from an adulterer, either in a petition for dissolution of marriage or for judicial separation, or in a petition limited to that object; and the damages claimed must be assessed by a jury upon the same principles and rules as were formerly applicable to the trial of actions for criminal conversation, and the Court may direct that they be settled for the benefit of the children of the marriage or as a provision for the wife.

Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 36), the general Act by which every person charged with an offence and his or her wife or husband became a competent, but not a compellable, witness for the defence at every stage of the proceedings.

The evidence Acts, 1851 and 1853, which made parties and spouses admissible witnesses (they having been previously incompetent on the ground of interest), expressly excepted criminal proceedings from its operation; but a series of enactments dealing with particular offences, from the Licensing Act, 1872, down to the Chaff Cutting Machines Accidents Act, 1897 (of which s. 20 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, was by far the most important), did away with this exception, in particular cases and in varying phraseology, but without qualifications except that against compellability, and enabled accused persons to give evidence on oath in their own defence.

The Act of 1898, superseding (see Charnock v. Merchant, 1900, 1 Q. B. 474) but not expressly repealing these particular enactments, provides (s. 1) that every person charged with an offence, and the wife or husband, as the case may be, of the person so charged, shall be a competent witness for the defence at every stage of the proceedings.

'Proceedings' do not include the inquiry before the grand jury (R. v. Rhodes, 1899, 1 Q. B. 77).

Eight provisos follow, to the following effect:—

(a) The person charged is not to be called except on his own application;

(b) Failure to give evidence is not to be commented on by the prosecution;

(c) The wife or husband is not to be called except on the application of the person charged;

(d) Spouses are not to be compellable to disclose communications to each other during marriage;

(e) A person charged and being a witness may be asked questions tending to criminate him as to the offence charged (see R. v. Minsham, (1921) 16 Cr. App. R. 38);

(f) Such person may not be asked, and if asked need not answer, any question tending to show that he has committed any other offence (see R. v. Chitson, 1909, 2 K. B. 945) or is of bad character, unless (i.) the commission of such other offence is legal evidence of the commission of the offence wherewith he is charged; or (ii.) he has either sought to prove his own good character 'or the nature or conduct of the defence is such as to involve imputations' (see R. v. Rouse, 1904, 1 K. B. 184; R. v. Bridgwater, 1905, 1 K. B. 131; R. v. Preston, 1909, 1 K. B. 568) 'on the character of the prosecutor or of the witnesses for the prosecution'; or (iii.) he has given evidence against any other person charged with the same offence;

(g) The witness-box is to be the place for giving evidence, unless otherwise ordered by the Court; and

(h) The provisions of s. 18 of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (repealed by Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 86), and replaced by s. 12 thereof), and any right of the person charged to make a statement without being sworn, are to remain unaffected.

The Criminal Justice Act, 1925 s. 12, replacing Indictable Offences Act, 1848, s. 18, directs that before commitment for trial (see ACCUSED PERSON and COMMITMENT) justices of the peace before whom a person is charged with an offence must give him an opportunity of answering the charge, coupled with a caution that he is not obliged to answer it.

The Act of 1898 also provides (s. 4) that in certain cases specified in the Schedule to the Act (since extended) the wife or husband may be called as a witness either for the prosecution or defence, and without the consent of the person charged. Consult Allen, Butterworth, or Jelf on the Act; Best or Taylor on Evidence.

Criminal Information, a proceeding in the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice at the suit of the king, without a previous indictment or presentment by a grand jury. Criminal informations are of two sorts: (1) Ex officio, which is a formal, written suggestion of an offence committed, filed by the Attorney-General, or, in the vacancy of that office, by the Solicitor-General, in the King's Bench Division of the High Court, without the intervention of a grand jury. It lies for misdemeanours only, and not for treasons or felonies. The information is filed in the Crown Office without the previous leave of the Court. (2) Information by the Master of the Crown Office, which is filed at the instance of an individual called 'the relator,' with the leave of the Court; and usually confined to gross and notorious misdemeanours, riots, batteries, libels, and other immoralities. Criminal informations may also be filed against judges and magistrates for illegal, unjust, and wilfully oppressive conduct if arising from corrupt and malicious motives, and not from mere error of judgment. The procedure on criminal information is regulated by the Crown Office Rules, 1906, rr. 35-39, which provide that the person procuring an information must file a recognizance in 50*l.* to prosecute it, that no application for a criminal information against a justice of the peace as such must be made without notice to him, etc. See Odgers on the Common Law.

Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58). The Act considerably enlarges the jurisdiction of Courts of Summary Jurisdiction; requires time to be allowed for payment of fines; substitutes 'detention' for imprisonment in certain cases; extends the powers of Courts as to committal to Borstal Institutions; and extends the right of appeal.

Criminal Law. Consult Archbold's Criminal Pleading; Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Criminal Law'; Stephen's Digest of the Criminal Law; Russell on Crimes; and see titles ARSON, ASSAULT, BURGLARY, EMBEZZLEMENT, FALSE PRETENCES, LARCENY, MANSLAUGHTER, MURDER, RAPE, TREASON, and WOUNDING.

Criminal Law Amendment Acts, 1885 to 1928. By the Act of 1885 the procurement of women under twenty-one, and illicit though unresisted intercourse with girls between thirteen and sixteen, are made misdemeanours, brothel-keepers are made liable to summary proceedings, and prisoners charged with sexual offences are allowed to give evidence on their own behalf. The Act is amended by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1912, which empowers a constable to arrest without a warrant any person offending against the Act of 1885, provides for flogging offenders, and makes better provision for the suppression of brothels and prostitution. The Act of 1922 provides that the consent to an act of indecency by a child or young person under sixteen shall be no defence to a charge of indecent assault

(s. 1). Reasonable cause to believe that a girl was over sixteen shall not be a defence to a charge under ss. 5 and 6 of the Act of 1885 (i.e., defilement of a girl between thirteen and sixteen, or permitting the same on defendant's premises), provided that in the case of a man of or under twenty-three, reasonable cause to believe that the girl was over sixteen shall be a valid defence on the first occasion on which he is charged with such an offence. (R. v. Chapman, 1931, 2 K. B. 606 (a man of twenty-three years and six months can avail himself of this defence).) See AGE. The time within which a prosecution can be commenced under s. 5 of the Act of 1885 is extended to twelve months (s. 2) as amended by the 1928 Act. The penalties in summary proceedings against brothel-keepers are increased, and s. 5 repeals s. 5 of the Punishment of Incest Act, 1908, which required all proceedings under that Act to be held in camera (see R. v. Forde, (1923) 39 T. L. R. 322).

Criminal Lunatics Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 64), consolidating and amending the law as to the detention, custody, and discharge of criminal lunatics, the principal amendment being that effected by s. 10, which transfers the expense of maintenance of criminal lunatics from their parish or county to the country generally.

Criminal Procedure Act, 1885 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 18), sometimes called 'Mr. Denman's Act' (Chil. Stat. tit. 'Evidence': Statutes Revised); an Act, as the preamble states, assimilating the law of evidence and practice on trials for felony and misdemeanour, and other proceedings in courts of criminal judicature, to that on trials ad nisi prius, and enacting by s. 1 that—

The provisions of section two of this Act shall apply to every trial for felony or misdemeanor . . . and that the provisions of sections from 3 to 8 inclusive of this act shall apply to all Courts of Judicature as well criminal as all others, and to all persons having, by law or by consent of parties, authority to hear, receive, and examine evidence.

The italicized words of the above enactment gave the Act a great and general importance, especially because ss. 22-27 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 125), have been repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1892, as being substantially identical with ss. 3-8 of 1885.

Section 2 (which applies only where defence is by counsel) allows counsel for the prosecution to sum up his evidence, if none be called for the defence.

Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1887

(50 & 51 Vict. c. 35), abolishes capital sentences except in certain cases, contains numerous forms of indictment, and otherwise simplifies and amends the Criminal Law of Scotland. See CAPITAL OFFENCES (SCOTLAND).

Crimp, one who decoys and plunders sailors under cover of harbouring them. As to the offence of 'crimping' under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, ss. 215-218, see R. v. Abrahams, 1904, 2 K. B. 859; R. v. Goldberg, ibid., 866.

Criticism, Comment.—The judgment or opinion of anyone upon a book, play, or picture submitted for public approval. As to when criticism is fair and honest and no libel, see Joynt v. Cycle Trade Publishing Co., 1904, 2 K. B. 292; Thomas v. Bradbury, Agnew & Co., Ltd., 1906, 2 K. B. 627. Consult Odgers on Libel.

Crocards, a sort of old base money.

Crocia, the crosier, or pastoral staff.

Croclarius, the cross-bearer, who went before the prelate.

Croft [A.S., fr. oreaft, Old Eng., handicraft, or croit, Gael., a hump], a little close adjoining to a dwelling-house or homestead, and enclosed for pasture, or arable, or any particular use.

Crofter, in the Crofters Acts (Scotland), means a person who is tenant of a holding from year to year and resides on his holding, the annual rent of which does not exceed 30*l.*, and which is situated in a 'crofting parish'; see the Crofters Acts of 1886, 1887, 1891, and 1908, and the Small Landholders (Scotland) Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 49).

Croises, and Croisado. See CROYSSES.

Croftelr, a crofter, one holding a croft.

Crop, corn, hay, and such other produce as can be cut and stored up. As to setting fire to crops, see the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), s. 16. As to growing crops, see EMBLEMENTS.

As to freedom of cropping, see AGRICULTURAL HOLDINGS ACT.

Crore, ten millions.—Indian.

Cross-action, a claim by the defendant against the plaintiff put forward in a separate action but arising out of the subject-matter of the first action and before final judgment therein. Procedure by counterclaim (q.v.) has now practically superseded cross-actions, except in Admiralty cases. Cross-actions are generally consolidated and tried together. See R. S. C., Ord. XIX., r. 3.

Cross's Acts, the Artisans and Labourers Dwellings Improvement Acts of 1875 and 1879, repealed and re-enacted with amendments by the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 70). See HOUSING ACTS.

Cross-bill, answering to the reconventio of the Canon Law, as a mode of defence by cross-examination, was one filed by a defendant in the Court of Chancery against the plaintiff or other defendants in the same suit, either to obtain (1) a necessary discovery of facts in aid of his defence to the original bill; or (2) full relief to all parties, touching the matters of the original bill. See now COUNTERCLAIM.

Also a bill of exchange given in consideration of another bill.

Cross-examination, the examination of a witness by the opposite side, generally after examination in chief, but sometimes without such examination; as in the case of an examination on the voir dire, which is in the nature of a cross-examination (see VOIR DIRE); and also if one party calls a witness, and he is sworn, the other party may cross-examine him, although the party who has called him put no question at all to him. Sometimes questions in cross-examination are allowed by the judge after re-examination. See RE-EXAMINATION. And if a witness be called to prove some preliminary and collateral matter only, as the handwriting of a document tendered in evidence, he is a witness in the cause, and may be cross-examined as to any of the issues in the cause.

As to the form of the cross-examination, leading questions are allowed, which is not the case in examination in chief.

The questions must be relevant to the issue (see infra), but great latitude is allowed, as a question seemingly irrelevant often turns out otherwise.

In the case of a witness proving himself hostile from interest or otherwise, the judge may allow the examination in chief to assume the form of cross-examination.

It is provided by R. S. C., 1883, Ord. XXXVI., r. 38, that the judge may disallow vexatious and irrelevant questions, and by s. 25 of the C. L. P. Act, 1854, that if a witness deny a conviction for felony, it may be proved.

The following are some of the chief heads of cross-examination:—

I. To cause the witness to alter or amend his evidence.

1. (a) By showing—

(1) he has spoken on a misconception of fact; or

- (2) misunderstands the meaning of a word ; or
- (3) has given his idea of the effect of a transaction instead of the details.
- (b) by inquiring the grounds of his belief.
- (c) by appealing to his consciousness of a weak memory [this course is taken with very old people].
- (d) reminding him that he has spoken otherwise, or that others have ; and other methods of showing his evidence ought not to be believed, which will come more fully under II.

2. To modify the evidence given in chief, by causing the witness to speak to supplementary facts to show—

- (a) the reason for what was done.
- (b) the circumstances surrounding it. See infra, II. B.
- (c) the manner in which it was treated at the time.

II. To discredit the evidence of the witness.

A. From reasons connected with himself—

- (a) that he is of bad character
  - (1) generally.
  - (2) in regard to truthfulness.
  - (3) in regard to the subject-matter of the issue.
- (b) that he is not impartial, as being
  - (1) a friend of the other side, through
    - (a) relationship.
    - (β) favour.
    - (γ) corruption.
  - (2) a friend of his cause
    - (a) to screen his own character.
    - (β) to conduce to his profit.
  - (3) an enemy of the cross-examining party.
    - (a) presumably, having been punished or unjustly injured by him.
    - (β) apparently, having spoken revengefully of or previously injured him.

Greater latitude is allowed in examining (on these heads) a party to a cause than another witness.

B. From reasons arising out of his evidence by causing him to give further evidence, inconsistent—

- (1) with all reason and probability.
  - (a) absolutely.
  - (β) under the circumstances as (that he should remember the matter in hand, but nothing else at the same distance of time).

- (2) with evidence of witnesses of indisputable credit.
- (3) with parts of the case not in dispute.
- (4) with what he himself has previously said,
  - (a) on a previous occasion.
  - (b) in the examination in hand.
    - (a) in chief.
    - (β) in the prior part of his cross-examination.
- (5) with what a witness on the same side has said on the same subject. Now this will show either that the variance is a sign that the whole story is a fiction or that one of the two speaks true and the other false, and that, as it does not appear which speaks true, it is not safe to believe either, or it should be attempted to cast the discredit on the one whose evidence is more important.
- (6) with his own conduct in the transaction, or the conduct of witnesses of undisputed credit.
- (7) with his demeanour in court, as (if he deposes he was calm under provocation) to irritate him.

III. To cause him to give evidence to be received as true.

- (a) confirming the evidence of the questioner's witnesses.
- (b) contradicting that of the opponent's witnesses.
- (c) on a region of facts not previously entered upon ; but this topic is more in the nature of examination in chief.

Of these, I. is the most generally useful. II. (A) may not be resorted to without just grounds of suspicion. The effect of s. 1 of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, on questions which may not be put to a person charged with a criminal offence should be noted. The propriety of selecting any of the others must depend upon the view suggested at the moment by the air of the witness and the general complexion of the case. The effect of s. 3 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1865, should be noted with respect to both civil and criminal matters. It has been well laid down that the cross-examination of each witness should be made subservient to the general conduct of the case. Consult Powell on Evidence.

Cross-remainders, reciprocal contingencies of succession, which may be implied in a will but must always be expressed in a deed, and should be expressly limited in a will.

The broad rule is, that wherever realty is devised to several persons in tail as tenants-in-common, and it appears to be the testator's intention that no part should go over until the failure of the issue of all the tenants-in-common, they take cross-remainders in tail amongst themselves. The effect of the limitation is that on the death of any of the class of beneficiaries entitled to cross remainders in tail, then upon failure of his or her issue, his or her share and any share which he or she or such issue may have taken by accrual will be divided equally among the others of the class. See Theobald on Wills.

Crossed Cheques. It is very usual for the drawer of a cheque to write across it, between two parallel lines, the name of the payee's banker, in which case the banker on whom the cheque is drawn should only pay to that banker; in other cases, as when the drawer is unaware of the payee's banker, it is usual for him to write merely the words 'and Co.,' leaving it to the payee to add the name of his banker if the payee so intends, or if the parallel lines are left in blank except for the words 'and Co.' the cheque can only be paid by the Bank on whom it is drawn to or through a Bank. This serves as some security in case the cheque is lost, since it can only be paid through a banker, and moreover postpones in some measure the payment until the clearing hours in the afternoon. See Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), ss. 76-80; and Bills of Exchange (Crossed Cheques) Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 17) passed in consequence of Capital and Counties Bank v. Gordon, 1903, A. C. 240, by s. 1 of which a banker receives payment of a crossed cheque within the meaning of s. 82 of the Act of 1882 for a customer, notwithstanding that he credits his customer's account with the amount of the cheque before receiving payment thereof, though he incurs no liability to the true owner if the customer had no title. As to the effect of adding the words 'a/c Payee,' see House Property Co. v. L. C. & W. Bank, (1915) 31 T. L. R. 479. See also Bills of Exchange Act (1882) Amendment Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 44); Slingsby v. Westminster Bank Ltd., 1931, 1 K. B. 122, affirmed sub nom. Lloyds Bank Ltd. v. Savory & Co., 1933, A. C. 201; see also 'NOT NEGOTIABLE.'

Crown [fr. couronne, Fr.; corona, Lat.], an ornamental badge of regal power worn on the head by sovereign princes. The word is frequently used when speaking of the sovereign himself, or the rights, duties, and prerogatives belonging to him.

The Act of Supremacy (1 Eliz. c. 1), 'restoring to the Crown the Ancient Jurisdiction over the State Ecclesiastical and Spiritual and abolishing all Foreign Power repugnant to the same,' after repealing 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 8, reviving the Foreign Citations Act, the Act of Appeals, Abolition of Annates Act, the Act of Submission, the Confirmation of Bishops Act, the Archbishop's Licenses Act (23 Hen. 8, cc. 9, 20; 24 Hen. 8, c. 12; 25 Hen. 8, cc. 19-21; 26 Hen. 8, c. 14; 28 Hen. 8, c. 16), and also repealing 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 6 (see HERESY), enacted that—

Such jurisdictions, privileges, superiorities and pre-eminences spiritual and ecclesiastical as by any spiritual or ecclesiastical power or authority hath heretofore been or may lawfully be exercised or used for the visitation of the ecclesiastical state and persons and for reformation, order, and correction of the same and of all manner of errors, heresies, schisms, abuses, offences, contempts and enormities shall for ever by authority of this present Parliament be united and annexed to the imperial crown of this realm.

By the Interpretation Act (see that title), s. 30, 'in this Act and in every other Act, whether passed before or after the commencement of this Act, references to the Sovereign reigning at the time of the passing of the Act or to the Crown shall, unless the contrary intention appears, be construed as references to the Sovereign for the time being.' It is added, 'this Act shall be binding on the Crown,' the rule of construction being that the Crown is not bound by a statute (see per Lindley, L.J., in Wheaton v. Maple & Co., 1893, 3 Ch. at p. 64) unless expressly named therein—as, e.g., in the Arbitration Act, 1889, by s. 23; the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, by s. 151; the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, by s. 9; and the Patents, etc., Act, 1907, by s. 29. See also KING. As to the law and practice of civil proceedings by and against the Crown, see Robertson on the Crown. Servants of the Crown are not liable to be sued in their official capacity for torts; see Roper v. Public Works Commissioners, 1915, 1 K. B. 45, and cases there referred to; PREROGATIVE.

Crown Agent, the solicitor to the Department of the Lord Advocate. His office is called the 'Crown Office.'

Crown Agents for the Colonies act as the business and financial agents in the United Kingdom for the Colonies other than the Dominions, and are appointed by the Secretary of State for the Colonies.

Crown Cases reserved. Questions of law at criminal trials (except in the case of demurrers and writs of error) might be referred for decision to the 'Court for the Consideration of Crown Cases reserved,' sitting under the authority of the Crown Cases Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 78), provided the judge who tried the prisoner consented to state a case, though if he refused no Court had power to compel him to do so.

The jurisdiction given by the Act of 1848 is now transferred to the Court of Criminal Appeal by virtue of s. 20 of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 23), which section also preserves to some extent the procedure under the Crown Cases Act. The judgment of such Court is final and without appeal, unless a certificate of the Attorney-General is obtained under s. 1 (6) of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907. The Judicature Act, 1925, s. 31 (1) (a) has a saving for appeal under the Act of 1907. See R. v. Ball, 1911, A. C. 47; and CRIMINAL APPEAL ACT, 1907.

Crown Debts. It is a prerogative of the Crown to claim priority for its debts before all other creditors, and to recover them by a summary process called an extent. See 33 Hen. 8, c. 39.

Every person having money belonging to the Crown is a Crown-debtor. When upon inquisition a person is found to be a Crown-debtor by simple contract, the debt immediately becomes a specialty; but a person giving to the Crown a bond on condition is not a bond-debtor before the condition is broken.

Section 28 (1) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, provides that an order of discharge shall not release a bankrupt from his Crown debts.

It is provided by the Land Charges Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 26), replaced by the Land Charges Act, 1925, ss. 6 and 7, and see also the Law of Property Act, 1925, that Crown debts shall not affect lands until writ or order for the purpose of enforcing the judgment has been issued and registered. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Land,' and titles EXTENT; PREFERENTIAL PAYMENTS.

Crown, Demise of. See DEMISE.

Crown Lands. The demesne lands of the Crown, which it is now usual for the sovereign to surrender at the commencement of his reign for its whole duration, in consideration of the Civil List settled upon him. Crown lands have been distributed and are managed respectively by the Commissioners of Crown Lands (incorporated by Crown Lands Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 23), the Commissioners of Works; the Board of Trade; the Forestry Commissioners; the Treasury. The revenues go to the Consolidated Fund, and they are managed under a series of Crown Lands Acts, from the Crown Lands Act, 1829 (c. 50), to the Crown Lands Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 23). See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Crown.'

Crown Office, a department originally belonging to the Court of King's Bench. The Act (6 & 7 Vict. c. 20) abolished the clerks in this Court and the monopoly of their practice, throwing it open to all persons admitted or admissible to practise as attorneys of the then Court of Queen's Bench; it also abolished several ancient offices and many burthensome fees, and made the office subject to the direct control of the Lord Chief Justice. Judicature Act, 1925, ss. 104 et seq. replaces the Supreme Court of Judicature (Officers) Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 78), which amalgamated the Crown Office with the Central Office of the Supreme Court, and transferred to such Central Office the 'King's Coroner and Attorney' and the 'Master of the Crown Office.' See R. S. C. 1883, Ord. LXI., and Short and Mellor's Crown Office Practice.

Crown Office Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 41), provides for the authentication, etc., of documents issued from the office of the Crown in Chancery.

Crown Office Rules, 1906, a large body of Rules, 269 in number, with Forms and Tables of Fees, issued by the Rules Committee of the Supreme Court, superseding the 308 Rules of 1886 as from October 24th, 1906, and regulating the whole practice and procedure of the Crown Side of the King's Bench Division of the High Court in Certiorari, Criminal Information, Habeas Corpus, Mandamus, Prohibition, Quo Warranto, and other matters.

Crown Paper. A list of proceedings pending on the Crown side of the King's Bench Division of the High Court.

Crown Private Estates Acts, 1800 to 1872. These Acts excluded the Crown's private estates from restrictions in enactments, and also gave the Sovereign general powers of disposition. See also Osborne Estate Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7, c. 37), which transferred Osborne House to the Commissioners of Crown Lands.

Crown Side of the King's Bench Division of the High Court, that side of the Division on which the litigious business of the Crown Office (see CROWN OFFICE) is conducted before the same judges of the Division as those by whom actions between subject and subject are tried, but by a separate staff of officers.

Crown Solicitor. In Ireland there were officers called Crown solicitors attached to each circuit, whose duty it was to get up every case for the Crown in criminal prosecutions. They were paid by salaries. In Scotland the still better plan exists of a Crown prosecutor (called the Procurator-Fiscal, and being a subordinate of the Lord-Advocate) in every county, who prepares every criminal prosecution. As to England, see PUBLIC PROSECUTOR.

Crown Suits are regulated by the Crown Suits Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 105), and suits against the Crown by the Petition of Right Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 34). See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Crown'; Robertson on the Crown.

Croy, marsh land.—Blount.

Croyses, cruce signati, so called because they wore the sign of the cross upon their garments.—Bract. l. 5, pt. 2, c. ii. The term was used to signify crusaders.

Cruelty. Such conduct on the part of a husband or wife (see Forth v. Forth, (1867) 36 L. J. P. & M. 122) as entitles the other party to a judicial separation by reason of danger to life or health. The communication of venereal disease is such conduct (Browning v. Browning, 1911, P. 161). See Judicature Act, 1925, s. 185, replacing Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), s. 16, and the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 39), by which a Court of Summary Jurisdiction may order that a wife whose husband has been convicted of an aggravated assault upon her, or has been guilty of persistent cruelty to her, can leave and live apart from him, and shall be no longer bound to cohabit with him. Consult Browne and Watts on Divorce; and see HUSBAND AND WIFE, and ANIMALS.

Since 1923 cruelty is no longer a necessary element in a divorce petition by a woman; see Judicature Act, 1925, s. 176, which displaces the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1923 (13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 19), s. 1.

Cruelty to Animals. See ANIMALS.

Cruelty to Children. See tit. CHILDREN, sub-heading 'Cruelty.'

Crustrum, a purple garment mixed with many colours.—Dugd. Mon. tom. 1, p. 210.

Cry de pais, or Cri de pais, hue and cry.

Cryer, an officer of a court, whose duty it is to make a proclamation. See CRIER.

Crypta (Ital., fr. κρυπτα, Gk., to hide, being first used by the early Christians for the performance of religious services in safety], a chapel or oratory underground, or under a church or cathedral.—Du Cange.

Cshatriya, Kshatriya, Chetterie, Khetery, a man of second or military caste.—Indian.

Cuckling-stool. A chair on which females in ancient times for certain offences, as for being 'common scolds,' were fastened and ducked in a pond.—Steph. Com., bk. vi. ch. xii.

Cude, a chrysom or face-cloth for a child baptized.—Jac. Law Dict.

Cul ante divortium (to whom before divorce). A writ for a woman divorced from her husband to recover her lands and tenements which she had in fee simple or in tail, or for life, from him to whom her husband alienated them during the marriage, when she could not gainsay it.—Reg. Brev. 233. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 36.

Cul bono ? To whose advantage ?

Cul in vita (to whom in life). A writ of entry for a widow against him to whom her husband aliened her lands or tenements in his lifetime; which must contain in it, that during his life she could not withstand it.—Reg. Brev. 232; Fitz. N. B. 193. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 36.

Cullibet in arte sua perito est credendum. Co. Litt. 125.—(Every one who is skilled in his own art is to be believed.) See EXPERTS.

Cujus est dare ejus est disponere. Wing. Max. 53.—(Whose it is to give, his it is to dispose of.) See Broom's Leg. Max.

Cujus est solum ejus est usque ad cœlum et ad inferos, or more succinctly, Cujus est solum ejus est altum, Co. Litt. 4.—(Whose is the soil, his it is even to heaven and to the middle of the earth.) Therefore a man whose land is overhung by his neighbour's tree may cut down the overhanging boughs (Lemmon v. Webb, 1895, A. C. 1); and a man who parts with his land, but wishes to retain the minerals beneath it, must expressly reserve them, unless he sell to a railway company, which by s. 77 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, does not take mines unless the conveyance of the land expressly grants them. As to action for trespass and other torts by aircraft, see the Air Navigation Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 80), s. 9.

Culagium, the laying up of a ship in a dock for repair.—Jac. Law Dict.

Culpa, an act of neglect, causing damage, but not implying an intent to injure, of which the Roman jurists recognized two: (1) Culpa lata, culpa latior, magna culpa, gross neglect, treated very much like fraud; culpa magna dolus est, dolo proxima. (2) Culpa, without any epithet, or omnis culpa, culpa levis, levior; or levissima, slight neglect.—Cum. Civ. Law, 279; Sand. Just.

Culpa lata dolo æquiparatur.—(Gross negligence is held equivalent to intentional wrong.) In cases of fraud, a grossly negligent omission to ascertain whether a statement is true or not, i.e., an untrue statement made with a reckless disregard of its truth or the reverse is evidence of fraud. See Derry v. Peek, (1889) 14 A. C. 337, and FRAUD.

Culprit. The prisoner at the Bar awaiting his trial after a plea of not guilty. 'Its first recorded use is in the trial of the Earl of Pembroke for murder in 1678. Its original force was formerly to join issue with the defendant's plea of Not guilty and to demand trial and judgment.'—Oxf. Dict., art. 'Culprit,' where see discussion of the disputed derivations of the word. It is thus derived by Donaldson. The clerk asks the prisoner, 'Are you guilty or not guilty?' Prisoner, 'Not guilty.' Clerk, 'Qu'il parait [may it prove so]; how will you be tried?' Prisoner, 'By God and my country.' These words, being hurried over, came to sound, 'Culprit, how will you be tried?' Blackstone's derivation is entirely different; see 4 Bl. Com. 339.

Cultura, a parcel of arable land.—Blount.

Culvertage [fr. culus and verto, Lat., to turn tail], base slavery, the confiscation of an estate.—Mat. Par. 1212.

Culward and Culverd, a coward.

Cum grano salis (with a grain of salt), with allowance for exaggeration.

Cum privilegio, the expression of the monopoly of Oxford, Cambridge, and the Royal Printers to publish the Bible.

Cum testamento annexo [Lat.] (with the will annexed). See ADMINISTRATOR.

Cumulative Legacies, legacies so called to distinguish them from legacies which are merely repeated. In the construction of testamentary instruments, the question often arises, whether where a testator has twice bequeathed a legacy to the same person, the legatee is entitled to both, or only one of them; in other words, whether the second legacy must be considered as a mere repetition of the first, or as cumulative, i.e., additional. In determining this question, the intention of the testator, if it appears on the face of the instrument, prevails; but if it does not so appear, the following rules of construction have been laid down:—

(I.) If the same specific thing be bequeathed twice to a legatee, whether by the same instrument or not, he is entitled to one legacy only.

(II.) If the legacies be not of a specific thing, but of quantity, e.g., a sum of money—

(1) If they are bequeathed by the same instrument, and are of equal amount, the second legacy is not cumulative, but the legatee is entitled to one legacy only.

(2) If they are bequeathed by the same instrument, but are of unequal amount, the second legacy is cumulative.

(3) If they are bequeathed by different instruments, whether they are equal or unequal in amount, the second legacy is cumulative. Consult Roper on Legacies; Theobald on Wills.

Cumulative Remedy, a second mode of procedure in addition to one already available: opposed to alternative remedy.

Cuna cervisæ, a tub of ale.—Domesday.

Cuneus, a mint or place to coin money; from this word coin is derived.

Cuntee-Cuntee, a kind of trial, as appears from Bracton, lib. 4, tract 3, c. 18, and tract 4, c. 2, where it seems to mean one by the ordinary jury.

Curagulus, one who takes care of a thing.

Curate [fr. curator, Lat.], is a term properly applied to one who has the cure of souls, namely, the incumbent of a parish. The incumbent may have to assist him an 'assistant' or 'stipendiary' curate, often called 'curate' simply. A curate in this sense is an officiating temporary minister, regularly employed by the spiritual rector or vicar either to serve in his absence or as his assistant. All curates serve under a licence from the bishop of the diocese, revocable at his discretion, with an appeal against the revocation of the licence to the archbishop only (Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 98; Poole v. Bishop of London, (1861) 7 Jur. N. S. 347); and the law, on the other hand, has made several provisions for their proper maintenance.—Pluralities Act, 1838, ss. 75-103; Pluralities Act, 1884 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 54), ss. 8, 10. See PERPETUAL CURATE.

Curator, a protector of property. His duty was to see that the person under his care did not waste his goods—Civil Law, Sand. Just. As to an interim curator for a convict's property, see Forfeiture Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 23), s. 21, and see ADMINISTRATOR. This Act is not affected by the Law of Property Act, 1925, see s. 7 (3), ibid.

Curator bonis, a person appointed by the Court of Session to manage and preserve property until the owner, e.g., an infant, is in a position to act for himself.—Bell's Dict.

Curatores viarum, surveyors of the highways.

Curfeu, Curfew [fr. couverir, to cover, and feu, Fr., fire], a bell which rang at eight o'clock in the evening, in the time of William the Conqueror, whereupon everyone was obliged by law to cover over his fire and put out his light. The law was abolished by Henry I. in 1100. It was called, in the Law Latin in the Middle Ages, ignitegium or pyritegium.

Curia, a court of justice. Also the class from which, in the Roman provincial towns, the magistrates were eligible.

Curia advisari vult (the court desires to consider), a deliberation which a court of judicature sometimes takes, where there is any point of difficulty, before they give judgment in a cause. Abbreviated in our reports thus: cur. adv. vult, or C. A. V.

Curia claudenda, an obsolete writ to compel another to make a fence or wall, which he was bound to make between his land and the plaintiff's.—Reg. Brev. 155.

Curia cursus aquæ, a court held by the lord of the manor of Gravesend for the better management of barges and boats plying on the River Thames between Gravesend and Windsor, and also at Gravesend Bridge, etc.—2 Geo. 2, c. 26.

Curia domini, the lord's house, hall, or court, where all the tenants meet at the time of keeping courts.—Cowel.

Curia palatii, the Palace Court. It was abolished by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 101.

Curia penticlarum, a court held by the sheriff of Chester in a place there called the Pendice or Pentice; probably it was so called from being originally held under a pent-house or open shed covered with boards.—Blount.

Curia Regis. See AULA REGIS.

Curiality, matters pertaining to a court.—Advice to Buckingham; see Bacon's Life and Letters, by Speeding, vol. vi. p. 52.

Curia Christianitatis, courts of Christianity; ecclesiastical courts.

Curnock, a measure containing four bushels, or half a quarter.

Currency, coin; bank notes, or other paper money issued by authority, and which are continually passing as and for coin. See the Coinage Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 18), repealing 56 Geo. 3, c. 68, and other enactments; and COIN and TENDER.

Currency and Bank Notes Acts, 1914 and 1928. The 1914 Act and the Amendment Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, cc. 14, 72), were passed on the outbreak of the war with Germany, to authorize the issue of currency notes, and to make provision with respect to the note issue of banks. Under these Acts the Treasury issued currency notes for 1l., and 10s. respectively, the notes being legal tender for a payment of any amount. The 1928 Act (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 13), repealed the 1914 Acts (except sub-s. (5) of s. 1 and s. 5 of c. 14, enacting that currency notes are to be deemed banknotes, valuable securities and current coin for certain special purposes such as the Forgery Act, 1913, the Larceny Act, 1861, and other offences, and the Truck Acts. The 1928 Act transferred the currency note issue to the Bank of England and enacted that currency notes should be deemed to be banknotes in all enactments relating to banknotes. The Gold Standard Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 29), s. 1 (2), declared that the Bank of England was not bound to pay in gold or other coin for banknotes, and by the Gold Standard Amendment Act, 1931 (21 & 22 Geo. 5, c. 46), the gold standard or statutory rate of exchange for gold was abandoned.

Curriculum, (1) the course of a year; (2) the set of studies for a particular period appointed by a college or university.

Cursing. Profane swearing or cursing is punishable by fine. See SWEARING.

Cursitor Baron of the Exchequer, an officer whose business it was to pass the accounts of the sheriffs, etc. See Manning's Exchequer Practice, p. 322 and note. The office was abolished by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 86.

Cursitors [fr. clerici de cursu, Lat.], clerks of the Court of Chancery, who made out original writs, and were called clerks of course.—18 Edw. 3, st. 5. Their office was abolished by 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 82, ss. 10, 11, and 12, and their duties were transferred to the Petty Bag Office. See PETTY BAG OFFICE.

Cursorones terræ, ridges of land.

Cursor, an inferior officer of the papal court.

Cursus curiæ est lex curiæ. 3 Buls. 53.—(The practice of the court is the law of the court.) See Broom's Leg. Max.

Curtain. See LAW OF PROPERTY ACT, 1925.

Curtesy of England [jus curialitatis Angliæ, Lat.], an estate which by favour of the law of England arises by act of law, and is that interest which a husband has for his life in his wife's fee-simple or fee-tail estates, general or special, after her death.

Tenancy by the curtesy has been abolished by the A. E. Act, 1925, s. 45, with regard to the inheritance of every person dying after 1925, but under s. 130, L. P. Act, 1925, curtesy will arise as an equitable interest in any property real or personal as an incident to an equitable interest in-tail and in default of a disentailing assurance or the exercise of the testamentary power conferred by that Act, see sub-s. 4 ibid., and see the 12th Schedule to the L. P. Act, 1922, in regard to enfranchised copyholds.

There are six circumstances necessary to the existence of this estate (which appears to be unaffected by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882):—

(1) A canonical or legal marriage.

(2) Seisin of the wife; as to corporeal hereditaments, it must be a seisin in deed, either actual or virtual (Co. Litt. 29 a, n. 3; 8 Rep. 96 a), but as to incorporeal hereditaments, a seisin in law is sufficient, where a seisin in deed is impossible. See the judgment of Sir George Jessel in Eager v. Furnivall, (1881) 17 Ch. D. 115.

(3) The wife's estate must have been in possession and not in reversion expectant on a life estate or other freehold estate. 2 Black. Comm. 127.

(4) Birth of issue, alive and during the mother's existence (Paine's case, 8 Rep. 34). It is immaterial whether the issue live or die, or whether it be born before or after the wife's seisin. If a woman inheritable marries, has issue, her husband dies, and she takes another husband and has issue, which dies, and then the wife dies, the second husband shall be tenant by the curtesy, though the issue by the first husband be living.

(5) The issue must have been capable of inheriting as heir to the wife.

(6) Death of the wife. The husband's title to the curtesy is initiated at the birth of issue, and consummated at the death of his wife.

It is to be observed that by the custom of gavelkind, a husband may be tenant by the curtesy, without having had any issue by his wife. This curtesy is only of a moiety of the wife's lands, and ceases if the husband marry again.

By s. 20 (viii) S. L. Act, 1925, a tenant by the curtesy of full age and in possession has the powers of a tenant for life.

All persons capable of taking freehold estates may be tenants by the curtesy; but aliens cannot, except under the British Nationality and Status of Aliens Act, 1914, nor felons (Co. Litt. 30 b, n. 7), except under the Forfeiture Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 23). A condition to restrain the husband of a feme-donee in tail from curtesy is repugnant and void.—Co. Litt. 224 a.

An estate by the curtesy, in respect of the estate tail, or of any prior estate created by the settlement as well as a resulting use or trust to or for the settlor, is to be deemed a prior estate under the settlement within the contemplation of the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74), s. 22, appointing a protector; the husband would therefore be the protector of the settlement. See Bisset on Life Estates, c. iii.

Some English writers (Mirror, c. i. s. 3) ascribe the law of curtesy to Henry I., but Nathaniel Bacon (Government, 4to, 1647, p. 105) calls it a law of counter-tenure to that of dower, and yet supposes it as ancient as the time of the Saxons, and that it was therefore rather restored by Henry I., than introduced by him. But there is no trace of this curtesy among the laws of the Saxons, nor among those we have of Henry I.—1 Reeve, 298; Cham. on Est., c. iii., p. 92.

In Scotland, the liferent of a wife's heritable estate accorded ex lege to her surviving husband. There must have been a child of the marriage who would be (if he survived) the mother's heir.

Curteyn, the name of King Edward the Confessor's sword; it is said that the point of it was broken as an emblem of mercy.—Mat. Par. in Hen. 3.

Curtillage [fr. cour, Fr., court; and leagh, Sax., place], a courtyard, backside, or piece of ground lying near and belonging to a dwelling-house (see Pilbrow v. Vestry of St. Leonard, Shoreditch, 1895, 1 Q. B. 433); the limit of the premises in which house-breaking can be committed. See Larceny Act, 1916, s. 46 (2), by which no building, though within the curtillage, is to be deemed part of a dwelling-house to constitute burglary, unless there be a communication between such building and the dwelling-house.

Curtiles terræ, court lands.—Spel. on Feuds, c. 5.

Cussore, a term used in Hindustan for the discount or allowance made in the exchange of rupees, in contradistinction to batta, which is the sum deducted.

Custalorum, a ridiculous confusion of custos rotulorum.—Shakespeare.

Custantia, costs.

Custode admittendo, Custode amovendo, writs for the admitting and removing of guardians.

Custodia Legis. Custody of the law. See IN CUSTODIA LEGIS.

Custodiam Lease, a grant from the Crown under the Exchequer seal, by which the custody of lands, etc., seised in the king's hands, is demised or committed to some person as custodee or lessee thereof.

Custodian Trustee, a trustee appointed under the Public Trustee Act, 1906, s. 4, to have the custody as distinct from the management of the trust estate. The appointment may be made by the Court or the settlor or the donee of the power of appointing new trustees, but the only persons eligible are the Public Trustee, or some banking or insurance company or other body corporate entitled by the rules made under the Act to act as custodian trustee, e.g., Public Trustee (Custodian Trustee Rules, 1926 (S. R. & O. 1926, No. 1423/L. 37). See Re Cherry's Trusts, 1914, 1 Ch. 83, and TRUST CORPORATION.

Custodes libertatis Angliæ auctoritate Parliamenti, the style in which writs and all judicial processes were made out during the great rebellion from the execution of King Charles I. till Oliver Cromwell was declared Protector.—12 Car. 2, c. 3.

Custom [fr. costume, It.; coutume, coutume, Fr.; costumbre, Sp.; consuetudo, Lat.], 'Custom may be defined to be a law or right not written which being established by long use and consent of our ancestors has been and daily is put in practice' (Les Termes de la Ley). In Lockwood v. Wood, 6 Q. B. 50, Tindal C.J., at p. 64 says that it is 'in effect, the Common Law within that place to which it extends although contrary to the General Law of the realm.' If it be universal, it is Common Law; if particular, it is then properly custom. The requisites to make a particular custom good are these: (1) It must have been used so long that the memory of man runs not to the contrary; (2) it must have been continued and (3) peaceable; also (4) reasonable and (5) certain; (6) compulsory, and not left to the option of every person, whether he will use it or not; and (7) consistent with other customs, for one custom cannot be set up in opposition to another; see 1 Bl. Com. 76. Customs are of different kinds, as customs of merchants, customs of a particular parish (as to which see NETS) or manor, etc. If there be an invariable certain and general usage or custom of any particular trade or place, the law will imply that a party contracting upon a matter to which the same has reference intended to import such usage or custom into his contract. Consult Aske's Custom and the Usages of Trade. See CUSTOM OF THE COUNTRY; USAGE.

Custom-house, the house or office where commodities are entered for importation or exportation; where the duties, bounties, or drawbacks payable or receivable upon such importation or exportation are paid or received; and where ships are cleared out, etc. The principal British custom-house is in London, but there are custom-houses subordinate to it in all the considerable seaports.

Custom-house Agents were persons authorized by the Commissioners of Customs to act for parties at their option in the entry or clearance of ships, and the transaction of general business. They have been abolished for very many years.

Custom of the Country, in agriculture, that usage governing the relations of agricultural landlords and tenants which is considered to be incorporated in every farming lease or agreement unless it be expressly excluded therefrom. The most important kinds of custom are those by which the tenant on quitting his holding has a right to be compensated for his expenditure on those acts of husbandry of which he cannot obtain the benefit during the tenancy itself, as where the tenant goes out at Lady-Day, and is either paid in money for the seed and labour which he has expended upon the crop to be reaped in the autumn, or has a right to re-enter to till and gather his 'away-going crop.' See AWAY-GOING CROP.

In many parts of England, the custom of the country entitles the tenant to be paid for artificial manures, and in some few, pre-eminently in Lincolnshire, for drainage and buildings; but customs are most variable and difficult to ascertain, and from a comparison of returns procured in 1848 by a Select Committee of the House of Commons with those procured in 1875 by the Central Chamber of Agriculture, it appears that they are continually changing. As a matter of convenience, the compensation money is generally, almost universally, paid by the incoming to the outgoing tenant, but it is clear law (1) that the landlord himself is liable to the outgoing tenant (Faviell v. Gaskoin, (1852) 21 L. J. Ex. 85), and (2) that a custom for the outgoing tenant to look to the incoming tenant, to the exclusion of the landlord's liability, is bad.

The Agricultural Holdings Acts (see that title) make provision for compensation to tenants for certain improvements, etc., and provide for arbitration as to claims. See Woodf. L. & T.; Aggs on Agricultural Holdings; Willis Bund on Compensation.

Custom of Merchants [lex mercatoria, Lat.]. See COMMERCE, and also CUSTOM.

Customary Court-baron, a court which should be kept within the manor for which it is held. It may be held anywhere within the manor, at the pleasure of the person holding it, unless some ancient custom require it to be held in a certain place.

The Court-baron was to be held from three weeks to three weeks, or, as some think, as often as the lord chose. And it should seem clear, that the lord may hold a customary court as frequently as he pleases, and compel the attendance of his tenants who hold by villein or base services. —2 Wat. Cop., c. i. p. 9; and see Elton or Scriven on Copyholds.

It is to be observed that although there should be no freeholders of the manor, by which the Court-baron or freeholders' court is lost, yet still there may be a customary court; for as these two courts are distinct (though frequently held at the same time, the same roll serving to record the proceedings of both), the want of freeholders does not preclude the lord from holding a customary court for his copyholders. —1 Cruise's Dig., tit. x., c. i. s. 19. See COURT-BARON.

Customary Freeholds have been converted into 'socage tenure' by the Law of Property Act, 1922, s. 189, see COPYHOLD. Owing to its historical interest the following note has been preserved unaltered from the previous edition of the Lexicon. "Also denominated, privileged copyholds, or copyholds of frank tenure; they were known in ancient times as estates in privileged villenage or villein socage, and are estates held by custom, but not at the lord's will, in which they differ from copyholds; yet the will of the lord in copyhold is reduced to a mere fiction. These lands are of such singular nature that, when they are compared with mere copyholds, they may be called freeholds, and when compared with absolute freeholds, they may be denominated copyholds. While the freehold interest or estate rests with the tenant, the freehold tenure is in the lord. (Mr. Serjeant Scriven dissents from this proposition in his work on Copyholds, vol. ii. pp. 572 et seq.) They are usually transferred by surrender into the hands of the lord and admittance of the new tenant. Their customs, incidents, and services are similar to those already noticed as relating to copyholds properly so called. See Duke of Portland v. Hill, (1866) L. R. 2 Eq. 765; Eardley v. Granville, (1876) 3 Ch. D. 826.

Mr. Cruise divides customary freeholds into two kinds: (1) those of which the freehold is in the lord, more properly called free copyholds; and (2) those of which the freehold is in the tenant, strictly called customary freeholds. The former pass by surrender and admittance; the latter require a conveyance from the grantor to the grantee, besides the admittance, or as the custom is in some manors, surrender and admittance, the latter ceremony being necessary only to mark the change of tenancy. — Cruise's Dig., tit. x., c. i. s. 9."

Customs, duties charged upon commodities on their importation into, or exportation out of, a country. They seem to have existed in England before the Conquest, but the king's claim to them was first established by grant of Parliament in the reign of Edward I. These duties were at first, principally laid on wool, woolfels (sheepskins) and leather when exported. There were also extraordinary duties paid by aliens both on export and import, which were denominated parva custuma, to distinguish them from the former, or magna custuma. The duties of tonnage and poundage, of which mention is so frequently made in English history, were customs duties; the first being made on wine by the tun, and the latter being ad valorem duty of so much a pound on other merchandise. When these duties were granted to the Crown they were denominated subsidies, and as the duty of poundage had continued for a lengthened period at the rate of 1s. a pound, or five per cent., a subsidy came, in the language of the customs, to denote an ad valorem duty of five per cent. The new subsidy granted in the reign of William III. was an addition of five per cent. to the duties on most imported commodities. The various customs duties were collected for the first time in a book of rates published in the reign of Charles II., a new book of rates being again published in the reign of George I. But exclusive of the duties entered in these two books, many more had been imposed at different times; so that the accumulation of the duties, and the complicated regulations to which they gave rise, were productive of the greatest embarrassment. The Customs Consolidation Act (27 Geo. 3, c. 13), introduced by Mr. Pitt in 1787, did much to remedy these among other inconveniences. The method adopted was to abolish the existing duties on all articles, and to substitute in their stead one single duty on each article, equivalent to the aggregate of the various duties by which it had previously been loaded. The resolutions on which the Act was founded amounted to about 3000. A more simple and uniform system was at the same time introduced into the business of the custom-house. These alterations were productive of the very best effects, and several similar consolidations have since been effected, particularly in 1853, by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107; and lastly, in 1876, by the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 36), the Customs Tariff Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 35), consolidating the duties in the same year. The 'Customs and Inland Revenue Acts' and 'Finance Acts' of subsequent years will be found to contain divers small amendments. The Import Duties Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 8), gives effect to the changed fiscal policy; it imposed a 10 per cent. ad valorem duty on imports; constituted an Advisory Committee to make recommendations as to additional duties; and the Treasury may, under Finance Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 25), s. 7, give effect to such recommendations. See as to imports from the Dominions, the Ottawa Agreements Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 537), and the Irish Free State (Special Duties) Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 30). See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Customs.'

Custos brevium (the keeper of the writs), a principal clerk belonging to the Courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas, whose office it was to keep the writs returnable into those courts. Abolished by 1 Wm. 4, c. 5.

Custos placitorum coronæ (the keeper of the pleas of the Crown). The custos rotulorum.—Bract. lib. 2, c. 5.

Custos rotulorum (the keeper of the rolls or records of the county). A principal justice of the peace within the county, by whom the clerk of the peace is appointed.—Harding v. Pollock, (1829) 6 Bing. 25; 37 Hen. 8, c. 1. By s. 5 of the Local Government (Clerks) Act, 1931 (21 & 22 Geo. 5, c. 45), the clerk of the peace, subject to the powers of the custos rotulorum, or the county council, as the case may require, shall have charge of and be responsible for the records and documents of a county in England.

Custos spiritualium, he that exercises the spiritual jurisdiction of a diocese, during the vacancy of any see, which, by the canon law, belongs to the dean and chapter, but at present, in England, to the archbishop of the province by prescription.—Encyc. Londin.

Custos temporalium, the person to whom a vacant see or abbey was given by the king, as supreme lord. His office was, as steward of the goods and profits, to give an account to the escheator, who did the like to the Exchequer.—Encyc. Londin.

Custuma antiqua sive magna, the old export duties on wool, sheepskins or woolefs, and leather; see CUSTOMS.

Custuma parva et nova, the alien's duty on imported and exported commodities; see CUSTOMS.

Cutcherry, corrupted from Kachari, a court, a hall, an office, the place where any public business is transacted.—Indian.

Cuthred, a knowing or skilful counsellor.

Cutpurse, one who steals by the method of cutting purses; a common practice when men wore their purses at their girdles, as was once the custom.—See 8 Eliz. c. 4.

Cutter of the Tallies, an officer in the Exchequer to whom it belonged to provide wood for the tallies, and to cut the sum paid upon them, etc. See TALLY.

Cutwal, Katwal, the chief officer of police or superintendent of markers in a large town or city in India.

Cycle [fr. κύκλος, Gk.], a measure of time, a space in which the same revolutions begin again; a periodical space of time. See BICYCLE.

Cygnets belong equally to the owners of the cock and hen.—7 Rep. 17.

Cyne-bot, or Cyne-gild, the portion belonging to the nation of the mulct for slaying the king, the other portion of 'wer' being due to his family.—Blount.

Cynning [fr. cyn, Celtic], a king; a son or child of the people. It is manifestly a patronymic, like Æscing, son of Æsc; Uffing, son of Uffa; Ælling, son of Ælle; Cerdicing, son of Cerdic; Iding, son of Ida; Cryding, son of Cryda; Ætheling, son of the Æthel, or noble. See Anc. Inst. Eng.

Cy-près (near to it). The principle of this doctrine of construction is, that where a testator has two objects, one primary or general and the other secondary or particular, which are incompatible, the particular must be sacrificed in order that effect may be given to the general object, as near as may be to the testator's intention, according to law. Thus, where a testator has devised lands in a manner transgressing the rules of perpetuity and the Court can by giving the estates tail to the devisees, or any of them carry the property in the precise course marked out by the testator, supposing the estates left to themselves, it will do so, see Monypenny v. Dering, 16 M. & W. 418. The doctrine did not apply to personalty nor to a mixed fund. See Re Harwood, Coleman v. Innes, 1936, Ch. 285.

It is also applied to charitable bequests, and was formerly pushed to a most extravagant length. But this sensible distinction now prevails, that the court will not decree the execution of a charitable trust in a manner different from that intended, except so far as it is seen that the intention cannot be literally executed. In that case another mode will be adopted consistent with the general intention, so as to execute it, though not in mode, yet in substance. If the mode should become by subsequent circumstances impossible, the general rule is not to be defeated, if it can in any other way be obtained. Where there are no objects remaining to take the benefit of a charitable corporation, the court will dispose of its revenues by a new scheme upon the principles of the original charities.

There is also a modification of the strictness of the Common Law as to conditions precedent in regard to personal legacies, which is at once rational and convenient, and tends to carry into effect the intention of the testator. It is, that where a literal compliance with the condition becomes impossible from unavoidable circumstances, and without any fault of the party, it is sufficient that it is complied with as nearly as it practically can be, i.e., cy-près. This modification is derived from the Civil Law, and stands upon the presumption that the donor could not have intended to require impossibilities, but only a substantial compliance with his directions, as far as they should admit of being fairly carried into execution. It is upon this ground that Courts of Equity constantly hold, in cases of personal legacies, that a substantial compliance with the condition satisfies it, although not literally fulfilled. Thus, if a legacy upon a condition precedent require the consent of three persons to a marriage, and one or more of them die, the consent of the survivor or survivors would be deemed a sufficient compliance with the condition. And a fortiori, this doctrine would be applied to conditions subsequent.—Sugd. Powers, 549; 1 Story's Eq. Jur. 235, and vol. ii. 386, 390.

Funds cannot be applied cy-près unless it is shown to be impossible to carry out the testator's intention (Re Weir Hospital, 1910, 2 Ch. 124). See generally, Theobald on Wills.

Cyroe, a church.

Cyriebruce, a breaking into a church.

Cyroglyphum, an Anglo-Saxon charter, this word being written in capital letters at the top or bottom of the charter and cut through by a knife.—Co. Litt. 229.

D.

Dagus, or Dais [fr. dais or daiz, Fr., a canopy or cloth of state], the raised floor at the upper end of a hall.

Dairy.—By the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907, s. 13—

The expression 'dairy' includes any farm, farmhouse, cowshed, milk store, milk shop, or other place from which milk is supplied or in which milk is kept for the purposes of sale within (unless otherwise expressed) the district of the local authority:

The expression 'dairyman' includes any cow-keeper, purveyor of milk, or occupier of a dairy within (unless otherwise expressed) the district of the local authority:

By the same Act dairymen must furnish (s. 53) a list of their sources of supply, and notify (s. 54) when any infectious disease exists among their servants.

As to the power of the Ministers of Health and Agriculture and Fisheries to make orders for the registration of dairymen and regulations for carrying on their trade, see the Milk and Dairies (Consolidation) Act, 1915, and the Milk and Dairies (Amendment) Act, 1922, as amended by the Milk Act, 1934, amending and consolidating the general law on the subject of dairies and the milk trade. See also Sale of Food (Weights and Measures) Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 63) and the Milk Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 51), as extended by 26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 9, providing for exchequer payments in aid of a minimum price to producers, and Milk Marketing Boards under the Agricultural Marketing Act, 1931, for improvements in the quality and advertisement of Milk; and see CREAM.

Daker, or Diker, ten hides.—Blount.

Dalus, Dallus, Dallia, a certain measure of land; such narrow slips of pasture as are left between the ploughed furrows in arable land. See Jac. Law Dict.

Dam [fr. dam, Dan.; dammer, Icel.], a boundary or confinement; a mole.

Damage. Any loss, whether actionable as an injury or not. See DAMNUM ABSQUE INJURIA.

Damage, Malignous. Punishable by the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Criminal Law'), arson, and injuries to mines, cattle, works of art, ponds, railway carriages, and bridges being punishable specially. As to injuries to real or personal property not specially provided for, see s. 51 of the Act and the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914, s. 14, and the Fourth Schedule thereto.

Damage-Cleer [fr. damna clericorum, Lat.], a fee assessed of the tenth part in the Common Pleas, and the twentieth part in the King's Bench and Exchequer, out of all damages exceeding five marks recovered in those courts, in actions upon the case, covenant, trespass, etc., wherein the damages were uncertain; which the plaintiff was obliged to pay to the prothonotary or the officer of the court wherein he recovered, before he could have execution for the damages. This was originally a gratuity, given to the prothonotaries and their clerks, for drawing special writs and pleadings; but it was taken away by 17 Car. 2, c. 6.

Damage feasant or falsant (doing damage).

If a stranger's beasts (including domestic fowls) are found on another person's land without his leave or license, and without the fault of the possessor of the close (which may happen from his not repairing his fences), and there doing damage by feeding, or otherwise, to the grass, corn, wood, etc., the person damaged may distrain and impound them, as well by night as in the day, lest the beasts escape before taken; but they cannot be sold for the damage done; nor is there any privilege from the distress. The distress may be made of things inanimate: see Ambergate, etc., Ry. Co. v. Midland Ry. Co., (1853) 23 L. J. Q. B. 17, where a locomotive engine was distrained damage feasant. By the Pound-Breach Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 30), any person releasing, or attempting to release, cattle lawfully seized by way of such distress from the pound is, on conviction before two justices of the peace, liable to a penalty not exceeding 5*l.*; and by the Protection of Animals Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 27), s. 7, persons impounding cattle are bound, under a penalty of 5*l.*, to supply them with food and water. See Bullen on Distress; Addison, or Clerk and Lindsell on Torts; and Woodfall, L. & T.

Damages. The compensation as fixed by the jury, or judge if the case be tried without a jury, payable to a successful plaintiff.

Courts of Equity long laboured under the infirmity of not being able to award damages by way of compensation for a fraud, or for the non-performance of a contract relating to the sale and purchase of realty. This was amended by the Chancery Amendment Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 27), 'Cairns's Act,' which provided that in all cases in which the Court of Chancery had jurisdiction to entertain an application for an injunction against a breach of agreement, or against the commission of a wrongful act, or for the specific performance of any agreement, the same court might award damages to the party injured, either in addition to or in substitution for such injunction or specific performance.

This Act, in substance re-enacted by s. 24 of the Judicature Act, 1873, is expressly revealed by the Statute Law Revision and Civil Procedure Act, 1883. See now Judicature Act, 1925, s. 36.

The Judicature Acts allow matters to be set up by a defendant by way of counterclaim, which must formerly have been the subject of a separate action; and, therefore, a defendant may in effect recover damages. See R. S. C., Ord. XXI., r. 17, and COUNTERCLAIM.

Damages fall under two heads: (1) General damage, i.e., such damage as the law will presume to flow from that which forms the subject-matter of the action; and (2) Special damage, i.e., such other damage as can be recovered only if it is specially alleged and specifically proved. When an action cannot be sustained unless there is special damage, the subject-matter is described as not being actionable per se.

Damages are either liquidated or unliquidated. Whenever the amount to which the plaintiff is entitled can be ascertained by calculation or fixed by any scale or other positive data, it is said to be 'liquidated' or made clear. But when the amount to be recovered depends on all the circumstances of the case and on the conduct of the parties, and is fixed by opinion or by an estimate, the damages are said to be 'unliquidated'; see Odgers on the Common Law.

Damages, too, may be further classified as—

(1) Contemptuous Damages, e.g., a farthing verdict in an action for libel, usually indicating that in the opinion of the jury the action ought never to have been brought.

(2) Nominal Damages, e.g., 40*s.* where no actual damage has been proved, and usually indicating that though the action was a proper one to bring, its object was not so much the recovering of damages as the establishing a right; see Nicholls v. Ely Beet Sugar Factory, 1936, 1 Ch. 343.

(3) Substantial Damages, i.e., the fair and adequate compensation which reasonable men would award in respect of the matters which formed the basis of the action.

(4) Vindictive, Retributory, or Exemplary Damages, i.e., damages in excess of what would have been adequate compensation, and usually awarded by a jury to mark their sense of a defendant's conduct; e.g., the character of a libel, or the mode in which the subject-matter of the action arose, e.g., time and place of an assault or trespass, or the peculiar nature of the wrong or the distress of mind produced in the plaintiff, e.g., actions of seduction, false imprisonment, breach of promise of marriage.

See Hadley v. Baxendale, (1854) 32 L. J. Ex. 179; Smith's Leading Cases, vol. ii and the notes thereto; and The Argentino, 14 App. Cas. 519; 13 P. D. 191; and s. 51, Sale of Goods Act, 1893.

Damages that are remote and contingent cannot be recovered, see Sapwell v. Bass, 1910, 2 K. B. 486; and as to the measure of damages for prospective loss in the case of personal injury, see Johnston v. G. W. Ry., 1904, 2 K. B. 250, and Law Reform (etc.) Act, 1934, s. 1 (c).

Damages for the vendor's breach of contract for sale of land are subject to the rule that if the breach consists only of a defect in title and provided that the vendor acted bonâ fide and with reasonable grounds of belief in his title, the damages will not include loss of profit or of the benefit of the contract; see Bain v. Fothergill, L. R. 7 H. L. 158.

See also DOUBLE DAMAGES; INTEREST; MEASURE OF DAMAGES; and ACTIO PERSONALIS; and consult Mayne on Damages.

Damages ultra, additional damages claimed by a plaintiff not satisfied with those paid into court by the defendant.

Dame [fr. dame, Fr.; dama, Sp.], the legal designation of the wife of a knight or baronet.

Damnification, that which causes damage or loss.

Damnify, to endamage, to injure, to cause loss to any person.

Damnosa hæreditas, a disadvantageous or unprofitable inheritance.

Damnū abque injuriā (a loss without a wrongful act). This is not actionable. Damnū sine injuriā esse potest.—Lofft, 112. Thus, if I have a mill, and a neighbour builds another mill upon his own land, per quod the profit of my mill is diminished, yet no action lies against him, for every one may lawfully erect a mill upon his own ground; though if I have a mill by prescription on my own land, and another erects a new mill, which draws away some portion of the stream from mine, so as to diminish its former power, an action of trespass on the case will lie against him; and if I build a house on the edge of my lands, my neighbour may at any time within twenty years block out my light by any erection he pleases, so long as he does not trespass, though his doing so after the twenty years would be actionable by virtue of the Prescription Act. See PRESCRIPTION and UBI JUS, IBI REMEDIUM.

Damnum fatale, fatal damage, for which bailees are not liable. Among fatal damages were included by the civilians losses by shipwreck, by lightning or other casualty, by superior force, and by robbery, but not by theft.—Story on Bailments, 471.

Damsel [fr. demoiselle, Fr.], a young single gentlewoman.

Dan, anciently the better sort of men in this kingdom had the title of Dan; as the Spaniards Don, from the Latin Dominus.—Jac. Law Dict.

Dancing. See MUSIC AND DANCING LICENSES.

Danegelt, Danegeld, or Danegold [fr. danegeldum, dane and gelt, tribute], a tribute of 1s., and afterwards of 2s., upon every hide of land through the realm, levied by the Anglo-Saxons for maintaining forces sufficient to clear the British seas of Danish pirates, who greatly annoyed our coasts. It continued a tax until the time of Stephen, and was one of the rights of the Crown.—Anc. Insts. Eng.

Dane-lage, the Danish Law, which was principally maintained in the Midland counties and the eastern coast (the parts most exposed to the visits of that piratical people) while the Danes had sway in this country.—1 Bl. Com. 65.

Dangeria, a money payment made by forest-tenants, that they might have liberty to plough and sow in time of pannage or mast feeding.—Manw. For. Laws.

Dangerous Drugs. See DRUGS, DANGEROUS; POISON.

Dangerous Goods, Act as to the carriage and deposit of, 29 & 30 Vict. c. 39, repealed by the Explosives Act, 1875. See EXPLOSIVE SUBSTANCES; Bamfield v. Goole Transport Co., 1910, 2 K. B. 94; and Dominion Natural Gas Co. v. Collins, 1909, A. C. 640. As to the sale of dangerous goods, see Clarke v. Army & Navy Co-operative Soc., 1903, 1 K. B. 155.

Dangerous Machinery.—By s. 1 (d) of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, 1 Edw. 7, c. 22, Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Factories':—

All dangerous parts of the machinery and every part of the mill gearing must either be securely fenced, or be in such position, or of such construction as to be equally safe to every person employed or working in the factory as it would be if it were securely fenced.

Non-compliance with this statutory duty will be prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the employer (Groves v. Lord Wimborne, 1898, 2 Q. B. 402).

As to dangerous machinery in and about mines, see Coal Mines Act, 1911, ss. 55, 108. See Todrick v. Halliday, 1928, S. L. T. 539.

Dangerous Performance. See CHILDREN.

Dangerous Place. Section 30 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 53), provides as follows:—

30. With respect to the repairing or enclosing of dangerous places the following provisions shall have effect (namely):—

(1) If in any situation fronting, adjoining, or abutting on any street or public footpath, any building, wall, fence, steps, structure or other thing, or any well, excavation, reservoir, pond, stream, dam or bank is, for want of sufficient repair, protection, or enclosure, dangerous to the persons lawfully using the street or footpath, the local authority may, by notice in writing served upon the owner, require him, within the period specified in the notice and hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'prescribed period,' to repair, remove, protect, or enclose the same so as to prevent any danger therefrom:

(2) If, after service of the notice on the owner, he shall neglect to comply with the requirements thereof within the prescribed period, the local authority may cause such works as they think proper to be done for effecting such repair, removal, protection, or enclosure, and the expenses thereof shall be payable by the owner, and may be recovered summarily as a civil debt.

Dangerous Property is held at the owner's peril, see Rylands v. Fletcher, (1866) L. R. 1 Ex. 265, and (1868), L. R. 3 H. L. 330, even though the owner may not know that the nature of the property is dangerous, Belvedere Fish, etc. Co. v. Rainham Chemical Works, 1920, 2 K. B. 487; 1921, 2 A. C. 465.

Dangerous Structure. By s. 75 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 34), which is incorporated (see s. 160) in the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), any building deemed by the surveyor to be in a ruinous or dangerous state must be pulled down, repaired, or otherwise made secure. This provision is not confined to buildings, etc., adjacent to a highway; see L.C.C. v. Herring, 1894, 2 Q. B. 522, a case decided under the Metropolitan Building Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict.

c. 122). See also the London Building Act, 1930 (c. civiii.), ss. 128 et seq., and Public Health Act, 1936, s. 58, enabling a local authority to apply to a Court of Summary Jurisdiction for an order to the owner to repair or demolish the structure, and upon failure by the owner the local authority may do the work and shore it up or fence it off; see also Housing Act, 1936.

Dar, keeper, holder. This word is often joined with another to denote the holder of a particular employment or office, as Chobdar, staff-holder; Zemindar, landholder. This compound word with i, ee, y, added to it, denotes the office, as Zemindar-ee.—Indian.

Dardus, a dart.

Dare, to transfer property. When this transfer is made in order to discharge a debt, it is datio solvendi animo; when to receive an equivalent, to create an obligation, it is datio contrahendi animo; lastly, when made donandi animo, from mere liberality, it is a gift, donatio.—Civil Law.

Dare ad remanentiam, to give away in fee, or for ever.

Darogah, the chief native officer at a police, custom, or excise station.—Indian.

Darraign [fr. derationo, Med. Lat.; des-rener, Fr.], to clear a legal account, to answer an accusation, to settle a controversy.

Darreln, a corruption of the Fr. dernier, the last. See PUIS DARREIN CONTINUANCE.

Darreln presentment, assize of, lay only where a man had an advowson by descent from his ancestors; it was abolished by the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27), s. 36.

Date, grounds whereon to proceed: facts from which to draw a conclusion.

Date [fr. datum, Lat.], that part of a deed, writing, or letter which expresses the day of the month and year in which it was made. Dates began to be inserted in deeds in the reigns of Edward II. and Edward III. A deed, however, is good, although it mentions no date, or has a false or impossible date, provided the real date of its delivery can be proved.

By R. S. C., Order XIX., r. 4, dates in pleadings are to be expressed in figures, not words, and by Ord. II., r. 8, a writ bears date on the day of issue.

Dative or Datif, that which may be given or disposed of at will or pleasure.

Datum, a first principle, a thing given.

Daum, Dam, a copper coin, the 40th part of a rupee.—Indian.

Day [fr. dies, Lat.; tag, Germ.], in its largest sense the time of a whole apparent revolution of the sun round the earth, but, in its popular acceptation, that part of the twenty-four hours when it is light, or the space of time between the rising and the setting of the sun. By the Roman Calendar the day commenced at midnight; and most European nations reckon in the same manner.

In the space of a day all the twenty-four hours are usually reckoned. Therefore, in general, if I am bound to pay money on any certain day, I discharge the obligation if I pay it before twelve o'clock at night; after which the following day commences.

If anything is to be done within a certain time, of, from, or after the doing or occurrence of something else, the day on which the first act or occurrence takes place is to be excluded from the computation (Williams v. Burgess, (1840) 12 A. & E. 635). In certain legislative and judiciary acts, e.g., the proceedings of the House of Lords as recorded in the Journals of the House, Latin names of the days of the week are still used; they are as follows: Dies Solis, D. Lunæ, D. Martis, D. Mercurii, D. Jovis, D. Veneris, D. Saturni. See Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 36; and, further, HOLIDAY; FRACTION OF A DAY.

Day in banc, was the return day of writs.

Day-book, a tradesman's journal; a book in which all the transactions of the day are set down.

Dayeria, a diary.

Day-rule, or Day-writ, a permission to a prisoner to go out of prison, for the purpose of transacting his business, as to hear a case in which he is concerned at the assizes, etc. Abolished by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22, s. 12.

Day-were of Land [fr. diurnalis, diuturna, Lat.], as much arable land as would be ploughed up in one day's work.

Daysman, an arbitrator, an elected judge.

Days of Grace. Time of indulgence granted to an acceptor for the payment of his bill of exchange. It was originally a gratuitous favour (hence the name), but custom has rendered it a legal right.

The number of these days varies according to the ancient custom or express law prevailing in each particular country. In the United Kingdom, by the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), s. 14, 'where a bill' (i.e., a bill of exchange or promissory note) 'is not payable on demand, the day on which it falls due is determined as follows:—Three days, called days of grace, are, in every case where the bill itself does not otherwise provide, added to the time of payment as fixed by the bill, and the bill is due and payable on the last day of grace,' with a proviso that where the last day of grace falls on Sunday, Christmas Day, or Good Friday, or a public fast or thanksgiving day, the bill is payable on the preceding business day, or on the succeeding business day if the last day of grace is a bank holiday (other than Christmas Day or Good Friday), or if the last day of grace is a Sunday and the second a bank holiday. For a table showing the number of days allowed in other countries, see Byles on Bills.

The law of the place where the bill is payable governs the allowance or non-allowance of the days of grace.

The fourteen to twenty-one days for which insurance companies usually extend a fire or life policy after its expiration, in the expectation that it will be renewed is frequently referred to as days of grace for payment of the premium.

Deacon [fr. diacre, Fr.; diacono, It., Span., and Port.; diaconus, Lat.; διακονος, Gk.] (1) A minister or servant of the church, whose office is to assist the priest in divine service, and the distribution of the sacrament, etc. He may now perform any of the divine offices which a priest may, except only pronouncing the absolution and consecrating the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. By the Clergy Ordination Act, 1804 (44 Geo. 3, c. 43), it is provided (conformably to Canon 34 of the Canons of 1603) that none shall be ordained deacon under twenty-three years, nor priest under twenty-four years of age; though as to deacons the Archbishop of Canterbury has the privilege of admitting them (by faculty or dispensation) at an earlier age. See, further, under the title CLERGY; and see Phill. Eccl. Law.

(2) A lay office among dissenters.

Dead Bodies. See CORPSE.

Dead Freight, the unsupplied part of a cargo, or the freight payable by a merchant where he has not shipped a full cargo for the part not shipped.

Dead Man's Part, the remainder of an intestate's movables, besides that which of right belonged to his wife and children. This was formerly made use of in masses for the soul of the deceased; subsequently, the administrators applied it to their own use and benefit, until the 1 Jac. 2, c. 17, subjected it to distribution among the next of kin. In Scotland the 'dead's part' of a man's personalty is that part of which he is entitled to dispose by will. See REASONABLE PARTS.

Dead Pledge [mortuum radium], a mortgage of lands or goods.

Dead Rent. A rent payable on a mining lease in addition to a royalty, so called because it is payable whether the mine is being worked or not.

Deaf and Dumb. A man that is born deaf, dumb, and blind is looked upon by the law as in the same state with an idiot, he being supposed incapable of any understanding. Nevertheless, a deaf and dumb person, i.e., a 'mute by the visitation of God,' may be tried for felony if the prisoner can read or write and be made to understand by means of signs or symbols (1 Leach, C. L. 102). As to when he is a competent witness, see Tayl. on Evid. s. 1248; John Ruston's case (1786), Leach, Cr. Ca. 408.

There is, in general, no separate affliction of dumbness, apart from deafness, of which dumbness is the necessary result.

Education.—As to the education of afflicted children, provision is made for instruction suitable to the condition of the child by the Education Act, 1921 (11 & 12 Geo. 5, c. 51), ss. 61–67.

Deafforested, or Disafforested, discharged from being a forest, or freed and exempted from the forest-laws.—17 Car. 1, c. 16.

De ambitu, of obtaining a place by bribery.

Dean [fr. decanus, Lat.; δέκα, Gk., ten], an ecclesiastical governor or dignitary, so called as he is supposed to have originally presided over ten canons or prebendaries at the least. In cathedrals of the old foundation in England, the dean is the principal of the four chief dignitaries, exercising a general supervision over the other members of the caputular body, with special reference to the cure of souls. In cathedrals of the new foundation, the duties of the deans are defined by the statutes of each chapter.

Considered in respect of the differences of office, deans are of six kinds:—(1) Deans of Chapters, who are either of cathedral or collegiate churches. (2) Deans of Peculiars, who have sometimes both jurisdiction and cure of souls, and sometimes jurisdiction only. (3) Rural Deans, deputies of the bishop, planted all round his diocese, the better to inspect the conduct of the parochial clergy, to inquire into and report dilapidations, and to examine the candidates for confirmation; and armed, in minutar matters, with an inferior degree of judicial and coercive authority. (4) Deans in the Colleges of our Universities, who are officers appointed to superintend the behaviour of the members, and to enforce discipline. (5) Honorary

Deans, as the Dean of the Chapel Royal, St. James's. (6) Deans of Provinces or Deans of Bishops. Thus the Bishop of London is Dean of the Province of Canterbury, and to him, as such, the archbishop sends his mandate for summoning the bishops of his province when a convocation is to be assembled.

Another division, arising from the nature of their office, is into deans of spiritual promotions and deans of lay promotions. Of the former kind are deans of peculiars, with cure of souls, deans of the royal chapels and of chapters, and rural deans; of the latter kind are deans of peculiars without cure of souls, who therefore may be, and frequently are, persons not in holy orders.

Their appointments are either elective, as deans of chapters of the old foundation, though the Crown has, in fact, the real patronage; or donative, as those deans of chapters of the new foundation, who are appointed by the royal letters-patent. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), provides that the old deaneries (except in Wales) shall thenceforth be in the direct patronage of the Sovereign, who may, on the vacancy thereof, appoint by letters-patent a spiritual person to be dean; and that no person shall hereafter be capable of receiving the appointment of dean, archdeacon, or canon, until he shall have been six complete years in priest's orders, and that the dean shall reside for at least eight months in the year.

By the Archdeacons and Rural Deaneries Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 63), provision is made for the re-arrangement of the boundaries of archdeacons and rural deaneries, and by the Deans and Canons Resignation Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 8), for the resignation of Deans. See also Cathedrals (Houses of Residence) Measure, 1936 (No. 4).

Dean of the Arches, the lay judge of the Court of Arches. See ARCHES and PUBLIC WORSHIP REGULATION ACT.

Dean of Faculty. The head of the Faculty of Advocates (q.v.).

Dean, Forest of. An ancient royal forest in the county of Gloucester. As to the mines therein, see 1 & 2 Vict. c. 43, and 24 & 25 Vict. c. 40. See Nicholls' Forest of Dean.

De arbitrations facto, Writ of, issued when an action was brought for a cause already settled by arbitration.

Dearle v. Hall. The rule which takes its name from this case, reported 1823, 3 Russ. 1, originated with the bankruptcy rule conferring the priority of assignments of choses in action according to the date of notice to the debtor by the assignment (Ryall v. Rowles, 1 Ves. Sess. 348). Before 1926 the rule was that the priority of equitable assignments of debts and other choses in action was determined by priority in date of notice to the trustees or other owners of the legal interest in the property assigned (see Ward v. Duncombe, 1893, A. C. 369). The rule did not extend to equitable interests in land except to proceeds of land held on trust for sale, see Lloyd's Bank v. Pearson, 1901, 1 Ch. 685, and QUI PRIOR EST TEMPORE POTIOR EST JURE. Section 137 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, has extended the rule to dealings with equitable interests in land, capital money (see s. 205 (1) (xxvi.) of the Act), and securities representing capital money effected after 1925. To effect priority among competing assignees the notice must be in writing and given to the trustees (if any) of the property, or failing any trustees, to the estate owner; failing all these the purchaser may require notice to be endorsed on the instrument, if any, creating the trust or under which the interest is acquired, e.g., probate or letters of administration. The trustees (if any) are obliged to give information to persons equitably interested in the property. This duty is not, apparently, absolute (see Low v. Bouverie, 1891, 3 Ch. 82). Under s. 137 the estate owner or fund holder becomes a trustee for the assignee after notice. Section 138, ibid., provides for the appointment of an independent trust corporation who can act as registrar of notices. See NOTICE; and as to priority of some equitable interests in registered land, REGISTRATION OF TITLE (Minor Interests Index).

Death. As to the registration of a death, see Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 48), 37 & 38 Vict. c. 88, 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 86, and 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 22. As to an action brought for damages arising from death by accident, neglect, etc., see the Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93) (Lord Campbell's Act) to 1908, as amended by Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 41), s. 2 (q.v.). As to the effect of death after the commencement of an action, see Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934. Apart from these statutes, at Common Law no civil claim for damages can be brought for the death of a human being (Baker v. Bolton, (1808) 1 Camp. 493; The Amerika, 1914, P. 167).

See BIRTHS, DEATHS AND MARRIAGES; ACTIO PERSONALIS; LAW REFORM; and Public Health Act, 1936 (deaths from infectious diseases). As to punishment of death, see CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

Death Duties. These are (1) the Estate Duty, which, by the Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), superseded the Probate or Administration Duty leviable under the Stamp Act, 1815, and the Account Duty leviable under the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1881; (2) the Succession Duty leviable under the Succession Duty Act, 1853; and (3) the Legacy Duty leviable under the Stamp Act, 1815:—duties leviable on the passing of property by the death of a person to his successors; (4) Settlement Estate Duty was abolished in respect of all deaths after 11th May, 1914, Finance Act, 1914, s. 14. It consisted of 1 per cent., increased to 2 per cent. by the Finance (1909–10) Act, 1910, in addition to other duties on settled property. It was not payable on property settled before August 1st, 1894, and certain allowances are accorded by the Finance Act of 1914. It is still payable in respect of deaths on or before May 11th, 1914. The Act of 1894 was amended by the Finance Acts, 1896, 1900, and 1907, and in subsequent years. Consult Hanson or Dymond on Death Duties. There is nothing illegal or immoral in making dispositions of property in order to escape death duties (per Lord Atkinson in A.-G. v. Richmond and Gordon (Duke), 1909, A. C. at p. 475). See also ESTATE DUTY; SUCCESSION DUTY; LEGACY DUTY; SETTLEMENT ESTATE DUTY.

Deathbed or Dying Declarations are constantly admitted in evidence. The principle of this exception to the general rule is founded partly on the awful situation of the dying person, which is considered to be as powerful over his conscience as the obligation of an oath, and partly on a supposed absence of interest in a person on the verge of the next world, which dispenses with the necessity of cross-examination. But before such declarations can be admitted in evidence against a prisoner, it must be satisfactorily proved that the deceased, at the time of making them, was conscious of his danger, and had given up all hope of recovery (R. v. Perry, 1909, 2 K. B. 697), and this may be collected from the nature and circumstances of the case, although the declarant did not express such an apprehension. It is not essential that the party should apprehend immediate dissolution; it is sufficient if he apprehend it to be impending. See Taylor on Evid., 12th ed., ss. 714 et seq. The Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 35), ss. 6, 7, makes provision for taking the depositions of persons dangerously ill, and making the same evidence after death, and for prisoners being present at the taking of such depositions.

The party implicated, however, may produce evidence of the state of mind of the deceased and his behaviour or otherwise that he was not likely to be oppressed by the thought of death, and for a rejection on a trial for murder or a declaration of the dying victim in the presence of her speechless murderer (who was convicted and executed), see R. v. Beddingfield, (1879) 14 Cox, C. C. 341. See DECLARATION OF DECEASED PERSON.

Death Bed, Scots Law of. By this law an heir in Scotland was entitled to keep his heritage as against a disposition of it by his predecessor. But the law is repealed by 34 & 35 Vict. c. 81, the Act 'to abolish Reductions ex capite Lecti in Scotland.' See REDUCTION EX CAPIT E LECTI.

Deathsmán; executioner, hangman.

De bene esse. To take or do anything de bene esse is to accept or allow it as well done for the present; but when it comes to be more fully examined or tried, to stand or fall according to the merit of the thing in its own nature (Jac. Law Dict.). In modern times the term is chiefly used in reference to an examination, out of court and before trial, of witnesses who are old, dangerously ill, or about to leave the country, on the terms that if the witnesses continue ill or absent, their evidence be read at the trial, but if they recover or return, the evidence be taken in the usual manner. Now by R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXXVII., r. 5, the Court may, in any cause or matter where it shall appear necessary for the purposes of justice (see Bidder v. Bridges, (1884) 26 Ch. D. 1), make any order for the examination upon oath before the Court or any officer of the Court, or any other person, and at any place, of any witness or person, and may empower any party to any such cause or matter to give such deposition in evidence therein on such terms, if any, as the Court may direct.

See also forms of orders in App. K. of R. S. C. 1883, Nos. 35 to 37.

Debenture [fr. debeo, Lat., to owe] may be defined generally as a charge in writing (not necessarily sealed, see British India, etc., Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, (1881) 7 Q. B. D. 165) of certain property with the repayment at a time fixed of money lent by person therein named at a given interest, but the term is a very elastic one. The word 'debenture' is of ancient origin and appears to have been in use five centuries ago (Palmer's Company Precedents, Pt. III., p. 1); and a document which, though it mentions no security and is only a promise to pay, is properly described as a debenture, and as a marketable security will require to be stamped as such (Speyer v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 1907, 1 K. B. 246). By the Companies Act, 1929, s. 380, a debenture is defined as including debenture stock, bonds or other securities of a company whether constituting a charge on the assets of the company or not. The charge created by debentures as a rule is fixed on the company's property or by way of floating charge. If fixed, the remedies upon default are those available to mortgagees and those stipulated for and endorsed on the debenture or provided by the trust deed. See also FLOATING CHARGE. This form of security is frequently resorted to by public companies to raise money for the prosecution of their undertakings. Registration of a company's debentures (under the term 'mortgage or bond') is required by the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, in the case of a company incorporated by special Act, and by the Companies Act, 1929, s. 88, see infra, in the case of a company incorporated under the general powers of that Act, but not by the Bills of Sale Acts (Re Standard Manufacturing Co., 1891, 1 Ch. 627), and 'debentures' of an incorporated company are expressly exempted from the Bills of Sale Act, 1882, by s. 17 of that Act. Under the Companies Act, 1929, ss. 79-81, every mortgage or charge created by a company registered in England for securing debentures, or on uncalled capital, or such as would require a bill of sale, on land wherever situate, on the company's book debts, or as a floating charge, or on calls made but not paid; on a ship; on goodwill or patent or trade mark (see the full list in s. 79) will be void as against the liquidator and any creditor of the company unless the charge is registered with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies in manner prescribed by the Act, within 21 days from the date of execution of the charge. The avoidance will be without prejudice to the company's obligation to repay the money secured by the charge and that money will become immediately repayable. Under s. 81 the company must also register charges existing on property when acquired by it. Registers of charges are to be kept by the registrar and the company respectively. The register and copies of the instruments registered are open to the inspection of members, creditors and the public (s. 81). It should be observed that a purchaser or chargee of registered lands, of which a company is registered as proprietor or chargee, is not affected by notice of any incumbrance registered with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies unless the incumbrance is registered or otherwise protected under the Land Registration Act, 1925. See s. 60 of that Act, but double registration under the Land Charges Act, 1925, is not necessary. Section 10 (5) provides that registration of a land charge for securing money which has been registered under the (now) 81st section of the Companies Act, 1929, shall have effect as if the land charge had been registered under the Land Charges Act, 1925.

The certificate of registration (s. 82 (2)) is conclusive that the statutory requirements for registration have been complied with (Lester v. Yolland, Husson and Burkett, 1908, 1 Ch. 152). As to the re-issue of redeemed debentures, see Companies Act, 1925, s. 75.

The terminability and fixity in amount of debentures, being inconvenient to lenders, have led to their being superseded in many cases by debenture stock, which is frequently irredeemable, and usually transferable in any amounts except fractions of a pound.

Debentures may be made payable to bearer, see BEARER, and Edelstein v. Schuler & Co., 1902, 2 K. B. 144.

'Perpetual debentures' also are sometimes issued, and these are specially protected by s. 74 of the Companies Act, 1929.

The issue of debenture stock in the case of companies incorporated by Act of Parliament is regulated either by their special Acts, or by the Companies Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 118), which provides that the same shall be a prior charge, and the interest a primary charge, and contains provisions for the enforcement of payment of arrears by the appointment of a receiver.

As to the issue of redeemable debenture stock by a 'statutory company,' see Statutory Companies (Redeemable Stock) Act, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 44).

Also a term used at the Custom House for a kind of certificate, signed by the officers of the Customs, which entitles a merchant exporting goods to the receipt of a bounty or drawback.

As to Debentures by County Authorities, see Local Loans Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 83).—Consult Lindley on Company Law; Buckley on Companies; Palmer's Company Precedents, Pt. III.; Stiebel on Companies.

Debet et detinet. (He oweth and detaineth.)

An action was in the debet et detinet when he who made a contract, or lent money to another, or he to whom a bond was made, sued for personal redress. But if it were brought by or against an executor for a debt due to or from the testator, this, not being his own debt, was sued for in the detinet only.

Debet et solet. If a person sued to recover any right, whereof his ancestor was disseised by the tenant of his ancestor, then he used the word debet alone in his writ, because his ancestor only was disseised, and the estate discontinued; but if he sued for anything then first denied him, he used debet et solet, by reason that his ancestor before him and he himself usually enjoyed the thing sued for, until the present refusal of the tenant.—Reg. Brev. 140; Fitz. N. B. 98.

Debit, the left-hand page of a ledger, to which all items are carried that are charged to an account.

Debitum et contractus sunt nullius loci, 7 Rep. 3.—(Debt and contract are of no place).—See Mostyn v. Fabrigas, (1775) 1 Cowp. 161; 1 Sm. L. C.

De bonis non, of the goods of a deceased person not [administered]. A grant de bonis non administratis, or more shortly de bonis non, is made where an executor dies intestate or an administrator dies, and in either case without having fully administered. See ADMINISTRATION.

De bonis propriis, of a person's own goods.

De bonis testatoris, of a testator's goods. As to the effect of a judgment de bonis testatoris against an executor, see Re Marvin, 1905, 2 Ch. 490, and the authorities there referred to.

De bono et malo, Writs. It was anciently the course to issue special writs of gaol delivery for each particular prisoner which were called writs de bono et malo; but these being found inconvenient or oppressive, a general commission for all the prisoners has long been established in their stead.—4 Steph. Com., 7th ed. 315.

Debt [fr. debitum, Lat.], a sum of money due from one person to another. An action of debt lay where a person claimed the recovery of a liquidated or certain sum of money affirmed to be due to him; and it was generally founded on some contract alleged to have taken place between the parties, or on some matter of fact from which the law would imply a contract between them. This was debt in the debet, which was the principal and only common form. There is another species mentioned in the books, called debt in the detinet, which lay for the specific recovery of goods, under a contract to deliver them. An action of debt as a technical term is now obsolete. See PLEADINGS. The order of the payment of debts and expenses out of legal assets in an ordinary administration action in the Chancery Division of the High Court is as follows:—

1st. Funeral expenses, which in the case of an insolvent estate must be strictly reasonable and necessary only, the executor or administrator being personally liable for any excessive expenditure.

What is a strictly reasonable and necessary sum varies with the circumstances of each particular estate, and the price of the requisite articles at the particular place.

2nd. Testamentary expenses about the probate of the will, or the letters of administration in intestacy; debts due from the estate after death, such as rates and taxes, and warehousing charges for protecting furniture, etc.

3rd. The costs of necessary legal proceedings, including an administration action.

If the estate is insolvent, after providing for funeral, testamentary and administration expenses, the estate is to be administered (whether by personal representatives or by the Court, Re Cockell, 1932, A. C. 365) according to the rules which may be in force for the time being under the law of bankruptcy with respect to the assets of persons adjudged bankrupt, A. E. Act, 1925, s. 34 (1), Part I. of the First Sched. of that Act, and see ss. 30 and 33 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, and s. 36, ibid., as to deferred debts. An entailed interest if disposed of by will becomes assets for the payment of debts (Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 176), but not if the entailed estate has not been so disposed of.

Prior to the Administration of Estates Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 46) (popularly known as 'Hinde Palmer's Act'), special contract debts, as by bonds, covenants, and other instruments under seal, took priority over debts by simple contract; but this Act abolished that distinction as to priority.

As to attachment of debts, see that title.

Debts are assignable at law, if the assignment is absolute and in writing, where express written notice of the assignment is given to the debtor, trustee, or other person from whom the assignor would have been entitled to claim such a debt (Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 136, and ASSIGNMENT). See also Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 34, which expressly recognizes the right of retainer of a personal representative within the limits therein set out.

Debtee-Executor. See RETAINER OF DEBTS.

Debtor, he that owes something to another. As to the meaning of 'debtor' in the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, see s. 1, sub-s. 2, of the Act. See CREDITOR and BANKRUPT.

Debtor-Executor. At law, if a testator appoints his debtor executor, the debt is released. In equity, however, the executor is accountable for the amount of his debt, as assets of the testator. See Freakley v. Fox, 9 B. & C. 134; Re Hyslop, 1894, 3 Ch. 522; and see Wms. on Executors, 12th ed., p. 858.

Debtor's Summons. See JUDGMENT-DEBTOR SUMMONS.

Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62).—This Act abolishes imprisonment for debt except in case of default of payment of penalties, default by trustees or solicitors, and certain other cases (see s. 4), and provides for committal of debtors in default of payment of judgment debts which the debtor can but will not pay, and in certain other cases (s. 5): see COMMITMENT. It also provides for the punishment of fraudulent debtors. The Debtors Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 54), gives a judicial discretion in the case of a defaulting trustee or solicitor. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Debt'; IMPRISONMENT, and as to Northern Ireland, see 35 & 36 Vict. c. 57.

De cætero, henceforth.

Decanal, pertaining to a deanery.

Decanus, a dean.

Deceased Wife's Sister or Deceased Brother's Widow. See MARRIAGE (prohibited degrees).

Deceit [fr. deceptio, Lat.], fraud, cheat, craft, or collusion used to deceive and defraud another. In an action of deceit the plaintiff must prove that the defendant has made a false statement, knowing that it was false or without any belief in its truth or without caring whether it was true or not, and intending that the plaintiff should rely upon it and that the statement was relied upon by the plaintiff and caused damage; non-disclosure may be fraudulent, see Suppressio veri, suggestio falsi, and Cockett v. Keswick, 1902, 2 Ch. 456, and Christine Ville Rubber Estates, (1911) 28 T. L. R. 38, and CONCEALMENT (Smith v. Chadwick, (1884) 9 A. C. 187, and Derry v. Peek, (1889) 14 App. Cas. 337). Under the Companies Act, 1929, s. 37, a special action for deceit will lie at the instance of any subscriber for shares or debentures who has subscribed for these on the faith of a prospectus inviting him to subscribe against any director, or person named or referred to as a director in the prospectus and any promoter of the company, or person authorizing the issue of the prospectus if there is any untrue statement in the prospectus or in any report or memorandum set out in the prospectus or by reference incorporated therein or issued therewith. The onus is on the defendant to clear himself by any of the defences provided for in the section (see DIRECTORS). In these cases there is a statutory right of contribution, see s. 37 (3), from which (apparently) guilty promoters have been excluded. See also Law Reform (Misc. Pr.) Act, 1935, s. 6. The injured shareholder may also sue the company for rescission. See Frankenburg v. Great Horseless Carriage Co., 1900, 1 Q. B. 504, and see also Sched. XI. of the Act of 1929 and MISREPRESENTATION; FRAUD.

There was formerly a writ of deceit, which was an action brought in the Common Pleas to reverse a judgment obtained in any real action, by fraud or collusion between the parties to the prejudice of the right of a third person. It was abolished by the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27), s. 36.

Decem tales (ten such). If, when a trial at bar (see BAR, TRIAL AT) is called on, a sufficient number of jurors do not attend, the trial must be adjourned, and a decem or octo tales, according to the number deficient, awarded, as at Common Law; for the County Juries Act, 1825 (6 Geo. 4, c. 50), s. 37, which allows the tales de circumstantibus, is expressly confined to trials at Nisi Prius and the assizes.—1 Chit. Arch. Pract.

Decennary, a town or tithing, consisting originally of ten families of freeholders. Ten tithings composed a hundred.—1 Bl. Com. 114.

Decies tantum, a writ which lay against a juror, who had taken money of either party for giving his verdict, to recover ten times the sum taken.—38 Edw. 3, c. 12, repealed by 6 Geo. 4, c. 50, s. 62.

Decimas, tenths or tithes. See TITHES.

Decimation, signifies tithing, or paying a tenth part. The punishing every tenth soldier by lot for mutiny or other failure of duty was termed decimatio legionis by the Romans.

Deciners, Decenniers, or Doziners, such as were wont to have the oversight of the Friburghs or views of frankpledge for the maintenance of the King's peace. The limit and compass of their jurisdiction was called decenna, because it commonly consisted of ten households; as every person, bound for himself and his neighbours to keep the peace, was styled decennier.—Bract. l. 3, t. 2, c. xv.

Decision, a judgment.

Decisive Oath [sacramentum decisionis, Lat.], in the Civil Law, where one of the parties to a suit, not being able to prove his charge, offered to refer the decision of the cause to the oath of his adversary; which the adversary was bound to accept, or tender the same proposal back again, otherwise the whole was taken as confessed by him.—Cod. 4, l. 12.

Deck Cargo. By s. 10 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 48), 'deck cargo' means any cargo carried either in any uncovered space on deck or in any covered space not included in the cubical contents forming the ship's registered tonnage. The Merchant Shipping (Safety and Load Line Conventions) Act, 1932 (22 Geo. 5, c. 9), s. 61, gives the Board of Trade power to make regulations, known as 'timber cargo regulations,' as to the carrying of timber in any uncovered space on deck.

Declarant, a person who makes a declaration.

Declaration, a proclamation or affirmation, open expression or publication.

A statement on the plaintiff's part of his cause of action, following after service of the writ of summons; abolished in 1875 by the Judicature Acts, which substituted a statement of claim. See STATEMENT OF CLAIM.

Declaration in lieu of Oath. By the Statutory Declarations Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 62), any justice of the peace, notary public, or other officer authorized to administer an oath, is empowered to take voluntary declarations in the form specified in the Act; and any person wilfully making such declaration false in any material particular is guilty of a misdemeanour. The form given by the Act of 1835 is as follows:—

I, A. B., do solemnly and sincerely declare that and I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true, and by virtue of the Statutory Declarations Act, 1835.

Declaration of Deceased Person. These declarations are frequently admissible as evidence, e.g., (1) if made in the ordinary discharge of business or duty; (2) if made against interest; (3) on questions of pedigree, if made before the commencement of litigation; (4) if accompanying an act the proof of which is relevant. See DEATHBED DECLARATIONS.

Declaration of Insolvency, a declaration by any person of inability to pay his debts which, when filed in the Bankruptcy Court, amounts to an 'act of bankruptcy.'—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59), s. 1, sub-s. 1 (f).

Declaration of London, 1909. A suggested International agreement to settle doubts concerning inter alia the application of the doctrines of contrabrand, neutral destination and continuous voyage. A list of three classes of goods was made: (1) absolute contrabrand or munitions of war; (2) conditionally contrabrand, or foodstuffs, forage, money, railway materials, fuel, lubricants, barbed wire and optical instruments; (3) not contrabrand, or raw textile materials, rubber, hides, metallic ores, earthenware. Eleven countries signed the convention. With a precision justified by the developments of science and the uncontrollable nature of a desperate war, the House of Lords refused to ratify it. In practice the declaration was followed by Great Britain and other belligerents with increasing alterations until it was formally, and finally abandoned by this country in April, 1916. A modified list of articles absolutely or conditionally contrabrand was issued shortly after. See Hall or Lawrence on International Law.

Declaration of Paris, a state paper agreed upon at the conclusion of the Crimean War, by the representatives of Great Britain, France, Austria, Russia, Sardinia, and Turkey (February 26, 1856), in which the following agreements on maritime law were come to:—

Privateering is abolished.

The neutral flag covers enemy's goods save contraband of war.

Neutral goods save contraband of war are not liable to capture under enemy's flag. Blockades to be binding must be real. (See also LETTERS OF MARQUE and PAPER BLOCKADES.)

Declaration of Title. Obtainable by action in a case where an invasion of title is apprehended, and the party threatened wishes to proceed under a title validated by judicial decision. See R. S. C. Ord. XXV., r. 5.

Declaration of Trust. To prevent the inconvenience which arose from parol declarations and secret transfers of uses, s. 53 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, reproducing and amending the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), ss. 7, 8 and 9, requires that a declaration of trust respecting any land or any interest therein must be manifested and proved by some writing signed by some person who is able to declare such trust, or by his will, and (1) a disposition of an equitable interest or trust, subsisting at the time of the disposition, must be in writing signed by the person disposing of the same or by his agent thereunto lawfully authorized in writing or by will; (2) this section does not affect the creation of resulting, implied or constructive trusts.

It appears that this statute does not extend to the declaration or creation of trusts of mere personalty. But in practice, a parol declaration should never be relied on, for the intention to declare a trust should be irrevocably expressed. There is no form or particular set of words, or mode of expression, prescribed for the purpose of raising a trust. Intention will create a trust, provided the object of the gift, and the gift itself, can be correctly ascertained.—1 Sand. Uses, 344.

Declaration of Uses must be in writing.—29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 7. See now DECLARATION OF TRUST.

Declaration of War. The formal announcement by one nation of an intention to treat another nation as an enemy and to commence hostilities, agreed to be necessary by the Hague Convention, 1907. In modern times the future belligerents, generally, are in a state of war before any declaration of war is made. Before this Convention was signed, in the war between Russia and Japan, the Japanese ambassador, on the 6th February, 1904, notified to Russia the rupture of negotiations and the cessation of diplomatic relations, hostile operations were commenced by Japan on the 8th February, and formal declarations of war were not made until the 10th of February by Japan, and 11th February by Russia. The British Declaration of War on Germany was made on the 4th August, 1914, after an ultimatum.

The force of a declaration of war is equal to that of an Act of Parliament prohibiting intercourse with the enemy except by the king's license. As an act of State done by virtue of the prerogative it carries with it all the force of law (Esposito v. Bowden, (1857) 7 E. & B. 781).

Declarator, an action whereby it is sought to have some right of property, or of status, or other right judicially ascertained and declared.—Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Declarator of Property, when the complainant, narrating his right to lands, desires he should be declared sole proprietor, and all others discharged to molest him in any way.—Ibid.

Declarator of Trust is resorted to against a trustee who holds property upon titles ex facie for his own benefit.—Ibid.

Declaratory Actions, those wherein the right of the pursuer is craved to be declared; but nothing claimed to be done by the defender.—Ibid.

Declaratory Decree, a binding declaration of right in equity without consequential relief, which might be made under the Chancery Procedure Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 86), ss. 50, 51; but this Act was very narrowly construed. The powers of the Court have since been greatly extended by Ord. XXV., r. 5, and actions can now be brought merely to declare rights (Ellis v. Duke of Bedford, 1899, 1 Ch. p. 515), though the jurisdiction is exercised with great caution.

Declaratory Statutes, those which declare what the Common Law is and ever has been, as the Bill of Rights, 1 W. & M. sess. 2, c. 2.

Declinatory Plea, a plea of sanctuary, also pleading of benefit of clergy before trial or conviction. Abolished by 6 & 7 Geo. 4, c. 28, s. 6.

Decoctor, a bankrupt.

Decoity, corrupted from Dakaiti, gang-robbery.—Indian.

Decollation, the act of beheading.

De consuetudinibus se servitilis, a real writ to recover rent in arrears. Abolished by the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27).

De contumace capiendo. A writ issued out of the Court of Chancery for the commitment of a person pronounced by an Ecclesiastical Court to be contumacious and guilty of contempt. See EXCOMMUNICATION.

De corpore comitatus (from the body of the county).

Decoy [probably fr. kooy, Dut., a cage], a place made for catching wild water-fowl. As to the rights of an owner of such a place, see Carrington v. Taylor, (1809) 11 East, 571; 11 Mod. 74, though the decision in this case is overruled by Allen v. Flood, 1898, A. C. 1.

Decree [fr. decretum, Lat.], an edict, a law. The term was also used for the judgment of a Court of Equity. But by the Judicature Acts, 1873 and 1875, the expression judgment, which was formerly used only in Courts of Common Law, is adopted in reference to the decisions of all Divisions of the Supreme Court, and (Judicature Act, 1925, s. 225, replacing Act of 1873, s. 100) includes decree. See JUDGMENT, and consult Seton on Decrees. In Scotland the judgment of a Court disposing of a case (accent on first syllable).

Decree nisi. By the Judicature Act, 1925, s. 183 (1) every decree for a divorce or for nullity of marriage shall, in the first instance, be a decree nisi not to be made absolute until after the expiration of six months from the pronouncing thereof, unless the Court by general or special order from time to time fixes a shorter time.

(2) After the pronouncing of the decree nisi and before the decree is made absolute, any person may, in the prescribed manner, show cause why the decree should not be made absolute by reason of the decree having been obtained by collusion or by reason of material not having been brought before the Court, and in any such case the Court may make the decree absolute, reverse the decree nisi, require further inquiry or otherwise deal with the case as the Court thinks fit. Only in special circumstances will the period be shortened. See Osborne v. Osborne, (1926) 70 Sol. Jo. 388. See Browne on Divorce; Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Matrimonial Causes.'

Decree arbitral, the award of an arbitrator.—Scots Law.

Decree cognitionis causâ, when a creditor brings his action against the heir of his debtor in order to constitute the debt against him and attach the lands, and the heir appears and renounces the succession, the Court then pronounces a decree cognitionis causâ.—Bell's Scots Law Dict.

Decree of Exoneration, discharging trustees, executors, factors, tutors, and others.—Ibid.

Decree of Locality, dividing and proportioning among the heritors a stipend modified to a minister.—Ibid.

Decree of Modification, that which modifies a stipend to a minister, but does not divide or apportion it among the heritors.—Ibid.

Decree of Valuation of Teinds, a sentence of the Court of Session (who are now in the place of the Commissioners for the Valuation of Teinds) determining the extent and value of teinds.—Ibid.

Decreta, judicial sentences given by the emperor as supreme judge.—Roman Law.

Decretal Order, a Chancery order in the nature of a decree. See DECREE.

Decretals, a volume of the canon law, forming the second part, so called as containing the decrees of sundry popes; or a digest of the canons of all the councils that pertained to one matter under one head.

Decuriare, to bring into order.

Dedhana, an actual homicide or manslaughter.

Dedi et concessi (I have given and granted), the operative words in grants, etc. The word 'give' or the word 'grant' in a deed, executed after the 1st October, 1845, does not imply any covenant in law in respect of any tenements or hereditaments, except so far as the word 'give' or the word 'grant' may, by force of any Act of Parliament, imply a covenant.—Real Property Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106), s. 4, reproduced by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 59. Under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), s. 132, and in conveyances to the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty, the covenants for title are implied in the word 'grant.'

Dedicate, to make a private way public by acts evincing an intention to do so.

Dedication-day [festum dedicationis, Lat.], the feast of dedication of churches, or rather the feast-day of the saint and patron of a church, which was celebrated not only by the inhabitants of a place, but by those of all the neighbouring villages who usually came thither, and such assemblies were allowed as lawful. It was usual for the people to feast and to drink on those days.—Cowel.

De die in diem (from day to day).

Dedimus potestatem (we have given the power), a writ or commission to one or more private persons for the speeding of some act appertaining to a judge or a court. It is granted most commonly upon a suggestion that the party who is to do something before a judge, or in a court, is so weak that he cannot travel.

On renewing the commission of the peace there cometh a writ of dedimus potestatem out of Chancery, directed to some ancient justice, to take the oath of him which is newly inserted.

Formerly the judges would not suffer litigants to appoint attorneys in any action or suit without this writ; but it has since been provided by statute that the plaintiff or defendant may appoint attorneys without such process.—Jac. Law Dict.

Dedition, the act of yielding up anything; surrender.

De donis, Statute. See DONIS CONDITION-ALIBUS, STATUTE DE.

Deed [fr. daed, Sax.; déd, gadéd, Goth.; daed, Dut.], a formal document on paper or parchment duly signed, sealed, and delivered. It is either an indenture (factum inter partes) needing an actual indentation (Real Property Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106), s. 5), reproduced by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 56 (2), made between two or more persons in different interests, or a deed-poll (charta de unâ parte) made by a single person or by two or more persons having similar interests. By the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 57, a deed may be described according to the nature of the transaction, e.g., 'this lease,' 'this mortgage,' etc., or as a 'deed' and not habitually by the word 'indenture.'

The requisites of a deed are these:—

(1) Sufficient parties and a proper subject of assurance.

(2) It must be written, engrossed, printed, or lithographed, or partly written or engrossed, and partly printed or lithographed in any character or in any language, on paper, vellum, or parchment, since these materials best unite the two qualities of durability and difficulty of concealing alteration or erasure.

(3) The language employed should be sufficient in point of law, intelligible without punctuation, and clear without the aid of stops or parentheses.

Usage has arranged the text of a conveyance inter partes in a formal and well-understood sequence; and although it is not absolutely necessary that a deed should be drawn in accordance with the generally received formulary, provided it exhibit the intention of the parties, yet it is not advisable to deviate from it unless in a matter of urgent necessity. A properly prepared deed, then, is arranged in the following parts:—

(a) Commencement or exordium, date and parties.

The commencement sets forth its style or character. The date follows in indentures and contracts, but is generally placed in the last or peroration-clause in a deed-poll. In any case, even if there be no date, or an impossible date, the deed takes effect from its actual delivery, of which extrinsic evidence is admissible. The parties are described by their several names, their rank, profession or calling, and their places of abode, except in the case of a peer. The assumption of any additional name should be stated so as to preserve identity on the face of the title. A mistake will not vitiate the instrument if the party can be identified by extraneous evidence.—Nihil facit error nominis cum de corpore constat.

Every person who conveys any estate or interest, or enters into a covenant, or is to be bound by the deed, should be made a party to it.

Parties are classified in parts according to their several interests. Persons having joint-interests except in a deed of partition should be of the same part, but those having distinct though undivided interests should be of several successive parts. Those who are to transfer any interest or relinquish any right should come first, and amongst them, those having legal estates before those having equitable only, and the larger interests should precede the lesser. Then consenting parties and covenantors. After these, those who take any estate or interest, and, amongst these, trustees follow real owners. Lastly, those who are inserted to fix them with notice of the deed, as creditors, legatees, trustees, and executors.

When a person acts in two or more capacities, he should be named in distinct parts, according to such several capacities.

Husband and wife are generally of the same part except in separation deeds.

The Real Property Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106), s. 5, enacts that under an indenture executed after the 1st October, 1845, an immediate estate or interest in any tenements or hereditaments, and the benefit of a condition or covenant respecting any tenements or hereditaments, may be taken, although the taker thereof be not named a party to the indenture. This has been extended by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 56, to any estate, interest in land or other property and the benefit of any condition or covenant respecting land or other property. The better opinion is that the section relates to covenants only which run with the land or property. See COVENANT.

Before this statute, however, a person not named in an indenture could and still can take a remainder, or a use, or the benefit of a trust, or any authority by a letter of attorney, or if he executes the deed, undertake any liability therein expressed to be undertaken by him.—Halsbury, L. of Eng. 'Deeds.' Under a deed-poll any person sufficiently designated may maintain an action under the deed for breach of any obligation or assurance therein expressed in his favour. A party named in a deed is bound by it if he accepts any benefit thereby assured to him even if he does not execute the deed. See Halsbury, loc. cit.

(b) Recitals. These are either narratives of past facts, or a statement of the purpose of the deed. They are not a necessary part of an assurance, yet they frequently become material as an aid to collect the intention of the parties to the instrument, and a key to its construction. Thus a recital may restrain the effects of general phraseology in the operative part of a deed, and although it is not evidence as against strangers, yet it may be conclusive as to the facts which it sets forth between the parties to it and those claiming under them.

(c) Testatum,* witnessing or operative clause, comprehending:—

1. The consideration and its receipt. When a deed contains more than one testatum, the whole consideration should generally be stated in the first, unless it can be apportioned amongst the different testata.

2. The name of the grantor.

3. The operative words of transfer.

4. The name of the grantee, with appropriate words of limitation (if any). See s. 56 of Law of Property Act, 1925.

(d) The Parcels, i.e., the description of the property affected, with any savings or exceptions.

(e) General Words were inserted with sweeping clauses prior to the Conveyancing Act, 1881, under which a conveyance, in the 'general words,' enumerated all the particulars intended to pass to the grantee. Section 6 of that Act reproduced by s. 62 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, enacts that a conveyance of land shall operate to convey all 'buildings, erections, fixtures, commons,' etc., etc., and so dispenses with the enumeration of such particulars in the conveyance itself; and s. 63, reproduced by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 63, in like manner dispenses with the 'estate clause' or clause conveying all the estate right, etc., of the conveying parties.

All the parts which have been enumerated are as a whole technically denominated 'the premises' (præmissa) or the matters which precede. The premises should name all the parties, as well active as passive, i.e., both grantors and grantees, and set forth with certainly the thing granted, with any exceptions or reservations. This word has also a popular sense, meaning the property granted by the deed.

* In Scotland the 'testing clause' is the attestation; see infra.

(f) Habendum, limiting and defining the interest.

This part is a non-essential formality, expressing the extent of the grantee's interest in the thing granted. The grantee should be named, and he would take although not mentioned in the former part of the deed. While nothing can be limited in the habendum which has not been given in the premises, yet it may abridge, qualify, or enlarge the premises, but where they are repugnant, the premises will operate in preference to the habendum.

There is not any habendum in an appointment under a power or (before 1926) in a covenant to stand seised, or a simple declaration of uses, because such deeds themselves fulfil that office by limiting the estate to be created.

(g) Tenendum. This is usually joined with the habendum, but it is unnecessary, since the tenure is never expressed, except upon a sub-grant or lease reserving rent.

In annuity deeds and money assignments, the phrase 'To have, hold, receive, and take' is the common form of habendum.

(h) Declaration of Uses in deeds executed before 1926 operating by virtue of the Statute of Uses (27 Hen. 8, c. 10). A person may take an estate under this declaration, although not a party to the deed.

(i) Declaration of Trusts, when necessary.

(j) Declaration against Dower in purchase-deeds succeeded the limitation of the estate. This declaration, however, is now never inserted.

(k) Reddendum in leases, which reserves something to the grantor out of the estate transferred, such as rent.

The phrase 'yielding and paying' in a lease by indenture executed by the lessee will imply after entry a covenant to pay rent in the absence of one expressed (Platt on Covenants, pp. 50 et seq.). It is generally advisable, except in leases pursuant to statute, to reserve the rent at large, not specifying to whom made, since the rent will be annexed to the reversion and belong to the person for the time being entitled to the latter.

(l) Conditions, conditional limitations, provisos for cesser of interests, clauses of restraint, and for redemption, and special agreements, are generally next inserted, when stipulated for between the parties.

(m) Powers; e.g., a power to lease.

(n) Covenants. See COVENANT.

(o) The testimonium. In Scotland called the 'testing clause,' connecting the contents of the deed with the signatures and seals. See infra.

All these several parts, thus arranged, make up a formally prepared deed.

(5) The deed being engrossed, the next step is its execution, which consists of three acts, viz. :—

(a) Signing. This was not necessary before 1926 in cases where the Statute of Frauds (see FRAUDS, STATUTE OF) did not apply. Whether signing was necessary where that statute applied, or whether mere sealing was sufficient, is an open question. See Chitty on Contracts, 15th ed. at pp. 89, 90, citing Cooch v. Goodman, (1842) 2 Q. B. 580, and other authorities. A deed executed after 1925 must be signed (Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 73).

(b) Sealing, which is a Norman usage, and makes the assurance a specialty. It is, however, but a simple formality, but see CORPORATION, and Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 74. There should be a distinct seal for every signature.

(c) Delivery, which complete the efficacy of the deed, and whence it takes effect, if, as we have already seen, there be a false, or impossible, or no date. See DELIVERY OF A DEED, post.

(6) The deed must be read before execution if any of the parties request it, otherwise it will be void, so far as the requester is concerned; and a false reading will avoid it so far as it was misread (1 Touch. p. 56). Seeing that the draft of a deed is usually submitted to the legal advisers of the several parties, to be approved of by them on their client's behalf, the request of reading seldom occurs. In strict practice, the engrossment is examined with the draft by the solicitors of the parties before an appointment for its execution is fixed.

(7) The attestation is not essential, unless it be required by a particular statute, or by the express terms of a power. See POWER. In practice, however, every deed is attested, in order to render it more easy of proof. It was expressly enacted by the repealed Common Law Procedure Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 125), s. 26, that it would not be necessary to prove by the attesting witness any instrument to the validity of which 'attestation is not requisite.'

A deed may be delivered as an escrow upon some condition precedent to its taking effect, but in that case it should not be delivered to the other party or parties under the deed, though it may be delivered to an agent or solicitor acting for all parties in the matter of delivery.

(8) The receipt-clause acknowledging the payment of the consideration-money, if any, signed by the recipient, formerly always endorsed on the deed, is now rendered unnecessary by s. 54 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, reproduced by s. 67 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, which provides that a receipt in the body of the deed shall be a sufficient discharge without any further receipt being endorsed on the deed.

(9) Extrinsic formalities.

Generally speaking, in localities where registration of titles is compulsory in regard to conveyances of land, including leases of land situate there and in regard to land charges which are required to be registered under the Land Charges Act, 1925, a deed may become ineffectual to vest the legal estate in the grantee or lessee or to give a full legal title in rem against the world, unless the title or charge is registered. Before 1926 extrinsic formalities were necessary in some cases of transfer and other assurances such as enrolment in Chancery of grants by the Crown, bargains and sales of freeholds, pursuant to 27 Hen. 8, c. 16, or under the Land Tax Acts, gifts of land to charities under the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 42), s. 4 (9), and disentailing assurances according to 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74.

(10) The stamp does not strengthen the efficacy of a deed, but is required to render it admissible in evidence. A deed may be stamped before or after execution. See STAMPS.

Though a deed may be good in point of form, as apparently possessing the external and internal circumstances necessary to its validity, yet it may be rendered invalid from many causes, which may be thus classified:—

(I.) Those making it void ab initio, when it can never take effect; as

(a) Where it is wanting in any of the essentials such as want or capacity, or knowledge of the contents, or intention of the deed, or under a common mistake of fact as to the existence or state of the subject-matter, it is then absolutely null against all persons.

(b) Where a party has made it under threat, for then it is void as to him.

(II.) Those making it voidable, not being void from the beginning; as

(a) By dissent of parties, for instance the repudiation of an infant's deed after majority.

(b) By dissent of strangers, as the grantee of a deed-poll or an indenture not executed by him, disclaiming the estate thereby given to him, or a husband repudiating his wife's purchase.

(III.) Those making it void by something ex post facto; as

(a) By an extra-judicial act, as a rasure or interlineation, or breaking off the seal, with the assent of the parties, or delivering up the deed to be cancelled. The act of a spoliator will not avoid a deed. To prevent any after-dispute, any alteration or interlineation made in a deed before execution should be particularized in the attestation clause. If a freehold estate have already passed by the deed, its cancellation will not divest such estate so as to re-vest it in the original owner; there must be a re-transfer to this effect.

(b) By a judicial act, as where by a decision of a court a deed is declared void by reason of fraud, or an illegal consideration, or that it attempts to derogate a prior and superior right.

The rectification or setting aside or cancellation of deeds or other written instruments, formerly part of the jurisdiction of the High Court of Chancery, is continued in the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice by the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 34. See now the J. Act, 1925, s. 55.

As to supplemental deeds, now very commonly used to save recitals, see Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 53, and s. 58 of the Law of Property Act, 1925; and s. 74 ibid. for execution of instruments by corporations, and for a number of provisions as to the construction and effect of deeds generally, see the same Acts. Consult Key or Elphinstone, Prec.

Deed of Arrangement. See ARRANGEMENTS BETWEEN DEBTORS AND CREDITORS.

Deed of Covenant. Covenants are frequently entered into by a separate deed for the indemnity of a purchaser or mortgagee, or for some other special purpose. A covenant with a penalty is sometimes taken for the payment of a debt, instead of a bond with a condition, but the legal remedy is the same in either case.

Deed-poll, a single deed in the form of a manifesto or declaration to all the world of the grantor's act and intention. If there be no recital it usually speaks in the first person, but where recitals are introduced it speaks in the third person. See DEED.

Deemsters [fr. dema, Sax., a judge or umpire]. Judges in the Isle of Man and in Jersey, who, without process or any charge to the parties, decide all controversies in those islands; they are chosen from among the parties themselves.—Cam. Brit.; and 4 Inst. 284. See DEMPSTER.

Deer. As to the right of property in deer, see Davis v. Powell, (1739) 7 Mod. 249. Deer in a park do not belong to the class of things quæ usu consumuntur (Paine v. Warwick (Countess), 1914, 2 K. B. 486). The Larceny Act, 1861, contains many provisions as to killing and stealing deer, and otherwise for their protection (ss. 12–16); see Threlkeld v. Smith, 1901, 2 K. B. 531. See also Larceny Act, 1916, and as to compensation for damage by deer, see GAME.

Deer-fald, a park or fold for deer.

Deer-hayes, engines or great nets made of cord to catch deer.—19 Hen. 7, c. 11. Repealed.

Deer Hedge, the hedge enclosing a deer park.

Deer-leap, or Deer's-leap. The term apparently means two things: (1) generally, a strip running outside the paling of an ancient park, its breadth being the supposed distance a deer could leap; (2) a right enjoyed by the owner of a park which adjoins a forest or chase to maintain a high bank from which the deer out of the forest or chase could leap down into his park and be unable to get back again—in fact, a species of deer-trap. See Notes and Queries, Sec. Series, vol. iii., p. 195; Third Series, vol. xii., p. 186. Hence it is sometimes identified with freeboard, which see.

De essendo quietum de tolonio, a writ which lay for those who were by privilege free from the payment of toll, on their being molested therein.—Fitz. N. B. 226.

De expensis civium et burgensium, an obsolete writ addressed to the sheriff to levy the expenses of every citizen and burgess of parliament.—4 Inst. 46; 23 Hen. 6, c. 14.

De expensis militum, a similar writ to the last, to levy the expenses of the knights of the shire for attendance in parliament. Ibid.

De facto, in fact, opposed to de jure, of right.

The Act 11 Hen. 7, c. 1 (declared by some great writers to be only declaratory of the Common Law), was passed for the protection of all subjects who assist and obey a king de facto. It was pleaded to no purpose on the trial of Sir Harry Vane, the judges actually holding that Charles II. had been king de facto as well as de jure from the moment of his father's death (Hall. Const. Hist. ch. xi.).

Defamation, general term for words spoken (slander) or written (libel) to the prejudice of a person's character, in such wise as to support an action by such person against the speaker or writer. The ecclesiastical courts had formerly a concurrent jurisdiction in such an action, but such jurisdiction was abolished in 1855 by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 41. See LIBEL; SLANDER. Consult Odgers on Libel and Slander.

Default, omission of that which a man ought to do; neglect.

When a defendant neglects to take certain steps in an action, which are required by the rules of Court, the Court may thereupon give judgment against him by default. The defendant allows judgment by default either intentionally or through mistake or neglect; intentionally, where he has no merits, or where he does so according to a previous agreement with the plaintiff; through mistake, when he delivers a pleading so defective that it is treated as a nullity; and through neglect, when perhaps he has no merits, but omits to appear, plead, etc., within the time limited by the rules of the Court for that purpose. This is an implied confession of the action. See the titles JUDGMENT, APPEARANCE, and PLEADING.

Default Summonses, a procedure in the county courts for the summary recovery of a debt or liquidated demand. These summonses are of two kinds: (i.) Ordinary Default Summonses; and (ii.) Special Default Summonses. (i.) An Ordinary Default Summons is only applicable to liquidated demands between 2*l.* and 10*l.*, and is not available against a working-class defendant, except in the case of a trade debt, where the claim exceeds 5*l.* The plaintiff can sign judgment after eight days from service if the defendant has failed to give notice of defence stating the facts upon which he relies. (ii.) A Special Default Summons is only applicable to liquidated demands over 10*l.*, and cannot be issued against a working-class defendant, except for a trade debt incurred by him. The plaintiff can sign judgment as in (i.) unless the defendant has filed an affidavit of defence within eight days. A special default summons corresponds to the Order XIV. procedure of the High Court.

See County Court Rules, 1903–1935, Order VII., rr. 29*B* et seq.

Defaulter, one who makes default.

Defeasible [fr. défaire, Fr., to make void], that which may be annulled or abrogated.

Defeasance (defeasance) [fr. défaire, Fr., to undo], a collateral deed accompanying another, providing that upon the performance of certain matters an estate or interest created by such other deed shall be defeated and determined.

A defeasance should recite the deed to be defeated and its date, and must be made between the same parties as are interested in the recited deed or their representatives, and with the same formalities as the deed which created the estate to be defeated; it must be of a thing defeasible, and all the conditions must be strictly performed before the defeasance can be consummated.

So long as it was the law that a condition in a lease not to alien without license was determined by the first license granted (Dumpor's case, (1603) 1 Sm. L. C.), a defeasance was frequently adopted in order to revive the condition, and so virtually to limit the license to the particular assignment, but the Law of Property Amendment Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35), replaced by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 143, provides that where any license to do any act which without such license would create a forfeiture, or give a right to re-enter, under a condition in a lease, shall be given to any lessee or his assigns, every such license shall, unless otherwise expressed, extend only to the permission actually given, etc.

Defective. See IDIOT.

Defectum, challenge propter. See CHALLENGE.

Defectus sanguinis, failure of issue.

Defence [fr. defensio, Lat.], popularly a justification, protection, or guard; in law, a denial by the defendant of the truth or validity of the plaintiff's complaint.

In Civil matters, a defence (which is always in writing or printed) is either (1) by statement of defence, which may be a denial of the plaintiff's right, or may be an allegation of a set-off or counterclaim by the defendant which will cover wholly or in part the claim of the plaintiff; or (2) by a statement of defence raising a point of law, so as to show that the facts alleged by the plaintiff do not disclose any cause of action to which effect can be given by the Court; see R. S. C., Ord. XXV., substituted for the old 'demurrer.' See STATEMENT OF DEFENCE; DEMURRER.

In certain cases, e.g., where the plaintiff's claim is for a liquidated sum only, he may specially indorse his writ, and in such case leave must be obtained to defend (R. S. C. 1883, Ord. III., r. 6; Ord. XIV.).

In Criminal matters (which is always by word of mouth) when a person charged is arraigned before the Court, and asked by the Clerk, after stating the charge, 'How say you, are you guilty or not guilty?' he either confesses the charge by saying 'Guilty,' or words equivalent thereto, stands mute, does not answer directly, or pleads to the jurisdiction, or demurs, or pleads specially in bar, or generally, that he is not guilty.

The defence of one's self, and of such as stand in the relations of husband and wife, parent and child, master and servant, is a right which belongs to every person. If a man, or one standing in any of these relations to him, be forcibly attacked in his person or property, it is lawful for him to repel force by force: and the breach of the peace which happens is chargeable upon him only who began the affray. Self-defence, therefore, is justly called the primary law of nature, and it is not, neither can it be, in fact, taken away by the law of society. In the English law it is held an excuse for breaches of the peace, nay even for homicide itself; but care must be taken that the resistance does not exceed the bounds of mere defence and prevention; for then the defender would himself become an aggressor. —3 Bl. Com. 3.

Defence Acts. These Acts, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 94), 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 112), 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 89), and 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 72), allow compulsory purchases by government of land required for defence of the country, as for erection of fortifications, etc., and see next title.

Defence of the Realm Acts, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, cc. 29, 63), Acts passed to confer on His Majesty in Council power to make regulations during the war with Germany for the defence of the realm. The power was of a very extensive nature. They were consolidated and amended by the Defence of the Realm Consolidation Act, 1914 (5 Geo. 5, c. 8), the earlier Acts being repealed, and further amended by the Defence of the Realm (Amendment) Acts, 1915 (5 Geo. 5, cc. 34, 37), and (5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 42). These Acts ceased to be of effect on 31st August, 1921, the date fixed by Order in Council as the termination of the war. The Defence of the Realm (Acquisition of Land) Acts, 1916 and 1920, provided for the occupation of land taken by the Government in connection with the war for two years (extended to five) after the termination of the war. See A.-G. v. De Keyser's Royal Hotel, Ltd., 1920, A. C. 508.

Defend, to forbid or deny.

Defendant [Def. abbrev.], the person sued in an action, or indicted for a misdemeanour.

Defendimus (we will defend), a word used in grants and donations, which binds the donor and his heirs to defend the donee, if anyone go about to lay any incumbrance on the thing given other than what is contained in the deed of donation.—Bract, l. 2, c. xvi.

Defender, Scots term for defendant.

Defender of the Faith [fidei defensor, Lat.], a title of the Sovereign of England, as Catholic is of the King of Spain, and Most Christian was of the King of France. It is still stamped (F. D. or Fid. Def.) on British coins. These titles were originally given by the Pope; and that of Defensor Fidei was first conferred in 1521 by Leo. X. on Henry VIII. (but personally only), as a reward for writing against Martin Luther. In 1538 Pope Paul III., on King Henry's suppressing the monasteries, in the Bulla citatoria regis Angliæ 'delivered over Henry's soul to the devil, and his dominions to the first invader,' without, however, expressly withdrawing the title; but by 35 Hen. 8, c. 3, the title was expressly given by parliament, and has continued to be used by all succeeding Sovereigns of this country to this day, notwithstanding the repeal of 35 Hen. 8, c. 3, by 1 & 2 Ph. & M. c. 8, s. 4 (or 20), and the continuation of that repeal by 1 Eliz. c. 1, s. 4 (or 13). See Introduction to the 1901 Continuation of Chitty's Statutes, at p. xx.

Defendere se per corpus suum, to offer duel or combat as a legal trial and appeal. Abolished by 59 Geo. 3, s. 46. See BATTEL.

Defendere unicâ manu, to wage law; a denial of an accusation upon oath.

Defeneration [fr. de, of, and fœnero, Lat.], to lend upon usury, the act of lending money on usury.

Defensa, a park fenced in for deer.

Defensiva, a lord or earl of the marches, who were the wardens or defenders of their country.—Cowel.

Defensive allegation, the mode of propounding facts relied upon as a defence by a defendant in the spiritual courts. He is entitled to the plaintiff's answer upon oath, and may thence proceed to proofs as well as his antagonist.—3 Steph. Com.

Defenso. That part of any open field or place that was allotted for corn or hay, and upon which there was no common or feeding, was anciently said to be in defenso; so of any meadow ground that was laid in for hay only. The same term was applied to a wood where part was enclosed or fenced, to secure the growth of the underwood from the injury of cattle.—Dugd. Mon. tom. 3, p. 305.

Defensum, fenced ground.

Deferred Life Annuities, annuities for the life of the purchaser, but not commencing until a date subsequent to the date of buying them, so that if the purchaser die before that date the purchase money is lost.

Deferred Stock. Stock in a company is frequently divided into 'preferred,' the holders of which are entitled to a fixed dividend payable out of the net earnings of the whole stock, and 'deferred,' the holders of which are entitled to all the residue of the net earnings, after such fixed dividend has been paid to the holders of the 'preferred,' according to the classification in the memorandum or articles. See also Companies Act, 1929, s. 50, in regard to companies limited by shares or limited by guarantee. See as to railway companies the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 119), s. 13, which limits the power to create such stock to cases where a 3 per cent. dividend has been paid for one year, and puts a fixed maximum dividend on the 'preferred' at the rate of 6 per cent.

De fide et officio judicis non recipitur quæstio; sed de scientiâ, sive error sit juris aut facti. Bacon.—(A question cannot be admitted as to the good faith and honesty of a judge; but it may as to his knowledge, whether he be mistaken as to the law or the fact.) And see Broom's Leg. Max.

It is an ancient rule that a judge of record is not liable to an action for anything done by him in his judicial character, even for slander; see Scott v. Stansfield, (1868) L. R. 3 Ex. 220. And see JUDGE.

Definitive Sentence, the final judgment of a spiritual court, in opposition to provisional or interlocutory judgment.

Deforcement, the holding of lands or tenements to which another person has a right; so that this includes as well an abatement, an intrusion, or a disseisin, as any other species of wrong by which he that has a right to a freehold is kept out of possession. It is such a detainer of the freehold from him having the right of property, but not the possession under that right, as falls within none of the injuries of abatement, intrusion, disseisin, or discontinuance.—3 Steph. Com.

Deforceor, or Deforcior, he that overcomes and casts out by force.—Blount.

Deforciant, the person against whom the fictitious action of fine was brought. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74.

Deforciare, to withhold property from the right owner.

Deforlatio, a distress ; a holding of goods for satisfaction of a debt.—Paroch. Antiq. 239.

De frangentibus prisonam, Statute of, 1 Edw. 2, st. 2, which enacts that no person shall have judgment of life or member for breaking prison, unless committed for some capital offence.

Defraudation, privation by fraud.

Degradation, a deprivation of dignity ; dismissal from office. An ecclesiastical censure, whereby a clergyman is divested of his holy orders. There are two sorts by the canon law ; one, summary, by word only ; the other, solemn, by stripping the party degraded of those ornaments and rights which are the ensigns of his degree. Degradation is otherwise called deposition, but the canonists have distinguished between these two terms, deeming the former as the greater punishment of the two. There is likewise a degradation of a lord or knight at Common Law and also by Act of Parliament.—13 Car. 2, c. 16.

Degradations, a term for waste in the French law.

Degree [fr. degré, Fr. ; degradat, O. Fr. ; gradus, Lat.], a step ; the difference in relative importance of the same species, also to denote priorities in family relationships ; the state of a person, as to be a barrister-at-law, or to be a Bachelor or Master of Arts of a University ; in criminal law, an accused person is a principal in the first degree (i.e., the actual perpetrator of the crime) or in the second degree (i.e., one who merely aids and abets).

Dehors [Fr.], foreign to, outside, out of the point or document in question.

De idiotâ inquirendo, a Common Law writ to inquire whether a man be an idiot or not. Obsolete.—Fitz. N. B. 232 ; but see DE LUNATICO INQUIRENDO.

Del judicium, the old Saxon trial by ordeal, so called because it was thought to be an appeal to God for the justice of a cause, and it was believed that the decision was according to the will and pleasure of Divine Providence. See ORDEAL.

De incremento (of increase).

De injuriâ suâ propriâ absque tali causâ (of his own wrong, without any such cause as alleged), more compendiously called the traverse de injuriâ, a species of traverse by replication in pleading, now obsolete, which varied from the common form, and which, though confined to particular actions, and to a particular stage of the pleadings, was of frequent occurrence. It always tendered issue ; but, on the other hand, differed (like many of the general issues) from the common form of a traverse, by denying in general and summary terms, and not in the words of the allegation traversed.

This species of traverse occurred in the replication in actions of trespass, trespass on the case (including a species of assumpsit), and in the plea in bar in replevin, but was not used in any other stages of the pleadings.—See Steph. on Plead.

All the advantages of this replication were obtained in every case by joining issue, as provided by the C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 79, now replaced by R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XIX., r. 18.

Dels, or Dals. See DAGUS.

Dejuratio [fr. dejuro, Lat.], a taking of a solemn oath.

De jure [Lat.] (by right), opposed to de facto. The most striking instance of the recognition by our law of the distinction between things de jure and de facto is found in the statute-book, which entitles the first Act of Parliament passed in the reign of Charles the Second as of the twelfth year of his reign, the previous years having been spent by him in exile, and the affairs of the kingdom having been conducted by the Protector. See DE FACTO.

De jure judices de facto juratores respondent. (The judges answer to the law, the jury to the fact.) A fundamental rule of the Common Law, upon which the whole system of pleading was built. 'It is of the greatest consequence,' said Lord Hardwicke, 'to the law of England, and also to the subject, that the power of the judge and jury be kept distinct ; that the judge determine the law, and the jury the fact ; if ever they come to be confounded, it will prove the confusion and destruction of the law of England.' A judge sitting without a jury, as in the old Court of Chancery, decides all questions of fact as well as of law.

Delamere, Forest of. See 19 & 20 Vict. c. 13, and 18 & 19 Vict. c. 16.

De la plus belle, Dower, where a wife was endowed with the fairest part of her husband's estate. Being a consequence of the tenure by knight's service, it was virtually abolished by the statute 12 Car. 2, c. 24, which converted those tenures into socage.

Delator [Lat.], an accuser, an informer, a sycophant.

Delatura, an accusation, also the reward of an informer.

Del credere [a phrase borrowed from the Italians, equivalent to our word guaranty or warranty, or the Scots term warrandice], an agreement by which a factor, when he sells goods on credit for an additional commission (called a del credere commission), guarantees the solvency of the purchaser and his performance of the contract. Such a factor is called a del credere agent; as to his position, see Thomas Gabriel & Sons v. Churchill & Sim, 1914, 3 K. B. 1272. He is a mere surety, liable only to his principal in case the purchaser makes default; and the agreement need not be in writing, as it is not within s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds (Sutton & Co. v. Grey, 1894, 1 Q. B. 285).—Story on Agency; Smith's Merc. Law.

Delectus personæ (the choice of a person). It is an established principle of the Common Law that, as a partnership can commence only by the voluntary contract of the parties, so, when it is once formed, no third person can be afterwards introduced into the firm without the concurrence of all the partners who compose the original firm. It is not sufficient to constitute the new relation that one or more of the firm shall have assented to his introduction; for the dissent of a single partner will exclude him, since it would, in effect, otherwise amount to a right of one or more of the partners to change the nature, and terms, and obligations of the original contract, and to take away the delectus personæ, which is essential to the constitution of a partnership. So stubborn, indeed, is this rule, that even the executors and other personal representatives of a partner do not, in that capacity, succeed to the state and condition of that partner. The Roman Law is directed to the same purpose. It even pressed the rule to a still further extent, and held that a positive stipulation between the partners at the commencement of the partnership, that the heir or personal representative of a partner should succeed him in the partnership, was inoperative and incapable of being enforced. The Common Law, however, treats such a stipulation as valid and obligatory. This also, according to Pothier, was the doctrine of the old French Law; and the modern code of France has expressly adopted it, in opposition to the Roman Law. Such also is the law of Scotland.—Story on Partnership, 6.

Delegata potestas non potest delegari. 2 Inst. 597.—(A delegated power cannot be delegated.) See DELEGATUS, and DEPUTY.

Delegates, the High Court of, formerly the court of appeal from the Ecclesiastical and Admiralty Court. Abolished, upon the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council being constituted the court of appeal in such cases, in 1832, by 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 92.

Delegation, a sending away; a putting into commission; the assignment of a debt to another; the entrusting another with a power to act in the place of those who depute him.

Delegatus non potest delegare. (A delegate cannot delegate.)

The person to whom an office or a duty is delegated cannot lawfully devolve the duty upon another, unless he be expressly authorized so to do. See Huth v. Clarke, (1890) 25 Q. B. D. 391. It is a cardinal rule in the law of trusts that a trustee cannot delegate his office or discretions for the exercise of which he was appointed trustee as distinguished from acts and discretions done or exercised in an executive or ministerial capacity for him where delegation was justified or necessary, see Speight v. Gaunt, (1883) 9 A. C. 1; wide powers of delegation have been conferred on trustees by the Trustee Act, 1925, s. 23, and Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 29; Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 39, and see the Execution of Trusts (War Facilities) Acts, 1914 and 1915, and TRUSTEES.

Delictum, challenge propter. See CHALLENGE.

Deliverance, second, writ of. The judgment of non pros. in replevin at Common Law is, that the defendant shall have a return of the goods replevied, and his costs. The plaintiff, however, is not prevented by this judgment from proceeding, for he may sue out the judicial writ of second deliverance, in execution of which the sheriff must again take the goods from the defendant and deliver them to the plaintiff, or the writ will operate in the sheriff's hand as a supersedeas of the writ of retorno habendo, if the latter writ has not as yet been executed. The proceedings upon this writ are the same as in ordinary cases of replevin, and if the defendant have judgment either upon verdict, demurrer, or of non pros., it is for a return irreplevisable, and he shall have a writ of retorno habendo, which being executed, the plaintiff cannot have any further writ of deliverance.—2 Chit. Arch. Prac. See REPLEVIN.

Delivery of a Deed, a requisite to a good deed.

The delivery may be effected either by acts or by words, i.e., by doing something and saying nothing, as merely handing it to the grantee or his agent; or by saying something and doing nothing, as 'I deliver this writing as my act and deed,' or language of a similar import; or by doing and saying something. See Shep. Touch. p. 57.

Delivery is of two kinds :—

(a) Absolute, when the execution perfects the deed, and nothing is left to be done; or

(b) Conditional, which is the handing of the writing to some third person to be delivered by him as the act and deed of the grantor, when certain specified conditions shall be performed. Until the conditions are performed the instrument is called an escrow, scrowl, or writing. See ESCROW.

A deed takes effect only from delivery; for if the date be false or impossible, the delivery ascertains the time of it.—2 Bl. Com. 307.

Deeds take precedence according to the time of their delivery, but their effect may vary according to time of registration, notice to trustees or others. See DEED; LAND REGISTRATION; SETTLED LAND; NOTICE; LAND CHARGES.

Delivery of Possession. This is obtained in an action by writ of possession (see POSSESSION, WRIT OF), and in the case of small tenements by a justice's order (see DESERTED PREMISES).

Delivery Order, a writing directed to the bailee of goods mentioned in the order requesting him to deliver over the goods to the person named in the order. Such an order is a 'document of title' within the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 1 (4), and the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 62 (1). See Chitty's Statutes, tits. 'Factors' and 'Goods.' As to the effect on innocent parties of a delivery order which is fraudulent, see Union Credit Bank v. Mersey Docks, 1899, 2 Q. B. 205; Farquharson Bros. v. King, 1902, A. C. 325.

Delivery, Writ of. See EXECUTION.

De lunatico inquirendo, writ, a process formerly issued to inquire into the condition of a person's mind. Those judges (see Jud. Act, 1873, s. 17; Jud. Act, 1875, s. 7) to whom, by special authority from the sovereign, the custody of idiots and lunatics is entrusted may, upon petition or information, grant a commission in the nature of a writ de lunatico inquirendo (which is analogous to the obsolete de idiotâ inquirendo), to inquire into the party's state of mind. If the party be found non compos, the care of his person, with a suitable allowance for his maintenance, is usually committed to one of his relations or friends, then called his committee.

The proceedings are by way of petition to the Judge in Lunacy under s. 90 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, who either may direct an inquisition with or without a jury, or that an issue be tried before a judge of the High Court or refer the matter to the Master in Lunacy with a view to the appointment of a receiver. Applications for inquisitions are seldom made now, a simpler form of proceeding being available now under the Lunacy Acts, 1890–1922, and the Mental Treatment Act, 1930, and Rules thereunder (S. R. & O. 1930, No. 1083), but inquisitions are required when it becomes necessary to appoint a committee of the person or to prevent a marriage or exodus from the jurisdiction or in regard to procedure in places beyond the jurisdiction of the Court. For the practice, consult Mills and Poyser's Lunacy Practice. See UNSOUND MIND.

Delt, a quarry or mine.—31 Eliz. c. 7.

Dem. E.g., Doe dem. Smith, Doe, on the demise of Smith. See EJECTMENT.

Demand [fr. demandō, fr. mando, Lat., manudare, to hand-give; mander, Fr., to send for], a claim, a challenging, the asking of anything with authority, a calling upon a person for anything due. It is either in deed, written or verbal, as a demand for rent, or an application for payment of a debt; or in law, as an entry on land, distraining for rent, bringing an action. See DETINUE; LIMITATIONS.

Demandant, he who is actor or plaintiff in a real action, because he demands lands.—Co. Litt. 127.

Demandress, a female demandant.

Demease, death.

De medietate linguæ (of a moiety of tongue), Jury. At Common Law an alien was entitled to be tried by a jury of which one-half consisted of aliens, and the County Juries Act, 1825 (6 Geo. 4, c. 50), s. 47, enacted that, on the prayer of any alien indicted for felony or misdemeanour, the sheriff should return for one-half of the jury a competent number of aliens, if so many there were in the town or place where the trial was had; and if not, then so many aliens as should be found in the same town or place, if any. An alien is now triable in the same manner as if he were a natural-born British subject; see the British Nationality and Status of Aliens Act, 1914, s. 18, in substitution for the Naturalization Act, 1870. See ALIEN.

Demaine, Demain, or Demesne [fr. de-maine, Fr.], that part of the lands of a manor which the lord has not granted out in tenancy, but which is reserved for his own use and occupation.

De melioribus damnis, judgment. Where the jury, by mistake, severed the damages between several defendants in an action of trespass, the plaintiff might cure the defect by taking judgment de melioribus damnis against one, and entering a nolle prosequi as to the others.—1 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed.

Demesnial, pertaining to a demesne.

Demidletas, a half or moiety.

De minimis non curat lex. Cro. Eliz. 353.—(The law cares not about very trifling matters.) Therefore the courts will not, as a rule, take notice of the fraction of a day (see that title); or grant a new trial on the ground of a verdict being against evidence, if the damages were less than 20*l.*—See Broom's Max.

Demi-official, partly official or authorized.

Demise, a grant; it is applied to an estate either in fee or for term of life or years, but most commonly to the latter; it is used in writs for any estate.—2 Inst. 483.

The operative word 'demise' in a lease implies a covenant on the part of the lessor for the lessee's quiet enjoyment during the term (Hart v. Windsor, (1843) 12 M. & W. 85; Markham v. Paget, 1908, 1 Ch. 697); but an express covenant for quiet enjoyment excludes any implied one (Line v. Stephenson, (1838) 4 Bing. N. C. 678).

Of the Crown. The death of the sovereign, demissio regis vel coronæ, an expression which signifies merely a transfer of property; for when we say the demise of the Crown, we mean only that in consequence of the disunion of the sovereign's natural body from his body politic, the kingdom is transferred or demised to his successor, and so the royal dignity remains perpetual.—Plowd. 177. See Succession to the Crown Act, 1707 (6 Anne, c. 41) (c. 7 as commonly printed), s. 8, as to continuance for six months of Privy Counsellors, Lord Chancellor, and others; Demise of the Crown Act, 1837 (7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 31), as to continuance of military commissions; Representation of the People Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 102), s. 51, as to continuance of parliament on demise of the Crown; and lastly, the Demise of the Crown Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 5), by which 'the holding of any office under the Crown, whether within or without His Majesty's dominions, shall not be affected, nor shall any fresh appointment thereto be rendered necessary, by the demise of the Crown,' the Act taking effect 'as from the last demise of the Crown,' but containing no express repeals of prior Acts in pari materia impliedly repealed.

Demise and Redemise, mutual leases of the same land, or something out of it. It was properly used upon the grant of a rent-charge, etc.

Demi-vill, a town consisting of five freemen or frank-pledges.—Spelman.

Demonstrative Legacy. A legacy of quantity is ordinarily a general legacy; but there are legacies of quantity in the nature of specific legacies, as of so much money, with reference to a particular fund for payment. This kind of legacy is called by the civilians a demonstrative legacy, and it is so far general, and differs so much in effect from one properly specific, that if the fund be called in or fail, the legatee will not be deprived of his legacy, but be permitted to receive it out of the general assets; yet the legacy is so far specific that it will not be liable to abate with general legacies upon a deficiency of assets.—Consult Roper on Legacies; Theobald on Wills.

Dempster, the Chief Judge of a Tinwald Court in the Isle of Man. See Scott's Peveril of the Peak, ch. v. See DEEMSTERS.

In Scotland in former times the word Dempster or Doomster of Court was the designation of an official person whose duty it was to recite the sentence after it had been pronounced by the Court, and recorded by the clerk; on which occasion the Dempster legalized it by the words of form, 'And this I pronounce for doom.' For a length of years the office was held in commendam with that of the executioner; it has long been abolished. See Scott's Heart of Midlothian, ch. xxiii.

Demurrage, a term used in commercial navigation, signifying an allowance made to the owners of a ship by the freighter, for detaining her in port longer than the period agreed upon for her sailing. It is usually stipulated in charter-parties and bills of lading, that a certain number of days, called running or working or lay days, shall be allowed for receiving or discharging the cargo, and that the freighter may detain the vessel for a further specified time, or as long as he pleases, on payment of so much per diem for such overtime. When the contract of affreightment expressly stipulates that so many days shall be allowed for discharging or receiving the cargo, and so many more for overtime or demurrage days, such limitation is interpreted as an express stipulation on the part of the freighter that the vessel shall in no event be detained longer; if detained the charterer, is liable for damages for breach of contract for which the rate of demurrage is generally the measure. This holds even in cases where the delay is not occasioned by any fault on the freighter's part, but is inevitable. If, for example, a ship be detained, owing to the crowded state of the port for a longer time than is allowed by the contract, demurrage is due; and it is no defence to an action for demurrage that it arose from port regulations, or even from the unlawful acts of the custom-house officers. Demurrage is not, however, claimable for a delay occasioned by the hostile detention of the ship, or the hostile occupation of the intended port; nor is it claimable for any delay wilfully occasioned by the master, or owners, or crew of the vessel. The claim for demurrage ceases as soon as the ship is cleared out and ready for sailing, though she should be detained by adverse winds or tempestuous weather.

Demurrer [fr. demoror, Lat.; or demorren, Fr., to wait or stay], a pleading which admits the facts as stated in the pleading of the opponent, and referring the law arising thereon to the judgment of the Court, waits until by such judgment the Court decides whether he is bound to answer. 'The office of a demurrer is simply to state that the plaintiff has not made a sufficient case to entitle him to relief in equity.' Wood v. Midgley, (1854) 5 De G. M. & G. 44, per Turner, L.J.

In civil matters this mode of pleading is abolished by R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXV., r. 1, but subsequent rules of the same Order allow points of law raised on the pleading of any party to be disposed of before trial by order of the Court or a judge, and pleadings to be struck out if they disclose no reasonable cause of action.

In criminal prosecutions a demurrer may be resorted to, when the fact as alleged is allowed to be true, but the defendant takes exception in point of law to the sufficiency of the indictment or information on the face of it, as if he insist that the fact as stated is no felony, treason, or whatever the crime is alleged to be. It is seldom resorted to.

Demy-sanguie, half-blood.

Den, a valley.—Blount.

Den and Stroud, a liberty for ships or vessels to run or come ashore.—Pla. tem. Edw. 1. Cowel.

Dena terræ, a hollow place between two hills; a little portion of woody ground; a coppice.

Denariate, as much land as is worth one penny per annum.

Denaril, a general term for any sort of pecunia numerata, or ready money.—Paroch. Antiq. 320.

Denaril de caritate, customary oblations made to a cathedral church at Pentecost.

Denaril S. Petri (commonly called Peter's Pence), an annual payment on St. Peter's feast of a penny from every family to the pope, while the Roman Catholic religion was established. Abolished by 25 Hen. 8, c. 21.

Denarius, the chief silver coin among the Romans, worth 8d.; it was the seventh part of a Roman ounce; also an English penny. The denarius was first coined five years before the first Punic war, 269 B.C. In later times a copper coin was called denarius.—Smith's Dict. Antiq.

Denarius Dei, God's penny, or earnest given and received by parties to contracts, etc., paid in former times to the church or poor.

Denarius tertius comitatus, a third part or penny of the fines and other profits of the county court, which was paid to the earl of the county, the other two parts being reserved to the Crown.—Paroch. Antiq. 418.

Denbara or Denber [fr. den, Sax., a vale, and berg, a barrow or hog], a pen for hogs; a swine-court.

Denelage [Dane], the laws which the Danes enacted whilst they had the dominion in England.

Denial. See TRAVERSE.

Denization, the act of enfranchising or making free. See next title.

Denizen [fr. donaison, donison, O. Fr., a gift], an alien born who has obtained, ex donatione regis, letters-patent to make him (either permanently or for a time) an English subject. The granting of such letters-patent is a branch of the Royal Prerogative, and is subject to no restrictions whatever. The denizen might hold lands by purchase or devise, which an alien might not, but could not take by inheritance before the Naturalization Act, 1870; for his parent, through whom he must claim, being an alien, had no heritable blood and therefore could convey none to his son. No denizen can be of the Privy Council, or either House of Parliament, or have any office of trust civil or military.

By the British Nationality and Status of Aliens Act, 1914, s. 52, nothing in the Act contained affects the grant of letters of denization by His Majesty in the exercise of his prerogative. See further ALIEN and NATURALIZATION.

Denman's (Lord) Act (amending the law of evidence (6 & 7 Vict. c. 85 (the Evidence Act, 1843))) provides that no person offered as a witness shall be excluded by reason of incapacity from crime or interest from giving evidence.

Denman's (Mr.) Act, 28 & 29 Vict. c. 18 (the Criminal Procedure Act, 1865), allowing counsel to sum up the evidence where the prisoner is defended by counsel, proof to be given of contradictory statements of adverse witness, and of previous conviction of witness, and comparison to be made of disputed handwriting. The Act, which adapted to criminal trials parts of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, applies to civil proceedings in all courts, and the adapted parts of the Act of 1854 have been repealed in the course of Statute Law Revision.

De nocumento Amovendo. A writ for an order in abatement of nuisance issuable out of the Crown Office upon or after conviction of the defendant upon indictment. Hals. L. of E., title HIGHWAYS, ETC., referring to Short and Mellor, Pr. of the Crown Office, 2nd ed., p. 560.

De non apparentibus et non existentibus eadem est ratio. 5 Rep. 6.—(As to things not apparent, and those not existing, the rule is the same.) The maxim applies where a party seeks to rely on writings not produced in court, which have, on account of such non-production, to be treated as non-existent (Broom's Max.), unless they can be proved by secondary evidence.

De non residentia clerici regis, an ancient writ where a parson was employed in the royal service, etc., to excuse and discharge him of non-residence. 2 Inst. 264.

De novo (afresh; anew).

Denshiring of land (otherwise called burn-beating), a method of improving land by casting parings of earth, turf, and stubble into heaps, which when dried are burned into ashes for a compost.—Jac. Law Dict.

Dentist. The Medical Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 90), s. 48, enabled Her Majesty, by charter, to grant to the Royal College of Surgeons of England power to institute examinations, etc., for dentists, and the Dentists Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 33), provides for the registration of dentists. The Dentists Act, 1921 (11 & 12 Geo. 5, c. 21), provides that no person, unless registered under the Act of 1878, shall practise or hold himself out, whether directly or by implication, as practising or as being prepared to practise dentistry under a penalty not exceeding 100*l.* Certain persons are, however, allowed to make extractions where no registered person is available. The Act establishes a Dental Board, who may admit, in addition to those admissible under s. 6 of the principal Act, any person of good character over 23 years of age on 28th July, 1921, who (1) had for any five years since July, 1914, been practising dentistry in the United Kingdom, or, if a chemist, was in full practice immediately before 28th July, 1921; (2) if on 28th July, 1921, he had practised in the United Kingdom, passes a prescribed examination before 28th July, 1923; (3) was a member of the Incorporated Dental Society before 28th July, 1921; (4) if a dental mechanic for five years since July, 1914, passes a prescribed examination before 28th July, 1923. An amending Act (13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 36) requires the Dental Board to admit certain other persons who served during the late war in His Majesty's forces. The Acts of 1921 and 1923 will tend to insure that all those practising dentistry are trained and subject to professional discipline. See also Regulations of the Dental Board of the United Kingdom, S. R. & O. 1923, No. 1615 (as amended, further amended by S. R. & O. 1930, No. 577; 1933, No. 16; 1934, No. 18, 1412). See also the Medical and Dentists Acts Amendment Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 39), which gives effect to certain agreements between Great Britain, the Irish Free State and Northern Ireland as to registration and control of medical practitioners and dentists.

Denumeration, the act of present payment.—Scots term.

Deodand [fr. deo dandum, Lat.], a personal chattel which had been the immediate occasion of the death of any reasonable creature; it was forfeited to the Crown to be applied to pious uses and distributed in alms by the high almoner; but the right to deodands had been for the most part granted out to the lords of manors or other liberties to the perversion of the original design. The law made the following extraordinary distinction, that no deodand was due where an infant under the age of discretion was killed by a fall from a cart or horse or the like, not being in motion, whereas if an adult person fell thence and was killed, the thing was certainly forfeited. In all indictments for homicide, the instrument of death and the value were presented and found by the grand jury (as that the blow was given by a certain bludgeon, value 9d.), that the Crown or the grantee might claim the deodand; for it was no deodand unless it was presented as such by a jury of twelve men. Deodands were abolished by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 62. See Jac. Law Dict.; Williams on Rights of Common, pp. 3, 293.

De odio et atâ, an obsolete writ which commanded the sheriff to inquire whether a prisoner charged with murder was committed on general cause of suspicion, or merely propter odium et atiam, for hatred and ill-will, with a view, if the latter were found to be the case, of afterwards issuing another writ to admit him to bail.—1 Reeves, 252.

De onerando pro ratâ portionis, an ancient writ, where a person was distrained for rent which ought to be paid by others proportionably with him. Fitz. N. B. 234; New Nat. Br. 586.

Departure [fr. decessus, Lat.], in pleading, when a party deserts the ground that he took in his last antecedent pleading and resorts to another.

The rule against departure was necessary to prevent the retardation of the issue.

By R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XIX., r. 16, it is ordered that 'no pleading, not being a petition or summons, shall, except by way of amendment, raise any new ground of claim or contain any allegation of fact inconsistent with the previous pleadings of the party pleading the same.'

Depeculation, a robbing of the prince or commonwealth; an embezzling of the public treasure.

Dependant and Dependent. Under s. 4 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925:—

(1) The dependants of a workman entitled to claim compensation under this Act where the injury results in death are such of the members of the workman's family as were wholly or in part dependent upon the earnings of the workman at the time of his death, or would but for the incapacity due to the accident have been so dependent, and where the workman, being the parent or grandparent of an illegitimate child, leaves such a child so dependent upon his earnings, or, being an illegitimate child, leaves a parent or grandparent so dependent upon his earnings, shall include such an illegitimate child and parent or grandparent respectively.

(2) A person shall not be deemed to be a partial dependant of another person unless he was dependent partially on contributions from that other person for the provision of the ordinary necessities of life suitable for persons in his class and position.

(3) 'Member of a family' means wife or husband, father, mother, grandfather, grandmother, stepfather, stepmother, son, daughter, grandson, granddaughter, stepson, stepdaughter, brother, sister, half-brother, half-sister.

A posthumous illegitimate child can be a dependant (Orrell Colliery v. Schofield, 1909, A. C. 433). The illegitimate child of a daughter of the workman may be a dependant within the Act (Pritchard v. Bettisfield Colliery Ltd., 1925, 2 K. B. 284). A brother or sister under the age of fifteen may be a child dependent upon the workman's earnings within s. 8 of the Act (Faulkner v. Owners of Ship Sutton, 1927, 1 K. B. 207 and Sholls Iron Co. Ltd. v. Curran, 1929, A. C. 409).

Under s. 2, sub-s. (1) 'when a dependant dies before a claim under this Act is made, or if a claim has been made, before an agreement or award has been arrived at or made, the legal personal representative of the dependant shall have no right to the payment of compensation.'

If several members of a family who contribute to the maintenance of the household are killed, the family is partly dependent on the earnings of each (Hodgson v. West Stanley Colliery Co., 1910, A. C. 229).

Dependency. A region which is subject to British jurisdiction for all practical purposes although no formal annexation has taken place, e.g., Protectorates. Of these, Cyprus has been formally annexed by S. R. & O. 1914, No. 1629. Egypt was declared independent in February, 1922. See Foreign Jurisdiction Acts, 1890-1913, also Halsbury, L. of E., tit. 'Dependencies, etc.'

Deponent [fr. depono, Lat., to lay down], a person who makes an affidavit; a witness; one who gives his testimony in a court of justice. The person who made an affidavit used formerly to speak of himself throughout the affidavit as the deponent: 'this deponent saith,' etc.; but according to the modern practice all affidavits must be made in the first person. See title DEPOSITION.

Depopulatio agrorum, destroying and ravaging a country.—3 Inst. 204.

Deportation, transportation; exile into a remote part of the kingdom, with prohibition to change the place of residence. The Penal Servitude Acts, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 99), and 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 3), substituted terms of penal servitude for transportation sentences for less than fourteen years, and the latter Act abolished transportation entirely. See TRANSPORTATION. Exile, an abjuration, which is a deportation for ever into a foreign land, was anciently with us a civil death. Compare the power of making an expulsion order or deportation order under Order of the Secretary of State, under the Aliens Restriction Acts, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 12), and 1919 (9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 92). See ALIEN, and Re Goldfarb, (1936) 52 T. L. R. 254.

Depose, to lay down ; to lodge ; to degrade from a throne or high station ; to affirm in a deposition.

Deposit, money paid to a person as an earnest or security for the performance of some contract, especially a contract for the sale of real estate. Also a naked bailment of goods to be kept for the bailor without recompense, and to be returned when the bailor shall require it. The appellation and the definition are both derived from the civil law. Depositum est quod custodiendum alicui datum est. It is, in the civil law, divisible into two kinds : (1) necessary, made upon some sudden emergency, and from some pressing necessity ; as, for instance, in case of a fire, a shipwreck, or other overwhelming calamity, when property is confided to any person whom the depositor may meet without proper opportunity for reflection or choice, and thence it is called miserabile depositum ; (2) voluntary, which arises from the mere consent and agreement of the parties. The Common Law has made no such division. There is another class of deposits, called involuntary, which may be without the assent or even knowledge of the depositor ; as lumber, etc., left upon another's land by the subsidence of a flood.

The civilians again divide deposits into simple deposits, made by one or more persons having a common interest, and sequestrations, made by one or more persons, each of whom has a different and adverse interest in controversy touching it ; and these last are of two sorts, conventional, or such as are made by the mere agreement of the parties, without any judicial act ; and judicial, or such as are made by order of a court in the course of some proceeding.

There is another class of deposits called irregular, as when a person, having a sum of money which he does not think safe in his own hands, confides it to another, who is to return to him, not the same money, but a like sum when he shall demand it. There is also a quasi deposit, as where a person comes lawfully to the possession of another person's property by finding it ; and a special deposit of money or bills in a bank, where the specific money, the very silver or gold coin, or bills deposited, are to be restored and not an equivalent.—Story on Bailments, ch. ii.

A bank deposit is a mere debt.

In the case of contracts for the sale of land a deposit is regarded, not only as a part payment of the purchase money, but also as a guarantee that the contract shall be completed by the purchaser, and may be forfeited if he make default (Howe v. Smith, (1884) 27 Ch. D. 89 ; Hall v. Burnall, 1911, 2 Ch. 551). See Law of Property Act, 1925, ss. 45 and 49. By s. 49 (2), where the Court refuses to grant specific performance of a contract or in any action for the return of a deposit the Court may, if it thinks fit, order the repayment of any deposit, see also Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 5.

A deposit of title-deeds as a security for the repayment of a borrowed sum of money constitutes an equitable mortgage which does not require registration to establish its validity or priority of effect, see LAND CHARGES ; NOTICE ; RESCISSION ; SHAREHOLDER.

Deposit Account, an account of sums lodged with a bank and acknowledged to be so lodged by a 'deposit receipt' given by the banker to the depositor, not to be drawn upon by cheques, and usually not to be withdrawn except after a fixed notice, but bearing interest either at some fixed rate, or very often at 1 per cent. less than the Bank of England rate, and therefore at a rate varying from time to time. The depositor is only a creditor of the bank for the amount of deposit and interest (if any). See BANK.

As to the power of an incorporated building society to receive money on deposit, see Building Societies Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 42), s. 15 ; Building Societies Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 47), ss. 14 and 15.

Deposit of Wills of living persons at the Principal Probate Registry, Somerset House. See WILLS.

Depository, one with whom anything is lodged in trust, as 'depository' is the place where it is put. The obligation on the part of the depository is, that he keep the thing with reasonable care, and, upon request, restore it to the depositor, or otherwise deliver it, according to the original trust.

Deposition : (1) Depriving of a dignity, etc. (2) The act of giving public testimony, technically, the evidence put down in writing by way of answer to questions. It is an incontrovertible rule at Common Law, that when the witness himself can be produced, his deposition may not be read, for it is not the best evidence. But it may be read not only where it appears that the witness is actually dead, but in all cases where he is dead for all purposes of evidence : as where diligent search has been made for the witness and he cannot be found ; where he resides in a place beyond the jurisdiction of the Court ; or where he has become lunatic. See now, however, R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXXVII., rr. 1, 5 ; and EVIDENCE ; PERPETUATE TESTIMONY, BILLS TO.

As to deposition in criminal proceedings (in connection with which the term is most commonly used), see especially the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 42), s. 17, and the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 35), ss. 6, 7. Under the first of these Acts, the evidence upon which a prisoner is committed for trial by justices of the peace is taken down, and may be read at the trial upon it being proved that the witness is dead or unable to travel, and that the prisoner or his counsel or solicitor had a full opportunity of cross-examining the witness. Under the second, the testimony of any person dangerously ill may be taken down by a justice of the peace at any time before trial, and read at the trial upon it being proved that the witness is dead or that he will never be able to travel or give evidence, and that there was a like opportunity of cross-examination.

As to the taking of depositions and caution to and statement of accused on proceedings before examining justices ; and the reading of depositions at trial, see Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 86), ss. 12, 13.

As to the depositions of children and young persons, see Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 12), ss. 38, 42, 43.

The written copy of the evidence of a witness in an action in the High Court taken before an examiner or other person under R. S. C. Ord. XXXVII., r. 5, is also called a deposition.

De prerogativa regis, the statute 17 Edw. 2, st. 1, which enacts, in affirmance of the Common Law, that the King shall have ward of the lands of natural fools, taking the profits without waste or destruction, and shall find them necessaries ; and after the death of such idiots, he shall render the estate to the heirs. This was in order to prevent such idiots from aliening their lands, and their heirs from being disinherited.

The Act is not repealed by the consolidating Lunacy Act, 1890.

Deprivation, taking away from a clergy- man his patronage, vicarage, or other spiritual promotion or dignity, either, first, by sentence declaratory in the proper Court for fit and sufficient causes ; such as conviction of infamous crime ; for heresy, gross immorality, and the like, or for farming or trading contrary to law, after two former convictions for the same offence ; or, secondly, in pursuance of divers penal statutes, which declare the benefice void, for some nonfeasance or neglect, or else some malfeasance or crime, as for simony ; for neglecting to read the liturgy and articles in the church, and to declare assent to the same within two months after induction ; or for using any other form of prayer than the liturgy of the Church of England ; or for continued neglect, after order of the bishop, followed by sequestration, to reside on the benefice ; and see as to deprivation for immorality, etc., the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 32), s. 6 (1) (b), and Oxford (Bishop) v. Henly, 1909, P. 319.

Deputy [fr. depute, Fr.], one who governs and acts instead of another, or who exercises an office, etc., in another man's right.

By the Sheriffs Act, 1887 (see SHERIFF), every sheriff is directed to appoint a sufficient deputy having an office within a mile of the Inner Temple Hall, for the receipt of writs, etc.

Judges of the Supreme Court cannot act by deputy ; but County Court judges can under County Courts Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 53), ss. 11, 12, 15, in case of illness or unavoidable absence ; and the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), s. 166, enables recorders to appoint deputies in similar cases.

As to appointment of deputy to recorder, stipendiary magistrate, or clerk of the peace, in case of inability of recorder, etc., himself to appoint, see the Recorders, Stipendiary Magistrates, and Clerks of the Peace Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 46). A deputy cannot make a deputy.—9 Rep. 49.

Deputy Lieutenant, the deputy of a lord lieutenant of a county. Each lord lieutenant has several deputies.

Deputy Steward, a steward of a manor may deputy or authorize another to hold a court ; and the acts done in a court so holden will be as legal as if the court had been holden by the chief steward in person. So an under-steward or deputy may authorize another as sub-deputy, pro hac vice, to hold a court for him ; such limited authority not being inconsistent with the rule delegatus non potest delegare. By the Copyhold Act, 1894, s. 94, and the Law of Property Act, 1922, 'deputy steward' is included in the statutory meaning of 'steward.'

This deputy or under-steward may be appointed either in writing or by parol, although the appointment of the chief steward should not contain an express authority for that purpose.

De quibus sur disselsin, a writ of entry now abolished.

Der [fr. dar, Brit.], water.

Deraign, or Dereyn [fr. derationare, Lat. ; deraigner, or deranger, Fr.], to confound, to displace, also to prove.—Glanv. i. 2, c. 6.—Jac. Law Dict.

De rationabili bonorum parte, a writ, anciently given to the wife and children of a man, to recover their 'reasonable parts' of his goods, which he could not bequeath away from them. See REASONABLE PARTS.

Derelict, a vessel forsaken at sea. As to public notice of its whereabouts, see Merchant Shipping (Safety and Load Line Conventions) Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 9), s. 24.

Derelict Canals. See Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, s. 45.

Derelict Lands, those suddenly left by the sea, as when the sea shrinks back below the usual watermark. These belong to the king, but if the sea shrink back so slowly that the gain be by little and little, it shall go to the owner of the lands adjoining.—2 Bl. Com. 261 ; Coulson and Forbes on the Law of Waters.

Derivativa Potestas non potest esse major primitiva. Power derived cannot be greater than that from which it is derived.

Derivative Deed. A secondary deed of conveyance or settlement of property, which presupposes some other conveyance primary or precedent, and only serves to enlarge, confirm, alter, restrain, restore, or transfer the interest granted by such original conveyance. See COMPOUND SETTLEMENT.

Derivative Interests in Copyholds. See s. 142 and 12th Schedule to the L. P. Act, 1922.

Derivative Settlement, in Poor Law that settlement (see SETTLEMENT) which a poor person may acquire from his parent's settlement, if he has none of his own. The Poor Law Act, 1930 (20 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 85, enacts :—

(1) Until a person acquires a settlement of his own or derives a settlement from a husband, that person—

(a) if a legitimate child, shall take and follow, up to the age of sixteen, the settlement of his father, or if and so long as his father has no settlement, the settlement which his mother had immediately before her marriage to his father, but if after the death of the father the mother acquires a settlement (not being a derivative settlement) shall take and follow, up to the age of sixteen, that settlement ;

(b) if an illegitimate child, shall take and follow, up to the age of sixteen, the settlement of his mother ; and shall in either case retain that settlement which under the foregoing provisions of the section he had at the age of sixteen.

(2) Deals with the settlement of a married woman.

(3) If any person, whether legitimate or illegitimate, who has attained the age of sixteen, has not acquired a settlement nor derived one from a husband, and it cannot be shown what settlement has been derived from a parent without inquiring into the derivative settlement of that parent, that person shall be deemed to be settled in the county or county borough in which he was born.

See as to the previous law, 39 & 40 Vict. c. 61, and Reigate Union v. Croydon Union, (1889) 14 App. Cas. 465, and Lezden and Winstree Union v. Windsor Union, 1921, 2 K. B. 143.

Derogation, the act of weakening or restraining a former law or contract. It is an established rule that a man may not derogate from his own grant. See Wheeldon v. Burrows, (1879) 12 C. D. 31, and Pearce v. Maryon-Wilson, 1935, 1 Ch. 188 (Building Scheme), and EASEMENTS.

Derogatory clause, a clause in a legal document by which the right of subsequently altering or cancelling it is abrogated, and the validity of a later document, doing this, is made dependent on the correct repetition of the clause and its formal revocation. Obsolete.—Oxf. Dict. As to such a clause in a will, see Swinburne, Pt. VII., s. xiv. p. 977 ; Jarman on Wills, 6th ed. p. 28.

Descender, Writ of Formedon in, an abolished process.—Fitz. N. B. 21 ; 1 Steph. Com.

Descent, one of the two chief methods of acquiring an estate in lands before 1926. It is defined in the interpretation clause of the Inheritance Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 106), as 'the title to inherit lands by reason of consanguinity, as well where the heir shall be an ancestor or collateral relation as where he shall be a child or other issue.'—Consult Watkins on Descents ; Sugden's R. P. Stats., ch. iv. See INHERITANCE.

Descent Cast, the devolving of realty upon the heir on the death before 1926 of his ancestor intestate.

Deserted Premises. Landlords are enabled to recover possession of such premises by 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 16 ; 57 Geo. 3, c. 52 ; and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 84, s. 13. See Woodfall's Land and Ten. And see EJECTMENT.

Desertion, (1) the criminal offence of abandoning the naval or military service without license. See ss. 12 et seq. of the Army Act, 1881, replacing similar sections of the annual Mutiny Acts, and Reg. v. Cuming, (1887) 19 Q. B. D. 13.

Also (2) an abandonment of a wife, a matrimonial offence, for which the remedy is under Judicature Act, 1925, s. 185, by which a sentence of judicial separation may be obtained either by the husband or wife on the ground of desertion, without cause, for two years and upwards; and see Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), s. 21, as to orders for the protection of the property of wives deserted by their husbands; and the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 39), repealing and re-enacting the Married Women (Maintenance in Case of Desertion) Act, 1886, under which a deserted wife may obtain an order from justices of the peace that the husband pay her such weekly sum, not exceeding 2*l.*, as the justices consider to be in accordance with his means and hers.

Desertion for this purpose is regarded as a continuing act (Piper v. Piper, 1901, P. 198). As to whether the obtaining of an order under the Act of 1895 will prevent the two years' desertion without cause from running and so prevent the wife from obtaining a judicial separation under the Act of 1857, see Failes v. Failes, 1906, P. 326. Desertion for two years will revive condoned adultery (Houghton v. Houghton, 1903, P. 150).

Adultery by a husband after some years' separation by mutual consent is not evidence of desertion, and a wife without cause refusing marital intercourse cannot allege 'desertion' by the husband 'without reasonable excuse' if in consequence he refuses to live with her (Syngé v. Syngé, 1901, P. 317).

In Scotland, malicious desertion by one spouse of the other for four years is a ground of divorce. It must be shown that there was wilful non-adherence; that it has been persisted in for four years; that it was without reasonable cause; and that the deserted spouse was throughout the four years desirous of co-habitation, and ready to renew it.

Designs. The registration of and rights in designs are governed by the Patents and Designs Act, 1907, as amended by the Patents and Designs Acts, 1919, 1928 and 1932 (cited as the Patents and Designs Acts, 1907 to 1932), and the Patent Rules, 1932 S. R. & O. 1932, No. 873.

'Design' means only the features of shape, configuration, pattern or ornament applied to any article by any industrial process or means, whether manual, mechanical, or chemical, separate or combined, which in the finished article appeal to and are judged solely by the eye; but does not include any mode or principle of construction, or which is in substance a mere mechanical device (s. 19, Act of 1919).

And s. 49 of the principal Act, as amended, provides as follows:—

49.—(1) The comptroller may, on the application made in the prescribed form and manner of any person claiming to be the proprietor of any new or original design not previously published in the United Kingdom, register the design under this Part of this Act.

(2) The same design may be registered in more than one class, and, in case of doubt as to the class in which a design ought to be registered, the comptroller may decide the question.

(3) The comptroller may, if he thinks fit, refuse to register any design presented to him for registration, but any person aggrieved by any such refusal may appeal to the Appeal Tribunal, and the Appeal Tribunal shall, after hearing the applicant and the comptroller, if so required, make an order determining whether, and subject to what conditions, if any, registration is to be permitted.

(4) An application which, owing to any default or neglect on the part of the applicant, has not been completed so as to enable registration to be effected within the prescribed time shall be deemed to be abandoned.

(5) A design when registered shall be registered as of the date of the application for registration.

Registration gives a copyright in the design for 5 years (s. 53), and for the nature of the protection afforded, see Harper & Co. v. Wright & Co., 1896, 1 Ch. 140. The registration of a design can be cancelled if it is used for manufacture exclusively or mainly outside the United Kingdom (s. 58). As to protection in a foreign state, see s. 91.

Designatio personæ, the description of a person or a party to a deed or contract.

De similibus idem est iudicium. 7 Co. 18. —(In like cases the judgment is the same.)

De son tort, executor, a stranger who takes upon himself to act as executor. See EXECUTOR DE SON TORT.

Desperate Debt, a hopeless debt; an irrecoverable obligation.

Despitus, a contemptible person.

Desponsation, the act of betrothing persons to each other.

Despot [fr. δεσπότης, Gk., a governor, a ruler], an absolute prince: one who governs with unlimited authority. Despot was a title of quality given to the princes of Wallachia, Servia, and some of the neighbouring countries.

Despotism, absolute power.

Desrenable [Fr.], unreasonable.

Destructive Insects. In order to prevent the introduction and spread of any insect, fungus, or other pest destructive to agricultural or horticultural crops, the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries may, by virtue of the Destructive Insects and Pests Act, 1907, make orders and exercise powers similar to those given by the Destructive Insects Act, 1877. The Forestry Act, 1919, transfers these powers to the Forestry Commissioners in so far as they relate to timber and forest trees. See COLORADO BEETLE.

Desuetude, disuse. In Scotland an Act is said to fall into desuetude if, being of ancient date, it has for long been disregarded in practice. The Courts will not then give effect to it. The doctrine probably only applies to Acts of the Scots Parliament.

Detachlare, to seize or to take into custody another person's goods, etc., by attachment or other process of law.

Detainer, forcible. See FORCIBLE ENTRY.

Detainer, unlawful. The wrongful keeping of a person's goods, although the original taking may have been lawful. As if I distrain another's cattle, damage feasant, and before they are impounded he tenders me sufficient amends; now, though the original taking was lawful, my subsequent detention of them, after tender of amends, is not lawful, and he shall have an action of replevin against me to recover them, in which he shall recover damages for the detention, and not for the caption, because the original taking was lawful.—3 Steph. Com., and see DETINUE.

Detainer, writ of, one of the five forms of process prescribed by the 2 Wm. 4, c. 39, s. 1, for the commencement of a personal action against a person already in the prison of one of the courts. Superseded by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, ss. 1, 2.

A process lodged with the sheriff against a person in his custody was called a detainer; the officer, therefore, always searched the sheriff's office to see if there were any detainers lodged there against a person in his custody before he discharged him.

De tallagio non concedendo, or Statutu de Tallag', attributed in 2 Inst. 532 to the 34th year of Edward the First, by which as translated in the Revised Statutes:—

No tallage or aid shall be [taken] or laid, or levied by us or our heirs in our realm without the goodwill and assent of the archbishops, bishops, earls, barons, knights, burgesses and other [freemen of the land] or free commons of our realm.

Determinable Life Estates, estates for life, which may determine upon future contin- gencies before the life for which they are created expires. As if an estate be granted to a woman during her widowhood, or to a man until he is promoted to a benefice; in these and similar cases, whenever the contingency happens—when the widow marries, or when the grantee obtains the benefice—the respective estates are absolutely determined and gone. Yet, while they subsist, they are reckoned estates for life; because they may by possibility last for life, if the contingencies upon which they are to determine do not sooner happen.—2 Bl. Com. 121. See now ESTATE FOR LIFE, and Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 20 (1) (vi.).

Determinable Fee. A fee determinable by limitation or condition, S. L. Act, 1925, ss. 1 and 117 (1) (iv.), and see Challis R. P., 3rd ed. By the First Sched., L. P. Act, 1925, such fees, if not capable of taking effect as legal estates under Part I. of that Act, have been converted into equitable interests. Certain estates in fee simple which by statute are liable to be divested, and fee simple vested in corporations are legal estates, see s. 7 (1) and (2), L. P. Act, 1925, and see BASE FEE.

Detinet (he detains), an action of debt, which lay for the specific recovery of goods, under a contract to deliver them.—1 Reeves, 159. No longer a technical expression.

Detinue, an action by a plaintiff who seeks to recover the goods in specie, or on failure thereof the value, and also damages for the detention. The grounds of the action are: (1) a property in the plaintiff, either absolute or special (at the time of action brought) in personal goods, which are capable of being ascertained; (2) a possession in the defendant by bailment, finding, etc.; (3) an unjust detention on the part of the defendant.

The form of action of detinue was abolished by the Judicature Acts, but an action brought for the return of a specific chattel is still called an action of detinue. The vexed question as to whether detinue is or was founded on tort or contract is now only of importance in relation to costs (Bryant v. Herbert, (1878) 3 C. P. D. 389); and in bankruptcy.

As to the actual recovery of a chattel detained, see R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XLVIII., taken from C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 78, by which a writ of delivery may be issued ordering the sheriff to distrain upon the defendant's goods till he deliver the chattel; and as to specific delivery of goods sold, see Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 52, re-enacting the repealed s. 2 of the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856.

An action of detinue must be brought within six years (Limitation Act, 1623 (21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 3)), but time will only begin to run from the date of the demand (Miller v. Dell, 1891, 1 Q. B. 468).

Detinuit (he detained).

Detractari, to be torn in pieces by horses.

—Fleta l. 1, c. xxxvii.

Detunicari, to discover or lay open to the world.—Matt. Westm. 1240.

Deuterogamy [fr. δευτερος, Gk., second, and γάμος, marriage], a second marriage.

Devadiatus, or Divadiatus, an offender without sureties or pledges.—Cowel.

Devastavit (he has wasted), a devastation or waste of the property of the deceased person by an executor or administrator by extravagance or misapplication of the assets, for which he is liable. 'A devastavit or waste in an executor or administrator is when he doth misemploy the estate of the deceased, and misdeemean himself in the managing thereof, against the trust reposed in him': Shep. Touch. p. 485. An action founded on a devastavit will be barred after six years by the Statute of Limitations (Lacons v. Wormall, 1907, 2 K. B. 350; Re Blow, 1914, 1 Ch. 233), and s. 8 (3) of the Trustee Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 59).

Development Commissioners. Eight persons so named can be appointed by the king, who also nominates the chairman, under s. 3 of the Development and Road Improvement Funds Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 47), as amended by the Act of 1910 (10 Edw. 7 and 1 Geo. 5, c. 7); 10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 72; 13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 21. The Commissioners are appointed for the purposes of recommendation to the Treasury in regard to advances which the Treasury is empowered to make out of a fund to be called the Development Fund created and provided for by the Act of 1909, for any of the following purposes:—

- (a) Aiding and developing agricultural and rural industries by promoting scientific research, instruction and experiments in the science, methods and practice of agriculture (including the provision of farm institutes), the organization of co-operation, instruction in marketing produce, and the extension of the provision of small holdings; and by the adoption of any other means which appear calculated to develop agricultural and rural industries;
- (b) Forestry (including (1) the conducting of inquiries, experiments, and research for the purpose of promoting forestry and the teaching of methods of afforestation; (2) the purchase and planting of land found after inquiry to be suitable for afforestation);
- (c) The reclamation and drainage of land;
- (d) The general improvement of rural transport

(including the making of light railways, but not including the construction or improvement of roads);

(e) The construction and improvement of harbours;

(f) The construction and improvement of inland navigation;

(g) The development and improvement of fisheries;

and for any other purpose calculated to promote the economic development of the United Kingdom.

In regard to these purposes the powers of the Ministry of Agriculture relating to transport have been transferred to the Ministry of Transport by 9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 2, and relating to Forestry to the Forestry Commissioners by 9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 58.

Section 6 contains a definition of 'agricultural and rural industries,' and the Commissioners can acquire (s. 5) land compulsorily in accordance with the Schedule to the Act.

Devenerunt, an obsolete writ, heretofore directed to the escheator on the death of the heir of the king's tenant, under age and in custody, commanding the escheator that, by the oaths of good and lawful men, he inquire what lands and tenements, by the death of the tenant, came to the king.—Dyer, 860.

De ventre inspicendo, writ, an original process which issued out of Chancery on petition, for the security of the next heir (i.e., verus not hæres apparens), or on behalf of a tenant-in-tail, or hæres factus, as a devisee in fee, in tail, or for life, to guard them against supposititious births. Obsolete. Consult Hubback on Succn. p. 391. See JURY-WOMAN.

Devest, or Dlvest [fr. de and vestis, Lat.], to deprive, to take away; opposite to invest, which is to deliver possession of anything to another.

Deviation. (1) In the law of marine insurance, any departure without lawful excuse as defined by s. 49, ibid., from the due course of the voyage; it discharges the underwriters; see Marine Insurance Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 41), ss. 45 and 46. (2) In the law of railways, a departure from plan in the construction of the line (cf. Railways Clauses Act, 1845, ss. 11–15).

Devil on the Neck, an instrument of torture, formerly used to extort confessions, etc. It was made of several irons, which were fastened to the neck and legs and wrenched together so as to break the back.

Devil's Advocate. See ADVOCATUS DIABOLI.

Devisavit vel non, an issue sent from the Court of Chancery to a court of law, to try the validity of a paper asserted to be a will disposing of real estate, to ascertain whether or not the testator did devise or whether or not the paper was his will. Obsolete.

Devise [fr. deviser, Fr., to sort into parcels], a gift or disposition by will. The giver is called the devisor or testator, the person to whom it is given the devisee. This word is properly only applied to real property, but, in wills, it may, upon construction, transmit personal property as well as the word bequeath, the proper term—and vice versâ. See Hall v. Hall, 1892, 1 Ch. 361.

Devoire [Law Fr.], a duty; a tax of customs.—34 Edw. 3, c. 18.

Devonshiring. See DENSHIRING.

Dewan, Duam, place of assembly; native minister of the revenue department; and chief justice in civil causes, within his jurisdiction; receiver-general of a province. This term is also used to designate the principal revenue servant under a European collector and even of a Zemindar. By this title the East India Company were receivers-general of the revenues of Bengal under a grant from the Great Mogul.—Indian.

Dewanny Adawlut, a court for trying revenue and other civil cases.—Indian. The 'Sudder Dewanny Adawlut' (corrupted from Sadr-Divani-Adalat) is the Court of Final Decision for each Presidency in India, from which there is an appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in England.

Dewanny, Duannee, the office or jurisdiction of a Dewan.

Dextrarius, one at the right hand of another.

Dextras dare, to shake hands in token of friendship; or to give up oneself to the power of another person.—Walsingh. p. 332.

Diaconate, the office of a deacon.

Diagnosis (Med.), the discovery of the source of a patient's illness.

Dialectics, that branch of logic which teaches the rules and modes of reasoning.

Diallage [fr. διαλλαγή, Gk., interchange], a rhetorical figure in which arguments are placed in various points of view, and then turned to one point.

Dialogus de Scaccario. This has generally passed as the work of Gervase of Tilbury; but Mr. Madox thinks it was written by Richard Fitz-Nigel, Bishop of London, who succeeded his father in the office of treasurer, in the reign of Richard I., and was therefore qualified for such an undertaking. This book treats, in a way of dialogue, of the whole establishment of the Exchequer, as a court and an office of revenue; giving an exact and satisfactory account of the officers and their duties, with all matters concerning that Court, during its highest grandeur, in the reign of Henry II. This is done in a style somewhat superior to the Law-Latinity of those days.—1 Reeves, 220; and see Mad. Hist. of the Exchequer; Stubbs's Select Charters.

Dianatle, a logical reasoning in a progressive manner, proceeding from one subject to another.

Diarium, daily food, or as much as will suffice for the day.—Du Cange.

Dica [fr. δεκα, Gk., ten], a tally for accounts.

Dicest [fr. δικαστής, Gk.], an officer in ancient Greece answering nearly to a jurymen.

Dice. All games placed with dice, or 'with any other instrument, engine or device in the nature of dice,' except backgammon, are unlawful by the Gaming Act, 1739 (13 Geo. 2, c. 19), s. 9.

Dictores and Dictum. The one signifies an arbitrator, the other the arbitrament.—Jac. Law Dict.

Dictum. An observation as to the law made by a judge in the course of a case, but not necessary to its decision, and therefore of no binding effect; often called an obiter dictum, 'a remark by the way.' Formerly also the award of an arbitrator (dictor).

Dictum de Kenilworth. The declaration of the terms arranged between Edward I. and the supporters of Simon de Montfort (Oct., 1266). Although included in the Statutes of the Realm, it is not a statute.

Diem clausit extremum, a writ issued in the event of the death of a tenant in capite. By this writ the escheator of the county was commanded to inquire by a jury of what lands the tenant died seised, and of what value, and who was the next heir to him. It was one of the five writs issued by the Crown for taking inquisitions post mortem. See Hubback on Succn., ch. vii. p. 584.

Dies amoris (the day of love), the appearance day of the term, the fourth day or quarto die post. It was the day given by the favour and indulgence of the Court to the defendant for his appearance, when all parties appeared in court and had their appearance recorded by the proper officer.—Co. Litt. 135 a.

Dies cedit, the day begins; dies venit, the day has come. Two expressions in Roman law which signify the vesting or fixing of an interest, and the interest becoming a present one.—Sand. Just., 7th ed. 227, 235 ; and see Ulpian, D. L. 16, 213.

Dies datus, the day of respite given to a defendant ; another term for dies amoris.

Dies dominicus non est juridicus. Co. Litt. 135.—(Sunday is not a court day.) See SUNDAY.

Dies fasti, nefasti, et intercali (business days, holidays, and half-holidays).

For the purpose of the administration of justice all days were divided by the Romans into fasti and nefasti. Dies fasti were the days on which the prætor was allowed to administer justice in the public courts ; they derived their names from fari (fari tria verba, do, dico, addico, Ovid, Fast. i. 45, etc. ; Varro, De Ling. Lat. vi. 29, 30, edit. Müller ; Macrobius, Sat. i. 16). On some of the dies fasti comitia could be held, but not on all.—Cic., pro Sect. 15, with the note of Manutius.

Dies nefasti were days on which neither courts of justice nor comitia were allowed to be held, and which were dedicated to other purposes. According to the ancient legends, they were said to have been fixed by Numa Pompilius, Liv. i. 19. One part of a day might be fastus, while another was nefastus.—Ovid, Fast. i. 50.

Dies juridicus, a court-day.

Dies marchie, the day of meeting of English and Scotch, which was annually held on the marches or borders to adjust their differences and preserve peace.

Dies non juridicus, or Dies non, not a court-day.

Diet [fr. dies, Lat., an appointed day, Skinner ; or diet, an old German word, meaning a multitude, Junius]. I.—A deliberative assembly of princes or estates.

II.—Food. The statute of Nottingham, 10 Edw. 3, c. 3, relating to excess in diet (de cibariis utendis), was repealed by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 64.

Dieta, a day's journey ; a day's work.

Dieu et mon droit (God and my right), the motto of the royal arms, first assumed by Richard I.

Dieu et son acte (the visitation of God), words often used in our law. It is a maxim that the act of God, or inevitable accident, shall prejudice no man, actus Dei nemini facit injuriam. See ACT OF GOD.

Diffacere, to destroy.

Difforulare rectum (to take away or deny justice).

Digamia, or Digamy [fr. δύγαμος, Gk.], second marriage ; marriage to a second wife after the death of the first ; as bigamy in law is having two wives at once (q.v.).

Digest, generally a compilation or distribution of a subject into various classes or departments ; particularly the Pandects of Justinian in fifty books, containing the opinions and writings of eminent lawyers, digested in a systematical method. (See PANDECTS.) An ordered collection of legal principles, as Mr. Justice Stephen's Digest of the Criminal Law. Also an arrangement of the results (usually transcribed from the marginal or head notes of the reporters) of the decisions of the courts upon litigated points of law, as Fisher's Common Law Digest, Mew's Digest of English Case Law, the Law Reports Digest, the Law Journal Quinquennial Digest, English and Empire Digest, etc.

Dignitary [fr. dignus, Lat., worthy], a clergyman advanced to be a bishop, dean, archdeacon, prebendary, etc. But there are prebendaries without cure or jurisdiction, who are not dignitaries.—3 Inst. 155.

Dignities, a species of incorporeal hereditament, in which a man may have a property or estate. As an incorporeal hereditament, a dignity was held to be 'land' within the meaning of s. 37 of the Settled Land Act, 1882 (Re Rivett-Carnac, (1885) 30 Ch. D. 136). See now ss. 67 and 75 (5) of the Settled Land Act, 1925. Dignities were originally annexed to the possession of certain estates in land, and created by a grant of those estates ; or, at all events, that was the most usual course. And although they are become little more than personal distinctions, they are still classed under the head of real property ; and as having relation to land, in theory at least, may be entailed by the Crown, within the Statute de Donis ; or limited in remainder, to commence after the determination of a preceding estate-tail in the same dignity. See PEOPLE ; PRECEDENCE.

Dijudication, judicial distinction.

Dilapidation, decay ; a kind of ecclesiastical waste, either voluntary, by pulling down, or permissive, by suffering the chancel, parsonage house, and other buildings thereunto belonging to decay. See the Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Acts, 1871 and 1872 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 43, and 35 & 36 Vict. c. 96), Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Church and Clergy.'

The term is also used to signify that disrepair for which a tenant is usually liable to a landlord during and at the end of a tenancy under an express agreement to keep and yield up the demised premises in good repair; see Lister v. Lane, 1893, 2 Q. B. 212; Torrens v. Walker, 1906, 2 Ch. 166; Anstruther-Gough-Calthorpe v. McOscar, 1924, 1 K. B. 716 (C. A.), also FORFEITURE, and Landlord and Tenant Housing Act.

Dilatory Pleas, a class of defence founded on some matter of fact not connected with the merits of the case, but such as might exist without impeaching the right of action itself. They were either pleas to the jurisdiction, showing that, by reason of some matter therein stated, the case was not within the jurisdiction of the Court, or pleas in suspension, showing some matter of temporary incapacity to proceed with the suit; or pleas in abatement, showing some matter for abatement or quashing the declaration. These pleas must have been verified by affidavit or otherwise, and pleaded within four days from delivery of declaration.—4 Anne, c. 16. Pleas in Abatement are now abolished. See ABATEMENT.

Diligence, care, of which there are infinite shades, from the slightest momentary thought to the most vigilant anxiety; but the law recognizes only three degrees of diligence: (1) Common or ordinary, which men in general exert in respect of their own concerns; the standard is necessarily variable with respect to the facts, although it may be uniform with respect to the principle. (2) High or great, which is extraordinary diligence, or that which very prudent persons take of their own concerns. (3) Low or slight, which is that which persons of less than common prudence, or indeed of no prudence at all, take of their own concerns.

The Civil Law is in conformity with the Common Law. It lays down three degrees of diligence—ordinary (diligentia), extraordinary (exactissima diligentia), slight (levissima diligentia).—Story on Bailments, 19.

In Scots law, the term 'diligence' signifies execution. See NEGLIGENCE.

Diligatus [fr. de lege ejectus, Lat.], outlawed.

Dilligrout, pottage formerly made for the king's table on the coronation day. There was a tenure in serjeanty, by which lands were held of the king by the service of finding this pottage at that solemnity.—39 Hen. 3.

Dilmetæ, the ancient Latin name of the people who inhabited Carmarthenshire, Pembrokeshire, and Cardiganshire.

Dimidietas, the moiety or half of a thing.

Diminution, the act of making less, opposed to augmentation. In proceedings for the reversal of judgment, if the whole record be not certified, or not truly certified by the inferior Court, the party injured thereby, in both civil and criminal cases, may allege a diminution of the record and cause it to be rectified.

Dimissory, Letters. Where a candidate for Holy Orders has a title in one diocese, and is to be ordained in another, the former diocesan sends his letters dimissory directed to some other ordained bishop, giving leave that the bearer may be ordained, and have such a cure within his district. See Cripps's Law of the Church and Clergy, 6th ed. p. 12.

Dinarchy [fr. δῖς, Gk., and ἀρχή, dominion], a government of two persons.

Diocesan, belonging to a diocese; a bishop, as he stands related to his own clergy or flock.

Diocesan Courts, the consistorial courts of each diocese, exercising general jurisdiction of all matters arising locally within their respective limits, with the exception of places subject to peculiar jurisdiction; deciding all matters of spiritual discipline—suspending or depriving clergymen—and administering the other branches of the ecclesiastical law.—2 Steph. Com.

Diocese, or Diocesis [fr. diocese, Fr.; diocesi, Ital. and Span.; διοίκησις fr. διοικεω to govern, Gk.; diæcesis, Lat.], the circuit of every bishop's jurisdiction; it is divided into archdeaconries, each archdeaconry into rural deaneries, and rural deaneries into parishes.—Co. Litt. 94.

Diolechia, the district over which a bishop exercised his spiritual functions.

Diploma [fr. διπλόω, Gk., to fold double, consisting of two leaves], a royal charter or prince's letters-patent. An instrument given by colleges and societies, on commencement of any degrees. A license for a clergyman to exercise the ministerial function, or a physician, etc., to practise his art.

Diplomacy, the conducting of negotiations between nations by means of ambassadors, envoys, and the like, or by correspondence.

Diplomatic Privileges Act, 1708 (7 Anne, c. 12), by which ambassadors and other public ministers of foreign princes and their domestic servants are privileged from being sued in this country; see Magdalena Steam Nav. Co. v. Martin, (1859) 2 E. & E. 94; Musurus Bey v. Gadsan, 1894, 2 Q. B. 352.

Diplomatics (should not be confounded with diplomacy), the art of judging of ancient charters, public documents, or diplomas, etc., and discriminating true from false.

Direct, an epithet for the line of ascendants and descendants in genealogical succession, opposed to collateral. Collateral relationship is relationship through another branch, as cousins, etc.

Direct, of a judge, to give the rule of law to a jury. See Taylor on Evidence, ch. 3; R. S. C., Ord. XL.

Direct Evidence, opposed to circumstantial evidence. See that title.

Direction, the rule of law in a case given to a jury. See DIRECT.

Directions, Summons for, one general summons with respect to pleadings, discovery, and other matters previous to trial, first authorized by R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXX., for the purpose of saving the expense of many successive summonses, and of enabling the Court, through the particular master to whom each action is assigned, to obtain control over the action at an early stage. It is compulsory to take out this summons in all actions except Admiralty actions, or actions where the writ has been specially indorsed, or where the plaintiff proposes to proceed to trial without pleadings. See Annual Practice.

Director of Public Prosecutions. See PUBLIC PROSECUTOR.

Directors, persons appointed or elected according to law, authorized to manage and direct the affairs of a corporation or company. The whole of the directors collectively form the board of directors. Their powers, if the company be incorporated by Act of Parliament, are derived from its special Acts and ss. 90-100 of the Companies Clauses Act, 1845; if the company be incorporated under the Companies Act, 1929, see ss. 139 et seq., ibid. The company is bound by all acts of the directors within the scope of their authority. They may receive a salary, but may make no personal profit from the company (see, however, Re Dover Coalfield Ltd., 1908, 1 Ch. 65), nor can a pension be granted to a retiring managing director (Normandy v. Ind, Coope & Co., 1908, 1 Ch. 84); but they were under no personal liability except for fraud, as to the criminal liability for which see Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), ss. 81 et seq., and DECEIT. Public companies registered after October 31st, 1929, must have at least two directors. A private company, however, need not have any directors, and one company can be the sole director of another company (Re Bula-wayo Market Co., 1907, 2 Ch. 458). Directors are not trustees, but paid confidential agents, with very extensive powers, selected to manage the affairs of the company; they are, however, trustees of any property of the company that may have come into their hands, however honestly they may have acted, and can as such plead the limitation under the Trustee Act, 1888, s. 8 (Re Lands Allotment Co., 1894, 1 Ch. 616). As to their position generally, see Re Faure Electric Accumulator Co., (1889) 40 Ch. D. 141.

The (repealed) Directors Liability Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 64), now reproduced in an amended form by the Companies Act, 1929, s. 37 (see DECEIT), was passed in consequence of the decision of the House of Lords in Peck v. Derry, (1889) 14 App. Cas. 337, that directors making an untrue statement in a prospectus which they honestly, though without reasonable ground, believed to be true, were not liable to a shareholder taking shares on the faith of such prospectus, reversed the law as so laid down. There are, however, qualifications to meet the case of withdrawal of consent to become a director before the issue of the prospectus and that it was issued without his authority, knowledge, or consent, or otherwise by public notice that it was issued without his knowledge or consent and of the grounds for any withdrawal of consent, see s. 37 (1) (iii), and to meet the case of statements made on the authority of 'experts,' or official documents, see s. 37 (1) (iv.). By sub-s. (3) any director becoming liable to pay damages under the Act is entitled to contribution from his co-directors, unless the co-directors were innocent, and he was guilty of fraudulent misrepresentation, thus forming an exception to the old rule of Merryweather v. Nizan, (1799) 8 T. R. 196, that there was no right of contribution amongst tortfeasors (see now LAW REFORM). Section 372 of the Act of 1929 allows the Court in certain cases to relieve a director from liability for negligence or breach of trust. A director will not generally be personally liable on a promissory note or cheque which he has signed on behalf of the company (Chapman v. Smethurst, 1909, 1 K. B. 927).

The Companies Act, 1929, disqualifies (ss. 140 and 141) a person from being appointed director of a company or from being named in a prospectus or advertised as a director or proposed director unless he has signed and filed with the registrar a consent in writing to act and to take his qualification shares, if any, and other formalities, and obliges him to obtain the qualification shares, if any, within two months with penalties for contravention; for other offences see s. 60 (concealment of name of creditor, or nature or amount of any debt); s. 275 (carrying on the company's business to defraud creditors or for any fraudulent purpose); s. 93 (not publishing the company's name or not using the companies as provided by the section); s. 41 (irregular allotment under ss. 39 and 40).

Directory Statute. The term directory, when applied to a statute (or part of a statute) which enjoins or forbids the doing of certain acts, is used in two different senses:—

(I.) As opposed to declaratory, i.e., a statute which merely declares what the Common Law is.—1 Bl. Com. 54 and 86.

(II.) As opposed to imperative. When a statute directs that an act should be done in a specific manner, or authorizes it upon certain conditions, if a strict compliance with its provisions is not essential to the validity of the act, it is said to be directory, although the performance might be enforced by mandamus, but if such compliance is essential, it is said to be imperative. See per Lord Mansfield in R. v. Loxdale, (1758) 1 Burr. 445; Maxwell on Statutes.

Diriment Impediments, absolute bars to marriage, which would make it null ab initio.—See IMPEDIMENTS.

Disability, incapacity to do any legal act. It is divided into two classes: (1) absolute, which, while it continues, wholly disables the person; such were outlawry, excommunication, attainder (but see the Forfeiture Act, 1870 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 23), s. 1, abolishing attainder on conviction for treason or felony), and acts by statutory bodies or corporations in excess of their statutory powers, see ULTRA VIRES; (2) partial, as infancy, coverture, lunacy, and drunkenness. As to which, see the various titles relating thereto. The compulsory purchase, by railway and other companies, of the lands of persons under disability is regulated by the Lands Clauses Acts, and see ULTRA VIRES.

Disabling Statutes, Acts of Parliament restraining and regulating the exercise of a right or the power of alienation; the term is especially applied to 1 Eliz. c. 19, and similar Acts, restraining the power of ecclesiastical corporations to make leases.

Disadvocare, to deny a thing.

Disafforest, to throw open; to reduce from the privileges of a forest to the state of common ground.

Disagreement, the refusal by a grantee, lessee, etc., to accept an estate, lease, etc., made to him: the annulling of a thing that had essence before. No estate can be vested in a person against his will, consequently no one can become a grantee, etc., without his agreement: the law implies such an agreement until the contrary is shown, but his disagreement renders the grant, etc., inoperative: see Peacock v. Eastland, (1870) L. R. 10 Eq. 17. If an infant purchase an estate he may, on coming to full age, disagree thereto; and if he do not agree thereto, his heirs, after his death, may waive it. See Co. Litt. 2 b, 3 a, 380 b; 3 Preston's Abstracts, 104; Vin. Abr. 'Disagreement.'

Disalt, to disable a person.

Disappropriation. See APPROPRIATION.

Disbarring, expelling a barrister from the bar, a power vested in the benchers of each of the four Inns of Court, subject to an appeal to the judges. A barrister may be disbarred upon his own application, as for example, if he wants to become a solicitor.

Disbocatio, a turning wooded ground into arable or pasture.

Discareare, to unlade a ship.

Disceit. See DECEIT.

Discent. See DESCENT.

Discharge, to relieve of a duty. A sheriff is said to be discharged of his prisoner; a prisoner discharged from custody; a jury discharged from the cause. See next title.

Discharge, a rule nisi is discharged when the Court decides that it shall not be made absolute, i.e., that the party who obtained the rule nisi should take nothing, and the suit remain in statu quo. See RULE.

Discharge of a Jury takes place (1) either by the act of God, as the death of one of the jury; or (2) in due course on the termination of the trial by verdict (or sentence); or by the discretion of the judge determining that they are so exhausted as to be incapable of continuing their deliberations, or so divided as to be unable ever to agree, or that there is other sufficient cause. After such discharge there may be a further trial by another jury. See Winsor v. The Queen, (1866) L. R. 1 Q. B. 289, 390, in which the Exchequer Chamber held this upon writ of error in a trial for murder in which the jury had declared at five minutes before a Saturday midnight that they were unable to agree, and on a second trial another jury found the prisoner guilty and she was sentenced to death and afterwards hanged.

Discharge of Trustees. See TRUSTEE ACT, 1925, ss. 39, 40, and as to deeds of discharge of trustees for the purpose of the Settled Land Act, 1925, and endorsement upon of notices, etc., or annexing the same vesting instruments, see Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 35.

Discharge, Order of. See ORDER OF DISCHARGE.

Discharged Prisoners Aid Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 44), amended by 28 & 29 Vict. c. 126, s. 43.

Disclaimer, a renunciation, or a denial by a tenant of his landlord's title, either by refusing to pay rent, denying any obligation to pay, or by setting up a title in himself or a third person, and this is a distinct ground of forfeiture of the lease or other tenancy, whether of land or tithe. See Vivian v. Moat, (1878) 16 Ch. D. 730, in which Fry, J., held landlords entitled to eject tenants without notice to quit on a letter disputing the right of the landlords to raise the rent and asserting a right to hold on a quit-rent.

A devisee in fee may, by deed, without matter of record, disclaim the estate devised, and after such disclaimer has no interest in the estate. An heir-at-law could not disclaim.

An executor may, before probate, 'disclaim,' or as it is more properly called, 'renounce,' the executorship, and the executor of an executor may, before probate of the will of his own testator, disclaim to be the executor of the first testator; but he cannot so disclaim after he has proved the will of his own testator; for he thereby becomes his complete executor, and consequently the executor of the first testator.

A trustee who has not accepted may disclaim, but a conveyance by him of the trust estate to a co-trustee would amount to an acceptance of the trusts. An estate of freehold may be disclaimed as well by deed as by matter of record, and even by conduct (Re Birchall, (1889) 40 Ch. D. 436); but a deed is the best evidence of disclaimer.—1 Saunders' Uses, 426. The word 'disclaim' was introduced in the repealed 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 47, s. 77, to obviate a question whether a married woman might disclaim.

In Bankruptcy. A trustee in bankruptcy may disclaim onerous property under s. 54 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59), and Rules of Court thereunder, and see WINDING UP.

Patent, and Trade Mark. As to disclaimer of a patent, see the Patents and Designs Acts, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 29), 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 32); and as to disclaimer of a trade mark, see s. 15 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15).

Disclosure. Every solicitor whose name is on a writ must, on demand in writing by the defendant, declare whether the writ was issued with his privity. R. S. C. 1883, Ord. VII., r. 1.

When a writ is sued out by partners in the name of their firm, they or their solicitor may be compelled to disclose the names and residences of the various partners. (Ibid., r. 2; and see NAME.)

Discontinuance, an interruption or breaking off. This happened when he who had an estate-tail made a larger estate of the land than by law he was entitled to do; in which case the estate was good, so far as his power extended to make it, but no further.—Finch, L. 190; 1 Rep. 44. The learning relative to discontinuances has now become of no account, as far as future transactions are concerned, not merely in consequence of the abolition of fines, but by the effect of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27), which provides (s. 39) that no discontinuance shall thereafter avail to take away the right of entry.

Discontinuance by the plaintiff in an action in the High Court is governed by R. S. C., Ord. XXVI.; and in the county court by C. C. Rules, Ord. IX. In either court there must be notice in writing (of which there are prescribed forms, which, though not compulsory, it is desirable to use), which in the county court is to be given by post or otherwise to the registrar, and to every party as to whom the plaintiff desires to discontinue.

R. S. C., Ord. XXVI., gives the only mode of discontinuance (Fox v. Star, etc., Co., 1900, A. C. 19), and requires the leave of the Court or judge after an early stage. Rule 1 of the Order empowers the Court or a judge to allow discontinuance by a defendant.

Discount [fr. dis and compté, Fr.], abatement; commonly a sum of money deducted from a money obligation in consideration of its payment before the stipulated time.

Discovert, a widow; a woman unmarried; one not within the bonds of matrimony.

Discovery, revealing or disclosing matter. The Courts of Common Law were originally unable to compel a litigant to disclose any fact resting merely within his knowledge, or discover any document in his power, which would aid in the enforcement of a right, the repelling of an unjust demand, or the redress of a wrong; an infirmity which the equity judges cured by compelling such a party to disclose the fact, or discover the document, upon his oath, in his answer to a bill of complaint, filed by the opposite party, called a bill of discovery, which was an original bill.

Sir James Wigram, V.-C., in his work, entitled Points in the Law of Discovery, epitomized the two cardinal principles on this subject in the two following propositions:

(1) It is the right, as a general rule, of a plaintiff in equity to exact from the defendant a discovery upon oath as to all matters of fact, which, being well pleaded in the bill, are material to the plaintiff's case about to come on for trial, and which the defendant does not by his pleading admit.

(2) The right of a plaintiff in equity to the benefit of the defendant's oath is limited to a discovery of such material facts as relate to the 'plaintiff's case,' and does not extend to a discovery of the manner in which the 'defendant's case' is to be exclusively established, or to evidence which relates exclusively to his case.

As to the grounds on which discovery might be obtained by bill in Equity, see further Dan. Ch. Pr., 5th ed. 1408.

The Common Law Courts obtained a power of discovery by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 6, and C. L. P. Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 125), s. 50.

By R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXXI., it is provided that any party may, without filing any affidavit, apply to a judge for an order directing any other party to the action to make discovery on oath of the documents which are or have been in his possession or power, relating to any matter in question in the action (r. 12), but the judge will not order discovery if he is of opinion it is not necessary either for disposing fairly of the cause or matter or for saving costs. In commercial causes (see COMMERCIAL COURT) it is the usual practice for the solicitors on each side to exchange lists of documents, and for an affidavit to be dispensed with. The second branch of discovery is by interrogatories (q.v.), that is, a party to an action is asked by leave of the Court certain questions of fact relevant to the issue and within his knowledge, and is required to answer them by affidavit (rr. 1-11).

As a general rule discovery cannot be obtained in an action to recover penalties (Martin v. Treacher, (1886) 16 Q. B. D. 507; Saunders v. Weil, 1892, 2 Q. B. 321; and compare Derby Corporation v. Derbyshire County Council, 1897, A. C. 550); nor by a landlord in an action to enforce a forfeiture (Mezborough v. Whitwood Urban District Council, 1897, 2 Q. B. 111). A party can object to make discovery of any document which may tend to incriminate him; see National Assn. of Operative Plasterers v. Smithies, 1906, A. C. 434. Communications between solicitor and client are privileged, but not communications to others (Jones v. G. C. Ry., 1910, A. C. 4). See further the titles INTERROGATORIES and INSPECTION; and consult Bray or Ross on Discovery: Ann. Prac.

Discredit, to show to be unworthy of credit. See CROSS-EXAMINATION and HOSTILE WITNESS.

Discretion. See JUDICIAL DISCRETION.

Discussion. By the Roman Law sureties were not primarily liable to pay the debt for which they became bound as sureties: but were liable only after the creditor had sought payment from the principal debtor, and he had failed to pay. This was called the benefit or right of discussion. Under those systems of jurisprudence which adopt the Roman Law, and under the present law of France, the rule is similar; and the obligation contracted by the surety with the creditor is, that the latter shall not proceed against him until he has first discussed the principal debtor, if he is solvent. This right the surety enjoys, as the beneficium ordinis vel excussionis. And again, if other persons are joined with him in the obligation as sureties, he is not in the first instance to be proceeded against for the whole debt, but only for his share of it, if his co-sureties and co-obligees are solvent. This is commonly known as the benefit of division, or beneficium divisionis. Story's Conf. of Laws, 456.

Diseases Prevention. See INFECTIOUS DISEASES.

Disentailing Deed. Under the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74), a tenant-in-tail can bar his estate tail by disposing of the land for an estate in fee simple or any less estate, and thus defeat the rights of persons claiming under and after him (with certain exceptions) by executing a disentailing deed and (before 1926) enrolling the same within six months in the High Court of Justice (s. 41, and R. S. C., Ord. LXI., r. 9). If there is a protector (q.v.) under the instrument creating the entail, his consent must be obtained, otherwise an equitable interest corresponding to a base fee only will be created. The deed usually consisted of a conveyance to a stranger to such uses as the tenant-in-tail shall appoint, or in default of appointment to the use of him and his heirs. By the L. P. Act, 1925, s. 1, all estates tail were converted into equitable interests, and by the 9th Schedule to the L. P. Act, 1924, the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833, as amended, remains in force in regard to dealings with entailed interests as equitable interests. By the L. P. Act, 1925, s. 133, the necessity for enrolment in the case of disentailing deeds executed after 1925 is abolished. The conveyance barring the entail may be made by a simple conveyance either upon trust for or absolutely to the grantor.

Disforest. See DISAFFOREST.

Disfranchisement, the act of depriving of a franchise, immunity, or privilege; the depriving a constituency of a right to return a member to Parliament, or a person of a right to vote at a Parliamentary or Municipal Election.

Disgavel, to exempt from the rules of the tenure of gavelkind (q.v.).

Disgrading, the act of degrading.

Disherison, the act of debarring from inheritance.

Disheiritor, one who puts another out of his inheritance.

Dishonour, to refuse or neglect to accept or pay when duly presented for payment a bill of exchange or promissory note or draft on a banker. See Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), s. 47.

Disincarcerate, to set at liberty, to free from prison.

Disinherison. See DISHERISON.

Disme [fr. decima, Lat., a tenth, the tenth part], tithes due to the clergy, the tenth of all spiritual livings.—2 & 3 Edw. 3, c. 35.

Dismissal of Action. This may take place upon default in delivery of statement of claim, failure to give notice of trial, failure within 14 days to take out a summons for directions, etc.—R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXVII., r. 1; XXXVI., r. 12; XXX., r. 8.

Dismortgage, to redeem from mortgage.

Disorderly Houses. Houses where persons congregate to the probable disturbance of the peace or other commission of crime. See Disorderly Houses Act, 1751 (25 Geo. 2, c. 36), by which prosecutions by indictment of persons keeping 'bawdy houses, gaming houses, and other disorderly houses' for the Common Law misdemeanour of keeping such houses are encouraged, and see also s. 13 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69), as amended by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1912, s. 3, and the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1922, s. 3, by which the keeping of bawdy houses is punishable on summary conviction; see Sivour v. Neapolitane, 1931, 1 K. B. 636; (lessee who sub-let not included); and Winter v. Woolfe, 1931, 1 K. B. 636 (premises kept for allowing illicit intercourse). See BROTHEL; GAMING.

Dispacheurs, persons appointed to settle cases of average.—Goirand's Fr. Com. Law.

Disparagement, the matching an heir in marriage under his degree or against decency.—Co. Litt. 107.

Dispark, to throw open a park.

Dispatch, or Despatch [fr. despescher, Fr., to send away quickly, to discharge], a message, letter, or order sent with speed on affairs of state.

Dispauper, when a person by reason of his poverty is admitted to sue in formâ pauperis, and afterwards, before the suit be ended, acquires any lands or personal estate, or is guilty of anything whereby he is liable to have this privilege taken from him, then he loses the right to sue in formâ pauperis (see that title), and is said to be dispaupered. See R. S. C., Ord. XVI., r. 29.

Dispensation, an exemption from some laws, a permission to do something forbidden, an allowance to omit something commanded, the canonistic name for a license. See also BILL OF RIGHTS.

Dispersonare, to scandalize or disparage.—Blount.

Dispone, to transfer or alienate.—Scots Law.

Dispunishable, without penal restraint; also, without impeachment for waste. See WASTE.

Dirationare, or Dirationare, to justify; to clear one's self of a fault; to traverse an indictment, to disprove.—Encyc. Londin.

Dissection, the anatomical examination of a dead body. It is regulated by the Anatomy Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 75), 'An Act for regulating Schools of Anatomy', as slightly amended by 34 & 35 Vict. c. 16. The seventh section of the first-mentioned Act allows an executor to permit dissection unless the deceased shall have expressed a desire to the contrary, or the husband or wife of the deceased or any known relative shall have required interment without dissection, and the eighth enjoins dissection if the deceased shall have directed it, and neither husband nor wife nor nearest known relative shall have objected; while the sixteenth repeals so much of 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, as authorized the dissection, after execution, of the body of a person convicted of murder.

Disseise, to dispossess, to deprive.

Disseisin [fr. dissaisin, Fr.], a wrongful putting out of him that is seised of the freehold, not, as in abatement or intrusion, a wrongful entry, where the possession was vacant; but an attack upon him who is in actual possession, and turning him out; it is an ouster from a freehold in deed, as abatement and intrusion are ousters in law.—3 Steph. Com. A title by disseisin is a good title against all but the rightful owner. Consult Williams on Seisin.

Disseisinam satis facit, qui uti non permittit possessorem, vel minus commode, licet omnino non expellat. Co. Litt. 331.—(He makes disseisin enough who does not permit the possessor to enjoy, or makes his enjoyment less beneficial, although he does not expel him altogether.)

Disseisor, a person who unlawfully puts another out of his land.

Disseisoreess, a woman who unlawfully puts another out of his land.

Disseissee, a person turned out of possession.

Dissenters, Protestant seceders from the Established Church. They are of many denominations, principally Presbyterians, Independents or Congregationalists, Methodists, and Baptists; but as to Church government the Baptists are Independents.

The penal laws, for the enforcement of legal uniformity, have been abrogated. The Toleration Act, 1 W. & M. st. 1, c. 18, extended to Unitarians by 53 Geo. 3, c. 160, first allowed dissenters to assemble for religious worship according to their own forms in places of meeting duly certified; as to such places, see now 18 & 19 Vict. c. 81, and 19 & 20 Vict. c. 119, ss. 17, 27. The Dissenters Chapels Act, 1844 (see that title), provided for meeting-houses; and the Trustees Appointment Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 28), commonly called Peto's Act, amended by the Trustees Appointment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 19), provides for facilities in regard to the appointment of trustees and the title to lands purchased for religious or educational purposes. The Places of Worship Registration Act, 1855, (18 & 19 Vict. c. 81), provides for the certifying and registering of dissenters' places of worship. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Religious Worship.'

The Universities Tests Act, 1871 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 26), has abolished the University Tests, and dissenters are enabled to take any degree (other than a divinity degree) in any of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, or Durham.

Dissenters Chapels Act (7 & 8 Vict. c. 45), (statutory title, 'The Nonconformist Chapels Act, 1844'), an Act passed in 1844 for the relief of Unitarians, though it applies to Nonconformists of every description. Its effect is to exclude, by a special law of limitation made for that express purpose, all inquiry into the conformity or otherwise of the doctrines taught or ritual practised in any chapel or meeting-house of any Nonconformist body, or the intentions of the founders by whom the building or its accessories or endowments were given, when such doctrines have been taught there, or such ritual practised, for the last twenty-five years; unless they are, in express terms, prohibited or excluded by some written instrument governing the foundation. The Act was passed in consequence of the decision in what is commonly known as 'Lady Hewley's Case,' Shore v. Wilson, (1842) 9 Cl. & F. 355, in which it was held by the House of Lords that Unitarian congregations, in spite of long and undisturbed possession, were not entitled to retain chapels and meeting-houses originally founded under Trinitarian Nonconformist trust deeds dated prior to 1813, when the benefit of the Toleration Act was first extended to Unitarians by the Act (53 Geo. 3, c. 160); see Lord Selborne's Defence of the Church of England against Disestablishment, 5th ed. p. 218.

Dissignare, to break open a seal.

Dissolution, the act of breaking up. A partnership may be dissolved either by a proper notice, or effluxion of time as agreed upon in the articles of partnership, or by death, marriage, lunacy, bankruptcy, or by judgment of the High Court.—Partnership Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 39), ss. 32-34.

A dissolution is the civil death of the parliament, and is effected in two ways:—(1) By the sovereign's will, expressed either in person or by representation. (2) By length of time, i.e., five (formerly seven) years. See PARLIAMENT ACT, 1911; SEPTENNIAL ACT. By the Representation of the People Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 102), s. 51, parliament is not determined or dissolved by the demise of the Crown.

When a company has been completely wound up by the Court, the Court must make an order that the company is dissolved from the date of the Order (Companies Act, 1929, s. 221): as to dissolution on a voluntary winding up see ss. 236 and 245 ibid. Under the same sections the Court may defer and, under s. 294, avoid a dissolution within two years from its date, and see BONA VACANTIA.

Dissolution of Marriage. See DIVORCE.

Dissolve, to put an end to, cancel, abrogate, annul; applied to an injunction in Chancery; as discharge is to a rule nisi in Common Law. Dissolve is the Latin for both verbs.

Distance. For any statute passed after 1st January, 1890, distance is to be measured in a straight line on a horizontal plane.—Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 34.

Distinguish, to point out an essential difference; to show that a case, cited as applicable, is inapplicable.

Distrain, to make seizure to goods or chattels by way of distress. See DISTRESS.

Distraîner, or Distraîner, he who seizes a distress.

Distraint, seizure.

Distress [fr. distingo, Lat., to bind fast; districtio, Med. Lat., whence distraindre, Fr.], a taking, without legal process, of a personal chattel from the possession of a wrong-doer into the hands of a party grieved, as a pledge for the redressing an injury, the performance of a duty, or the satisfaction of a demand.

This remedy may be resorted to by a landlord for recovery of rent in arrear, by a rate collector or tax collector for recovery of rates or taxes, and by justices of the peace for the recovery of fines due on summary convictions.

A distress may be made of common right for the rent payable by a tenant to a landlord, technically termed 'rent-service,' and by particular reservation, or under s. 121 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, for rent-charges, and also for rents-seck since the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1730 (4 Geo. 2, c. 28), s. 5, which extended the same remedy to rents-seck, rents of assize, and chief-rents, and thereby in effect abolished all material distinction between them.

Distress may also be made at Common Law on cattle damage feasant, and by statute for rates and taxes, and for tithe annuities which have been substituted for tithe rent-charge (q.v.) (Tithe Act, 1936, s. 16).

If a tenant, after his rent is in arrear, fraudulently or clandestinely remove his own chattels off the premises, and does not leave thereon sufficient to meet the arrears (Tomlinson v. Consolidated Credit Corporation, (1889) 24 Q. B. D. 135), the landlord may within thirty days take and seize such goods wherever found (11 Geo. 2, c. 19, ss. 1-3, 7).

All chattels and personal effects found upon the premises may be distrained by a landlord, with the following exceptions:—

(1) Fixtures (see Provincial Bill-posting Co. v. Low Moor Iron Co., 1909, 2 K. B. 344); (2) Animals feræ naturæ; (3) Goods delivered to a person in the way of his trade, as a watch sent to a watchmaker to be repaired; (4) Things in the custody of the law; (5) An ambassador's goods, by the Diplomatic Privileges Act, 1708 (7 Anne, c. 12), s. 3; (6) The goods of an under-tenant, lodger, or other person not having any beneficial interest in the tenancy, by the Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 53), if a declaration is made as required by the Act that the immediate tenant, in respect of whose rent the distress is made, has no property or interest in the goods; (7) Woollen, cotton, or silk looms, by 6 & 7 Vict. c. 40; (8) Gas-meters, being the property of a gas company incorporated by statute, by 10 Vict. c. 15, s. 14; (9) Railway rolling stock in works not belonging to any tenant thereof, by the Railway Rolling Stock Protection Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 50); (10) Wearing apparel and bedding of the tenant or his family and the tools and implements of his trade to the value of 5*l.*, by the Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 21), s. 4, unless the interest of the tenant has expired and possession has been demanded and distress is made not earlier than seven days after demand of possession: see Boyd v. Bilham, 1909, 1 K. B. 14. All the above are absolutely privileged, as also things in actual use.

(11) Beasts of the plough and sheep, by 51 Hen. 3, st. 4; and (12) Tools of trade above 5*l.* in value, both of which are privileged 'sub modo' or conditionally, that is, only if there be other sufficient distress on the premises.

Also, on agricultural holdings; (13) Hired machinery and breeding stock absolutely; and (14) Agisted stock, conditionally.

A distress cannot be made in the night, i.e., after sunset and before sunrise (except in the case of cattle damage feasant), nor on the day of rent becoming due; but must be made within six years from its becoming due. The Landlord and Tenant Act, 1709, (8 Anne, c. 18) (commonly numbered 14), ss. 6, 7, gives a landlord power to distrain within six months after determination of the lease, but it must be made during the continuance of the landlord's title or interest, and also during the possession of the tenant. By the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, s. 1, distresses for the recovery of any rent may be made at any time within twelve years next after the time at which the right to make them shall have first accrued ; but (by s. 42 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27)) no arrears of rent can be recovered by distress but within six years next after the same shall have become due, etc. A distress must be made upon the land whence the rent issues, and the whole of what is due should be distrained for at one time. The outer door of the house can in no case be broken open ; but if the outer door be open the person distraining may justify breaking open an inner door or lock to find any goods distrainable.

The landlord's powers are chiefly regulated by the Act of William and Mary, 2 W. & M. s. 1, c. 5 (under which the power to sell was first obtained, the goods being at Common Law taken by way of pledge only), as amended by the Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 21), which made applicable to all tenancies some of the provisions applied to agricultural tenancies only by the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883.

The Act of William and Mary allows the sale only after written notice of the distress, and gives double damages against any person distraining and selling if no rent is due.

The same Act also requires appraisalment before sale in all cases, but the Act of 1888 dispenses with it unless it be required in writing by the tenant or owner of the goods ; and enacts also that the goods must, at the request of the tenant or owner, be removed to a public auction room, and there sold. The Act of William and Mary postponed the power of sale for five days, and this period is extended, by the Act of 1888, to not more than fifteen on the written request of the tenant or owner. The Act of 1888 also requires that no person shall act as a bailiff to levy a distress for rent unless he be authorized so to act by the certificate of a county court judge, and empowers the Lord Chancellor to make rules from time to time for regulating the security to be required from bailiffs, and the fees, charges, and expenses of distress, and also for carrying into effect the objects of the Act of 1888, and the Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 24), has extended the power of a county court judge to cancel a bailiff's certificate, and otherwise amended the Act of 1888 ; and see the County Courts Act, 1934, ss. 121, 134, 153 and 193, and RENT REDUCTION ACTS.

In addition to the above provisions in favour of tenants generally, agricultural tenants enjoy three special privileges under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923 (see that title). These are: (1) that the six years' arrears of rent recoverable from other tenants are reduced to one year ; (2) that agricultural or other machinery on hire, and live stock on hire for breeding purposes, are absolutely exempted, while agisted stock can only be distrained if there be no other distrainable goods upon the premises, and then only for the amount due to the tenant for their keep ; and (3) disputes as to distress may be determined either by a county court judge or a justice of the peace.

Lastly, the Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1908 (see above), provides (s. 2) for the determination of distress disputes under that Act by a magistrate or justices, and also enables (s. 6) a 'superior landlord' to require payment of rent direct to himself whenever the immediate tenant is in arrear. See Shenstone v. Freeman, 1910, 2 K. B. 84 ; and for statutes and general law relating to the subject, see Smith's Leading Cases, sub tit. Simpson v. Hartopp ; Oldham and Foster's Law of Distress ; Woodfall's L. and T. ; Foa, Landlord and Tenant ; and Chil. Stat., tit. 'Landlord and Tenant.' See also BANKRUPTCY ; WINDING-UP ; PREFERENTIAL PAYMENTS.

Distress Infinite, one that has no bounds with regard to its quantity, and may be repeated from time to time, until the stubbornness of the party is conquered. Such are distresses for fealty or suit of court, and for compelling jurors to attend, and under a writ of delivery, as to which see DETINUE.

Distribution, the act of dealing out to others ; dispensation.

Distribution, Statute of (22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 10), now only applied to intestacies prior to 1926, repealed by Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (see WIDOW), explained by the Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. 2, c. 3, enacts that the surplusage of intestates' personal estate (except of femes covert, the administration and enjoyment of whose estates belonged, at Common Law, to their husbands—but see MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY) shall, after the expiration of one year from the death of the intestate, be distributed in the following manner : one-third shall go to the widow of the intestate, and the residue in equal proportions to his children, or, if dead, to their representatives, that is, their lineal descendants ; if there be no children or legal representative subsisting, then a moiety shall go to the widow, and a moiety to the next of kindred in equal degree, and their representatives ; if no widow, the whole shall go to the children ;

if neither widow nor children, the whole shall be distributed amongst the next of kin, in equal degree, and their representatives, but no representatives are admitted among collaterals farther than the children of the intestate's brothers and sisters. The following relations are considered as of the same degree of kindred : (1) parents and children ; (2) grandfather, grandson, and brother ; (3) great-grandfather, great-grandson, uncle, and nephew ; (4) great-great-grandfather, great-great-grandson, great-uncle, great-nephew and first-cousin. The half blood take equally with the whole blood in the same degree.

The widow of an intestate dying without issue before 1926 was, in amendment of the words italicized above, entitled, by the Intestates Estates Act, 1890 (see that title), to at least 500*l.* out of the real and personal assets of the intestate, or if such assets did not amount to 500*l.*, then to the whole of his estate, as against the next of kin.

Distributive Finding of the Issue. The jury are bound to give their verdict for that party who, upon the evidence, appears to them to have succeeded in establishing his side of the issue. But there are cases in which an issue may be found distributively ; i.e., in part for plaintiff and in part for defendant. Thus, in an action for goods sold and work done, if the defendant pleaded that he never was indebted, on which issue was joined, a verdict might be found for the plaintiff as to the goods, and for the defendant as to the work.

District [fr. districtus, Lat.] : (1) The circuit or territory within which a person may be compelled to appear ; (2) Circuit of authority ; province.

District Boards, in London, constituted by the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, for the management of the sanitary affairs of combinations of parishes not singly represented by vestries. Their powers are transferred to the metropolitan boroughs constituted under the London Government Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 14). See also the London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1934 (c. xl.).

District Council : (1) Urban, the name given to an urban sanitary authority, not being the council of a municipal borough, by the Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), which Act abolished plural voting for, and any property qualification of, such authority ; (2) Rural, the governing body under the same Act of every rural sanitary district, consisting of chairman and councillors, elected by the parishes or other areas. See new Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), s. 31, which deals with the constitution of district councils. This Act consolidates with amendments the enactments relating to the subject.

District Parishes, ecclesiastical divisions of parishes for all purposes of worship, and for celebration of marriages, baptisms, churchings, and burials formed at the instance of the Royal Commissioners for Building New Churches, and regulated by the New Parishes Acts, 1843 and 1844 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37, and 7 & 8 Vict. c. 94).

District Registrars. See next title.

District Registry. By the Judicature Act, 1925, s. 84, replacing the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 60, it is provided that to facilitate proceedings in country districts the Crown may, from time to time, by Order in Council, create district registries and appoint district registrars for the purpose of issuing writs of summons and for entertaining proceedings generally in an action down to and including entry for trial. Documents sealed in any such district registry are to be received in evidence without further proof ; and the district registrars may administer oaths or do other things as provided by rules or a special order of the Court (s. 62). Power, however, is given to a judge to remove proceedings from a district registry to the Office of the High Court ; and see generally, Judicature Act, 1925, ss. 84-87, and Judicature Act, 1873, ss. 64 and 66, which are still unrepealed. By Order in Council of 12th of August, 1875, a number of district registries have been established in the places mentioned in that order ; and the prothonotaries in Liverpool, Manchester, and Preston, the district registrar of the Court of Admiralty at Liverpool, and the county court registrars in the other places named, have been appointed district registrars. Proceedings in district registries are regulated by R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXXV. The defendant may as of right remove the action from the district registry except (r. 13) where within four days after appearance to a specially indorsed writ under Ord. III., r. 6, the plaintiff has taken out a summons under Ord. XIV.

Districtio, a distress ; a distraint.

Districtione scaccarii. See 51 Hen. 3, st. 5, relating to distresses in the Exchequer for the king's debts.

Distringas (that you distrain), anciently called constringas, a writ addressed to the sheriff, and issued to effect various purposes. The cases in which it was used in Common Law proceedings may be thus stated :—

(1) A distringas to compel appearance, where defendant had a place of residence within England or Wales. The writ was abolished by the C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 24, and the practice provided for by s. 17 substituted in its stead.

(2) A distringas nuper vicecomitem, to compel the late sheriff to sell goods, etc., or to bring in the body.

(3) A distringas in detinue, a special writ of execution to compel defendant to deliver the goods by repeated distresses of his chattels; or a scire facias might be issued against a third person in whose hands they might happen to be, to show cause why they should not be delivered; and if the defendant still continued obstinate, then (if the judgment had been by default or on demurrer) the sheriff summoned an inquest to ascertain the value of the goods and the plaintiff's damages, which (being either so assessed, or by the verdict in case of an issue) were levied on the goods or person of the defendant.—1 Roll. Ab. 737. See DETINUE.

(4) A distringas juratores, a jury process, abolished by C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 104.

In Equity a distringas was issued in these two cases :—

(1) Against a corporation aggregate; the first process to compel appearance was distringas, and on its return an alias distringas and then a pluries were issued, and upon the return of the latter, if default were made, an order nisi for a sequestration was obtained as of course, and if no cause was shown, the order would be made absolute.—11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 36.

(2) When a transfer of stock by the Bank of England or other public company was sought to be immediately restrained, a distringas was, by 5 Vict. c. 5, s. 15, allowed to be issued. The effect of this writ was temporary and merely prevented the stock being dealt with until the person putting in the distringas had had an opportunity of asserting his claim. It was incumbent on him, therefore, at once to bring an action against the stock-holder, either for a restraining order under 5 Vict. c. 5, s. 5, or an injunction pursuant to 40 Geo. 3, c. 36.

By R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XLVI., r. 2 (annulled by R. S. C. (No. 3, 1926)), no distringas under 5 Vict. c. 5, s. 5, may now be issued, but rr. 3-11 of the same order provide a procedure to be pursued by any person interested in any stock in any company, which has the same effect as distringas under that statute.

Disturbance, annoyance; also the wrongful obstruction of the owner of an incorporeal hereditament in its exercise or enjoyment. There are five sorts of this injury, viz., disturbance of (1) franchise, (2) common, (3) ways, (4) tenure, and (5) patronage.—3 Steph. Com. As to compensation for disturbance under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923 (13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 9), see s. 12, ibid.

Disturbance of Divine Worship, an offence against the public peace. See BRAWLING.

Disturber. If a bishop refuse or neglect to examine or admit a patron's clerk, without reason assigned or notice given, he is styled a disturber by the law, and shall not have any title to present by lapse; for no man shall take advantage of his own wrong.—2 Bl. Com. 278.

Dittay, the matter of charge or ground of indictment against a person accused of crime.—Scots term.

Divan [an Arabic or Turkish word], a council-room, a state-chamber, a raised bench or cushion.

Diversité des Courtes, a law treatise supposed to have been written in the early part of the sixteenth century.

Diversity, a plea by the prisoner in bar of execution, alleging that he is not the same who was attainted, upon which a jury is immediately empanelled to try the collateral issue thus raised, viz., the identity of the person; and not whether he is guilty or innocent, for that has been already decided.—4 Bl. Com. 396. See also 1 Hale's Pleas of the Crown, 370.

Divest. See DEVEST.

Dividend, a share, the part allotted in division; the interest paid on the public funds; the share of profits of a company payable to each shareholder (see Articles 89 to 96 of Table A to Companies Act, 1929, and ss. 120-123 of the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845); a distributive share of a bankrupt's estate or on the winding-up of the company, of its assets.

As to the liability upon a company in respect of a dividend when the warrant for it, having been duly posted, is lost in the post, see Thairhall v. G. N. Ry., 1910, 2 K. B. 5091.

Dividenda, an indenture; one part of an indenture.—Old Records.

Divine Right, the title whereby, particularly in the seventeenth century, English sovereigns claimed to reign. See NON-RESISTANCE.

Divine Service, Tenure by, an obsolete holding, in which the tenants were obliged to perform some special divine services, as to sing so many masses, etc.—Litt. s. 137.

Divisa, a device, award, or decree; also a devise; also bounds or limits of division of a parish or farm, etc.—Cowel. Also a court held on the boundary, in order to settle disputes of the tenants.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Divisional Court. A court (which takes under the Jud. Act the place of the court 'in banc': see BANC) constituted of two judges of the High Court, or as many more judges as the President of a Division, with the concurrence of the judges of the Division, may think expedient, for the transaction of such business as may be ordered by Rules of Court to be heard by a Divisional Court (Judicature Act, 1925, s. 63, replacing App. Jur. Act, 1876, s. 17). Much of the business of the King's Bench Division, but none of that of the other Divisions, is transacted by Divisional Courts, consisting usually of two judges. Five judges have thrice sat, but in order for more than two to sit, the President of the Division, with the concurrence of not less than two judges thereof, must be of opinion that it is expedient so to constitute the Court (Judicature Act, 1925, s. 63 (6), replacing Jud. Act, 1884, s. 4). See PRECEDENTS and R. S. C. Ord. LIX.

Appeals from County Courts no longer lie to the Divisional Court, but by Administration of Justice (Appeals) Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 40), s. 120, and County Courts Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 53), s. 105, appeals lie to the Court of Appeal.

Divisions of the High Court (see new Judicature Act, 1925, ss. 1-5). The High Court of Justice, created by the Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), was by s. 31 of that Act, for the more convenient despatch of business, divided into five Divisions, which were called the Chancery, the Queen's Bench, the Common Pleas, the Exchequer, and the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Divisions, the judges of these Divisions being for the most part those who sat in the courts whose jurisdiction is transferred to the High Court (ss. 5, 16); but s. 32 of the same Act gave the Sovereign in Council power to reduce or increase the number of Divisions or the number of judges attached to each Division; and an Order in Council under this section which came into force on the 26th February, 1881, united in one 'Queen's Bench Division' (since the accession of King Edward the Seventh styled the 'King's Bench Division') the judges attached to the Common Pleas and Exchequer Divisions; so that (see Judicature Act, 1925), ss. 1 to 5, there are now three Divisions: Chancery, King's Bench, and Probate, Divorce and Admiralty.

Divorce [fr. divortium, Lat.], the dissolution of the marriage contract, grantable (after 31st December, 1937) to either a husband or wife under the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 51), amending the Judicature Act, 1925, for (a) adultery, (b) desertion for three years preceding petition, (c) cruelty, (d) incurable unsoundness of mind, and, on the wife's petition, for unnatural offences, subject to the statutory provisions. Petitions may not be presented for three years after marriage.

Judicial Separation is grantable on any ground available for divorce, or for non-compliance with a decree for restitution of conjugal rights or any former ground for divorce à mensa et thoro (q.v.); divorce may be obtained on proof of facts which have founded a judicial separation or an order under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, which order may be made for adultery as well as other grounds. See JUDICIAL SEPARATION.

Additional grounds for a decree of nullity of marriage are: (a) refusal to consummate, (b) mental deficiency or epileptic affliction at the time of marriage, (c) communicable venereal disease, (d) pregnancy at time of marriage by another man. A decree absolute may be made against the party obtaining the decree nisi. The Act of 1937 applies to England and Wales only.

In Scotland the remedy of divorce is open to either spouse on the ground of adultery, or on the ground of desertion. See DESERTION.

Doab, Doowab, any tract of country included between two rivers.—Indian.

Do ut des (I give that you may give).

Do ut facias (I give that you may perform).

Dock [fr. docke, Fle., a bird-cage], (1) the place in a court of criminal law in which a prisoner is placed during his trial, and from which he may instruct counsel without the intervention of a solicitor; (2) an enclosed space, either dry or filled with water, in which a ship is repaired, loaded, or unloaded. In this last sense a 'dock' is a factory within the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 22), s. 104. For regulations regarding loading and unloading, see the Docks Regulations, 1934 (S. R. & O. 1934, No. 279), and the Public Health Act 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 49), ss. 2-10, in regard to sanitation and health.

Dock Defence. A dock defence is said to have been accepted by a barrister when he is instructed direct by the defendant in the precincts of the court without the intervention of a solicitor. The fee of one guinea (or 1*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*) must be paid then and there.

Dock Warrants, certificates given to the owners of goods warehouses in the docks. They have been held to be negotiable and to pass from hand to hand, so as to vest the property in the goods mentioned in them in the holders.

Docket, Doequet [fr. tocyn, W., a slip or ticket], or Dogged, a list; a brief writing on a small piece of paper or parchment containing the effect of a greater writing; a register.

Doctor and Student. Saint Germain is an author who gained considerable note by this book, published in 1518, in Latin, and in English in 1530. The book consists of two dialogues, in popular style, between a Doctor of Divinity and a Student of the Common Law.

Doctors' Commons, an institution near St. Paul's Cathedral, where the Ecclesiastical and Admiralty Courts were held. In 1768 a royal charter was obtained, by virtue of which the members of the society and their successors were incorporated under the name and title of 'The College of Doctors of Laws exercent in the Ecclesiastical and Admiralty Courts.' The college consisted of a president (the Dean of Arches for the time being), and of those Doctors of Laws who, having regularly taken that degree in either of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, and having been admitted advocates in pursuance of the rescript of the Archbishop of Canterbury, had been elected fellows of the college in the manner prescribed by the charter. The property of the college was sold, the charter surrendered, and the college dissolved under the Probate Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77), ss. 116, 117.

Documents, records, writings, precepts, instructions, or directions. See DISCOVERY; ROLLS.

Doe, John, the fictitious plaintiff in ejectment, whose services have been dispensed with since the abolition of the fiction by the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76). See EJECTMENT.

Dood-bana, the actual perpetrator of a homicide.

Dog. Draught.—The Protection of Animals Act, 1911, s. 9, and the Protection of Animals (Scotland) Act, 1912, s. 8, prohibit, under a penalty, the use of any dog in England or Scotland for the purpose of draught.

Licenses.—Dog licenses are regulated by the Dog Licenses Act, 1867 (30 Vict. c. 5), as amended by 32 & 33 Vict. c. 14, s. 38, 41 Vict. c. 15, ss. 17–23, and 42 & 43 Vict. c. 21, s. 26. They commence on the day of grant, and terminate on the 31st of December following; but procuring a license on the day of a conviction will not avoid the penalty up to 5*l.* under s. 8 of the Act of 1867 (Campbell v. Strangways, (1877) 3 C. P. D. 105). The present duty is 7*s.* 6*d.*, to which it was raised from 5*s.* by the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 15), and this section is amended by s. 5 of the Dogs Act, 1906. See Johnson v. Wilson, 1909, 2 K. B. 497. No duty is payable for dogs under six months old (Act of 1867, s. 10), or hound whelps under twelve, never used or entered with any pack of hounds, the proof of age lying on the owner by s. 19 of the latter Act, which also, by s. 21, exempts the dogs of the blind used solely by them for their guidance, and by s. 22 shepherds' dogs, on a special procedure being followed by farmers or shepherds. The Protection of Animals (Cruelty to Dogs) Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 17), gives power to any Court before which a person is committed under the Protection of Animals Act, 1911, of an offence of cruelty to a dog, to order him to be disqualified for keeping a dog and for holding or obtaining a dog license for such period as the Court thinks fit.

Injury to Cattle.—The Dogs Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 32), repealing and re-enacting the Dogs Act, 1865, which had set aside the rule of the common law, enacts that—

The owner of a dog shall be liable in damages for injury done to any cattle [including, by s. 7, horses, mules, asses, goats and swine] [or poultry, by the Amendment Act, 1928, s. 1] by that dog; and it need not be necessary for the person seeking such damages to show a previous mischievous propensity in the dog, or the owner's knowledge of such previous propensity, or to show that the injury was attributable to neglect on the part of the owner. See Arnell v. Paterson, 1931, A. C. 560 (two dogs owned by different owners, each liable for whole damages); Knot v. L. C. C., 1934, 1 K. B. 126 (responsibility of person in control).

Injury to Human Beings.—To recover damages, the injured party must show that the dog to the knowledge of the owner or controller was ferocious towards mankind: e.g., that it had bitten or attempted to bite mankind (Osborne v. Chocquesel, 1896, 2 Q. B. 109); but the knowledge of a servant is not enough (Applebee v. Percy, (1874) L. R. 9 C. P. at p. 325). The owner may be liable though the bite was caused by the intervention of a third person (Baker v. Snell, 1908, 2 K. B. 825).

Stray Dogs.—The Dogs Act, 1906, empowers police officers to seize any stray dog found in a highway or place of public resort, with the result that it may be sold or destroyed if not claimed after notice to the owner or person whose name and address is on its collar; and by s. 4 any person taking possession of a stray dog must either return it to its owner or give notice to the police.

As to importation and quarantine of dogs, see the Dogs Act, 1906, s. 2, and ANIMAL (DISEASES).

Dangerous Dogs.—The destruction of a dangerous dog by order of a Court of Summary Jurisdiction without giving the owner the option of keeping it under control (Pickering v. Marsh, (1874) 43 L. J. M. C. 143; Lockett v. Wühey, (1909) 99 L. T. 838), is provided for by s. 2 of the Dogs Act, 1871. 'Dangerous,' as used here, is not confined to meaning dangerous to mankind (Williams v. Richards, 1907, 2 K. B. 88).

Board of Agriculture Orders.—Section 2 of the Act of 1906 empowers the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries to make orders prescribing and regulating the muzzling and the wearing of collars by dogs, and 'with a view to the prevention of worrying of cattle for preventing dogs or any class of dogs from straying during all or any of the hours between sunset and sunrise,' on pain of being seized and treated as 'stray.' Dogs belonging to a pack of hounds are exempted (Burton v. Atkinson, (1908) 98 L. T. 748; Rasdall v. Coleman, (1909) 100 L. T. 934).

The Commissioner of Police in the Metropolis may require dogs while in the streets and not led to be muzzled (Metropolitan Police Act, 1839 (c. 47)).

Although dogs are not the subject of larceny at common law, the offence is covered by the Larceny Act, 1861, s. 18, and the Larceny Act, 1916, s. 5. See DOG STEALING; ANIMALS.

See Manson on Dogs; Chit. Stat., tit. 'Dogs.'

Dog-draw, the manifest deprehension of an offender against venison in a forest, when he was found drawing after a deer by the scent of a hound led in his hand; or where a person had wounded a deer or wild beast, by shooting at it, or otherwise, and was caught with a dog drawing after him to receive the same.—Manwood, p. 2, c. viii. See STABLE-STAND.

Dog spear, lawful in party's own wood, so that owner of killed dog failed to recover (Jordin v. Crump, (1841) 8 M. & W. 782).

Dog stealing is punishable on summary conviction, for the first offence, by six months' imprisonment and hard labour, or fine not exceeding 20*l.* beyond the value of the dog. A second offence is, however, an indictable misdemeanour, punishable by imprisonment with or without hard labour not exceeding eighteen months. Similar punishment is provided for persons found in possession of dogs or their skins, knowing them to have been stolen, and a justice may order the restoration of the stolen property to the owner. Corruptly taking money or reward, to aid in the recovery of a stolen dog, is punishable by imprisonment with or without hard labour for eighteen months. Dogs are not the subject of larceny at common law. See Larceny Act, 1861, ss. 18, 19, 21 and 22; Larceny Act, 1916, ss. 5 and 48, and Sched.

Dogger, a light ship or vessel; dogger-fish, fish brought in ships.

Dogger-men, fishermen that belong to dogger-ships.

Dogma, a decree or order (eccl. Lat.); a theological doctrine promulgated by ecclesiastical authority.

Doltkin, or Dolt [fr. dult, Dut.; daoto, Venet.; da otto soldi, a piece of eight soldi], a base coin of small value, prohibited by 3 Hen. 5, c. 1, rep. by Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1863.

Dole, the act of distribution or dealing; a portion or lot; a boundary mark, e.g., a post or mound of earth; also popularly employed to denote sums to which unemployed persons are entitled under the Unemployment Insurance Acts.

In Scottish Criminal Law, a criminal intention. Without it, no act can be a crime—with the exception of crimes based on negligence and various statutory offences.

Dole-fish, the share of fish which the fishermen employed in the north seas customarily received for their allowance.—35 Hen. 8, c. 7, rep. by Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1863.

Dole-meadow, one wherein the shares of divers persons are marked by doles or landmarks.

Doles, or Dools, slips of pasture left between the furrows of ploughed land.

Dolg-bote [fr. dolg, Sax., wound, and bote, recompense], a recompense for a scar or wound.—Cowel.

Doll capax (capable of crime).

Doll incapax (incapable of crime).

Dolus versatur in generalibus. 2 Rep. 34.—(A deceiver deals in generalities.)

Dolus malus (a degree of dolus, artifice) means fraud.—Sand. Just.

Domboc, or Dombec [Sax.], dome-book.

Dome, or Doom [Sax.], a judgment, sentence, or decree.

Dome-book [liber judicialis, Lat.], a book composed under the direction of Alfred, for the general use of the whole kingdom, containing the local customs of the several provinces of the kingdom. This book is said to have been extant so late as the reign of Edward IV., but is now lost.

Domesday, or Domesday-book [liber iudiciarius vel censualis Angliæ, Lat.], an ancient record made in the time of William the Conqueror, and now kept at the Record Office, consisting of two volumes, a greater and lesser; the greater containing a survey of all the lands in England except the counties of Northumberland, Cumberland, Westmorland, Durham, and part of Lancashire, which, it is said, were never surveyed; and excepting Essex, Suffolk, and Norfolk, which three last are comprehended in the lesser volume. There is also a third book, which differs from the others in form more than in matter, made by command of the same king. And there is a fourth book called Domesday, which is only an abridgment of the others. The question whether lands are ancient demesne or not is to be decided by the Domesday of William I., whence there is no appeal. The addition of day to this Dome-book was not meant for an allusion to the final day of judgment, as most persons have conceived, but was to strengthen and confirm it, and signifies the judicial decisive record or book of dooming justice and judgment. Consult Ellis's Introd. to Domesday Book.

Domesmen, judges of men appointed to doom and determine suits and controversies, hence, æg deme, I deem or judge.—Jac. Law Dict. See DAYS MEN.

Domestics, menial servants (so called from being intra mœnia domus, within the walls of a house). The contract between them and their masters arises upon the hiring. In this country it is usual to engage domestic servants at a fixed amount of wages per annum. But there is generally no express stipulation as to the time that the service is to last; and when the terms are not otherwise defined the contract is thus understood, that either party may determine the service at pleasure, upon a month's warning or upon payment of a month's wages. As to the persons entitled under a bequest to 'domestic servants,' see Re Lawson, 1914, 1 Ch. 682; Re Jackson, 39 T. L. R. 400. See MASTER AND SERVANT.

For the purposes of Unemployment Insurance, employment in domestic service, except where the employed in any trade or business carried on for the purpose of gain, is an excepted employment under the Unemployment Insurance Acts, 1935 and 1936 (25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 8) and (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 13). Health Insurance: domestic service is an employment within the meaning of the National Health Insurance Act, 1924 (14 & 15 Geo. 5, c. 33), s. 1.

Domicellus, a better sort of servant in monasteries: also an appellation of a king's bastard.

Domicile, the place where a person has his home.

By the term 'domicile,' in its ordinary acceptation, is meant the place where a person lives or has his home. In this sense the place where a person has his actual residence, inhabitancy, or commorancy, is sometimes called his domicile. In a strict and legal sense, that is properly the domicile of a person where he has his true fixed permanent home and principal establishment, and to which, whenever he is absent, he has the intention of returning (animus revertendi).

Two things, then, must concur to constitute domicile: first, residence; and secondly, the intention of making it the home of the party. There must be the fact and intent; for, as Pothier has truly observed, a person cannot establish a domicile in a place except it be animo et facto.

From these considerations and rules the general conclusion may be deduced, that domicile is of three sorts: domicile by birth, domicile by choice, and domicile by operation of law. The first is the common case of the place of birth, domicilium originis; the second is that which is voluntarily acquired by a party, proprio Marte; the last is consequential, as that of the wife arising from marriage.—Story's Conf. of Laws, s. 46. A good definition, as applied to an acquired domicile, is—that place in which a man has voluntarily fixed the habitation of himself and family, not for a mere special or temporary purpose, but with the present intention of making a permanent home, until some unexpected event shall occur to induce him to adopt some other permanent home: Lord v. Colvin, (1859) 4 Drew. 366, per Kindersley, V.-C. But no definition is perhaps quite satisfactory ; see Dicey's Conflict of Laws, p. 731.

If a person leaves his own country with the intention of remaining abroad till death, he, nevertheless, retains his domicile of origin until he fix his domicile in some particular place.

It is a clearly established rule that the validity of a will, disposing of personal estate, as regards form, is regulated by the law of the country in which the deceased was domiciled at the time of his death. The application of this rule to the case of British subjects dying abroad, and of foreigners dying in this country, gave rise to great inconvenience, to remove which two statutes were passed in 1861.

By the first of these, the Wills Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 114), it is enacted among other things that every will made out of the United Kingdom by a British subject (whatever may have been his domicile) shall, as regards personal estate, be held to be well executed, for the purpose of probate, and in Scotland of confirmation, if the same be made according to the law of the place where it was made, or the law of the place where the deceased was domiciled when it was made, or the laws then in force in that part of the dominions of the Crown where he had his domicile of origin. By the second statute, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 121, in cases where a convention shall have been entered into between the Crown and any foreign state that such statute shall be applicable to the subjects of the Crown and such foreign state, it is enacted that no British subject dying in such foreign state, and that no subject of such foreign state dying here, shall be deemed to have acquired a domicile in the place of his death unless he shall have resided there for one year ; but no convention having been entered into with any foreign state, this enactment is inoperative.

The domicile of a wife is that of her husband (A.-G. of Alberta v. Cook, 1926, A. C. 444.) For the English Courts to have jurisdiction to entertain a suit for dissolution of marriage the parties must be domiciled in England or Wales, though in the case of a suit for judicial separation mere residence is sufficient (Armstrong v. Armstrong, 1898, P. 178). A decree annulling a marriage on the ground of impotence is in effect a decree for dissolution and can only be pronounced by the courts of the domicile of the parties (Inverclyde v. Inverclyde, 1931, P. 29). The question whether a person is or is not domiciled in a foreign country is to be determined in accordance with English law as to domicile irrespective of the question whether that person has or has not acquired a domicile in the foreign country in the eyes of the law of that country (Re Annesley, 1926, Ch. 692). In matters coming before the English Courts and depending on foreign domicile, the lex domicilii in the widest sense must prima facie apply (Re Askew, 1930, 2 Ch. 259). See Dicey's Conflict of Laws ; Westlake's Private International Law.

Domicerium, power over another ; also danger.—Bract. l. 4, t. 1, c. x.

Domina (Dame), a title given to honourable women, who, anciently, in their own right of inheritance, held a barony.—Cowel.

Dominant tenement, a term used in the civil law, and thence in ours, and also in Scots law relating to servitude. It means the tenement or subject in favour of which the service or easement is constituted ; as the tenement over which the servitude or easement extends is called the 'servient tenement.' See Bell's Dict. ; Smith's Dict. of Antiq., tit. 'Servitudes' ; and Gale or Goddard on Easements.

Dominica. An island in the West Indies. See 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 125 ; 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 57 ; 23 & 24 Vict. c. 57 ; and 30 & 31 Vict. c. 91 ; see the Leeward Islands Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 107), which enacts provisions for the federation and general government of the Leeward Islands of which Dominica is one. As to Court of Appeal, see West Indian Court of Appeal Act, 1919 (9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 47).

Dominica in ramis palmarum. Palm Sunday.

Dominical, that which denotes the Lord's Day, or Sunday. See SUNDAY.

Dominicidae [fr. dominus, Lat., master, and cado, to kill], the act of killing one's lord or master.

Dominion (His Majesty's). The Statute of Westminster (22 Geo 5, c. 4), s. 1, provides : "In this Act the expression Dominion means any of the following Dominions, that is to say, the Dominion of Canada, the Commonwealth of Australia, the Dominion of New Zealand, the Union of South Africa, the Irish Free State, and Newfoundland" ; see also COLONY. These Dominions are also styled self-governing Dominions.

Dominion Register. A branch register of members in any part of His Majesty's Dominions where a company registered under the Companies Act, 1929, may be carrying on business, of the names of members resident in that part. The register is to be kept in the same manner as the principal register. Any reference to colonial registers in articles shall be construed as references to Dominion registers. See Companies Act, 1929, ss. 103 et seq.

Dominium directum, in the Feudal Law, the interest vested in the superior; the superiority. See Bell's Dict.

Dominium utile, the possessory or vassal's title to the soil, or the right to its use and profits. See Bell's Dict.

Dominus. This word, prefixed to a man's name, in ancient times, usually denoted him a knight or a clergyman, a gentleman or the lord of a manor; also a principal in the Roman Law.

Dominus litis, the controller of a suit or litigation; also an advocate who, after the death of his client, prosecuted a suit to sentence for the executor's use.—Civil Law.

Dominus navis, the absolute owner of a ship.

Domitæ naturæ animalia, tame and domestic animals, as horses, kine, sheep, poultry, etc.

Domitellus, a title anciently given to the French kings' natural sons. See DOMICELLUS.

Dommages interets [Fr.], damages.

Domo reparandâ, a writ that lay for one against his neighbour, by the anticipated fall of whose house he feared a damage and injury to his own.—Reg. Brev. 153.

Domus conversorum, an ancient house built or appointed by King Henry III. for such Jews as were converted to the Christian faith; but King Edward III., who expelled the Jews from this kingdom, deputed the place for the custody of the rolls and records of the Chancery.—Tomlin's Law Dict.

Domus Del, the hospital of St. Julian, in Southampton, so called. Dugd. Mon. tom. 2, 440. A name applied to many hospitals.

Domus Procerum, the House of Lords, abbreviated into Dom. Proc. or D. P.

Domus sua cuique est tutissimum refugium, (To every one his own house is the safest refuge.) See Broom's Leg. Max.; Semayne's case, (1605) 5 Rep. 91; 1 Sm. L. C., 1, in which the extent of a sheriff's power to break doors was discussed, and five points resolved, the first being that every man's house 'is to him as his castle,' so that he is justified in killing another who breaks into his house to rob or murder him; and a sheriff to execute process may not break an outer door (see per Lord Ellenborough, C.J., in Burdett v. Abbott, (1811) 14 East, at p. 157); neither may a bailiff to distrain for rent, though he may enter through an open window (Crabtree v. Robinson, (1885) 15 Q. B. D. 312) or over a wall (Long v. Clarke, 1894, Q. B. 119).

Dona clandestina sunt semper suspiciosa. 3 Rep. 81.—(Clandestine gifts are always suspicious.) See GIFT.

Donary, a thing given to sacred uses.

Donatio inter vivos, a gift made by some one not in prospect of death, as distinguished from donatio mortis causa (q.v.). It is constituted by an intention to give coupled with such acts as are necessary to give effect to such intention. If the donor dies within three years the subject-matter, if over 100*l.* in value, is generally subject to estate duty, unless given in consideration of marriage or a normal expenditure (Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, s. 59).

Donatio mortis causa, a gift of personal property in prospect of death; a death-bed disposition; an inchoate gift of personalty consummated by the giver's death.

It is derived from the Civil Law; Justinian's Inst. lib. 2, tit. 7, shows its nature. To render this kind of gift valid, it (1) must be made by the giver, when ill, in anticipation of his death; (2) must be intended to take effect only upon his death by his existing illness, for his recovery from that illness, or his subsequent personal revocation of the gift, as by resuming its possession, will defeat it; and (3) a traditio or delivery, either actual or symbolical, of the subject of the gift, or of the instrument which represents it, must be made to the donee, either for his own use, or upon trust for another person, or for a particular purpose. The gift of a cheque upon the donor's banker is not good as a donatio mortis causa, because it is a gift which can only be made effectual by obtaining payment of it in the donor's lifetime, and is revoked by his death; see Tate v. Hilbert, (1793) 2 Ves. Jun. 111; Re Beaumont, 1902, 1 Ch. 889. And so a promissory note not payable to bearer. But a deposit in the Post Office Savings Bank can be the subject of such a gift (Re Weston, 1902, 1 Ch. 680; Re Andrews, 1902, 2 Ch. 394; Re Harrison, 78 Sol. Jo. 135).

This kind of gift resembles a legacy, inasmuch as it is ambulatory, incomplete, and revocable during the donor's life; is liable to his debts upon a deficiency of assets; may be made to his wife, and is subject to legacy duty under the Stamp Duties Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 76), and to estate duty under the Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30). It differs from a legacy in that it does not need probate, the donee's title being directly derived from the giver in his lifetime; it is not a testamentary act; and it is taken against and not from the executor, whose assent to its enjoyment is not necessary. See Ward v. Turner, (1752) 2 Ves. Sen. 431, 1 W. & T. L. C.; Re Wasserberg, 1915, 1 Ch. 195; Re Hawkins; Watts v. Nash, 1924, 2 Ch. 47.

Donatio perfectitur possessione accipientis. A gift is made perfect by the possession of it by the donee.

Donative, a species of advowson, when the king, or any subject by his license, founded a church or chapel, and ordained that it should be merely in the gift or disposal of the patron; subject to his visitation only, and not to that of the ordinary; and vested absolutely in the clerk of the patron's deed of donation without presentation, institution, or induction. This is said to have been anciently the only way of conferring ecclesiastical benefices in England. If the patron once waived the privilege of donation and presented to the bishop, and his clerk was admitted and instituted, the advowson became representative, and was never donative any more. Donatives, which did not amount to one hundred in number, were all converted into presentatives by s. 12 of the Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48). See ADVOWSON.

Donator nunquam desinit possidere antiquam donatarius incipit possidere. Dyer, 281.—(A donor never ceases to possess until the donee begins to possess.)

Donatory, the person on whom the king bestows his right to any forfeiture that has fallen to the Crown.—Scots Law.

Donatrix, a female giver. See DONOR.

Donee [fr. doneo, Lat.], one to whom a gift is made.

Don grant et render, a fine sur, was a double fine, comprehending the fine sur cognizance de droit come ceo, etc., and the fine sur concessit, and might have been used to create particular limitations of estates; whereas the fine sur cognizance de droit come ceo, etc., conveyed nothing but an absolute estate, either of inheritance or at least of freehold.—1 Steph. Com.

Donis conditionalibus, Statute de (13 Edw. 1, c. 1, A.D. 1285), otherwise called Westminster the Second. At the date of this statute a gift to a man and the heirs of his body, provided that if he had no heirs the lands should revert, was construed to give the donee a conditional fee, which enabled him, after issue begotten, to alien the land, and thereby to disinherit the issue and to deprive the donor of his right of reverter. This interpretation is declared by this statute to be 'contrary to the minds of the giver, and the form impressed in the gift': wherefore it is ordained that the 'will of the giver, according to the form in the deed of gift manifestly expressed, be henceforth observed; so that they, to whom the land is given under such condition, shall have no power to alien the land so given, but that it shall remain unto the issue of them to whom it is given after their death, or shall revert to the giver or his heirs if issue fail, or there is no issue at all. . . . And if a fine be levied hereafter upon land so given, it shall be void in law.'

The intolerable mischief introduced by this statute, viz., the creation of inalienable estates tail, was got rid of by the fictitious proceedings of common recoveries, which were abolished by the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74), which substituted an enrolled deed as the mode of barring an estate tail. Enrolment is not necessary, see Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 133. See Challis's Real Property. See TAIL.

Donor, a giver, a bestower, one who gives land to another in tail, etc.

Doom [fr. dom, A.S., judgment; fr. deman, to deem or form a judgment], judicial sentence; judgment.

Doomsday-book. See DOMESDAY-BOOK.

Dormant Claim, a claim in abeyance.

Dormant Funds, funds in court which have not been dealt with for fifteen years. See R. S. C. Ord. XXII., r. 11, as to service on the Official Solicitor; Supreme Court Funds Rules, 1927, r. 96. As to triennial publication of list of funds, see UNCLAIMED PROPERTY.

Dormant Partners, subject to s. 2, Partnership Act, 1890, and the Business Names Registration Act, 1916, those whose names are not known or do not appear as partners, but who nevertheless are silent partners, and partake of the profits, and thereby become partners, either absolutely to all intents and purposes, or at all events in respect to third parties. Dormant partners, in strictness of language, mean those who are merely passive in the firm, whether known or unknown, in contradistinction to those who are active and conduct the business of the firm as principals. Unknown partners are properly secret partners: but in common parlance they are usually designated by the appellation of dormant partners. They are held responsible as partners, until retirement, to third parties, although they may not be so chargeable inter se. Consult Lindley on Partnership. See PARTNERSHIP (LIMITED PARTNERSHIP) and BUSINESS NAMES REGISTRATION ACT, 1916; DISCLOSURE.

Dorture [contracted from dormiture], a dormitory of a convent; a place to sleep in.

Dossale, hangings of tapestry.—Mat. Par.

Dotal, relating to the portion of a woman; constituting her portion.

Dotation, the act of giving a dowry or portion; endowment in general.

Dote assignandâ, a writ for a widow, where it was found by office that the king's tenant was seised of lands in fee or fee-tail at his death, and that he held of the king in chief, etc.—Fitz. N. B. 26; Reg. Brev. 297.

Dote unde nihil habet, a writ of dower that lay for the widow against the tenant, who bought land of her husband in his lifetime, whereof he was solely seised in fee-simple or fee-tail, and of which she was dowable.—Fitz. N. B. 147.

Dotis administratio, admeasurement of dower, where the widow holds more than her share, etc.

Double Avall of Marriage, the double of the value of the vassal's wife's tocher, formerly due to the superior, when the vassal refused a wife equal to him and offered by the superior; but this was modified to three years' rent of the vassal's free estate.—Old Scots Law.

Double Complaint, or Double Quarrel, duplex querela, a grievance made known by a clerk or other person, to the archbishop of the province, against the ordinary, for delaying or refusing to do justice in some cause ecclesiastical, as to give sentence, or institute a clerk, as in the celebrated case of Gorham v. Bishop of Exeter, (1850) 19 L. J. Ex. 376, C. P. 200, Q. B. 279, in which the plaintiff, a clerk, succeeded on appeal in duplex querela against the defendant for not instituting him on the ground of alleged unorthodox views on Baptism, etc. It is termed a double complaint, because it is most commonly made against both the judge and him at whose suit justice is denied or delayed; and by Canon 95 the period of two months which the bishop had to inquire of the sufficiency of a clerk was abridged to twenty-eight days, before the expiration of which a duplex querela could not be brought.

Double or Treble Costs have been frequently granted by statute, e.g., to successful defendants in actions for irregular distress, by the Distress for Rent Act, 1737 (11 Geo. 2, c. 19), s. 20. The true mode of estimating the amount of double costs was first to allow the successful party the single costs, including the expenses of witnesses, counsel's fees, etc., and then allow him one-half of the amount of the single costs, without deducting counsel's fees, etc. Treble costs consisted of the single costs, half the single costs, and half of that half. But the public statutes prior to 1842 which gave these costs were repealed by the Limitations of Actions and Costs Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 97), popularly called 'Pollock's Act,' which enacted that the successful party should be entitled only to full and reasonable costs, to be taxed by the proper officer—an enactment repealed in its turn by the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (see that title).

Double or Treble Damages are given, in some cases, by particular statutes; see, e.g., 2 Wm. & M. sess. 1, c. 5, ss. 4 and 5, which gave double and treble damages for pound breach and wrongful sale upon a distress respectively, but at common law the damages are always single. They are not reckoned in the same manner as double and treble costs, but arithmetically.

Double Entry, a term among merchants to signify that books of account are kept in such a manner that they present the debit and credit of every transaction. It is used in contradistinction to single entry.

Double Insurance takes place when the assured makes two or more insurances on the same subject, the same risk, and the same interest. The assured may recover the amount of his actual loss against any of the insurers, but nothing beyond this, and if he obtains full satisfaction from one of the assurers, the latter is entitled to contribution from the others. Excess of indemnity received by the assured is held by him in trust for the assurers. Double insurance is therefore entirely different from re-insurance, which is effected by the underwriter to secure himself from a loss. Double insurances are not prohibited by the law maritime unless fraudulently made; see Arnould on Marine Insurance, 8th ed. p. 430; the Marine Insurance Act, 1906, ss. 32, 80; Newby v. Reid, (1763) 1 W. Bl. 416.

Double insurance is prohibited under the National Health Insurance, Old Age, and Widows, etc., Contributory Pensions Acts, 1936.

Double Pleading. This was not allowed either in the declaration or subsequent pleadings. Its meaning with respect to the former was, that the declaration must not, in support of a single demand, allege several distinct matters, by any one of which that demand is sufficiently supported. With respect to the subsequent pleadings, the meaning was that none of them was to contain several distinct answers to that which preceded it; and the reason of the rule in each case was, that such pleading tended to several issues in respect of a single claim. See Steph. Plead., pp. 313 et seq.

Double Possibility. Before 1926 it was supposed (see Whitby v. Mitchell, (1890) 44 Ch. D. 85) that a limitation in remainder after a life interest to an unborn person of an interest in land to the unborn child or other issue of an unborn person was void for remoteness. This rule has been abolished by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 161, without prejudice to any other rule against perpetuities.

Double Quarrel. See DOUBLE COMPLAINT.

Double Rent. This is a penalty on a tenant holding over after his own notice to quit has expired. By the Distress for Rent Act, 1737 (11 Geo. 2, c. 19), s. 13, in case any tenant give notice to quit, and shall not deliver up possession at the time in such notice contained, he must from thenceforward pay to the landlord double the rent or sum which he should otherwise have paid. As to the effect of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Acts, 1920 and 1923, see Flannagan v. Shaw, 1920, 3 K. B. 93; Barton v. Fincham, 1921, 2 K. B. at p. 299; Northcote v. Roche, 37 T. L. R. 364. See Woodfall's Landlord and Tenant.

Double Value. This is a penalty on a tenant holding over after his landlord's notice to quit. By the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1730 (4 Geo. 2, c. 28), s. 1, if any tenant for life or years hold over any lands, etc., after the determination of his estate, after demand made, and notice in writing given, for delivering the possession thereof, by the landlord, or the person having the reversion or remainder therein, or his agent thereunto lawfully authorized, such tenant so holding over must pay to the person so kept out of possession at the rate of double the yearly value of the lands, etc., so detained, for so long a time as the same are detained. As to the effect of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Acts, 1920 and 1923, see Crook v. Whitbread, 147 L. T. 80. See now the Act of 1933, ss. 3, 4 (1), and Sched. See Woodfall's Landlord and Tenant.

Double Waste. When a tenant, bound to repair, suffers a house to be wasted, and then unlawfully fells timber to repair it, he is said to commit double waste.

Doubles, letters-patent.

Dow [fr. do, Lat.], to give or endow.

Dowable, entitled to dower.

Dowager, a widow endowed.

Dowager-queen, the widow of a king.

Dower [fr. dos, dotis, Lat., a marriage gift; dotare dower, Fr., endow, to furnish with a marriage portion. Dotarium, M. Lat., dotaire, Prov.; douaire, Fr., a dowry or marriage provision; douairière, a widow in possession of her portion, a dowager], the right which a wife has in the third part of the lands and tenements of which her husband dies possessed in fee-simple, fee-tail general, or as heir in special tail, which she holds from and after his decease, in severalty by metes and bounds, for her life, whether she have issue by her husband or not, and of what age soever she may be at her husband's decease, provided she be past the age of nine years.

The legal estate in dower (being an estate for life) has been abolished and converted into an equitable interest (ibid.), L. P. Act, 1925, s. 1; it can only arise in respect of deaths after 1925 in case the deceased husband was a lunatic or defective on January 1st, 1925, and died without regaining testamentary capacity or before his committee or receiver was discharged, see A. E. Act, 1925, ss. 45 (1) (c) and 51 (2), or in the construction of equitable interests under s. 130, Law of Property Act, 1925, as an entailed interest according to the old law. Although the Dower Act, 1833, has been repealed by the A. E. Act, 1925, s. 45, for deaths after 1925, it is not apparent that the Act does not form an integral part of the old law. Where dower has been assigned by metes and bounds the widow would apparently be a tenant for life within the meaning of s. 1 (4) of the S. L. Act, 1925. Except as against an infant entitled in possession, in which case a settlement arises, a dowress, otherwise than by metes and bounds, apparently retains a share in the land (if the dower has arisen before 1926) analogous to an undivided share, see Williams v. Thomas, 1909, 1 Ch. 713; and Walst. & Ch. Conv. Acts, 12th ed. p. 941. The following note has been preserved verbatim owing to the importance of the subject in relation to titles existing before 1926.

The original law of dower became among our ancestors, with the increase of alienation, highly inconvenient and obstructive of the free course of conveyances. The legislature by the 27 Hen. 8, c. 10 (the Statute of Uses), set about a method of diminishing the evil by providing a jointure in lieu of dower. By effect of this statute no widow can claim both jointure and dower. See JOINTURE.

But this statutable bar was found highly inconvenient, and recourse was had to many ingenious devices to prevent or defeat dower; but they were all more or less imperfect, and at length gave way to the universal practice of making an artificial form of a conveyance, on a purchase of land, which obtained the name of a 'conveyance to uses to bar dower.' The land was conveyed to such uses as the purchaser should appoint, and in default of appointment, to him for life, and on the determination of his estate in his lifetime, to a trustee and his heirs for the life of the purchaser in trust for him, and on the determination of the estate of the trustee, to the purchaser and his heirs.

An equitable bar of dower was deemed sufficient as between vendor and purchaser; as if a wife contract before marriage to relinquish her dower, either in consideration of a substituted provision or of marriage, which is valuable in itself and the highest consideration known to the law.

The Report of the Real Property Commissioners led the way to the passing of the Dower Act (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 105), which places a wife's right to dower entirely at the mercy of her husband. This Act (now repealed by the A. E. Act, 1925, s. 56, 2nd Sched., Part I.), in regard to deaths after 1925, after attaching dower, which formerly was attached to a legal estate only, to an equitable estate also, enacts that—

No widow is entitled to dower out of any land which shall have been absolutely disposed of by her husband in his lifetime or by his will (s. 4). A widow is not entitled to dower out of any land of her husband when, in the deed by which it was conveyed to him, or by any deed executed by him, it shall be declared that his widow shall not be entitled to dower out of such land (s. 6). The widow's right to dower is subject to any conditions, restrictions, or directions which shall be declared by her husband's will (s. 8).

These sections contain the essential alterations made by this Act, and put the widow's dower altogether in the husband's power.

The Act does not extend to the dower of any woman married on or before the 1st January, 1834, and does not give to any will, deed, contract, engagement, or charge executed, entered into, or created before that day, the effect of defeating any right to dower.

No arrears of dower, nor any damages on account thereof, are recoverable by action or suit for more than six years next before the commencement of such action or suit by the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833

(3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27), s. 41. An action for assignment of dower is not within this Act, though the Court may refuse relief on the ground of laches (Williams v. Thomas, 1909, 1 Ch. 713).

Dower unde nihil habet, Writ of, the remedy for a widow to whom no dower had been assigned within the time limited by law.—3 Bl. Com. 183. Abolished by C. L. P. Act, 1860, s. 26.

Dower, Writ of Right of, the remedy for a widow who had been deforced of part of her dower. Abolished by C. L. P. Act, 1860, s. 26.

Dowl and Deal [fr., the Brit. dal, divisio, from the Sax. dælan, i.e., dividere, whence dealing], a division.—Cowell's Law Dict.

Dowle Stones, stones dividing lands, etc.

Dowress, a widow entitled to dower.

Dowry [dos mulieris, Lat.], otherwise called maritagium, or marriage goods, that which the wife brings the husband in marriage. This word should not be confounded with dower.—Co. Litt. 31.

Dozein, a territory of jurisdiction. Stat. 18 Edw. 2. See DECINERS.

Drachm: (1) Apothecaries' weight,  $\frac{1}{8}$  of an ounce; (2) Apothecaries' measure,  $\frac{1}{8}$  of a fluid ounce. Not to be confused with dram (q.v.).

Draft, or Draught, a bill drawn by one person upon another for a sum of money; an order in writing to pay money; also a sketch or suggested form of a legal or any document, etc., to be settled previously to engrossment. Drafts are the property of the client, in business within the Solicitors Remuneration Order, 1882 (see SOLICITOR), by r. 3 of that Order. See CHEQUE.

Dragoman, an interpreter in the East.

Drain. By s. 343 of the Public Health Act, 1936, the following definition is given for that Act if not inconsistent with the context:

'Drain' means a drain used for the drainage of one building or of any buildings or yards appurtenant to buildings within the same curtilage.

'Sewer' does not contain a drain as defined in this section, but, save as aforesaid, includes all sewers and drains used for the drainage of buildings and yards appurtenant to buildings. The definitions under the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 4, and amending Acts, gave rise to some uncertainty, see Humphrey v. Young, 1903, 1 K. B. 44, and Travis v. Utley, 1894, 1 Q. B. 233, and see s. 90 of the 1936 Act.

See PUBLIC SEWER.

Drainage, Sanitary.—Drainage for sanitary purposes is regulated by Part II, ss. 14–52, of the Public Health Act, 1936, which provides (s. 39) that local authorities may enforce drainage of undrained houses, etc.

Agricultural.—Drainage for agricultural purposes is provided for by the Land Drainage Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 44), which provides for the constitution of drainage districts with their respective drainage boards, which districts are to consist of catchment areas or other drainage districts and any drainage districts or areas constituted under the Land Drainage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 133), and any subsequent enactment subject to the provisions of the Act of 1930. Catchment Boards are appointed partly by the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries and partly by local authorities within the catchment area and partly by the Minister consulting internal Drainage Boards; see s. 3 of the L. D. Act, 1930. Drainage Boards are elected by owners and occupiers having votes on a progressive scale, according to the rateable value of their land, s. 5, Sched. ibid. The expenses of Catchment Boards are defrayable out of general rates; of District Boards out of rates levied by these Boards. See Chitty's Statutes.

Drainage of House let furnished. In letting a furnished house it is an established rule that it is fit for occupation, and in Wilson v. Finch-Hatton, (1877) 2 Ex. D. 336, this rule was applied to defective drainage of a London house, and the tenant who had quitted was held liable neither for the rent nor for use and occupation.

Dram,  $\frac{1}{8}$  of an ounce (Weights and Measures Act, 1878, s. 14). Not to be confused with drachm (q.v.) of the Apothecaries' weights.

Dramatic Copyright. See COPYRIGHT.

Draua, or Drecca, a drain or water-course. See 24 & 25 Vict. c. 133.

Drapery [pannaria, Lat.] is used as a head in our old statute books, and extended to the making and manufacturing of all sorts of woollen cloths.

Drawback, a term used in commerce to signify the remitting or paying back upon the exportation of a commodity of the duties previously paid on it.

A drawback is a device resorted to for enabling a commodity affected by taxes to be exported and sold in the foreign market on the same terms as if it had not been taxed at all. It differs from a bounty in this, that the latter enables a commodity to be sold for less than its natural cost, whereas a drawback enables it to be sold exactly at its natural cost. Were it not for the system of drawbacks it would be impossible, unless when a country enjoyed some very peculiar facilities of production, to export any commodity that was more heavily taxed at home than abroad. But the drawback obviates this difficulty, and enables merchants to export commodities loaded at home with heavy duties, and to sell them in the foreign markets on the same terms as those fetched from countries where they are not taxed.

Most articles imported or to be exported into or out of this country may be warehouses for subsequent exportation in bonded warehouses (see 45 & 46 Vict. c. 72; 63 & 64 Vict. c. 7; 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 89; 11 & 12 Geo. 5, c. 32). In this case they pay no duties if imported; and, of course, get no drawback on their exportation.

Sometimes a drawback exceeds the duty or duties laid on the article; and in such cases the excess forms a real bounty of that amount, and should be so considered.

See Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 36), ss. 100, 104, and 117 et seq. Consult Smith's Wealth of Nations.

Drawee, the person on whom a bill of exchange is drawn, who is called, after acceptance, the acceptor. He must be named or otherwise indicated in the bill with reasonable certainty.—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), s. 6. See BILL OF EXCHANGE.

Drawer, the person making a bill of exchange and addressing it to the drawee.

By the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 21, capacity to draw is co-extensive with capacity to contract (except that a corporation is not, by virtue of that section, capable), and by s. 23 signature is essential to liability.

Draw-latches, thieves, robbers, wasters, and roberdsmen.—5 Edw. 3, c. 14; 7 Rich. 2, c. 5.

Dreit Dreit. See DROIT DROIT.

Drenches, or Drenges, tenants in capite. They are said to be such as, at the coming of William the Conqueror, being put out of their estates, were afterwards restored to them, on their making it appear that they were the true owners thereof, and neither in auxilio nor consilio against him.—Spelm.

Drengage, the tenure by which the drenches or drenges held their lands. See preceding title.

Drifts of the Forest [agitatio animalium in foresta, Lat.], a view or examination of what cattle are in a forest, chase, etc., that it may be known whether it be surcharged or not; and whose the beasts are, and whether they are commonable. These drifts are made at certain times in the year by the officers of the forest; when all cattle are driven into some pound or place enclosed for the before-mentioned purposes, and also to discover whether any cattle of strangers be there, which ought not to common.—Mamwood, p. 2, c. xv.

Drift-land, Drofland, or Dryfland, a yearly rent paid by some tenants for driving cattle through a manor to fairs or markets.—Cowel, Law Dict.

Driftway. A way along which there is a right to drive cattle.

Drilling, Unlawful. The Unlawful Drilling Act, 1820, as amended by the Firearms Act, 1920, makes it an offence to attend a meeting in order to drill or to be drilled unless the meeting be authorized by the Crown or a Secretary of State or any officer deputed by him for the purpose.

Drince-lean, or Drink-lean, a contribution from tenants in the time of the Saxons towards a potation, or ale provided to entertain the lord or his steward.

Drinking-fountains may be established in London by sanitary authorities in such convenient and suitable situations as they may deem proper under s. 51 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), which takes the place of s. 70 of the Metropolitan Management Act, 1855.

Drivers, etc., of Carriages. As to misconduct by them, see Highways Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50), s. 78; 6 & 7 Vict. c. 86, s. 35; Town Police Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 89), ss. 37 et seq.; Offences against the Person Act, 1861, s. 35; Licensing Act, 1872, s. 12; Metropolitan Police Act, 1839, s. 54; and the Road Traffic Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 43), as amended by 24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 50, and see DRUNKENNESS. As to licensing, etc., of drivers of motor cars, see MOTOR CAR.

Drolden, a grove or woody place where cattle were kept.—Jac. Law Dict.

Droit [Fr.], right, justice, equity. The many writs of droit or right used in our law were all abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, except a writ of dower, or writ of dower unde nihil habet, which were in their turn abolished by the C. L. P. Act, 1860, s. 26.

Droits of Admiralty, the perquisites attached to the office of Admiral of England (or Lord High Admiral). Prince George of Denmark, the husband of Queen Anne and Lord High Admiral, resigned the rights to these droits to the Crown for a salary, as Lord High Admiral, of 7,000*l.* a year. When the office was vacant, they belonged to the Crown. Of these perquisites, the most valuable is the right to the property of an enemy seized on the breaking out of hostilities. In the arrangement of the Civil List during the recent reigns, it was settled that whatever droits of Admiralty accrued were to be paid into the Exchequer for the use of the public. The Lord High Admiral's right to the tenth part of the property captured on the seas has been relinquished in favour of the captors. Droits of Admiralty also included all unclaimed wreck, flotsam, jetsam, ligan and derelict, which are now dealt with by the Receiver of Wreck for the district, Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 523–528; and Droits of Admiralty must be distinguished from Droits of the Crown in time of war, see PRIZE. The Admiralty jurisdiction in the High Court, however, extends to trover property and ships recaptured from pirates, Judic. Act, 1925, s. 22.

Droit d'aubaine [jus albinatus, Lat., i.e., alibi natus, born elsewhere], in old French law, a right of the king, entitling him, at the death of an alien, to all such alien was worth, unless he had a peculiar exemption.

Droit-droit, or jus duplicatum, a double right, i.e., the right of possession joined with the right of property, which makes a complete title to lands, tenements, and hereditaments. And when to this double right the actual possession is also united, when there is, according to the expression in Fleta, juris et seisinæ conjunctio, then, and then only, is the title to property completely legal.—2 Bl. Com. 199.

Droitlural, relating to right.

Dromoes, dromos, dromunda, ships of great burden; men-of-war.—Walsing. Anno 1292.

Droog, a fortified hill or rock.—Indian.

Drop: When the members of a court are equally divided on the argument showing cause against a rule nisi, no order is made, i.e., the rule is neither discharged nor made absolute, and is said to drop. In practice, there being a right to appeal, it has been usual to make an order in one way, the junior judge withdrawing his judgment; see e.g., Bunch v. Great Western Railway Company, (1886) 17 Q. B. D. at p. 217.

Drovers, those that buy cattle in one place to sell in another. See 5 Eliz. c. 12, repealed by 12 Geo. 3, c. 71, s. 1.—Jac. Law Dict.

Dru, a thicket or wood.—Domesday Book.

Drugs, adulteration of, see the Sale of Food and Drugs (Adulteration) Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 31); and ADULTERATION.

Drugs, Dangerous. The importation, exportation, manufacture, sale, and use of opium and other dangerous drugs is regulated by the Dangerous Drugs Act, 1920 to 1932. Raw opium may only be imported and exported under license and at approved ports, and regulations are authorized for restricting its production, possession, sale, and distribution. The importation or exportation of opium prepared for smoking is absolutely prohibited. Medicinal opium, morphine, cocaine, ecgonine, heroin, and new drugs specified by Order in Council may only be imported or exported by license: their manufacture and sale are regulated. Wide powers of arrest are given to the police and severe penalties provided for offenders against these Acts. The Extradition Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 39), includes offences in relation to dangerous drugs and attempts to commit such offences, among extradition crimes. See also the Pharmacy Act, 1868, and the Poisons and Pharmacy Act, 1908. See CHEMISTS AND DRUGGISTS; POISON.

Drunkenness, intoxication with strong liquor; habitual inebriety. A contract made by a person when so drunk as to be unable to understand what he is doing is voidable if the person with whom the contract was made was aware of the fact, but it is not void, and may be ratified when he becomes sober (Mathews v. Baxter, (1873) L. R. 8 Ex. 132). Mere drunkenness was punishable by statutes 4 Jac. 1, c. 5, and 21 Jac. 1, c. 7, ss. 1, 3, by a fine of five shillings and confinement in the stocks in default of distress. Under the Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), which repeals various previous enactments, drunkenness in a public place or licensed house is punishable by fine (s. 12). Disorderly drunkenness is punishable by fine or imprisonment, and refusal by drunken persons to quit licensed premises is punishable by fine (Licensing Consolidation Act, 1910, s. 80).

The 1st section of the Licensing Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7, c. 28), enacts that—

If a person is found drunk in any highway or other public place [which by s. 8 includes both for the purposes of that Act and of s. 12 of the Act of 1872, 'any place to which the public have access, whether on payment or otherwise'] . . . or on any licensed premises, and appears to be incapable of taking care of himself, he may be apprehended and dealt with according to law.

The 3rd section of the same Act empowers a court on conviction of a drunkard to order him to enter into a recognizance, with or without sureties, to be of good behaviour, and the 4th section enacts that—

Where a licensed person is charged with permitting drunkenness on his premises, and it is proved that any person was drunk on his premises, it shall lie on the licensed person to prove that he and the persons employed by him took all reasonable steps for preventing drunkenness on the premises; and see DRIVER.

By the law of England drunkenness is no excuse for a crime. 'A drunkard,' says Sir Edward Coke (1 Inst. 247), 'who is voluntarius dæmon, has no privilege thereby; but what hurt or ill soever he doth, his drunkenness doth aggravate it; nam crimen ebrietas et incendit et delegit.' Nevertheless, 'although drunkenness is no excuse for any crime whatever, yet it is often of very great importance where it is a question of intention. A person may be so drunk as to be utterly unable to form any intention at all, and yet he may be guilty of very great violence.'—Per Patterson, J., in R. v. Cruse, (1838) 8 C. & P. 541. Thus if a man is so drunk that he is incapable of knowing that what he is doing is dangerous or likely to inflict serious injury he will not be guilty of murder (R. v. Meade 1909, 1 K. B. 895; but see R. v. Beard, 1920, A. C. 479).

Habitual Drunkards.—The confinement of habitual drunkards is regulated by the Habitual Drunkards Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 19), as amended by the Inebriates Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 19), which made the Act of 1879 perpetual, and the Inebriates Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 60). The Act of 1879 defines an habitual drunkard as a 'person who, not being amenable to any jurisdiction in lunacy, is, notwithstanding, by reason of habitual intemperate drinking of intoxicating liquor, at times dangerous to himself or herself, or to others, or incapable of managing himself or herself, and his or her affairs,' and this definition applies under the Act of 1898, with which it is construed as one. But while the Act of 1879 applied only to persons voluntarily submitting themselves thereto in the first instance, the Act of 1898 is compulsory in certain cases, authorizing the Court to order the detention in an inebriate reformatory of an habitual drunkard convicted on indictment of an offence committed under the influence of drink, and punishable with imprisonment or penal servitude; and the Act also enacts that—

Any person who commits any of the offences mentioned in the first schedule to this Act [i.e., being found drunk in a public place or committing other offences under s. 12 of the Licensing Act, 1872, or otherwise similarly punishable], and who within the twelve months preceding the date of the commission of the offence has been convicted summarily at least three times of any offences so mentioned, and who is a habitual drunkard, shall be liable upon conviction on indictment, or if he consents to be dealt with summarily on summary conviction, to be detained for a term not exceeding three years in any certified inebriate reformatory the managers of which are willing to receive him.

The expenses of a prosecution are by an Act of 1899 payable out of the local rates; but an habitual drunkard cannot be placed on a 'black list' (see below) without his consent (Donovan's case, 1903, 1 K. B. 895; and see R. v. Briggs, 1909, 1 K. B. 381, and HABITUAL DRUNKARD).

Black List.—The 'black list' above spoken of is the popular term for the list which a licensed person would, probably for his own purposes, frame on receiving notice of conviction of an habitual drunkard, together with a statement of his name, address, and occupation, and description of his personal appearance, in order to refrain from supplying him with intoxicating liquor in pursuance of s. 9 of the Act of 1902 and the elaborate Home Office Regulations issued in aid of that enactment. See BLACK LIST.

'Certified inebriate reformatories' may be certified as such by the Secretary of State if satisfied of their fitness, on the application of the council of any county or borough; or of any persons desirous of establishing an inebriate reformatory; and 'State inebriate reformatories' may also be established by the Secretary of State and maintained out of moneys provided by Parliament. 'Retreats' may also be licensed by borough and county councils, which councils are also empowered to contribute to their maintenance. In such retreats habitual drunkards, voluntarily submitting themselves, may be detained compulsorily for not more than two years. The drunkard, if he escapes from the retreat, may be apprehended and sent back by order of a justice of the peace.

See also Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, s. 80; Refreshment Houses Act, 1860, s. 41; Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 287; Firearms Act, 1920, s. 2; Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 12), ss. 5, 6 (children in bars of licensed premises), repealed 1932 Act. By s. 15 of the Road Traffic Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 43), any person driving or attempting to drive or in charge of a motor vehicle in a road or other public place while under the influence of drink or drugs is liable to fine, imprisonment, and disqualification for 12 months or more for holding or obtaining a license.

Dry Exchange [cambium siccum, Lat.], a term invented in former times for the disguising and covering of usury, in which something was intended to pass on both sides, whereas nothing passed but on one side, in which respect it was called dry; punished by 3 Hen. 7, c. 5.

Dry Miltures, corn paid to the owner of a mill, whether the payers grind or not.—Scots Law.

Dry-Rent, a rent reserved without clause of distress. See RENT-SECK.

Duarchy [fr. δύο, and ἀρχή, Gk.], a form of government where two reign jointly.

Duces tecum, subpœna (you shall bring with you under penalty). If a person, even if he be a party to a cause, have in his possession any written instrument, etc., which it is desired to put in evidence at the trial, instead of the common subpœna he is served with a subpœna duces tecum, commanding him to bring it with him and produce it at the trial. Upon being served with a copy of this subpœna, he must attend at the trial with the instrument required, and produce it in evidence, unless he have some lawful or reasonable excuse for withholding it, of the validity of which excuse the Court and not the witness is to judge. It is no excuse that the legal custody of the instrument belongs to another, if it be in the actual possession of the witness; but if it tend to criminate himself or his client (if the witness be a solicitor), or if it be his title-deed, the Court will not compel him to produce it.

If the witness, instead of bringing the papers, etc., required, deliver them to the opposite party, by whom they are withheld, the Court will allow secondary evidence of the contents of them to be given, without a notice to produce the originals. A witness, producing papers under a subpœna duces tecum, need not be sworn unless he be examined.

Duces tecum licet languidus, a writ directed to the sheriff upon a return that he cannot bring his prisoner without danger of death, he being adeo languidus; whereupon the Court grants a habeas corpus in the nature of a duces tecum licet languidus. But this has long since been out of use; and where the person's life would be endangered by removal, the law will not permit it to be done.

Duchy Court of Lancaster, a tribunal of special jurisdiction, held before the chancellor of the duchy or his deputy, concerning all matters of equity relating to lands holden of the Crown in right of the Duchy of Lancaster, but not necessarily in Lancashire, and the Duchy Court which has not been abolished and has not sat for upwards of a century must not be confused with the Chancery Court of County Palatine (q.v.). The proceedings were similar to those on the Equity side of the Courts of Exchequer and Chancery, and the Chancery Court exercised a concurrent jurisdiction with the Duchy Court, so that it seems not to be a Court of Record. See COUNTY PALATINE.

Duchy of Cornwall. See CORNWALL.

Ducking-stool. See CASTIGATORY.

Ducroire [Fr.], guaranty; equivalent to DEL CREDERE, which see.

Due [fr. du, Fr.], anything owing. That which one contracts to pay or perform to another; that which law or justice requires to be paid or done.

It should be observed that a debt is said to be due the instant that it has existence as a debt; it may be payable at a future time.

Duel, in our ancient law, a legal combat between persons in a doubtful case for the trial of the truth, long since disused.

In modern times a duel is a combat with weapons between two persons upon some quarrel precedent, wherein, if one of them is killed, the other and the seconds are guilty of murder whether the seconds fight or not.—Hawk. Pl. 47.

Notwithstanding that this was the undoubted law, duels were by no means unfrequent in England up to about the middle of the nineteenth century, e.g., the Duke of Wellington exchanged shots without effect with Lord Winchelsea in 1829; Lord Cardigan wounded Captain Tuckett, and was tried before, and acquitted by, the House of Lords in 1841; and Mr. Seton was killed by Lieutenant Hawkey in 1845. For a full list of celebrated duels, see Haydn's Dictionary of Dates, tit. 'Duel.'

It is a misdemeanor to challenge another to fight, or to provoke another to send a challenge (R. v. Phillips, (1805) 6 East, 464); and fighting or promoting a duel renders an officer liable to be cashiered and a soldier to suffer imprisonment by s. 38 (founded upon Articles of War made in 1844) of the Army Act (44 & 45 Vict. c. 58).

Dues, certain payments; rates or taxes.

Duke, the highest order amongst the nobility. The first duke in England was the Black Prince, who was created Duke of Cornwall in the eleventh year of Edward III. See NOBILITY.

Duke of Exeter's Daughter, a rack in the Tower, so called after a minister of Henry VI., who sought to introduce it into this country.

Dulocracy [fr. δούλος, Gk., a servant, and κράτος, power], a government where servants and slaves have so much license and privilege that they domineer.

Duly, in a contract for payment of a sum of money, does not mean 'punctually,' and payment after the stipulated time will suffice; see Starkey v. Barton, 1909, 1 Ch. 284.

Dum-barge, a barge without sails or oars.

Dum bene se gesserit. See QUAMDIU SE BENE GESSERIT.

Dum Bidding, in sales at auctions, when the amount which the owner of the thing sold was willing to take for the article was written, and placed by the owner under a candlestick or other things, and it was agreed that no bidding should avail unless equal to that amount.

Dum casta virerit (so long as she shall live chaste). In deeds of separation of husband and wife, it is not uncommonly provided that the allowance thereby insured by the husband to the wife shall continue only so long as she shall live a chaste life. This proviso is termed the 'dum casta clause.' As to the insertion of such a clause when the Court, in decreeing a dissolution of marriage, orders the husband to make an allowance to the wife, see Squire v. Squire, 1905, P. 4.

Dum fuit infra ætatem (while he was within age), an abolished writ whereby one who had made a feoffment of his lands while an infant might, when he came of full age, recover them. Within age, he might enter into the land and take it back again, and by his entry he was remitted to his ancestor's right.—Fitz. N. B. 192.

Dum fuit in prisonâ (while he was in prison), an abolished writ whereby one who had made a feoffment of his lands while a man to lands which he had aliened under duress of imprisonment.—2 Inst. 482.

Dum non fuit compos mentis (while he was not of sound mind), an abolished writ that lay, when a man not of sound mind had aliened any lands or tenements, to recover them from the alienee.—Fitz. N. B. 499.

Dum sola, whilst single or unmarried.

Dun, a mountain or high open place. The names of places ending in dun or don were either built on hills, or near them in open places.

Duna, a bank of earth thrown out of a ditch.—Old Records.

Dungeon, such an underground prison as was formerly placed in the strongest part of a fortress; a close prison, dark or subterraneous.

Dunlo, a double, a kind of base coin less than a farthing.—Old Records.

Dunnage, pieces of wood or other material placed against the sides and bottom of the hold of a vessel, to stow the cargo.

Dunsetts, people that dwell on hilly places.—Old Records.

Dunum, or Duna [fr. dunnarium, Lat.], a down or hill.

Duo de Concilio, probably a clerical error or in a contracted form of 'domini de Concilio.' The lords of the council.

Duo non possunt in solido unam rem possidere. Co. Litt. 368.—(Two cannot possess the whole of one thing in specie.)

Duodena, a jury of twelve men.

Duodena manu, twelve witnesses to purge a criminal of an offence.

Duplex querela (a double plaint), a process ecclesiastical, in the nature of an appeal from the refusal of an ordinary to institute, to his next immediate superior. See DOUBLE COMPLAINT.

Duplicate, second letters-patent, granted by the Lord Chancellor in the same term as the first when the letters were void; a copy or transcript of a deed, or other writing; the ticket given by a pawnbroker (see that title) to the pawner of a chattel.

Duplicate Will, where a testator executes two copies of his will, one to keep himself and the other to be deposited with another person. Upon application for probate of a duplicate will, both copies must be deposited in the registry of the Court of Probate.

Duplicatio, the Roman pleading answering to our rejoinder.

Duplicity, the term corresponding to double pleading in law. See DOUBLE PLEADING and PLEADING.

Durante, during; as durante bene placito, during pleasure; durante minore etate, during minority; durante viduitate, during widowhood; durante vita, during life.

Durbar, a court, a hall of audience, a levee.—Indian.

Durden, a thicket of wood in a valley.—Cowel's Law Dict.

Duress [fr. duressse, Fr.; durities, Lat., constraint], imprisonment, compulsion.

Duress is either by imprisonment or by threats. In order to constitute duress by imprisonment, either the imprisonment or the duress consequent upon it must be tortious and unlawful.

By the Common Law, a contract made during duress is not void, but voidable; and the person upon whom it is practised may avail himself of the duress as a special defence to an action thereupon at any time. But the person who has employed the force cannot allege it as a defence, if the contract be insisted upon by the other.

Where a person is not a free agent, and is not able to protect himself, the Court will protect him, and will set aside a contract made under duress. Circumstances also of extreme necessity and distress of the party, although not accompanied by any direct restraint or duress, may, in like manner, so entirely overcome his free agency as to justify the Court in setting aside a contract made by him on account of some oppression or fraudulent advantage, or imposition, attendant upon it. See Scott v. Sebright, (1886) 12 P. D. 21, in which Butt, J., declared a marriage void on the petition of the wife.

Durham, County Palatine of. The jurisdiction which was, for a long time, vested in the Bishop of Durham for the time being, was taken from him by 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 19, which is amended by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 45, and vested as a separate franchise and royalty in the Crown.

As to the jurisdiction of the Durham Court of Chancery, see these Acts; appeals from the Chancellor of Durham lie to the Court of Appeal (Jud. Act, 1925, s. 28); and as to the Durham Court of Pleas, see 33 Geo. 3, c. 68, and 2 & 3 Vict. c. 16, ss. 4–37, and the Palatine Court of Durham Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 47); the Durham Court of Pleas is now abolished and its jurisdiction transferred to the High Court of Justice (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 16). See also COUNTY PALATINE.

The jurisdiction of the Durham Court of Chancery within its territorial limits is coextensive and concurrent with that of the Chancery Division of the High Court; Judic. Act, 1925, s. 18.

Dursley, blows without wounding or bloodshed; dry blows.—Blount.

Dustuck, a term used in Hindustan for a passport, permit, or order from the English East India Company. It generally meant a permit under their seal, exempting goods from the payment of duties.—Encyc. Londin.

Dusty-foot. See PIEDPOUDRE.

Dutch Auction, the setting up of property for sale by auction above its value, and gradually lowering the price till some person takes it.

Duty, a tax, an impost, or imposition; also an obligation. See PENSION.

Dwindled, consumed, whence the word dwindle.—Jac. Law Dict.

Dyeing and Bleaching Works are 'non-textile factories' within the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901. See FACTORY.

Dying Declarations. See DEATH-BED DECLARATIONS.

Dyke-reed, or Dyke-reve, an officer who has the care and oversight of the dykes and drains in fenny countries.

Dynamite. The storage and carriage of dynamite is regulated by the Explosives Act, 1875; and see EXPLOSIVES. The use of it in public fisheries was prohibited by the Fisheries Dynamite Act, 1877, extended by the Freshwater Fisheries Act, 1878, s. 12, to private fisheries. Now see Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act, 1923.

Dysnomy [fr. δύς, ill, Gk., and νομος, law], the act of making bad laws.

Dyvour (otherwise Bare-man), a Scotch term for a person involved in debt, and unable to pay his creditors; synonymous with the word bankrupt.—Skene.

E.

Ea [Sax.], the water or river; also the mouth of a river on the shore between high and low watermark.

Ealder, or Ealding, an elder or chief. See ADELING.

Ealderman, or Ealdorman. See ALDERMAN.

Ealdor-biscep, an archbishop.

Ealdorburg [Sax.], the metropolis; the chief city.

Ealehus [fr. eale, Sax., ale, and hus, house], an alehouse.

Earl [fr. eorl, Sax.; eoryl, Erse; comes, Lat.], a title of nobility, formerly the highest in England, now the third, ranking between a marquis and a viscount, and corresponding with the French Comte and the German Graf. The title originated with the Saxons, and is the most ancient of the English peerage. William the Conqueror first made it hereditary. An earl has an hereditary seat in the House of Lords. In official instruments he is called by the sovereign 'trusty and well-beloved cousin,' an appellation as ancient as the reign of Henry IV., who was, as a fact, related to the greater part of the nobles (see Shakespeare's Henry IV., Second Part, Act 2, sc. 2), and took this public notice of it as a means of popularity.

Earl Marshal of England, a great officer of state who had anciently several courts under his jurisdiction, as the Court of Chivalry and the Court of Honour. Under him is the Herald's Office, or College of Arms. This office of Earl Marshal is of great antiquity, and has been since 1672 hereditary in the family of the Howards, the present holder being the Duke of Norfolk.—3 Steph. Com.

Earldom, the seigniorship of an earl; the title and dignity of an earl.

Earles-penny, money given in part payment. See EARNEST.

Earmark, a mark for identification. Money has no earmark, but it is an ordinary term for a privy mark made by any one on a coin, but money in a purse or container and set aside for a purpose, i.e., may be traced. As to the appropriation of payments, see CLAYTON'S CASE.

Earnest [fr. cornest, Sax.], the sum paid by the buyer of goods in order to bind the seller to the terms of the agreement. It is enacted by the 4th section of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, re-enacting, but not quite in the same words, the 17th section of the Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. 2, c. 3, that 'a contract for the sale of any goods, for the price of 10*l.* or upwards, shall not be enforceable by action, unless the buyer accept part of the goods or give something in earnest to bind the contract, or in part payment,' or some note in writing of the bargain be made and signed by the parties to be charged or their agents.

As to what amount is sufficient earnest, Blackstone lays it down (Bk. II. p. 447) that 'if any part of the price is paid down, if it be but a penny, or any portion of the goods is delivered by way of earnest, it is binding. To constitute earnest the thing must be given as a token of ratification of the contract, and it should be expressly stated so by the giver.

Earwitness, one who attests, or can attest, anything as heard by himself.

Easement, a privilege without profit which the owner of one neighbouring tenement hath of another, existing in respect of their several tenements, by which the owner of the one (called the servient) tenement is obliged to suffer, or not to do something on his own land, for the advantage of the owner of the other (called the dominant) tenement, e.g., a right of way, a right of passage of water. It is the servitus of the Civil Law. An easement being a mere right without profit must be distinguished from a profit à prendre (q.v.), which confers a right to take something from the servient tenement. Instances of easements are rights of way, light, support, or flow of water. Easements have been classified as positive, such as a right of way, or for advertisement, a pew or grave, or negative, such as light, water, or the submission to a nuisance; continuous, such as a path or road; discontinuous, for intermittent use; apparent or patent; non-apparent, where there is no external indication that it exists, and easements of necessity or not of necessity. Easements of necessity arise by implied grant upon a severance of property without which the property granted, or retained, as the case may be, would be useless, but except for easements strictly of necessity there is no implication that the grantor has reserved any easement, however useful to his property it may be. Such easements must be expressly provided for either in the conveyance or by a regrant by the grantee of the land. See Wheeldon v. Burrows, (1879) 12 Ch. D. 31. An easement is an incorporeal hereditament, which from its nature can only be created by grant: hence the origin of all easements may be referred to a grant by the owner of the servient tenement either expressed or implied. In the majority of cases the right is founded upon the implication of a grant, the terms of which can only be ascertained from the actual enjoyment of the easement.

(1) Where a right of way had been enjoyed longer than living memory and the land had been settled for longer than living memory so that there was never any person during that period who could have dedicated the way absolutely, it was held that there was no evidence that the way had not been dedicated before living memory and the grant was presumed (Williams & Ellis v. Cobb, 1935, 1 K. B. 310).

(2) By severance of one tenement in two parts.

By s. 62, sub-ss. (1), (2), of the Law of Property Act, 1925, replacing s. 6 (1), (2) of the C. Act, 1881, easements are included in a conveyance of land by implication, and see s. 205 (1) (xxiii.) of the L. P. Act, 1925, and by the same Act, s. 1 (2), an easement in or over land for an interest equivalent to an estate in fee simple absolute in possession or a term of years absolute is capable of subsisting and being conveyed or created at law. All other easements are equitable—by s. 187, ibid., easements over or in relation to land may be enjoyed in common with any other person. Equitable easements created after 1925 must be registered before completion of purchase of a legal estate under s. 10, Class D (iii.) of the Land Charges Act, 1925, or they will be void against a purchaser of a legal estate for money or money's worth even though he may have notice aliunde. In all other cases notice (see ss. 197–199 of the L. P. Act, 1925) will affect a purchaser or grantee. Equitable easements affecting land within any of the three Ridings in Yorkshire must be registered locally, see L. P. (Amendment) Act, 1926, amending the Land Charges Act, 1925, s. 10. Upon a reservation by a grantor of any easement in a conveyance to the grantee of a legal estate in an easement, the grantee need not execute the conveyance (s. 65, L. P. Act, 1925).

(3) By prescription. Easements are extinguished pro tem. by the union of the dominant and servient tenements in one owner and revive upon severance in favour of the grantee or both or more of the grantees. They are also extinguished by release, by the disappearance of the dominant or servient property, by lapse of time or disuse. See EXTINGUISHMENT. See Gale on Easements; Goddard on Easements; and the title PRESCRIPTION.

East India Company. The East India Company was originally established for prosecuting the trade between England and India, which they acquired a right to carry on exclusively. By the middle of the eighteenth century, however, the company's political affairs had become of far more importance than their commerce. In 1858, by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 106, the government of the territories of the company was transferred to the Crown. Consult Mill's History of British India; Jac. Law Dict. See INDIA.

Easter [fr. Ostern, Ger., supposed to be derived from the name of the Teutonic goddess Ostera (oster, to rise), celebrated by the ancient Saxons early in the spring], a movable feast of the church, held in memory of our Saviour's resurrection.

Easter Day, on which all the other movable feasts and holy days of the church depend, is always the first Sunday after the Full Moon which happens upon, or next after, the twenty-first day of March; and if the Full Moon happens upon a Sunday, Easter Day is the Sunday after.—Book of Common Prayer.

Easter Monday is made a Bank Holiday by 34 & 35 Vict. c. 17, and 38 & 39 Vict. c. 13.

Easter Offerings, or Easter Dues, small sums of money paid to the parochial clergy by the parishioners at Easter as a compensation for personal tithes, or the tithe for personal labour; recoverable under 7 & 8 Wm. 3, c. 6, before justices of the peace. See Reg. v. Hall, (1868) L. R. 1 Q. B. 632. In that case the vicar of Batley in Yorkshire was held entitled to recover, on evidence of a custom, for every communicant, 2d.; every cow, 2d.; every plough, 2d.; every foal, 1s.; every hive of bees, 1d.; every house, 3d.; and the question whether a payment of 2d. per head for every member of a family of or above the age of sixteen was left open. A Rubric at the end of the Communion Service of the Prayer Book to the effect that 'yearly at Easter every Parishioner shall reckon with the Parson, Vicar, or Curate, or his or their Deputy or Deputies, and pay to them or him all Ecclesiastical Duties accustomably due, then and at that time to be paid,' probably refers to such specific payments as those in Reg. v. Hall. General freewill offerings raised by churchwardens in pursuance of a Bishop's letter are assessable to Income Tax, under Schedule E of the Income Tax Act, 1842, as perquisites accruing by reason of office (Cooper v. Blakiston, 1909, A. C. 104).

Easter Sittings of the Court of Appeal and High Court of Justice commence on the Tuesday after Easter week, and terminate on the Friday before Whitsunday (R. S. C. 1883, Ord. LXIII., r. 1), as amended, 1935.

Easter Term, formerly called a movable term, but afterwards fixed, beginning on the 15th of April and ending on the 8th of May in every year. See 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 70, s. 6; see now Jud. Act, 1925, s. 52, abolishing terms, s. 53, with power to regulate vacations.

Easter Vacation in the Supreme Court commences on Good Friday and terminates on Easter Tuesday (R. S. C. 1883, Ord. LXIII., r. 4). See VACATION.

Easterling, a coin struck by Richard II., which is supposed to have given rise to the name of sterling as applied to English money.

Eastland Company, a company which subsisted under a charter granted by Queen Elizabeth in 1579 for regulating the commerce to the ports of the Baltic. The trade was subsequently thrown open by the Stat. 25 Car. 2, c. 7.

Eat inde sine die, words used on the acquittal of a defendant, 'that he may go thence without a day,' i.e., be dismissed without any further trial or adjournment.

Eaves. The edge of a roof, built so as to project over the walls of a house in order that the rain may drop therefrom to the ground instead of running down the wall.

Eavesdroppers, persons who listen under walls or windows, or the eaves of a house, to hearken after discourse, and thereupon to frame slanderous and mischievous tales. They were in early times presentable at the court-leet, or indictable at the sessions, and punishable by fine and finding sureties for good behaviour.—2 Hawk. P. C., c. x., s. 58.

Ebdomadarius, an officer in cathedral churches who supervised the regular performance of divine service, and prescribed the particular duties of each person in the choir.

Eberemorth, Eberemors, Ebere-murder. See ABEREMURDER.

Ecclesiastic, or Ecclesiastical, something belonging to or set apart for the church, as distinguished from civil or secular, with regard to the world.

Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England, a body corporate established by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 77), the long preamble of which sets out the recommendations as to the more equal distribution of episcopal duties and revenues of two previous Royal Commissions, empowered to suggest measures conducive to the efficiency of the Established Church to be ratified by Orders in Council. Church Estates Commissioners are appointed ex officio members of this corporation. See amending Acts of 1840, 1841, 1850, 1860, and 1873 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113; 4 & 5 Vict. c. 39; 13 & 14 Vict. c. 94; 23 & 24 Vict. c. 124; 36 & 37 Vict. c. 64); and subsequent Acts; and CHURCH BUILDING ACTS; also Welsh Church Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 91).

Ecclesiastical Corporations. Corporations created for the furtherance of religion, and for the perpetuation of the rights of the church, the members of which are exclusively spiritual persons. They are of two kinds: corporations sole—viz., bishops, certain deans, parsons, and vicars; and corporations aggregate—viz., deans and chapters, and formerly prior and convent, abbot and monks, and the like. For a statutory definition see 14 & 15 Vict. c. 104, s. 11.

Ecclesiastical Courts [curiæ Christianitatis, Lat.] are the Archdeacon's Court, the Consistory Courts, the Court of Arches, the Courts of Peculiars, the Prerogative Courts of the two archbishops, the Faculty Court, and the Privy Council, which is the Appeal Court.

Ecclesiastical Dilapidations. The liability of an incumbent to make good dilapidations in the parsonage house is governed by the Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Measures, 1923 to 1929 (14 & 15 Geo. 5, No. 3, and 19 & 20 Geo. 5, No. 3), which have replaced the former Acts (34 & 35 Vict. c. 43 and 35 & 36 Vict. c. 96). The 54th section of the Act of 1871 directs incumbents to insure.

Ecclesiastical Division of England is into provinces, dioceses, archdeaconries, rural deaneries, and parishes.

Ecclesiastical Law, the law administered in the ecclesiastical courts; it is derived from the Civil and Canon Law. Consult Phillimore's Ecclesiastical Law; Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Church and Clergy.'

Ecdicus [fr. ἐκδικος, Gk., from ἐκ and δίκη, justice], an attorney or proctor of a corporation; a recorder.—Civil Law.

E converso, conversely. See CONVERSE.

Ecumenical [fr. οἰκουμένη, Gk., the habitable world], general, universal; as an Ecumenical Council.

Edderbrecche [Sax.], the offence of hedge-breaking. Obsolete.

Edestia [fr. ædes, Lat.], buildings.

Edia, ease; aid or help.

Edict [fr. edictum, Lat.], a proclamation, command, or prohibition; a law promulgated.

Education. Mr. Forster's Elementary Education Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 75), is the starting point in the history of the provision by legislation of a general system of education. Before this date education had been dealt with either as a series of individual problems in respect of which provisions were made for the education of special classes of persons, or by executive, as opposed to legislative methods, as, for example, by a system of grants in aid. This Act was followed by a series of Acts, known collectively as the Education Acts, 1870 to 1919, which together established a system of free and compulsory elementary education of a non-denominational character. The initial Act established 'school boards' with powers of building and maintaining elementary schools and of regulating the attendance of school children between the ages of 5 and 13. The El. Ed. Act, 1876, declared 'the duty of the parent of every child to cause such child to receive efficient elementary education in reading, writing and arithmetic,' and contained provisions directed to enforcing attendance at schools. The Board of Education (q.v.) was established in 1889 in place of the Education Department of the Privy Council. In 1900 the age for leaving school was raised to 14 (El. Ed. Act, 1900), and two years later 'local education authorities' (i.e., county and borough councils) were substituted for school boards with power to control secular education in non-provided schools (El. Ed. Act, 1902). The El. Ed. Act, 1918, made provision for the establishment by the local education authorities of continuation schools at which young persons must attend (with certain exceptions). See now the Education Act, 1921, ss. 75 et seq.

The Education Act, 1921 (11 & 12 Geo. 5, c. 51), consolidates the existing statutes, and thus substantially codifies the law on this subject. Part III. deals with the Elementary Schools; Part IV. School Attendance; Part V. Blind, Deaf, Defective and Epileptic Children; Part VI. Higher Education, Continuation Schools, etc. See also Education (Institution Children) Act, 1923, and S. R. & O. and a number of later Acts, amongst which the Education Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 41), has raised the school-leaving age for children to 15 years, and with a corresponding amendment to the age of employment of children in the Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 12). See, further, The State in Relation to Education (Craik); Owen's Education Act Manual; Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Education,' and under various Acts; Halsbury's Laws of England, and supplements; and the titles CONSCIENCE CLAUSE; COWPER-TEMPLE CLAUSE; KENYON-SLANEY CLAUSE; ENDOWED SCHOOLS; INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS; PUBLIC SCHOOLS; REFORMATORY SCHOOLS; and the four titles next below.

Education, Board of. The central authority as to education (s. 1, Education Act, 1921) was established by the Board of Education Act, 1899. There is a Consultative Committee for advising the Board (s. 2 of the 1921 Act). The Board never, in fact, meets, but its duties are carried out by the President, who is usually a member of the Cabinet. It superseded the Education Department (q.v.).

Education Code. A parliamentary grant is made annually to schools on conditions set forth in the document called the Code, issued annually by the Board of Education (Education Act, 1921), ss. 118–120, Sched., s. 170 (19).

Education Committee, is a committee established by a local education authority, which has to report on questions of elementary education, other than finance, before action is taken (see Education Act, 1921, s. 4).

Education Department, 'the Lords of the Committee of the Privy Council on Education' (Elementary Education Act, 1870, s. 3). It was superseded by the Board of Education (q.v.) in 1889.

Eel-fares, a fry or brood of eels.—25 Hen. 8, c. 4. See EELS.

Eels. By the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act, 1923 (13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 16), s. 35, no person is to fish for eels by rod and line during the annual close season for freshwater fish; s. 36 prohibits the use of eel baskets between 31st December and 25th June; but eels and the fry of eels are not freshwater fish by s. 92; there is a close season for elvers (which includes the fry of eels) in the Severn fishery district between 31st December and 1st March, also between 25th April and 25th June (s. 87). See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Fish.'

Effects, property, goods, and chattels.

Effeerers. See AFFERORS.

Effendi, master; a title of respect.—Turkish.

Efforcelalter, forcibly; applied to military force.

Efractor [fr. ex, out of, and frango, Lat., to break], one that breaks through; a burglar.

Effusio sanguinis, the mulct, fine, or penalty imposed by the old English laws for the shedding of blood, which the king granted to many lords of manors.—Tomkins' Law Dict.

Efters [Sax.], ways, walks, or hedges.

Eftsoons, soon afterwards; see 13 Eliz. c. 12, s. 2.

E.G. [exempli gratia], for the sake of an instance or example.

Eggs. Of Poultry.—For hatching: importation may be regulated by the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries by 25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 31. As to marking and grade designation marks, see 18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 19, and sale of eggs under that designation, 23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 40, and see ANIMALS.

Of Game.—The destruction or taking of or possessing eggs of any kind of game, or swan, wild duck, teal, or widgeon, by any person not having the right of killing game upon the land is punishable on conviction before two justices with a fine of 5s. for every egg, by s. 24 of the Game Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 32). See GAME, and Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Game.' As to larceny of pheasants' eggs, see R. v. Stride, 1908, 1 K. B. 617.

Of Wild Birds.—On application by a county council, a Secretary of State may prohibit, by s. 2 of the Wild Birds Protection Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 24), the taking or destroying of eggs of wild birds or of any kind of wild birds, and by an Act of 1902 (2 Edw. 7, c. 6), the eggs taken can be forfeited and disposed of as the Court shall think fit. See BIRDS.

Eglistment. See AGISTMENT.

Egyptians. See GYPSIES.

Ela, or Ey, an island.

Eligné [fr. ainé, Fr.], eldest, or first-born. See BASTARD FIGNÉ.

Ei incumbit probatio, qui dicit, non qui negat: cum per rerum naturam factum negantis probatio nulla sit.—(The proof lies upon him who affirms, not upon him who denies; since, by the nature of things, he who denies a fact cannot produce any proof.) See BURDEN OF PROOF.

Elk to a reversion, an additional loan to a wadsetter (or mortgagor), who is the reversioner of the mortgaged estate; also to a testament, an addition to an inventory made up by an executor.—Scots term.

Elnecla, eldership. See ESNECY.

Elre, or Eyre [fr. iter, Lat.], the Court of justices itinerant, justiciarii itinerantes, justices in eyre. They were anciently sent with a general commission into divers counties to hear such causes as are termed Pleas of the Crown; and this was done for the ease of the people, who must else have been brought to the King's Bench, if the cause were too high for the County Court: it is said they were sent but once in seven years. The eyre of the forest is the justice-seat, which, by an ancient custom, was held every three years by the justices of the forest journeying up and down for that purpose.—Bract. l. 3, c. xi.

Ejecta, a woman ravished or deflowered, or cast forth from the virtuous.

Ejectioe custodiæ, ejectment de garde, a writ that lay against him who had cast out the guardian from any land during the minority of the heir.—Reg. Brev. 162. There were two other writs not unlike this; the one termed ravishment de gard, and the other droit de gard.

Ejectioe firmæ, a writ which lay to eject a tenant from his holding. See next title.

Ejectment, the 'mixed' action at Common Law to recover the possession of land (which is real), and damages and costs for the wrongful withholding of the land (which are personal).

Until abolished by the C. L. P. Act, 1852,

s. 168, the forms of this action exhibited the most remarkable string of fictions then recognized by the Courts of Common Law. The action was commenced by the party claiming title delivering to the party in possession a declaration in which the plaintiff (John Doe) and the defendant (Richard Roe) were fictitious persons. The declaration stated that a lease of the premises in question for a term of years had been made by the party claiming the title (who was the real plaintiff) to John Doe, who entered upon the land by virtue of such demise, and that afterwards Richard Roe, the casual ejector, entered and ousted John Doe during the continuance of his term. Appended to this declaration was a notice signed by Richard Roe, addressed to the tenant in possession (who was the actual defendant), informing him of the action brought by the lessee, and that Richard Roe had no title to the premises, and advising him to appear at a certain time and defend his title, otherwise he, Richard Roe, would suffer judgment by default, by which the actual tenant would be turned out of possession by the sheriff under a writ of habere facias possessionem. The title of the action, after the tenant's appearance, stood thus:—Doe (the fictitious lessee), on the demise of — (the lessor or person really claiming the title), against — (the real defendant, the casual ejector Richard Roe having withdrawn). See A Cent. of Law Reform, p. 124.

This fictitious procedure was abolished by the C. L. P. Act, 1852, which substituted a simple writ claiming the land sought to be recovered from the party in possession, but did not allow any pleadings, as in other forms of actions. Under the Judicature Act the name of the action was changed to 'Recovery of Land.' See that title.

Possession can be obtained by a landlord against his tenant by summary proceedings before two justices, under the Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 74), where the term exceeds not seven years, and the rent is not more than 20*l.*, no fine being reserved; and in a county court, under the County Courts Act, 1934, ss. 48, 49, 179, on the expiration of notice to quit, or on half a year's rent being in arrear if the contract of tenancy contain a proviso for re-entry, and there be no sufficient distress on the premises; while by s. 48 of the same Act a general jurisdiction in ejectment is given in cases where neither the value of the premises nor the rent payable in respect thereof exceeds 100*l.* a year.

As to mease profits, see that title. See also RENT RESTRICTION.

Ejectum, jet, jetsam, wreck, etc.

Ejectus, a whoremonger.—Blount's Law Dict.

Ejuration, renouncing or resigning one's place.

Ejus nulla culpa est cui parere necesse sit. D. 17, 50, 169.—(He is not in any fault who is bound to obey.)

Ejusdem generis (of the same kind or nature).

This term is chiefly used in cases where general words have a meaning attributed to them less comprehensive than they would otherwise bear, by reason of particular words preceding them: e.g., the Sunday Observance Act, 1677 (29 Car. 2, c. 7), enacts that no tradesman, artificer, workman, labourer, 'or other person whatsoever,' shall follow his ordinary calling on Sunday; here (see Sandiman v. Breach, (1827) 7 B. & C. 96) the word 'person' is confined to those of callings of the same kind as those specified by the preceding words, so as not to include a farmer. The ejusdem generis rule, as it is called, is one of the rules of construction applied by the Court in construing documents of all kinds, whether statutes, deeds, wills, mercantile documents, or others. For a discussion of the rule, see Tillmanns & Co. v. S.S. Knutsford, Ltd., 1908, 2 K. B. 385, affirmed, 1908, A. C. 406. For instances of the application of the rule, see Maxwell or Hardcastle on Statutes; Leake on Contracts; Theobald on Wills.

Elder Brethren. A name of the Masters of the Trinity House (see that title).

Election. (1) The act of selecting one or more from a greater number for an office.

(2) The exercise of his choice by a man left to his own free will to take or to do one thing or another. It is the obligation imposed upon a person to choose between two inconsistent or alternative rights or claims. Thus, in Scarfe v. Jardine, (1882) 7 App. Cas. 345, the House of Lords held that a customer could not sue a new firm after having elected to sue a retiring partner.

Electio semel facta et placitum testatum non patitur regressum. Quod semel placuit in electionibus amplius displicere non potest. Co. Lit. 146, 146 a.—(Elections once made and plea witnessed suffers not a recall. What has once pleased a man in elections cannot displease him on further consideration.) See also Re Simms, Ex p. Trustee, 1934, Ch. 1.

In equity the doctrine of election is founded on the rule that a person who takes under an instrument must give effect to every part of it. Thus, if a testator devises his own estate to A. and A.'s estate to B., A. must elect whether he will take 'under' or 'against' the will. If he elects to take under, and consequently to conform with, all the provisions of the will, there is no difficulty—he takes the testator's estate and gives up his own to B. If, on the other hand, he elects to take against the will, i.e., retains his own estate and at the same time claims that devised to him by the testator, he is bound to make compensation out of it to B., whom he has disappointed by thus electing; see Streatfield v. Streatfield, (1735) Cas. temp. Talb. 176; W. & T. L. C.

(3) The term 'election' is also used to signify the determination of persons entitled to the proceeds of property directed to be converted to take the property in its unconverted state and thus put an end to the trust for conversion. See CONVERSION.

Election Commissioners are commissioners appointed by the Crown on the joint address of both Houses of Parliament to inquire into the report made by judges on the trial of an election petition (q.v.) that corrupt and illegal practices took place on an extensive scale at an election. The Commissioners report to Parliament, whereupon the constituency may be disfranchised by statute or by refusal of the House of Commons to issue a writ.

Election Committee was a committee of the House of Commons appointed to inquire into the validity of the election of a member.

Election Judges. See ELECTION PETITIONS.

Election Petitions are petitions for inquiry into the validity of the elections of members of Parliament. They are tried by a puisne judge of the High Court in the King's Bench Division (Parliamentary Elections Act, 1868, s. 11; the Judicature Act, 1925, s. 67; the Parliamentary Elections and Corrupt Practices Act, 1879). The judges selected for this duty are known as election judges. See Fraser's Parl. Elect.

Election to Municipal Offices. See Ballot Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 33), s. 20 (repealed except as to Scotland and Ireland); Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50); also Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51); and MUNICIPAL CORPORATION.

Electors, he that has a vote in the choice of any officer; a constituent; also the title of certain German princes who formerly had a voice in the election of the Emperor.

Electoral Divisions, divisions of an administrative county for the purpose of each of them returning a member of the County Council under the Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51).

Electoral Franchise. (1) The qualifications entitling persons to vote at Parliamentary elections. A brief sketch of the changes up to 1884 in (a) Counties, and (b) Boroughs is as follows:—

(a) Originally the freeholders elected the members for the county: later, residence was made an additional qualification. In the fifteenth century the qualification was limited to resident freeholders of lands or tenements to the value of 40s. by the year (8 Hen. 6, c. 7). Towards the end of the eighteenth century the residence qualification was abolished. The Reform Act, 1832, extended the franchise to 10l. copyholders and to leaseholders for terms of years, and tenants at will paying a minimum of 50l. yearly rent (2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 45, ss. 19 and 20). The Representation of the People Act, 1867, extended the franchise to every duly registered man of full age who was—(i.) the owner of lands or tenements, of whatever tenure, for his own life, for the life of another or for any lives whatsoever, or for any larger estate, if of not less than 5l. clear yearly value; or (ii.) was entitled as lessee or assignee to the unexpired residue of a term of years of originally not less than 60 years of the same annual value; or (iii.) was for 12 months immediately preceding the last day of July in any year the occupier of lands or tenements of the rateable value of 12l. (ss. 5 and 6).

(b) In boroughs the qualifications were both varied and numerous. In some boroughs the corporation elected the members, in others the franchise was exercised solely by the freemen, in others by the burgage holders (see BURGAGE TENURE), in others by those paying what corresponded to local rates (see SCOT AND LOT), in others by the potwallers (q.v.), and in others these different qualifications, or some of them, were combined. With certain savings as to corporate towns, the Reform Act, 1832, established a universal 10l. household suffrage for adult males. The Representation of the People Act, 1867 (ss. 3 and 4), gave the franchise to every duly registered man of full age and capacity who had been for 12 months the inhabitant occupier of any dwelling-house within the borough in respect of which he had been rated for the relief of the poor and had paid the rate, or who had occupied and resided in lodgings for a year the annual value of which was 10*l.* or upwards.

The Representation of the People Act, 1884, assimilated the occupation franchise of the counties to that of the boroughs by entitling every man, after a qualifying period, who occupied any land or tenement of a clear yearly value of 10*l.* or more, to be registered as a voter: by extending the household and lodger franchise of the boroughs to the counties, and including in both cases occupiers of dwelling-houses by virtue of office, service, or employment.

The Representation of the People Act, 1918, created great changes: it abolished the voting qualifications of property owners, lodgers, freemen, etc.; it extended the parliamentary franchise to women for the first time, establishing something not unlike universal suffrage for women over 30 and for all adult men resident for a qualifying period of six months in any one constituency or contiguous constituency, or the occupation of business premises of 10*l.* annual value for the same period (s. 1). The Representation of the People (Equal Franchise) Act, 1928, equalized the franchise, and in the case of a business qualification extended it to the wife or husband.

A man or a woman of full age is entitled to be registered as a parliamentary voter for a university constituency if he or she has received, or, being a woman, qualified for, a degree (other than honorary) (ss. 2 and 4 (2)), as amended by the Act of 1928.

As to restrictions on plural voting, see s. 8. For further particulars, consult the Act itself (8 Geo. 5, c. 64), as amended by the Act of 1928.

(2) The qualifications entitling persons to vote at Local Government elections depend on the Representation of the People (Economy Provisions) Act, 1926, and the Representation of the People (Equal Franchise) Act, 1928. A person of full age and not subject to legal incapacity is entitled to be registered as an elector if he or she '(a) is on the last day of the qualifying period occupying as owner or tenant any land or premises in that area and (b) has during the whole of the qualifying period so occupied any land or premises in that area. . . . (c) is the husband or wife of a person entitled to be so registered in respect of premises in which both the person so entitled and the husband or wife, as the case may be, reside' (s. 2 of the Act of 1928). A lodger is entitled if the rooms are let unfurnished.

(3) The qualifications necessary for candidates for Parliament. These are now entirely abolished. See HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Electric Lighting. The supply of electricity for lighting is facilitated and regulated by the Electric Lighting Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 56). Under this Act powers may be obtained either (1) by license from the Board of Trade; or (2) by Provisional Order of the Board of Trade, needing confirmation by special Act of Parliament; or (3) by special Act of Parliament. The Electric Lighting Clauses Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 19), has incorporated in one Act the usual clauses of provisional orders and special Acts, and directed that such clauses are to apply to every undertaking under the Electric Lighting Acts except so far as expressly varied. These licenses and orders may either be granted to the local authorities themselves or, with their consent, to independent contractors. Licenses continue in force for any period not exceeding seven years, but are renewable. By s. 27 of the 1882 Act an undertaking authorized by provisional order or special Act may be purchased compulsorily by the local authority within six months after the expiration of 21 years—a period extended to 42 years by the Electric Lighting Act, 1888, s. 2.

Large powers of supervision are vested in the Board of Trade. By s. 5 that Board may frame rules as to notices, etc., on application for licenses and provisional orders; and the rules now in force provide (inter alia) that a local authority is to have a preference over private contractors. By s. 6 the Board may insert in a license or order such provisions as they think proper in addition to the prices to be charged, the enforcement of a supply of the light, and the securing the safety of the public from personal injury. The Electric Lighting Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 34), gives power to acquire land compulsorily for generating stations, and also contains other important provisions, including (s. 19) exemption of agreements from stamp duty.

These Acts have been amended subsequently and may be cited as the Electricity (Supply) Acts, 1882-1933. The Act of 1919, as amended by the Act of 1922, provided for the appointment of Electricity Commissioners for promoting, regulating and supervising the supply of electricity. The Act of 1926 created the Central Electricity Board, a non-profit corporation charged with supplying either directly or indirectly to authorized undertakers, but they are not empowered to operate generating stations, but see ss. 5 and 6. The Act of 1933 amended the 1919 and 1922 Acts.

The Electricity Supply (Meters) Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 20), provides for the better measurement of electricity supplied by authorized undertakers.

Eleemosyna Regis, and Eleemosyna Aratri, or Carucarum, a penny which King Ethelred ordered to be paid for every plough in England towards the support of the poor.—Leg. Ethel. c. i.

Eleemosynæ, possessions belonging to the church.—Blount.

Eleemosynaria, the place in a religious house where the common alms were deposited, and thence by the almoner distributed to the poor.

Eleemosynarius, the almoner or peculiar officer who received the rents and gifts, and in due method distributed them to pious and charitable uses.

Eleemosynary Corporations, corporate bodies constituted for the perpetual distribution of the free alms or bounty of the founder of them. Of this kind are all hospitals for the maintenance of the poor, sick, and impotent, and all colleges, both in our universities and out of them, which are founded for the promotion of piety and learning by proper regulations and ordinances, and for imparting assistance to the members of those bodies, in order to enable them to prosecute their devotions and studies with greater care and assiduity. These eleemosynary corporations, though in some things partaking of the nature of ecclesiastical bodies, are, strictly speaking, lay, and not ecclesiastical, even though composed of ecclesiastical persons; and, accordingly, they are not subject to the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts, or to the visitations of the ordinary or diocesan in their spiritual characters.—3 Steph. Com.

Elegit (he has chosen), a judicial writ of execution founded on the statute of Westminster II. (13 Edw. 1, c. 18), by which it became, in the election of a party having recovered judgment, either to have a writ of feri facias (see that title) or else to seize all the chattels and half the land of the judgment debtor in specie until judgment satisfied.

The writ of elegit was extended by the Judgments Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110), to all the debtor's lands instead of a moiety as before, and also to his copyhold lands; but it does not now extend to goods (Bankruptcy Act, 1883, s. 146).

After the writ has been returned and filed, the creditor becomes tenant by elegit; the legal estate vests in him, and he can bring ejectment or sue for the rent if the estate is in reversion (Hatton v. Haywood, (1874) L. R. 9 Ch. 236). See R. S. C., Ord. XLIII. The writ will not affect the legal estate against a purchaser unless it is registered and re-registered every five years at the Land Registry (Land Charges Act, 1925, ss. 6 and 7). See s. 23, ibid., in regard to registered land; see also ss. 59 and 61 of the Land Registration Act, 1925; Edwards on Execution.

Elementary Education. See EDUCATION.

Elimination, the act of banishing or turning out of doors; exclusion.

Elinguation, the punishment of cutting out the tongue.

Elisors, electors. In case of challenge to the sheriff and coroners for partiality, etc., the jury process was directed to two clerks of the Court, or two persons of the county named by the Court, and sworn. Then these elisors indifferently name or choose the jury, and their return is final, no challenge being allowed to the array.—Co. Litt. 158 a.

Eloigne, or Eloine [fr. eloigner, Fr.], to put at a distance; to remove one far from another.

Eloignment, removal; sending to a distant place.

Elongata, a return made by a sheriff in replevin, that cattle, etc., are not to be found, or are removed, so that he cannot make deliverance, etc.—Jac. Law Dict.

Elongatus, a return to a writ de homine replegiando, that the man was out of the sheriff's jurisdiction, whereupon a process was issued, called a capias in withernam, to imprison the defendant himself, without bail or mainprize, until he produced him.

Elvers, fry of eels, for which in the Severn fishery district a close time is fixed. See EELS.

Ely, the ancient city and metropolis of the county of Cambridge.

The Isle of Ely was never a county palatine, but it was a royal franchise, which, however, by 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 87, was taken away from the bishop, whose secular authority is now vested in the Crown.

Emancipatio. A solemn act by which a pater-familias divests himself of his power over his filius-familias, so that the filius-familias may become sui juris. There are three forms of emancipatio: (1) The old emancipation, which was by several manicipationes, followed by several enfranchise- ments. The mancipatio, or solemn sale, destroyed the patria potestas and put the filius-familias in mancipio, which was a kind of slavery. The enfranchisement by the purchaser made the filius-familias sui juris. As the enfranchiser acquired all rights of patronage, the father, on occasion of the last mancipatio, added the trust-clause (fiducia contracta), i.e., an express condition that the purchaser should remancipate the filius-familias to the pater-familias, so that having ceased to be a pater-familias, and being only an ordinary purchaser, he might enfranchise his child, and so acquire the rights of patronage.

(2) The Anastasian emancipation, introduced by Anastasius. It consisted in obtaining an imperial rescript, authorizing the emancipation, which was to be registered with the proper officer. In this way a filius-familias might be emancipated in his absence, which could not be done by the old form per aes et libram, since the purchaser had to lay hold of the thing.

(3) The Justinian emancipation, a mere declaration of the pater-familias before the magistrate, no leave being required for the purpose (recta via).—Sand. Just.

Embargo [fr. embargar, Sp.], a prohibition to pass; a stop, arrest, or detention of ships; a prohibition imposed in time of war by a belligerent state upon merchant ships against their leaving port for a time specified.

Embassage, or Embassy, the message or commission given by a sovereign or state to a minister, called an ambassador, empowered to treat or communicate with another sovereign or state; also the establishment of an ambassador.

Ember Days. See EMBRING DAYS.

Embezzlement, the appropriation to his own use by a clerk or servant of money, valuable securities or chattels received by him for and on account of his master or employer. Embezzlement differs from larceny in this, that in the former the property misappropriated is not at the time in the actual or legal possession of the owner, whilst in the latter it is. The distinctions between larceny and embezzlement are often extremely nice and subtle, and it is sometimes difficult to say under which head the offence ranges. Unless the offender is a clerk or servant whose business it is to receive money for his master, he is not guilty of embezzlement. But if he have been employed to receive it in a single instance, he need not be a general servant. Partners stealing or embezzling money, etc., belonging to the co-partnership may be convicted and punished as if they had not been such partners (Larceny Act, 1916, s. 40 (4)).

Embezzlement is a felony punishable under the Larceny Act, 1916 (see ss. 17–19). Justices can deal summarily with the offence with the consent of the accused when the value of the property does not exceed 20*l*. (Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 86), s. 24). A person indicted for embezzlement may be found guilty of larceny if the evidence shows larceny, and a person indicted for larceny may be found guilty of embezzlement if it shows embezzlement (Larceny Act, 1916, s. 44).

As regards summary proceedings for embezzlement of materials, etc., by persons in woollen, etc., trade, see Hosiery Act, 1843 (c. 40).

Emblements [fr. emblavance de bled, O. Fr. corn sprung or put above ground], the growing crops of those vegetable productions of the soil which are annually produced by the labour of the cultivator. They are deemed personal property, and pass as such to the executor or administrator of the occupier, whether he were the owner in fee, or for life, or for years, if he die before he has actually cut, reaped, or gathered the same; and this, although being affixed to the soil, they might for some purposes be considered, whilst growing, as part of the realty.

If a tenant for life or pur autre vie die, his executor or administrator is entitled to emblements, for the estate was determined by the act of God; and it is a maxim in the law that actus Dei nemini facit injuriam. The advantages of emblements are extended to parochial clergy by 28 Hen. 8, c. 11, but a person who resigns his living, or forfeits it by his own act, is not entitled to emblements, although his lessee is. By devise, the devise may, without express words, be entitled to the growing crops. But a legatee of the goods, stock, and movables on a farm is entitled to growing corn in preference as well to the devisee of the land as to the executor. So, a tenant at will, the duration of whose tenancy is uncertain, is, if the lessor suddenly determine the tenancy, entitled to emblements. And, at Common Law, fructus industriales, as growing corn and other annual produce, which would go to the executor upon death, may be taken in execution; but the appraisement and sale thereof are regulated by statute; and, by statute, growing crops may be distrained upon, and sold when ripe. But a crop of natural grass growing at the time of the death of a tenant for life, and although fit to cut for hay, does not belong to his executor, but goes to the remainder-man.

It is provided by the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 25), s. 1, as amended by the Agriculture Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 76), s. 14, that 'where the tenancy of any farm or lands held by a tenant at rack-rent shall determine by the death or cesser of the estate of any landlord entitled for his life, or for any other uncertain interest, instead of claims to emblements, the tenant shall continue to occupy such farm or lands until the occupation is determined by a twelve months' notice to quit, expiring at the end of a year of the tenancy.'

Emblers de gentz [Fr.], a stealing from the people. The phrase occurs in our old rolls of Parliament.—'Whereas divers murders, emblers de gentz, and robberies are committed,' etc.—Rot. Parl., 21 Edw. 3, n. 62.

Embraceor [fr. embrasour, Fr.], he that, when a matter is in trial between party and party, comes to the bar with one of the parties, having received some reward so to do, and speaks in the case; or privately labours the jury, or stands in the court to survey and overlook them, whereby they are awed or influenced, or put in fear or doubt of the matter.—19 Hen. 7, c. 13 (repealed by the County Juries Act, 1825 (6 Geo. 4, c. 50), s. 62). Termes de la Ley.

Embracery, an attempt to influence a jury corruptly in favour of one party in a trial, by promises, persuasions, entreaties, money, entertainments, and the like. The punishment for this misdemeanour in the person embracing and the juror embraced is, by the Common Law, and also by the County Juries Act, 1825 (6 Geo. 4, c. 50), s. 61, fine and imprisonment.

Embring Days or Ember Days [fr. embers; cineres, Lat.], because our ancestors, when they fasted, sat in ashes, or strewed them on their heads], those days which the ancient fathers called quatuor tempora jejunii are of great antiquity in the church; they are observed on the Wednesday, Friday and Saturday next after (a) the first Sunday in Lent; (b) Whit Sunday; (c) Holyrood Day, September 14; and (d) St. Lucy's Day, December 13.—Brit. c. liii.; Book of Common Prayer. Our almanacs call the weeks in which they fall the Ember weeks, and they are now chiefly noticed on account of the ordination of priests and deacons; because the 31st canon appoints the Sunday next after the Ember weeks for the solemn times of ordination.—Whealy Com. Pr.

Emendals, an old word made use of in the accounts of the Society of the Inner Temple, where so much in emendals at the foot of an account, on the balance thereof, signifies so much money in the bank or stock of the house, for reparation of losses or other emergent occasions.—Oxf. Dict.

Emendare, to make amends for any crime or trespass committed. And a capital crime, not to be atoned by fine, was said to be inemendabile.—Leg. Canut. 2.

Emendatio, the power of amending and correcting abuses, according to stated rules and measures.

Emergency Legislation, the body of Statutes, Proclamations, Orders in Council, Rules, Regulations, and Notifications passed or made in consequence of the European crisis of August, 1914, and the ensuing state of war.

Emergent Year, the epoch or date whence any people begin to compute their time.

Emigrant Runner, any person, other than a licensed passage broker (see that title) or his clerk, who in any port or within five miles of it, for reward, solicits any intending emigrant on behalf of broker or owner or master of a ship, or any lodging-house keeper, or money changer, or other dealer for any purpose connected with the preparations or arrangements for a passage (Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 347). Like a passage broker, the emigrant runner requires a license in a county borough of the borough council and in a county district (see Local Government Act, 1894, s. 27 (d)) of the district council.

Emigration Officers. See s. 355 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894.

Emigration of Poor Persons. See Poor Law Act, 1930 (20 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 68, by which the council of any county or county borough may, with the consent of the Minister of Health, and in compliance with such rules, orders, and regulations as he may prescribe, procure, or assist in procuring the emigration of, any orphan or deserted child under 16 who is chargeable to the county or county borough; any poor person who is chargeable, or would be, if relieved, be chargeable to the county or county borough; any poor person having a settlement in the county or county borough. In the case of an orphan or deserted child the child must give its consent before a petty criminal court.

Eminence, an honorary title given to cardinals. They were called illustrissimi and reverendissimi until the pontificate of Urban VIII.

Eminent Domain. the right which a Government retains over the estates of individuals to resume them for public use.

Emissary, a person sent upon a mission as the agent of another; also a secret agent sent to ascertain the sentiments and designs of others, and to propagate opinions favourable to his employer.

Empannel [fr. panne, Fr.], the writing or entering by the sheriff, on a parchment, schedule or roll of paper, the names of a jury summoned by him.—Cowel.

Emparance. See IMPARLANCE.

Emperor [fr. empereur, Fr.; imperator, Lat.], a sovereign prince who bears rule over large kingdoms and territories; a monarch of title and dignity supposed to be superior to a king. 'The Emperor' was the title of the head of the Holy Roman Empire, the successor in the West of the Empire founded by Augustus, and this is the proper signification of the term. But in modern times the title 'Emperor' has been assumed by various monarchs. Thus Napoleon I. styled himself Emperor of the French, and the title was again taken by his nephew, Napoleon III. The sovereigns of Austria and Russia were also styled emperor; and in 1870 the King of Prussia assumed the title of German Emperor. The King is Emperor of India by virtue of the Royal Titles Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 10).

Emphyteusis, the jus emphyteuticarium, or as it is more generally called, emphyteusis, was the right of enjoying all the fruits, and disposing at pleasure of the property of another, subject to the payment of a yearly rent (pensio or canon) to the owner. Formerly the lands of the Roman municipalities, or of the college of priests, used to be let for different terms of years, sometimes for a short term, such as five years, sometimes for a term amounting almost to a perpetuity, under the name of agri vectigales (Gai. iii. 145). Afterwards the lands of private individuals were let in a similar manner, and were also comprehended under the term agri vectigales. The emperors let their patrimonial lands in a similar way, and these lands so let were termed emphyteuticarii (C. xi. 58, 61), a name arising from there being a new ownership, or what almost amounted to an ownership, engrafted (ἐνθρεψέν) on the real dominion. Either shortly before or in the time of Justinian, the two rights, that of the ager vectigalis and that of emphyteusis, were united under the common name of emphyteusis, and subjected to particular regulations. Both lands and buildings could be subjected to emphyteusis (Nov. vii. 3, 1, 2). The emphyteuta, as the person who enjoyed the right was termed, besides enjoying all the rights of usufruct, could dispose of the thing, or rather of his rights over it, in any way he pleased (Nov. vii. 3, 2); he could create a servitude over it or mortgage it (D. xiii. 7, 16, 2); he had a real action (which, however, was said to be a utilis vindictio, because he was not the owner but only in the place of one) to defend or assert his rights, which at his death went to his heirs (Nov. vii. 3).

He was obliged to pay his pensio under any circumstances, whether he actually benefited by his emphyteusis or not, because the payment of rent was an acknowledgment of the title of the dominus. He was also bound to use the thing over which his right extended, so that it was not deteriorated in value at the time his right expired (Nov. vii. 3, 2).—Sand. Just., 7th ed. 134, 371.

Empire, the dominion or jurisdiction of an emperor; the region over which the dominion of an emperor extends; imperial power; supreme dominion; sovereign command.

Empire Settlement Act, 1922 (12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 13), 'to make better provision for furthering British settlement in His Majesty's Overseas Dominions,' provides for the raising up to 1,500,000*l.* for this purpose in 1922-23, and not more than 3,000,000*l.* in any subsequent year.

Empiric, a practitioner in medicine or surgery who proceeds on experience only, without science or legal qualification; a quack.

Emplead, to indict; to prefer a charge against; to accuse.

Employers and Workmen. See MASTER AND SERVANT.

Emporium [fr. ἐμπόριον, Gk.], a trading-place, a place for wholesale trade in commodities carried by sea.

Emptor, a buyer. See CAVEAT EMTOR.

Enabling Statute. A statute giving powers of which the exercise may be obligatory or discretionary according to the enactment, as distinguished from peremptory or prohibitory Acts, e.g., 32 Hen. 8, c. 28, A.D. 1540.

Enach, the satisfaction for a crime; the recompense for a fault.—Skene.

Enact, to act, perform, or effect; to establish by law; to decree.

Enbrever, to write down in short.—Britt. 56.

Encheason [old law, Fr.], cause ; occasion.—Cowel ; Bailey.

Encroachment. An unlawful gaining upon the possession of a neighbour.

Encyclopædia. A collective work containing a series of articles by many contributors, either on all subjects, as the Encyclopædia Britannica, Chambers's Encyclopædia, or on all parts of a special subject, as the Encyclopædia of the Laws of England or the Encyclopædia of Sport. An encyclopædia is a 'collective work' within the meaning of the Copyright Act, 1911 ; see s. 35 of the Act, and see also s. 5 (2).

Endemic Disease. A disease habitually prevalent in a certain country and due to permanent local causes.—Oxf. Dict. Public Health Act, 1936, Part V. (ss. 143 et seq.), repealing and extending the Public Health Act, 1875, empowers the local authority to make regulations to prevent the spreading of any formidable epidemic, endemic, or infectious disease. See INFECTIOUS DISEASE.

Endenzie, or Endenizen, to make free ; to enfranchise.

Endorsement. See INDORSEMENT.

Endowed Charities Act (23 & 24 Vict. c. 136). See CHARITABLE TRUSTS.

Endowed Schools. Schools wholly or partly maintained out of an endowment. The Endowed Schools Acts are 23 Vict. c. 11 ; 31 & 32 Vict. c. 32 ; 32 & 33 Vict. c. 56 ; 36 & 37 Vict. c. 87 ; 38 & 39 Vict. c. 29 ; and 42 & 43 Vict. c. 66 ; since which statutes their temporary provisions have been continued by annual Expiring Laws Continuance Acts. The principal Act is that of 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 56), which provided for the reorganization of endowed schools generally (excepting those subject to the Public Schools Act, 1868, as to which see PUBLIC SCHOOLS) through the medium of 'schemes' to be framed by the 'Endowed Schools Commissioners,' whose powers were transferred by the Act of 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 87), to the Charity Commissioners, and are now vested in the Board of Education. As to the dismissal of masters, see the Endowed Schools (Masters) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 39), and Wright v. Zetland (Marquess), 1908, 1 K. B. 63. As to inspection on terms and contributions by local authorities towards cost or free of costs if the Board of Education so decide, see the Education Act, 1921 (11 & 12 Geo. 5, c. 51), and the Local Government Act, 1929 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 17). See also GRAMMAR SCHOOLS.

Endowment, wealth ensured in perpetuity

to any person or use. The assuring dower to a woman ; the setting forth a sufficient portion for a vicar towards his perpetual maintenance when the benefice is appropriated ; the creation of a perpetual provision out of lands or money for any institution or person. As to the meaning of the term in s. 62 of the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, see Re Clergy Orphan Corporation, 1894, 3 Ch. 145.

Enemy, Trading with. See the following Acts directed against trading with the enemy during the Great War :—4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 87, 5 Geo. 5, c. 12, 5 & 6 Geo. 5, cc. 79, 98, 105, and 6 & 7 Geo. 5, cc. 32, 52.

Enfeoffment, the act of investing with any dignity or possession ; also the instrument or deed by which a person is invested with possessions.

Enfranchisement, making free ; used (1) of the newly conferring, as by the Reform Act, 1832, a right of constituency to return a member to Parliament, or of a person to vote at a Parliamentary election ; and (2) of the turning copyholds into freeholds, as to which see COPYHOLD.

Engine. As to malicious injuries to engines and machinery, see Malicious Damage Act, 1861, ss. 11, 14, 15 ; and as to placing wood, etc., on any railway, with intent to obstruct or overthrow any engine, see s. 35. The use of locomotive engines on railways is authorized by the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 86, and regulated by s. 116 of that Act. The Railway Fires Act, 1905, as amended by the Railway Fires Act (1905) Amendment Act, 1923, gives compensation for damage by fires caused by sparks or cinders from railway engines ; see Martin v. G. E. Railway, 1912, 2 K. B. 406 ; A.-G. v. G. W. Railway, 1924, 2 K. B. 1. See TRACTION ENGINE and SMOKE.

Englecery, Englescherie, or Englisherie [fr. Englecceria, Lat.], the being an Englishman. Proof of the fact that a man found slain was an Englishman excused the neighbourhood from the fine they would have had to pay if he had been a Norman or Dane. See 14 Edw. 3, st. 1, c. 4.

English Information. A proceeding in the High Court in matters of revenue. See 28 & 29 Vict. c. 104. See EXCHEQUER ; INFORMATION. Consult Robertson on the Crown.

English Reports. A complete annotated reprint of the original Reports from 1220 to 1865 in uniform volumes and modern type.

Engravings. See FINE ARTS.

Engross, to copy in a fair and clerkly hand.

Engrosser, he that purchases large quantities of any commodity in order to sell it at a high price.—7 & 8 Vict. c. 24, repealed.

Enclia pars. See ENECY.

Enlarge, to extend time, as to extend the time within which a rule is returnable, or an appeal may be brought, or an award made.

Enlarger l'Estate, a species of release which enures by way of enlarging an estate, and consists of a conveyance of the ulterior interest to the particular tenant; as if there be tenant for life or years, remainder to another in fee, and he in remainder releases all his right to the particular tenant and his heirs, this gives him the estate in fee.—1 Steph. Com.

Enpleet, anciently used for implead.—Cowel's Law Dict.; Dugd. Mon. tom. 2, p. 412.

Enquest. See INQUEST.

Enquiry. See INQUIRY.

Enrolment, register, record; writing in which anything is recorded.

By the Statute of Enrolments, 27 Hen. 8, c. 16, now repealed by the L. P. Amendment Act, 1924 (15 Geo. 5, c. 5), Sch. 10, every bargain and sale of a freehold interest was required to be enrolled in Chancery within six [lunar] months after its date.

No assurance before 1926 by a tenant-in-tail under the Fines and Recoveries Abolition Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74), will have any operation unless enrolled in the Central Office within six calendar months after its execution, which enrolment is sufficient of itself, even where the conveyance was by bargain and sale, within the Statute of Enrolments. This provision did not extend to copyholds, the enrolment then being on the court-rolls of the manor. By s. 133 the Law of Property Act, 1925, enrolment is not required in respect of assurances or instruments executed or made after 1925. See DISENTAILING DEED. As to the Central Office, see R. S. C., Ord. LXI.

If a party to a suit in Equity, who had obtained a decree or order, was desirous of preventing a rehearing of the cause before the judge pronouncing the same, or of preventing an appeal to the Lord Chancellor or Lords Justices of Appeal, it must have been enrolled. So also where a decree was pronounced either by the Master of the Rolls or one of the Vice-Chancellors, and the party, instead of appealing to the Lord Chancellor or Lords Justices of Appeal, was desirous of appealing at once to the House of Lords, the decree must first have been enrolled. The effect of enrolling a decree of the Lord Chancellor was to prevent its being reheard by him. After a decree was enrolled, it could only be reversed or altered either by appeal to the House of Lords or by bill of review. It might be enrolled immediately after it had been passed and entered, unless a caveat had been entered, and then, if the party entering it did not present his petition of appeal or rehearing within twenty-eight days, the enrolment might be perfected. By Consol. Ord. 1860, XXIII., r. 24, the expenses of enrolment of decrees and orders were diminished; and by Ord. XXII., r. 16, the defendant had power to vacate the enrolment under certain circumstances; but the effect of the Judicature Acts is practically to abolish enrolment. As to enrolling assurances of property for charitable purposes, see CHARITABLE TRUSTS.

Ensient, or Enselint, the being with child.—Old Law Fr.

Entail [fr. feudum talliatum, Lat.; entailé, Fr., from tailler, to cut], an estate settled with regard to the rule of its descent. See TAIL. As to Scotland, see Entail (Scotland) Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 43).

Entailed Money, money directed to be invested in realty to be entailed.—Fines and Recoveries Abolition Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74), ss. 70, 71, 72. See now Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 130, and the L. P. (Entailed Interests Act), 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 27), s. 1, and TAIL.

Enter, to enrol, to commence officially, to inscribe upon the records of a Court or upon an official list. See also ENTRY.

Entering short. When bills not due are paid into a bank by a customer, it is the custom of some bankers not to carry the amount of the bills directly to his credit, but to 'enter them short,' as it is called, i.e., to note down the receipt of the bills, their amounts, and the times when they become due in a previous column of the page, and the amounts when received are carried forward into the usual cash column. See Giles v. Perkins, (1807) 9 East, 13. Sometimes, instead of entering such bills short, bankers credit the customer directly with the amount of the bills as cash, charging interest on any advances they may make on their account, and allow him at once to draw upon them to that amount. If the banker becomes bankrupt, the property in bills entered short, and not credited to the customer unless by way of advance, does not pass to his trustee, but the customer is entitled to them if they remain in his hands, or to their proceeds, if received, subject to any lien the banker may have upon them.

Entertainment Tax, a tax levied on payments for admission to entertainments, first imposed by s. 1 (1) of the Finance (New Duties) Act, 1916. 'Entertainment' is defined by s. 1 (6). See also Finance (No. 2) Act, 1931 (21 & 22 Geo. 5, c. 49), s. 5, Sched. II., and A.-G. v. Arts Theatre of London, Ltd., 1933, 1 K. B. 439 (part of subscriptions chargeable, apportioned); A.-G. v. Southport Corpn., 1934, 1 K. B. 226 (admission of non-bathers to swimming pool).

Enticement. An action lies for damages suffered by the enticement of a person under an obligation to the plaintiff as by a married woman against another woman for enticing away her husband (Newton v. Hardy, (1933) 149 L. T. 165); see also Elliot v. Albert, 1934, 1 K. B. 650, loss of consortium (q.v.).

Entire Contract, a contract wherein everything to be done on the one side is the consideration for everything to be done on the other. See CONTRACT.

Entire Tenancy, contrary to several tenancy, and signifying a sole possession in one man, whereas the other is a joint or common possession in two or more.—Jac. Law Dict.

Entireties, Tenancy by. Before the L. P. Act, 1925, where an estate was conveyed or devised to a man and his wife during coverture, they were said to be tenants by entireties, that is, each was said to be seised of the whole estate, and neither of a part. The consequence was, that the husband's conveyance alone would not have had any effect against his wife surviving him. The husband being seised of the whole estate during coverture either in his own right or jure uxoris, could of course part with that interest; but to make a complete conveyance of all the interests held in entirety, the wife must concur. Tenants by entireties were seised pre tout, and not per my et per tout. As a consequence of this doctrine if lands were given to a husband and his wife and a third person, the husband and wife, being reckoned only as one person, took one-half and the third person the other half; but under s. 37 of the L. P. Act, 1925, the husband, wife and third person will each have equal rights. In some respects this species of tenancy seems to be an exception to the rule that the husband and wife are one person in law; if they are to be considered as one person, the husband should have been able to convey alone, which in this case he could not do.—Watk. Conv. 170. Tenancies by entireties were abolished by the L. P. Act, 1925, 1st Sched. Part VI., and converted to a joint tenancy without affecting the beneficial interest. The property is to be held upon trust for sale (ibid., s. 36). See MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY ACTS, 1882 to 1907, and MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY.

Entrepôt [Fr.], a warehouse for goods bought and awaiting sale.

Entry, the depositing of a document in the proper office or place; actual entry on land is necessary to constitute a seisin in deed, and is necessary in certain cases, as, e.g., to perfect a common-law lease.

When a person without any right has taken possession of land, the party entitled may make a formal but peaceable entry, which is quite an extrajudicial and summary remedy, on such lands, declaring that thereby he takes possession, which notorious act of ownership is equivalent to a feudal investiture by the lord; or he may enter on any part of it in the same county, declaring it to be in the name of the whole; but if it lie in different counties, he must make different entries. This remedy by entry takes place in three only of the five species of ouster—viz., abatement, intrusion, and disseisin; for as in these the original entry of the wrongdoer was unlawful, they may therefore be remedied by the mere entry of him who has right. But upon a discontinuance or forfeiture, the owner of the estate cannot enter, but is driven to his action; for herein the original entry being lawful, and thereby an apparent right of possession being gained, the law will not suffer that right to be overthrown by the mere act or entry of the claimant.—3 Bl. Com. 174.

An action must be brought within twelve (formerly twenty) years next after a right of entry first accrued, ten (formerly six) years being allowed after the determination of disabilities, provided it be not more than thirty (formerly forty) years in the whole. See Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), repealing and replacing s. 2 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27). All writs of entry and real actions by which lands might have been formerly recovered, except dower, dower unde nihil habet and quare impedit, are abolished.—3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 36. See DOWER.

By the Real Property Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106), s. 6, reproduced by s. 4 (2) of the L. P. Act, 1925, the only rights of entry which are now capable of subsisting or being conveyed at law are rights of entry exercisable over or in respect of a legal term of years absolute or annexed for any purpose to a rent charge (L. P. Act, 1925, s. 1 (2) (e)). Before 1925 a lessee had a right but no estate before entry, see now L. P. Act, 1925, s. 149, which confers the estate in the lease without actual entry, but no lease at a rent can be made to commence later than 21 years from its date. See INTERESSE TERMINI. A right of entry may be disposed of by deed.

In Scots law, the term refers to the acknowledgment of the title of the heir, etc., to be admitted by the superior.

As to a burglarious entry, see BURGLARY.

In commerce, the act of setting down in an account-book the particulars of business transacted. Book-keeping is performed either by single or double entry.

Entry, Bill of. See BILL OF ENTRY.

Enure, to take place or to be available for.

Envelope and enclosed letter may be taken and read together (Pearce v. Gardner, 1897, 1 Q. B. 688). As to examination of letters by Postal Authorities, see 8 Edw. 7, c. 48, and 25 & 26 Geo. 5, c. 15.

En ventre sa mère. [Fr. In its mother's womb.] A child in the womb of the mother is for most purposes regarded in English law as being already born. But there are certain important exceptions. For example, if a child is killed whilst it is within the womb, it cannot be the subject of a murder or manslaughter charge, but otherwise if it receives injuries whilst in the womb which occasion its death after birth (R. v. Senior, (1832) 1 Moo. C. C. 346). In civil matters also the fiction of birth is only to be applied if the maintenance of the fiction is for the child's benefit and not its detriment (Villar v. Gilbey, 1907, A. C. 139), but it has lately been held by the House of Lords that the doctrine does not apply where a benefit is not destined directly to the child and is only for his indirect benefit, if any: Elliot v. Joicey (Lord), 1935, A. C. 209, and see L. Q. R., January, 1936, for a note on the case. Subject to the narrowing of the doctrine by Elliot v. Joicey, ubi. sup., a liberal interpretation will be put on the word 'born' in a will (Re Salaman, 1908, 1 Ch. 4), and also in a deed (Ebborn v. Fowler, 1909, 1 Ch. 578). A child en v.s.m. is a 'child' within the meaning of Lord Campbell's Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93 (The George and Richard, (1871) L. R. 3 Adm. & Ec. 466); and may also be a 'dependant' within the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 58) (Williams v. Ocean Coal Company, 1907, 2 K. B. 422; Orrell Colliery v. Schofield, 1909, A. C. 433). See now the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 84). As to exception to 'child living' including child en ventre sa mère, see Jackson v. Voss, 39 T. L. R. 445.

Envoy, a diplomatic agent sent by one State to another.

Eodorbriec [fr. eoder, Sax., a hedge, and brice, broken], hedge-breaking.—Leg. Alf. c. 45.

Ex nomine, by that very name.

Epidemic Disease. A disease prevalent among a people or a community at a special time, and produced by some special causes not generally present in the affected locality.—Oxf. Dict. See INFECTIOUS DISEASE.

Epimonia, expenses or gifts.—Blount.

Epiphany, a Christian festival, otherwise called the Manifestation of Christ to the Gentiles, observed on the 6th of January.

Epiphany Quarter Sessions, formerly held in the first week after the Epiphany, are directed by the Law Terms Act, 1830 (11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 70), to be held in the first week after the 28th December.

The Quarter Sessions Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 6), repeals 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 47, which empowered justices at such sessions to name two of their body to fix Easter Sessions.

Episcopacy [fr. ἐπίσκοπος, Gk.], the office of overlooking or overseeing; the office of a bishop who is to overlook and oversee the concerns of the church. A form of church government by diocesan bishops.

Episcopal and Capitular Estates Management. See the temporary Episcopal and Capitular Estates Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 104), and its amending Acts, as set out in the Expiring Laws Continuance Acts.

Episcopalia, or Onera Episcopalia, synodals or other customary payments from the clergy to their bishop or diocesan, which were formerly collected by the rural deans, and by them transmitted to the bishop.—Dugd. Mon. tom. iii. p. 61.

Episcopalian, a dissident, in Scotland, from the Established Presbyterian Church, and an adherent of the Reformed Catholic Church deriving apostolic succession from the apostles. The clergy of this kind are now placed nearly on a footing with the clergy of the Church of England when in this country. See 27 & 28 Vict. c. 94.

Episcopate, a bishopric.

Episcopus puerorum. It was an old custom that upon certain feasts some lay person should plait his hair and put on the garments of a bishop, and in them pretend to exercise episcopal jurisdiction, and do several ludicrous actions, for which reason he was called bishop of the boys; and this custom obtained here long after several constitutions were made to abolish it.—Blount. Such an officer is mentioned in the statutes of some of the cathedrals of the old foundation in England.

Epoch, or Epocha [fr. ἐποχή, Gk., a pause], the time at which a new computation is begun; the time whence dates are numbered.

Equerry, an officer of State under the Master of the Horse.

Equitable Assets. Assets which could only be made available to creditors in a court of equity; legal, in a court of law (Halsb. L. E.); the distinction is not of any importance in regard to deaths after 1925, see ss. 2 (3) and 32 of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925. See EXECUTOR.

Equitable Assignment of Debt. This may be constituted merely by the debtor being given to understand that the debt has been made over by the creditor to some third person, and an assignment under s. 25 (6) of the Jud. Act, 1873 (as to which see CHOSE), is not necessary (Brandt v. Dunlop Rubber Co., 1905, A. C. 454).

Equitable Claims and Defences at Common Law. The Common Law Procedure Act, 1854 (ss. 83–86), enabled any defendant to plead the facts which would entitle him, if judgment were obtained against him, to relief in Equity from such judgment on equitable grounds, by way of defence, and also enabled the plaintiff to avoid such defence by a replication upon equitable grounds. A plea on equitable grounds was good at Law only where an absolute and unconditional injunction would be granted in Equity.

The Judicature Act, 1925, s. 36, and following sections, reproducing s. 24 of the Judicature Act, 1873, has combined the jurisdiction of the Courts of Common Law and Equity so that legal and equitable remedies may be granted in the same court but without affecting the nature of the rights. The object is to avoid multiplicity of actions and it does not confer a new jurisdiction (The James Westall, 1905, P., p. 51), and if there is any conflict or variance between the rules of equity and common law, the rules of equity are to prevail. In the County Court a defendant must give notice of any equitable defence he relies on. See C. C. R., Ord. X., r. 19.

Equitable Estates and Interests. Rights relating to property of which the legal ownership is vested in another person, or in the equitable owner himself in another capacity. The rights arise whenever a person obtains a title to have the property or an estate or interest in it vested in himself, e.g., by contract or by any conveyance or assignment which does not by law transfer or vest the legal estate or ownership in the transferee, by mortgage or charge, and whenever a trust arises, either express, constructive, implied or by operation of law. In theory the legal owner alone was entitled, both in law and equity, to the property, and he alone was responsible for the obligations and incidents attaching to the property, the beneficial owner merely having a personal right in equity to force the legal owner to carry out his obligation or trust, but the rights and obligations of beneficial ownership became recognized and affected by statute. The Statute of Uses turned the beneficial right or use in real estate into the legal estate, although the statute did not extend to any use or trust upon a use (Tyrrel's case, (1557) Dyer, 155 a), and the statute did no more than to impose a simple and merely verbal formality in the operative words of the transfer of a legal estate, leaving the principle of equitable ownership unaffected in its application and its effects. At the same time the Statute, being based on the elastic nature of trusts, introduced a more flexible disposition of legal interests in land.

Under the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 7) trusts creating equitable estates or interests in land, including leaseholds and copyholds, were required to be in writing signed by the person entitled by law to declare the trusts, but this did not apply to trusts arising by construction, implication, or operation by law, and see now L. P. Act, ss. 52 to 55.

Among other statutes which assimilated some, if not all, the incidents of beneficial ownership in equity to legal ownership, mention may be made of the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 10), which made equitable estates of inheritance assets by descent, the Real Property Limitation Acts, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27), ss. 24 and 25, and 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 37) (limitation of suits), the Judgments Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110), extending 29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 10 (liability under writ of elegit), the Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), s. 1, and the Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (upon the legal interpretation of the words 'real estate' in those Acts). The Dower Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 105), subjected equitable estates to dower, and the Intestates Estate Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 71), to escheat. As between the legal and the beneficial owner, equity followed the law, by analogy to the law applicable to ownership in property of the same nature. The rules of descent were the same; words of limitation were generally construed in the same way (see Moncton's Settlement, 1913, 2 Ch. 536). See now L. P. Act, 1925, s. 60, but technical words of limitation are still required for the creation of equitable interests in tail in either real or personal property (L. P. Act, 1925, s. 130).

In regard to equitable interests in personal property, equity also followed the law; the legal incidents fall upon the legal owner, who has a right of indemnity against the beneficial owner, see Halsbury, L. of E., Vol. 13, pp. 96, 97. The equitable right of a beneficial owner of land or any interest therein against the legal owner became a charge upon or attached to the property itself; see Nesbit and Pott's Contract, 1905, 1 Ch. 391, 1906, 1 Ch. 386, binding not only the legal owner, but all persons deriving title under him, except purchasers for value without notice. This is still the law subject to statutory modifications which enable certain persons to convey land free from equities in certain cases. See ESTATE OWNER, LEGAL ESTATE, PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES, SETTLED LAND, TRUSTEES FOR SALE, MORTGAGEE, SALE BY ORDER OF COURT, and subject to statutory modifications as to notice and registration, see NOTICE, LAND CHARGES. The rights of the person entitled to the equitable estate or interest against the 'estate owner' are set out in L. P. Act, 1925, s. 3.

Under the land legislation of 1925 the term equitable interests was extended to many estates, rights and interests which, previously, were recognizable and enforceable at law. All estates, interests and charges in or over land which are no longer legal estates (see LEGAL ESTATE) are included in the term (L. P. Act, 1925, s. 1 (3) (8) and s. 205 (1) (x). (xi.). As to the importance of registration of some equitable interests, see LAND CHARGES and SEARCHES. As to the automatic vesting of legal estates in a beneficial owner entitled immediately after 1st January, 1926, to require any legal estate (not vested in trustees for sale) to be conveyed to him, see L. P. Act, 1925, 1st Sched., Part II., par 3, as amended by the L. P. Amendment Act, 1926.

By L. P. Act, 1925, s. 3 (3), the owner of a legal estate (the estate owner) is bound to transfer a legal estate to any person who has become entitled to require that estate to be vested in him, and see UNDIVIDED SHARES. See MORTGAGE.

Equitable Executor. Where interests in property cannot be taken in execution under the processes at law available to the judgment creditor, he may obtain the appointment of a receiver and if necessary an injunction restraining the judgment debtor from dealing with the property. See R. S. C. Ord. L., r. 16 and Notes, A. P., ibid.

Equitable Mortgage, a mortgage under which the mortgagee does not get the legal estate. The following mortgages are equitable:—

(1) Where the subject of a mortgage is trust property, which security is effected either by a formal deed or a written memorandum, notice being given to the trustees in order to preserve the priority. As a rule these mortgages include mortgages (not being mortgages of a legal estate) under a trust for sale or settlement which are not registrable under the L. C. Act, 1925, s. 10, Class C.

(2) Where the subject of the mortgage is an equity of redemption, which is merely a right to bring an action in the Chancery Division to redeem the estate. Now under the L. P. Act, 1925, Sched. I., Parts VII. (1), (3), and VIII. (1), (3), and see ss. 85, 86, ibid., a mortgagor retains a legal estate in fee simple or for a term of years, and the first and subsequent mortgagees out of that estate each have a legal mortgage.

(3) Where mortgages created before 1925 and whether of the equity of redemption of a legal estate or otherwise affecting the legal estate not being protected by a deposit of documents or by registration have been converted into legal mortgages (infra) by the L. P. Act, 1925, and have not been registered as a land charge since 1925 under the L. C. Act, 1925, they are to be deemed to remain an equitable estate as against a purchaser in good faith without notice (L. P. Act, 1925, 1st Sched., Parts VII. and VIII.). Registration not being compulsory (L. C. Act, 1925, s. 10 (1), Class C and (7)) until transfer, proper disclosure of such mortgages is required and ordinary notice will affect a purchaser, even in the absence of registration (L. P. Act, 1925, s. 199).

(4) Where there is a written agreement only to make a mortgage, which creates an equitable lien on the land.

(5) Where a debtor deposits the title-deeds of his estate with his creditor or some person on his behalf, without even a verbal communication. The deposit itself is deemed evidence of an executed agreement or contract for a mortgage for such estate.

This transaction, which appears to be a judicial repeal of the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 4), is extensively resorted to, and is known in practice as an equitable mortgage by deposit of title-deeds. Its validity has long been established beyond all question (Bank of New South Wales v. O'Connor, (1889) 14 App. Cas. p. 282).

An equitable mortgage being a contract for a mortgage, the mortgagee might file a bill or claim in Equity, either for a legal mortgage, a foreclosure and conveyance, or a sale; and may now bring an action for the same purpose in the Chancery Division of the High Court (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 34 (3); 1925 Act, s. 56).

Equitable mortgages are amongst the documents which must be stamped within thirty days after execution, by virtue of s. 15 of the Stamp Act, 1891, re-enacting s. 18 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888. See STAMP DUTIES, and as to priorities dependent on the order of registration, see LAND CHARGES, PRIORITIES.

For further information on this subject, consult Cootle or Fisher on Mortgages, and see Russel v. Russel, (1783) 1 Bro. C. C. 269; 1 W. & T. L. C.

Equitable Waste. See WASTE.

Equity [fr. æquitas, Lat.] There is some confusion as to the meaning of Equity; as a scheme of jurisprudence distinct from Law 'Equity' is an equivocal term; the difficulty lies in drawing the dividing lines between the several senses in which it is used. They may be distinguished thus:—

(1) Taken broadly and philosophically, Equity means to do to all men as we would they should do unto us—by the Justinian Pandects, honeste vivere, alterum non ledere, suum cuique tribuere. It is clear that human tribunals cannot cope with so wide a range of duties.

(2) Taken in a less universal sense, Equity is used in contradistinction to strict law. This is Moral Equity, which should be the genius of every kind of human jurisprudence; since it expounds and limits the language of the positive laws, and construes them not according to their strict letter, but rather in their reasonable and benignant spirit.

Aristotle, in his discussion concerning Moral Equity, Ethics Eud., b. v., c. x, calls it the correction of mere law, where mere law fails on account of its universality (ἐνανορθώμα νομίμων δικάων, ἢ ἐλλείπει διὰ τὸ καθόλου) and points to the impossibility of providing for every possible predicament in express words.

(3) But it is in neither of these senses that Equity is to be understood as the substantial justice which has been expounded by the Court of Chancery. It is here accepted in a more limited and technical sense, and may be called Municipal Equity, and described as the system of supplemental law administered in Chancery, and founded upon defined rules, recorded precedents, and established principles, to which it closely adheres; the judges, however, liberally expounding and developing them, in order to meet novel exigencies. While it aims to assist the defects of the Common Law, by extending relief to those rights of property which the strict law does not recognize, and by giving more ample and distributive redress than the ordinary tribunals afford, it by no means either controls, mitigates, or supersedes the Common Law, but rather guides itself by its analogies, and does not assume any power to subvert its doctrines. This is amply shown by two well-known maxims of the Court of Chancery, viz., Æquitas sequitur legem, and Where the Equities are equal, the Common Law must prevail.

The grand characteristic of Municipal Equity is displayed in the nature and extent of its redress. Not content, as the Common Law generally is, to adjudicate strictly and absolutely in rem, i.e., upon the transaction itself, as it is presented by the litigants, Equity insists upon the conscientious obligations of the suitors; and by adjudicating in personam, may compel specific performance (see that title) of a contract where law would only give damages for the breach of it, and stop a wrong by injunction (see that title) where law would only give damages for the commission of it. Consult Story's Eq. Juris., chap. i. And see TRUST. Complete powers are now given to all branches of the Supreme Court to administer Equity, though many matters of equitable jurisdiction are for convenience assigned to the Chancery Division of the High Court for adjudication (Jud. Act, 1925, s. 36), though in general it may be said that this fusion only allows legal and equitable remedies to be enforced either in Equity or at Common Law; it has not changed the nature of equitable as opposed to legal rights (A. P. notes to s. 23, ibid.). See CHANCERY.

Equity of Redemption. Before 1926 the equitable estate or interest left in a person after he had mortgaged his property. Now the right to call for a reconveyance of a legal estate or of an equitable interest in property from the mortgagee on payment of principal, interest and costs. A mortgagee, although he has become absolute owner of a legal estate in the mortgaged property, on account of the breach of the condition for repayment of the loan within the strict time, is nevertheless compelled to reconvey the legal estate to the mortgagor, who applies to redeem it, on payment of the principal, interest, and costs, Equity treating the breach of the condition as a penalty, and the retention for the mortgagee's own benefit of that which was intended simply as a pledge, as contrary to substantial justice.

This right or equity of redemption is an essential attribute of a mortgage; it is inherent in the thing itself, and any provision inserted in the mortgage to defeat the right is void as a 'clog on the equity' (see that title). But it may be destroyed by (1) a conveyance of the equity of redemption by the mortgagor to the mortgagee; (2) a sale of the mortgaged property by the mortgagee under a power of sale; (3) a decree for foreclosure by the Court; (4) lapse of time (twelve years) under the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, ss. 7, 8. This equitable right of redemption after the mortgagor has made default in payment must not be confounded with a subsidiary or collateral right in terms of the contract, which is a different thing altogether; see Cummins v. Fletcher, (1880) 14 Ch. D. 708.

An equity of redemption, and (since 1st January, 1926), the legal estate which a mortgagor of a legal estate in land retains, together with the equity of redemption, under the L. P. Act, 1925, so long as it subsists, may itself be mortgaged, and before 1926, each incumbrancer of the equity of redemption had preference according to his priority in time.

Before 1926, the following dangers and disadvantages attended this species of security:—

A prior mortgagee might be postponed to a subsequent mortgagee, who, having advanced his money without notice of such prior mortgage, afterwards acquired the legal estate. See TACKING, which, though abolished by the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 78), s. 7, was revived by the Land Transfer Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 87), s. 129, and since 1st January, 1926, has again been abolished (L. P. Act, 1925, s. 94 (3)), except in the case of a security for further advances.

If the subsequent mortgage has not been registered and is not secured by possession of the documents.

Before 1926, the first mortgagee might either before or after the mortgage of the equity of redemption, in the absence of any notice of it, make further advances and tack them to his first security, to the displacement of the mesne mortgage. In order to guard against this, the mortgagee of an equity of redemption inquired of the first mortgagee the amount of his loan and gave him notice of his own advance. And notice of it would be put on the principal title-deed, in order to avoid the risk of the mortgagor redeeming the first mortgage, and handing over the title-deeds to a person without notice of the mesne mortgage, who would thus have gained priority.

The right of a prior mortgagee to make further advances to rank in priority to subsequent mortgages (whether legal or equitable) has been preserved by s. 94 of the L. P. Act, 1925. See FURTHER ADVANCES.

Before 1926 the mortgagee of an equity of redemption of a legal estate had no legal remedy against the estate itself but could only apply for equitable relief; this is still the case in regard to mortgagees of equitable interests. The following changes, however, have been introduced. Mortgages affecting a legal estate created or transferred after 1925, if not protected by possession of documents and not registrable entirely in a local registry, now rank in priority, according to the date of registration under the Land Charges Act, 1925 (see s. 97, L. P. Act, 1925), and not of their creation, and similar mortgages of an equitable interest now rank according to the date of registration under the L. C. Act, 1925, or failing such registration or subject to avoidance as against purchasers for value if unregistered, according to the date of notice to the trustee or trustees and not according to date of creation (s. 137, L. P. Act, 1925).

For the penalties imposed upon a fraudulent concealment of documents, see Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 183. As to priorities and registration of legal or equitable mortgages, see MORTGAGES, LAND CHARGES, NOTICE, REGISTRATION OF LAND, FORECLOSURE.

Equity to a Settlement (Wife's). Prior to the Married Women's Property Acts (see MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY), the law permitted a husband to possess himself absolutely of the whole of his wife's personal property and the rents and profits, during the coverture, of her realty; the consequence of which was that the wife, however great her fortune, might be left destitute. Whenever, therefore, he or any person claiming in his right was obliged to come into a Court of Equity for the recovery of the wife's property, the Court, as the price of its assistance, required him to make a settlement of some portion of it in favour of the wife and her children, the rule being to settle one-half in ordinary cases, but the whole if the husband were insolvent or had deserted his wife or there had been a dissolution of marriage on the ground of his adultery (Barrow v. Barrow, (1854) 5 De G. M. & G. 782; Morgan v. Morgan, (1854) 2 Eq. Rep. 1270). The Married Women's Property Act, 1882, by leaving a wife's property unaffected by her marriage, has rendered the exercise of this jurisdiction unnecessary.

Equus coopertus. A horse equipped with saddle and furniture. See Du Cange.

Era. See ÆRA.

Ernes, the loose scattered ears of corn that are left on the ground after the binding. —Kennet's Glos.

Errant [itinerant], applied to justices on circuit, and bailiffs at large, etc. See EYRE.

Erraticum, a waif or stray.

Error. The name for recourse to the Court of Exchequer Chamber from any of the inferior tribunals, by reason of defects in the record, or to the House of Lords from the Exchequer Chamber; or to the King's Bench Division of the High Court in criminal cases. Proceedings in error were abolished by the Jud. Act, 1875, Order LVIII., r. 1, except in criminal cases, appeal being substituted in civil cases.

In criminal cases also writs of error are now abolished by s. 20 (1) of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907. See, for the procedure, Rules 173–205 of the Crown Office Rules of 1906.

Error nominis, a mistake of detail in the name of a person; used in contradistinction to error de personâ, a mistake as to identity. See Reg. v. Mellor, (1858) Dears. & B. 468.

Errors excepted, a phrase appended to an account stated, in order to excuse slight mistakes or oversights. Accounts are commonly signed with the addition E. and O. E. — 'Errors and omissions excepted.'

Erthmotum, a meeting of the neighbourhood to compromise differences amongst themselves; a Court held on the boundary of two lands.—Leg. Hen. 1, c. 57.

Esbrancatura, cutting off branches or boughs in forests, etc.—Hov. 784.

Escaldare, to scald. It is said that to scald hogs was one of our ancient tenures in serjeanty.—Lib. Rub. Scaccar. MS. 137.

Escambio [fr. cambier, Span., to change]. A licence granted to make over bills of exchange to another beyond the sea. Abolished by 59 Geo. 3, c. 49, s. 11.

Escape [fr. échapper, Fr., to fly from], a violent or private evasion out of some lawful restraint; as where a man is arrested or imprisoned, and gets away before he is delivered by due course of law. Escapes are either in civil or criminal cases.

(1) Civil. The abolition of imprisonment for debt has rendered this all but obsolete, and the sheriff is expressly discharged from any liability by s. 31 of the Prison Act, 1877, repealed and re-enacted by s. 16, sub-s. 2, and s. 39 of the Sheriffs Act, 1887. Escapes are either voluntary, by the express consent of the keeper, after which he never can take his prisoner again (though the plaintiff may retake him at any time), but the sheriff had to answer for the debt, and he had no remedy over against the person escaping; or, negligent, where a prisoner escapes without his keeper's knowledge or consent, and then upon fresh pursuit the defendant may be retaken, even on a Sunday, and the sheriff was excused, if he had him again, before any action brought against himself for the escape.

(2) Criminal. See the Prison Acts and Rules, especially s. 37 of the Prison Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 126), by which it is felony, punishable by imprisonment with hard labour, to aid a prisoner to escape. Rescue or conniving at the escape of a criminal lunatic is penalised by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 75, ss. 11 and 13, and 47 & 48 Vict. c. 54, s. 11. As to persons of unsound mind, see Lunacy Act, 1890, ss. 85–89. See RESCUE.

Escape-warrant, a process addressed to all sheriffs, etc., throughout England, to retake an escaped prisoner, even on a Sunday, and commit him to proper custody.—1 Anne, c. 16.

Escapio quietus, delivered from that punishment which by the laws of the forest lay upon those whose beasts were found upon forbidden land.—Jac. Law Dict.

Escapium, that which comes by chance or accident.—Cowel.

Esceppa, a measure of corn.—Dugd. Mon. tom. 1, p. 283.

Escheat [eschet or échet, formed from the word eschoir or échoir, Fr., to happen], a species of reversion; it is a fruit of seignior, the Crown or lord of the fee, from whom or from whose ancestor the estate was originally derived, taking it as ultimus hæres upon the failure, natural or legal, of the intestate tenant's family.

Escheat to the Crown, the Duchy of Lancaster, the Duke of Cornwall and to mesne lords has been abolished by Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 45 (1). The right of the Crown to 'bona vacantia' now includes real property under A. E. Act, 1925, s. 46. See BONA VACANTIA.

The title of the Crown was ascertained by inquiry regulated by rules under the Escheat Procedure Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 53), which repealed, as practically inoperative, the numerous statutes from 29 Edw. 1, by which officers called 'escheators' were authorized to hold such inquiries.

It differed from a forfeiture (now abolished for treason or felony by the Forfeiture Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 23)), in that the latter is a penalty for a crime personal to the offender, of which the Crown is entitled to take advantage by virtue of its prerogative; while an escheat results from tenure only, and arises from an obstruction in the course of descent; it originates in feudalism, and respects the intestate's succession. So, while forfeiture affects the rents and profits only, escheat operates on the inheritance.

Escheat arose then, from default of heirs, when the tenant died without any lawful and natural-born relations on the part of any of his ancestors, or when he died without any lawful and natural-born relations on the part of those ancestors from whom the estate descended, or where the intestate tenant, having been a bastard, did not leave any lineal descendants, since he cannot have any collateral descendants.

By the Intestates Estates Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 71), s. 4, now repealed in regard to successions after 1925 by the A. E. Act, 1925, s. 56, it was provided that equitable estates and estates in incorporeal hereditaments (which prior to that Act did not escheat) shall be subject to the same law of escheat as legal estates in corporeal hereditaments.

The Intestates Estates Act, 1884, also, by s. 6, now repealed by the A. E. Act, 1925, provided for the waiver by the Crown of its right by escheat in favour of the family of the intestate, or of any person considered or adopted as part of his family, as pointed out by 59 Geo. 4, c. 94. See Hubback on Succession, ch. iv.

The Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), did not bind the Crown (Re Hartley, 1899, P. 40); nor were the rights of the Crown affected by a sale under the powers of the Settled Land Acts (Re Bond, 1901, 1 Ch. 15). But the Crown, the Duchy of Lancaster and the Duke of Cornwall are now bound by the A. E. Act, 1925, s. 57, without altering any period of limitation and preserving the rights by descent of his Majesty in right of the Crown, of the Duchy of Lancaster, or belonging to the Duchy of Cornwall.

Eschaeta derivatur à verbo Gallico eschoir, quod est accidere, quia accidit domino ex eventu et ex insperato. Co. Litt. 93.—(Escheat is derived from the French word eschoir, which signifies 'to happen,' because it falls to the lord from an event and from an unforeseen circumstance.)

Escheator [fr. eschator, Lat.], an officer anciently appointed by the lord treasurer, etc., in every county, to make inquests of titles by escheat, which inquests were to be taken by good and lawful men of the county, impanelled by the sheriff.—4 Inst. 225. See ESCHEAT.

Escheccum, a jury or inquisition.—Mat. Par. Anno 1240.

Eschipare, to build or equip.—Du Cange.

Escot [Fr.], a tax formerly paid in boroughs and corporations towards the support of the community, which is called scot and lot.

Escrow, a writing under seal delivered to a third person, to be delivered by him to the person whom it purports to benefit upon some condition. Upon the performance of the condition it becomes an absolute deed; but if the condition be not performed, it never becomes a deed. It is not delivered as a deed, but as an escrow, i.e. a scrowl, or writing which is not to take effect as a deed till the condition be performed.—Co. Litt. 36 a; Shep. Touch. p. 58; London Property Co. v. Suffolk, 1897, 2 Ch. 608. Subject to agreement or instructions, an escrow, if released as operative, takes effect from date of the original execution and delivery (Graham v. Graham, (1791) 1 Ves. Jun. 274). See DELIVERY OF DEED.

Escuage [fr. escu, Fr., a shield], a money payment, assessed on the tenants by knight's service from time to time, first at the discretion of the Crown, and afterwards by authority of Parliament; and this commutation appears to have generally prevailed from so early a period as the time of Henry II.—Williams on Real Property. Escuage is called in Latin scutagium, that is, service of the shield; and that tenant which holdeth his land by escuage, holdeth by knight's service.—Co. Litt. 68 b. See SERGEANTY.

Escurare, to scour or cleanse.

Esketores, robbers or destroyers of other men's lands or fortunes.

Eskippamentum, skippage; tackle or ship furniture.—Cowel.

Eskipper, to ship.—Jac. Law Dict.

Eskippeson, shipping or passage by sea.

Esne, a hiring of servile condition.

Esneey [fr. œsnesia, Lat.], a private prerogative allowed to the eldest coparcener, where an estate descended to daughters for want of an heir male, to choose first after the inheritance is divided.—Fleta, l. 5, c. x.

Eserons. Spurs.—7 Rep. 13.

Esplees [fr. expletica, Lat.], the products of land; as the hay of meadows, herbage of pasture, corn of arable land, rents, services, etc.; also the lands, etc., themselves.—Termes de la Ley.

Espousals [fr. sponsalia, Lat.; espouse, Fr.], the act of contracting or affiancing a man and woman to each other; the ceremony of betrothing.

Esquire [fr. escuyer, Fr.; scutum, Lat.; σκίτρος, Gk., hide of which shields were made and afterwards covered], he who attended a knight in time of war, and carried his shield; whence he was called escuyer, in French, and scutifer or armiger, i.e., armour-bearer, in Latin. No estate, however large, conferred this rank upon its owner.

Esquires may be divided into five classes:

(I.) The younger sons of peers and their eldest sons in perpetual succession.

(II.) The eldest sons of knights and their eldest sons in like succession.

(III.) The chiefs of ancient families are esquires by prescription.

(IV.) Esquires by creation or office. Such are the heralds and sergeants-at-arms, and some others, who are constituted esquires by receiving a collar of S.S. Judges and other officers of state, justices of the peace, and the higher naval and military officers are designated esquires in their patents and commissions. Doctors in the several faculties, and barristers-at-law, are also esquires. None of these offices convey gentility to the posterity of the holders.

(V.) The last kind of esquires are those of Knights of the Bath, each of whom appoints three to attend upon him at his installation, and at coronations. See Jac. Law Dict.

Essartum, woodlands turned into tillage by uprooting the trees and removing the underwood.—Old Records.

Essence, that which is indispensable to the existence of any thing or matter. As to the construction of stipulations which according to the rules of equity are not deemed of the essence of a contract, see Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 41, replacing Jud. Act, 1873, s. 25, sub-s. 7; Stickney v. Keeble, 1915, A. C. 386. And see TIME.

Essendi quietum de tolonio, a writ to be quit of toll; it lies for citizens and burgesses of any city or town, who, by charter or prescription, ought to be exempted from toll, where the same is exacted of them.—Reg. Brev. 258.

Essoin, Essoigne, Assoign [fr. essonium, Lat.; essoine, Fr.; ex, priv., and soing, cura; ab angustâ curâ, vel labore liberare, which is a more probable derivation than ἐξουνοῦσθαι, Gk.; though it signifies to excuse by means of an oath, which is the precise nature of an essoin. See Spelman, voc., 'Essoniare'], an excuse for him who is summoned to appear and answer to an action, or to perform suit to a court-baron, etc., by reason of sickness or infirmity or other just cause of absence.

The causes of excuse called essoins allowed in the King's Court were many. The principal essoin was that of infirmity, which was of two kinds: 1. De infirmitate veniendi; 2. De infirmitate resiantis—of which the first was afterwards called de malo veniendi, the latter de malo lecti. See 1 Reeves, 115 and 405, for other essoins.

Formerly the first general return day of the term was called the essoin day, because the Court sat to receive essoins; but when essoins were no longer allowed to be cast, i.e., obtained, in personal actions, the Court discontinued such sittings. Still it was considered the essoin day for many purposes, until the Law Terms Act, 1830 (11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 70), s. 6, did away with the essoin day for all purposes, as part of the term.

Essoinlator, a person who made an essoin.

Essoins, Statute of, 12 Edw. 2, st. 2. See 2 Reeves, 303.

Estache [fr. estacher, attacher, Fr., to fasten], a bridge or stank of stone and timber.—Cowel.

Estanques, weirs or kiddles in rivers.

Estate [fr. status, Lat.; état, Fr.], the condition and circumstance in which an owner stands with regard to his property. The word is used in several senses and may denote either an estate in land ; or an estate in property other than land ; a legal estate or an equitable estate, land being an immovable is capable of being the subject of many estates existing concurrently with each other, thus the absolute ownership or fee simple may be leased and sub-leased, mortgaged and charged, each of the holders of these estates having a good legal or equitable estate at the same time ; again, estates may be in possession, or in futuro ; personal property may also be subject concurrently to a variety of ownerships, according to its nature ; technically, in regard to land, the word is used to denote the quantity of interest, e.g., estate in fee simple, for life, for years, etc., in either legal or equitable estates. In practice its most important division is into real estate and personal estate, although the consequences of that division have lost much of their importance since 1925, when a new system of conveyancing was introduced by the Real Property legislation of that year. L. P. Act, 1925, s. 1 (1), declares that the only estates in land (see definition, s. 205 (ix.), ibid.) which are capable of subsisting or of being conveyed or created at law are : (a) an estate in fee simple absolute in possession ; (b) a term of years absolute and certain rights conterminous with those estates (see LEGAL ESTATE). In regard to the law as it existed before 1926 and as it is still applicable subject to statutory enactment to equitable interests under sub-s. (3) of s. 1 of the L. P. Act, 1925, see s. 4, (ibid.). Blackstone considered legal estates in a threefold view, thus :—

- (1) The quantity of interest or duration, divided into—

- (A) Freeholds of inheritance, which are subdivided into—

- (a) Absolute or fee simple.

- (b) Limited fees ; which are (a) qualified or base fees, and (b) fees conditional at the Common Law, afterwards called fees-tail in consequence of the Statute De Donis, which may be (i.) general or special, (ii.) male or female, (iii.) given in frank-marriage.

- (B) Freeholds not of inheritance, subdivided into —

- (a) Conventional, or created by the act of the parties ; they are (a) estates for one's own life,

- (b) estates pur autre vie, (c) general grant, without expressing any term at all.

- (B) Legal, or created by operation of law ; they are (a) tenancy in tail after possibility of issue extinct, (b) tenancy by the courtesy of England, (c) tenancy in dower.

- (C) Estates less than freehold, subdivided into—

- (a) Estates for years.

- (B) Estates at will.

- (y) Estates at sufferance.

- (D) Estates upon condition, subdivided into—

- (a) Estates upon condition implied.

- (B) Estates upon condition expressed, and these are either precedent, or subsequent ; (a) precedent, which must be performed before an estate can vest or be enlarged ; (b) subsequent, by the failure or non-performance of which an estate already vested is defeated ; such are (i.) estates held in vadio, gage, or pledge, which are of two kinds : vivum vadium, living pledge or vifgage, and mortuum vadium, dead pledge or mortgage ; (ii.) estates by statute merchant or statute staple ; (iii.) estates by elegit.

- (2) The time of enjoyment, either—

- (A) In possession, or

- (B) In expectancy, subdivided into—

- (a) Remainders created by convention of parties, which are (a) vested, (b) contingent or executory, (c) cross.

- (B) Reversions arising by operation of law.

- (3) The number and connection of the tenants ; either

- (A) Severalty.

- (B) Joint-tenancy.

- (C) Coparceny.

- (D) Tenancy in common.

- (E) Entireties.

2 Bl. Com. cc. vii.—xii.

Estate ad remanentiam, an estate in fee simple.—Glanv. l. 7, c. 1.

Estate Clause, an express clause in conveyances, passing all the estate, right, title, etc., in the property conveyed : now implied by virtue of s. 63 of the Law of Property Act, 1925.

Estate Duty. A duty first levied by the Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), upon the principal value of all property, real or personal, settled or not settled, which passes or is deemed to pass on the death of a person after 1st August, 1894. Property 'passing' on death includes gifts or dispositions by the deceased to another person within three years of death, the estate duty taking the place of the 'account duty,' leviable on such gifts within twelve months of death, by virtue of s. 38 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1881, as amended by s. 11 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1889. Property 'passing' on death includes also settled property, in which the life interest is surrendered to the remainderman by the tenant for life within the three years before the death of the tenant for life, by virtue of s. 11 of the Finance Act, 1900 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 7), passed to alter the law as laid down by the Court of Appeal in Attorney-General v. de Prévile, 1900, 1 Q. B. 223, but does not include property in which the life interest is so surrendered more than that time before the death of the tenant for life (Attorney-General v. Beech, 1899, A. C. 53).

Securities physically situate in the United Kingdom and marketable there at the death of a person are liable for estate duty even though the deceased is not a domiciled Englishman (Winans v. R., 1910, A. C. 27).

The duty was originally levied on a graduated scale from 1 per cent. on property not exceeding 500*l.* in value (but over 100*l.*) up to 8 per cent. on property exceeding 1,000,000*l.* Since the Finance Act, 1894, no less than six scales have been introduced in Finance Acts from 1907 to 1930, each increasing the rates of Estate Duty; 8 per cent. is now the rate on property between 18,000*l.* and 21,000*l.*, whilst between 100,000*l.* and 120,000*l.* the rate is 2½ per cent., between 1,000,000*l.* and 1,250,000*l.* 40 per cent., and over 2,000,000, 50 per cent. See Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Revenue,' or amendments, and consult Hanson or Dymond's Death Duties.

As to SETTLEMENT ESTATE DUTY, now abolished, see that title.

Estate Owner. Under the L. P. Act, 1925, ss. 1 (4) and 205 (v.), means the owner of a legal estate (q.v.) in land, but an infant is not capable of being an estate owner. Estate owners include the owners of any legal estate such as tenants in fee simple, lessees, mortgagees having a legal estate, trustees for sale, tenants for life, if of full age, including statutory owners and all persons having the powers of a tenant for life under S. L. Act, 1925, s. 20, personal representatives until they have conveyed the legal estate (Re Bridgett and Hayes, 1928, Ch. 163), statutory owners (q.v.). See INFANT; LEGAL ESTATE.

Estates of the Realm, the three branches of the Legislature—the Lords Spiritual, the Lords Temporal, and the Commons. The notion entertained by many, that the three estates of the realm are the King, the Lords, and the Commons, is an error. See Hallam, Middle Ages, vol. iii. c. viii. part 3.

Estoppel, a conclusive admission, which cannot be denied. It is of three kinds:—

(1) By matter of record, which imports such absolute and incontrovertible verity, that no person against whom it is producible shall be permitted to aver against it. A record concludes the parties thereto, and their privies, whether in blood, in law, or by estate, upon the point adjudged, but not upon any matter collateral or adjudged by inference.—A judgment in an action in rem is absolutely binding upon all the world.

A conviction on the same facts is no estoppel in a civil action because the parties are not the same (Palace Shipping Co. v. Caine, 1907, A. C. 386).

(2) By deed. No person can be allowed to dispute his own solemn deed, which is therefore conclusive against him, and those claiming under him, even as to the facts recited in it. The general rule is that an indenture estops all who are parties to it, while a deed-poll only estops the party who executes it, since it is his sole language and act.—Shep. Touch. 53.

(3) In pais, i.e., by conduct or representation, as that a tenant cannot dispute his landlord's title; bringing an action of ejectment is an unequivocal act (Serjeant v. Nash, 1903, 2 K. B. 304). A false representation to create an estoppel must be a representation of an existing fact and must be acted on before it is corrected (Vagliano v. Bank of England, 1891, A. C. 107; Chadwick v. Manning, 1896, A. C. 231. The representation must be made by a principal or some one authorized to bind him, consequently the certification of shares which is not a company's certificate that the person named therein is registered as the holder of the shares in the register of the company, but a mere statement or receipt that the certificates referred to in a transfer have been lodged with a company; the statement being by the company's secretary does not estop the company from setting up the true facts. The secretary's authority is simply to give receipts for lodged certificates, and being a mere servant it cannot be assumed that he has any authority at all (see Whitechurch (George) Ltd. v. Cavanagh, 1902, A. C. 117). A company is estopped by its certificate as against any one who purchased on the faith of it (Bloomenthal v. Ford, 1897, A. C. 156). As to estoppel by signing a promissory note in blank, see Lloyds Bank v. Cooke, 1907, 1 K. B. 794, and by certifying identity of a stockholder, Bank of England v. Cutler, 1907, 1 K. B. 889. See also generally Duchess of Kingston's case, (1766) 2 Sm. L. C., and Everest on Estoppel, 3rd ed.—See FEED.

Estoverilis habendis, a writ for a wife judicially separated to recover her alimony or estovers. Obsolete.

Estovers, or Estouviers [fr. estoffer, Fr., to furnish, or festover, Fr., i.e., fovere, Lat., to keep warm, cherish, sustain, or defend]. Bote, any kind of sustenance; also a wife's alimony.

Estoveria sunt arandi, arandi, construendi et claudendi. 13 Rep. 68.—(Estovers are of firebote, ploughbote, housebote, and hedgebote.)

Estrays, such valuable animals as are found wandering in a manor or lordship, the owner whereof is not known; in which case the law gives them to the Sovereign, and they now most commonly belong to the lord of the manor by special grant from the Crown. But they must be proclaimed in the church and two market towns next adjoining to the place where they are found; and then, if no person claim them, after proclamation and a year and a day passed, they belong to the Sovereign or his substitute, without a redemption, even though the owner was a minor or under any other legal incapacity. The doctrine of estrays is only applicable to animals domita natura.—2 Steph. Com.

Estreat, (1) the true extract, copy, or note of some original writing or record, and especially of recognizances, fines, amercements, etc., entered on the rolls of a Court to be levied by the bailiff or other officer.—Fitz. N. B. 57; also (2) to forfeit. See RECOGNIZANCE.

Estreclatus, straightened, applied to roads.

Estrepe, to make spoils in lands to the damage of another, as of a reversioner, etc.

Estrepeement [fr. estropier, Fr., to lame; estirpare, Lat.], any spoil or waste made by tenant for life upon any lands or woods to the prejudice of him in reversion; also making land barren by continual ploughing. The writ of estrepeement was abolished by the Real Property Limitation Act, 1883 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27).

Ethelling, or Æthelling. See ADELING.

Etiquette of the Profession. See BAR COUNCIL.

Eundo, morando, et redeundo (in going, remaining, and returning).

Eunomy [fr. εὐνομία, Gk.], a constitution of good laws.

Evasion, the act of escaping by means of artifice; a trick or subterfuge.

Eviction [fr. evinco, Lat., to overcome], dispossession; also a recovery of land, etc., by form of law. See EJECTMENT.

Evidence, proof, either written or unwritten, of allegations in issue between parties.

The leading rules of evidence are the following:—

(1) The sole object and end of evidence is to ascertain the truth of the several disputed facts or points in issue; and no evidence ought to be admitted which is not relevant to the issues. As to when evidence of collateral facts is admissible, see Hales v. Kerr, 1908, 2 K. B. 601; Butterley Co. v. New Hucknall Colliery Co., 1909, 1 Ch. 37. As to acts showing a continuous course of conduct, see R. v. Mortimer, 25 Cr. App. C. 150.

(2) The point in issue is to be proved by the party who asserts the affirmative; according to the maxim affirmanti non neganti incumbit probatio. See BURDEN OF PROOF.

(3) It will be sufficient to prove the substance of the issue.

(4) The best evidence must be given of which the nature of the thing is capable.

(5) Hearsay evidence of a fact is not admissible, with some exceptions. See HEARSAY EVIDENCE.

(6) No person is bound to incriminate himself. See CRIMINAL EVIDENCE ACT.

The mode of taking evidence on a trial in the Common Law Courts differed from that which was usual in the Court of Chancery. It was oral in the former, and by affidavit in the latter. Now, however, that there is one Supreme Court, the ordinary mode of taking evidence is by oral examination of witnesses; but by agreement, or by leave of the Court or a judge, affidavits or depositions may be used (R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXXVII.); they are always used in the Chancery Division on applications by motion or summons. See Best, or Roscoe, or Taylor, or Powell on Evidence; Evidence (Amendment) Act, 1915; and for other statutes on the subject, see Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Evidence.'

Evocation, withdrawing a case from the cognizance of an inferior court.—Fr. Law.

Ewage [fr. eau, Fr., water], toll paid for water-passage.—Jac. Law Dict. See AQUAGE.

Ewries [fr. ew, Sax., marriage, and bryce, breaking], adultery.—Ibid.

EWry, an office in the royal household where the table linen, etc., is taken care of.

Ex abundanti cautela (to make assurance doubly sure).

Exaction, a wrong done by an officer, or one in pretended authority, by taking a reward or fee for what which the law allows not, whereas extortion is where an officer takes more than is due, when something is due to him. The punishment is fine and imprisonment.—Co. Litt. 368 b. See also Sheriffs Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 55), s. 29.

Exactor regis, the King's collector of taxes; also a sheriff.

Ex æquo et bono (in equity and good conscience).

Examination, the act of eliciting by questions a person's knowledge of facts or science. A witness undergoes three examinations: (1) Examination-in-chief, which is made by the party calling him; (2) Cross-examination (see that title) by the opposite party; and (3) Re-examination, by the party who called the witness, which is confined to matters arising out of the cross-examination.

Examiners, or Examiners of the Court. A sufficient number of barristers of not less than three years' standing appointed by the Lord Chancellor to act for a period not exceeding five years in examining out of Court witnesses in any cause whose evidence shall be directed by the Court to be taken before one of such examiners. See R. S. C. Ord. XXXVI., rr. 39–53.

Exannual Roll. In the old way of exhibiting sheriff's accounts, the illeivable fines and desperate debts were transcribed into this roll, which was yearly read, to see what might be recovered.—Jac. Law Dict.

Ex antecedentibus et consequentibus fit optima interpretatio. 2 Inst. 317.—(The best interpretation is made from the context.) See Broom's Leg. Max.; Coles v. Hulme, (1828) 8 B. & C. 568.

Excambiator, a broker; one employed to exchange lands.

Excambion, a contract whereby one piece of land is exchanged for another.—Scots Law.

Excambium, an exchange; a place where merchants meet to transact their business; also an equivalent in recompense; a recompense in lieu of dower ad ostium ecclesie.—1 Reeves, 101 and 103.

Ex cathedrâ, with the weight of one in authority; originally applied to the decisions of the Popes from their cathedra, or chair.

Excellency, the title of a Viceroy, Governor-general, Ambassador, or Commander-in-Chief.

Exceptio, the designation for the defendant's plea.—Civil Law.

Exceptio probat regulam de rebus non exceptis. 11 Rep. 41.—(An exception shows the rule concerning things not excepted.)

Exceptio rei judicatæ, a defence that the matter has been already adjudged in another Court between the parties.—Scots Law.

Exception, exclusion of any thing or person; a stop or stay to an action; also the particular point of law stated in the margin of a demurrer. In Chancery, exceptions might be taken to pleadings if scandalous, and if a defendant's answer were insufficient, the plaintiff might file exceptions to it.—Sm. Ch. Pr. 344, 786.

An exception, in a conveyance, must be of part of the thing granted and of a thing in esse at the time of the grant; whereas a reservation must be of some new thing issuing out of the thing granted; see Co. Litt. 47 a; Shep. Touch. 80; Savill Bros., Ltd. v. Bethell, 1902, 2 Ch. 523, and see RESERVATION.

Under s. 162 (1) (d) of the L. P. Act, 1925, the rule of law relating to perpetuities does not apply to any exception of any right of entry or user of the surface of land, or to easements, rights and privileges in relation to mines and minerals as set out in the section.

In summary proceedings upon an Act of Parliament, an exception in the Act 'may be proved by the defendant, but need not be negative or specified in the information or complaint'; and if so specified or negative need not be proved by the informant or complainant: Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, s. 39 (2), extending the proviso of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, s. 14.

In the Scots Law, as in the Roman, exception is synonymous with defence.

Exceptions, Bill of. See BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

Exceptis excipendis, with all necessary exceptions.

Excerpta, or Excerpts. Extracts.

Excess. When a defendant pleaded to an action of assault that the plaintiff trespassed on his land and would not depart when ordered, whereupon he molliter manus im- posuit, gently laid hands on him, the replication of excess was to the effect that the defendant used more force than necessary. See PLEADING.

Excess Profits Duty. A duty imposed by the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1915 (ss. 38-45), on such profits as a business made in a year which were more than 200% in excess of those made prior to 4th August, 1914, or, in the case of a business established since that date, on profits which exceeded a percentage on the capital employed. The duty was abolished by the Finance Act, 1921.

Exchange, often contracted into change, a building or other place in considerable trading cities, where merchants, agents, bankers, brokers, and other persons concerned in commerce, meet at certain times to confer and treat together of matters relating to exchanges, remittances, payments, adventures, assurances, freights, and other mercantile negotiations, both by sea and land.

Also used to designate that species of mercantile transactions by which the debts of individuals residing at a distance from their creditors are satisfied without the transmission of actual money. Also the value of the currency of one country in the terms of another.

Par of Exchange. The par of the currency of any two countries meant, among merchants, the equivalency of a certain amount of the currency of the one in the currency of the other, supposing the currencies of both to be of the precise weight and purity fixed by their respective mints. It now may be assumed to mean the hypothetical equivalent in terms of the currency of any country of a definite amount of gold or other commodity, subject to statutory direction.

Circumstances which determine the course of exchange. The exchange is affected, or made to diverge from par, by circumstances among which may be mentioned first, any discrepancy between the actual weight and fineness of the coins, or of the bullion for which the substitutes used in their place will exchange, and their weight or fineness, as fixed by the mint regulations; and, secondly, any sudden increase or diminution of the bills drawn in one country upon another.—See McCull. Com. Dic.

Exchange, Bill of. See BILL OF EXCHANGE.

Exchange [fr. excambium, Lat.], Deed of, an original Common Law conveyance, for the reciprocal transfer of interests ejusdem generis, as fee simple for fee simple, legal estate for legal estate, copyhold for copyhold of the same manor, and the like, the one in consideration of the other. It takes place between two distinct contracting parties only, although several persons may compose each party. The operative and indispensable verb was 'exchange,' which no longer implies a general warranty or right of re-entry (L. P. Act, 1925, s. 59, replacing Real Property Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106), s. 4). An actual entry upon the property exchanged by the parties themselves to the deed was essential. The exchange was void if either party died before entry, for, under such circumstances, the parties had no freehold in them, for the heir could not enter and take as a purchaser, because he took under the deed, only by way of limitation in course of descent, but by the L. P. Act, 1925, s. 57, the conveyance of the interest is sufficient without entry. An exchange of corporeal hereditaments lying in the same county could be made by parol perfected by entry; but under L. P. Act, 1925, s. 52, replacing with amendment Real Property Act, 1845, s. 3, an exchange of hereditaments is void at law unless made by deed; see, however, s. 55 (d), L. P. Act, 1925, and K. & E., tit. 'Exchanges,' in regard to the effect in equity of an exchange by parol, followed by part performance.

In consequence of the inconvenience arising from the implied warranty and re-entry, exchange fell into disuse, and mutual conveyances, the one in consideration of the other, were resorted to. In modern practice no exchange is ever made without either a deed or (under conditions in regard to equality of value) a Statutory Order of the Ministry of Agriculture. Registration of an exchange is not compulsory under the Land Registration Act, 1925, unless money is paid for equality of exchange.

The General Inclosure Act (8 & 9 Vict. c. 118, s. 92) provides for the allotment and award of any land to be inclosed in exchange for any other land within the parish in which the land to be inclosed shall be situate. Consult Cooke on Inclosures.

The Settled Land Act, 1925, ss. 38 and 40, replacing the S. L. Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), allows a tenant for life and limited owners included in that term (see s. 20, S. L. Act, 1925), to make an exchange of settled land for other land. As to power of local authorities to exchange lands for statutory purposes, see, e.g., Housing Act, 1936.

Exchange of Livings, effected by resigning them into the bishop's hands, and each party being inducted into the other's benefice; if either die before both are inducted, the exchange is void.—31 Eliz. c. 6, s. 8.

Exchanges, Regimental. The Sovereign may from time to time by regulation authorize exchanges by officers from one regiment to another (Regimental Exchanges Act, 1875). Under the Army Act, s. 155 (3), any person who negotiates, acts as agent for, or otherwise aids or connives at any exchange, not so authorized, in respect of which any sum of money or other consideration is given or received, is liable on conviction to a fine of 100*l.*, or to imprisonment, and if an officer, on conviction by court-martial, to be dismissed the service.

Excheat. See ESCHEAT.

Exchequer Bills, bills of credit issued by the Government under authority of Parliament, and forming part of the 'Unfunded Debt' of the country. They are for various sums, and bear interest according to the usual rate at the time. The advances of the Bank to Government are made upon Exchequer bills; and the daily transactions between the Bank and Government are principally carried on through their intervention. See Exchequer Bills and Bonds Act, 1866 (29 Vict. c. 25), consolidating and amending the Acts dating from 48 Geo. 3, c. 1, which regulated the preparation, issue, and payment of Exchequer bills and bonds. See also 52 Vict. c. 6; 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 55, and subsequent Acts. Their place has now largely been taken by Treasury bills. See that title.

Exchequer Bonds, with coupons for interest, forming another part of the 'Unfunded Debt' of the country, first issued in 1853. Authorized up to ten millions by the Finance Act, 1905, and repayable by annual drawings at par in ten years.

Exchequer, Court of [fr. eschequier, Nor.-Fr.; scaccarium, Low Lat.; a treasure], consisted of two divisions, a Court of Revenue, and a Court of Common Law, having also an equitable jurisdiction, which, except when it sat as a Court of Revenue, was transferred to the Court of Chancery by 5 Vict. c. 5. See A.-G. v. Halling, (1846) 15 M. & W. 687. As a Court of Revenue it ascertained, and enforced by proceedings appropriate to the case, the proprietary rights of the Crown against the subjects of the realm. To proceed against a person in this department of the Court was called to exchequer him. As a Court of Common Law (after having obtained jurisdiction by the fiction of quominus (see QUOMINUS)), it administered redress between subject and subject in all actions whatever, except real action. It was a Court of Record, and its judges were six (formerly five) in number, consisting of one chief and five (formerly four) puisne barons. This Court was made a Division of the High Court of Justice (Jud. Act, 1873, ss. 31, 34). See EXCHEQUER DIVISION.

Exchequer Chamber, Court of, a tribunal of error and appeal.

First, it existed in former times as a Court of mere debate, such causes from the other Courts being sometimes adjourned into it as the judges upon argument found to be of great weight and difficulty, before any judgment was given upon them in the Court below. It then consisted of all the judges of the three Superior Courts of Common Law, and at times the Lord Chancellor also.

Second, it existed as a Court of Error, where the judgments of each of the Superior Courts of Common Law, in all actions whatever, were subject to revision by the judges of the other two, sitting collectively. See 27 Eliz. c. 8 (error from Queen's Bench), and 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 70, s. 8 (error from the three Courts). The composition of this Court consequently admitted of three different combinations, consisting of any two of the Courts below which were not parties to the judgment appealed against. There was no given number required to constitute the Exchequer Chamber, but the Court never consisted of less than five. One counsel only was heard on each side. Error lay from this Court to the House of Lords. The Court is abolished, and its jurisdiction in appeals (proceedings in error in civil cases and bills of exceptions being abolished) is transferred to the Court of Appeal (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 18 (4)); see now Jud. Act, 1925, s. 26. See APPEAL, COURT OF.

Exchequer Division. A division of the High Court of Justice, to which the special business of the Court of Exchequer was specially assigned by s. 34 of the Judicature Act, 1873. Merged in the King's Bench Division by Order in Council under s. 31 of that Act, made in February, 1881. See now Jud. Act, 1925, s. 4.

Excise [fr. accis, Dut.; excisum, Lat.], the name given to the duties or taxes laid on certain articles produced and consumed at home, amongst which spirits have always been the most important; but, exclusive of these, the duties on the licences of auctioneers, brewers, etc., and on the licences to keep dogs, kill game, etc., are included in the excise duties.

Excise duties were introduced into England by the Long Parliament in 1643, being then laid on the makers and vendors of ale, beer, cider, and perry. The management of the excise, originally and for a long time entrusted to special commissioners (as to whom see the Excise Management Act, 1827 (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53), was, in 1849, by 12 Vict. c. 1, transferred to the Board of Inland Revenue, and in 1909 to the Board of Customs and Excise.

Consult Bell and Dwelly's Excise Acts, published in 1873; Halsbury's Laws of England, tit. 'Revenue'; and Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Revenue.'

Exclusa, Exclusagium, a sluice to carry off water; the payment to the lord for the benefit of such a sluice.

Excommencement, excommunication.—Law French. See 23 Hen. 8, c. 3.

Excommunication, an ecclesiastical interdiction or censure, divided into the greater and the lesser; by the greater a person was excluded from the communion of the church and the company of the faithful, and was rendered incapable of any legal act; by the lesser he was merely debarred from participation in the Sacraments.

See No. 33 of the Thirty-nine Articles of Religion as to avoiding an excommunicated person 'until he be openly reconciled by penance, and received into the church by a judge that hath authority thereto'; Canon 112, to the effect that the minister and churchwardens shall yearly within 40 days after Easter exhibit to the Bishop or his Chancellor the names and surnames of all the parishioners, as well men as women, which being of the age of sixteen years received not the Communion at Easter before; and Jenkins v. Cook, (1876) 1 P. D. 80, in which the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council admonished a vicar to refrain from refusing to administer the Communion to a parishioner.

The old law was thus put:—Excommunicato interdictitur omnis actus legitimus, ita quod agere non potest, nec aliquem convenire, licet ipse ab aliis possit conveniri. Co. Litt. 133.—(Every legal act is forbidden an excommunicated person, so that he cannot act, nor sue any person, but he may be sued by others.)

Excommunication was formerly the process by which the decrees and orders of the Ecclesiastical Courts were enforced; but in all cases of contempt of Court it has now been abolished, and in lieu thereof, where a lawful citation or sentence has not been obeyed, the judge has power, after a certain period, to pronounce such person contumacious and in contempt, and to signify the same to the Court of Chancery; whereupon a writ de contumace capiendo shall issue having the same force as formerly belonged, in case of contempt, to a writ de excommunicato capiendo.—53 Geo. 3, c. 127, s. 2.

Excommunicato delibendo, a writ to the sheriff for delivery of an excommunicated person out of prison, upon certificate from the ordinary of his conformity to the ecclesiastical jurisdiction.—Fitz. N. B. 63.

Excommunicato recapiendo, a writ commanding that persons excommunicated, who for their obstinacy had been committed to prison, but were unlawfully set free before they had given caution to obey the authority of the church, should be sought after, retaken, and imprisoned again.—Reg. Brev. 67.

Ex concessis, from things already conceded.

Ex contractu (from a contract). One of the greatest classes of obligation from which a right of action accrues. The actions were: (1) account; (2) assumpsit, or promises; (3) covenant; (4) debt; (5) and perhaps, detinue; (6) scire facias, or revivor. See now ACTION.

Exculpation, Letters of, a warrant granted at the suit of a prisoner for citing witnesses in his own defence.—Scots Law.

Excusable Homicide. See HOMICIDE.

Excusat aut extenuat delictum in capitalibus quod non operatur idem in civilibus. Bac. Max. r. 15.—(That may excuse or palliate a wrongful act in capital cases which would not have the same effect in civil injuries.)

Excoussion, seizure by law.

Ex debito justitiæ. From what is owed by justice, or of right. Said of a remedy which the Court has no discretion to refuse.

Ex delicto (from a tort or offence). The actions which arose from torts were: (1) trespass on the case; (2) trespass; (3) trover; (4) replevin. Consult Addison, or Clerk and Lindsell, or Pollock on Torts.

Ex dolo malo non oritur actio. Cowp. 343.—(From a fraud an action does not arise.) See Collins v. Blanton, (1767) 2 Wils. 341; 1 Sm. L. C., where it was held that a bond given to induce the prosecutor of an indictment for perjury to withhold his evidence could not be recovered upon. Consult Broom's Leg. Max.

Exeat, a permission which a bishop grants to a priest to go out of his diocese ; also leave to go out generally.

Executed, something done or completed.

Executed Consideration, a consideration which is executed before the promise upon which it is founded is made, as where A. bails a man's servant, and the master afterwards promises to indemnify A. ; but if a man promise to indemnify A. in the event of his bailing his servant, the consideration is then executory. With respect to an executed consideration, the rule is, that if it were not at the precedent request, express or implied, of the promiser, but a merely voluntary courtesy, it will not suffice to support a promise ; therefore, in the first example, the promise would not be binding unless the bailing were at the master's precedent request. See notes to Lamplough v. Brathwait, (1616), 1 Sm. L. C., and CONSIDERATION ; CONTRACT.

Executed Contract, where nothing remains to be done by either party, and where the transaction is completed at the moment that the agreement is made, as where an article is sold and delivered, and payment therefor is made on the spot. A contract is said to be executory where some future act is to be done, as where an agreement is made to build a house in six months, or to do an act on or before some future day, or to lend money upon a certain interest, payable at a future time.

Executed Fine, the fine sur cognizance de droit come ceo qu'il a de son done ; or a fine upon acknowledgment of the right of the cognizee, as that which he has of the gift of the cognizor. Abolished by the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74).

Executed Trust. When an estate is conveyed to the use of A. and his heirs, with a simple declaration of trust for B. and his heirs, or the heirs of his body, the trust is perfect ; and it is said to be executed, because no further act is necessary to be done by the trustee to raise and give effect to it ; because there is no ground for the interference of a Court of Equity to affix a meaning to the words declaratory of the trust which they do not legally import.—1 Sand. Uses and Trusts, 335, and see EQUITABLE ESTATE.

As all trusts are executory in this sense, that the trustee is bound to dispose of the estate according to the tenure of his trust, it would be more accurate to substitute the terms 'passive' or 'active' for executed and executory trusts.

Executed Use, the first use in a conveyance upon which the Statute of Uses (see USES) operated by bringing the possession to it, the combination of which, i.e., the use and the possession, formed the legal estate, so that the statute executed the use.

Execution, the last state of a suit whereby possession is obtained of anything recovered by a judgment. It is styled final process, and is regulated by R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XLII., r. 17, of which allows immediate execution in ordinary cases. See PRÆCIPE.

The ordinary writs of execution are capias ad satisfaciendum ; feri facias ; elegit ; and habere facias possessionem. See these titles respectively, especially FERI FACIAS.

As to the protection of vendor or purchaser on a sale under an execution, see Bankruptcy and Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1913, s. 15.

As to the writ of capias ad satisfaciendum, see Hulbert v. Cathcart, 1896, A. C. 470 ; and it is to be borne in mind that by the Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), imprisonment for debt has been abolished, except as specified in s. 4. See IMPRISONMENT.

By R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XLII., r. 17 (b), the Court or a judge may, at or after the time of giving judgment or making an order, stay execution until such time as they or he shall think fit.

As to registration of writs and orders, see Land Charges Act, 1925, and as to equitable charges on land in right of judgment debt, etc., see Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 195. Registration is effected in the Register of Writs and Orders at the Land Registry under the Land Charges Act, 1925. In regard to registered land, however, registration must be effected under the Land Registration Act, 1924, s. 59.

See also JUDGMENTS EXTENSION ACT, 1868 ; EQUITABLE EXECUTION.

Execution of Criminals must be performed by the legal officer—the sheriff, or his deputy. The Common Law mode of execution is by hanging, which until 1868 took place in public ; but in that year the Capital Punishment Amendment Act (31 & 32 Vict. c. 24), prescribed that the execution must take place within the walls of the prison, in presence of the sheriff, gaoler, chaplain, and surgeon of the prison, and such other officers of the prison as the sheriff requires, or allows. Public execution is, however, still necessary in the case of piracy with attempted murder. See PIRACY.

Execution of Deeds, the signing, sealing, and delivery of them by the parties, as their own acts and deeds, in the presence of witnesses. By s. 73, L. P. Act, 1925, sealing alone is not sufficient; an individual must sign or mark the deed. Sect. 74, ibid., provides for the execution of deeds by companies and other corporations. See CORPORATION; DEED. As to compulsory executions, s. 47 of the Judicature Act, 1925, replacing the 14th section of the Judicature Act, 1854, enacts, that when any person fails to comply with a judgment directing him to execute any conveyance, etc., the Court may order that the conveyance, etc., may be executed by such person as the Court may nominate to execute the deed instead, and that such execution shall have the same validity as if the conveyance, etc., had been executed by the party himself.

The rule that a purchaser was entitled to have the conveyance executed in his presence is abrogated by L. P. Act, 1925, s. 75, replacing the Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 8, which, however, preserves the rule that the purchaser may have at his own cost the execution of the conveyance attested by some person appointed by him. The section is applied by Land Registration Act, 1925, s. 38 (1) to transfers of registered land.

Execution of Wills. By the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 9:—

No will shall be valid unless it be in writing and executed in manner hereinafter mentioned; (that is to say) it shall be signed at the foot or end thereof by the testator or by some other person in his presence and by his direction, and such signature shall be made or acknowledged by the testator in the presence of two or more witnesses present at the same time, and such witnesses shall attest and shall subscribe the will in the presence of the testator, but no form of attestation clause shall be necessary.

The Wills Act Amendment Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 24), contains most elaborate saving allowances for the position of the signature. Thus, the signature of the testator may be placed 'at, or after, or following, or under, or beside, or opposite to, the end of the will'; 'a blank space may intervene between the concluding word of the will and the signature'; the signature may be 'on a side, or page, or other portion of the paper or papers containing the will, whereon no clause, or paragraph, or disposing part of the will may be written above the signature,' etc., the only restriction being that 'no signature is to be operative to give effect to any disposition or direction which is underneath or which follows it; nor to give effect to any disposition or direction inserted after the signature is made.'

Obliterations, interlineations, or other alterations must, by s. 21 of the Wills Act, be executed in the same manner as a will. See Jarman on Wills and Williams on Executors, and WILLS; ATTESTATION CLAUSE.

Executione facienda in withernamium, a writ that lay for taking cattle of one who has conveyed the cattle of another out of the county, so that the sheriff cannot replevy them.—Reg. Brev. 82.

Executione judicii, a writ directed to the judge of an Inferior Court to do execution upon a judgment therein, or to return some reasonable cause wherefore he delays the execution.—Fitz. N. B. 20.

Executive, that branch of the government which puts the laws into execution, as distinguished from the legislative and judicial branches. The body that deliberates and enacts laws is legislative; the body that judges and applies the laws in particular cases is judicial; and the body that carries the laws into effect, or superintends the enforcement of them, is executive. The executive authority, in all monarchies, is vested in the sovereign.

Executor. A person appointed by a testator to carry out the directions and requests in his will, and to dispose of the property according to his testamentary provisions after his decease.

The leading duties and responsibilities of an executor may be thus classed:—

(1) He will not be allowed as against creditors extravagant funeral expenses if the testator died insolvent; and if he neglects to secure the property, and loss ensue, he will be personally liable for a devastavit, but will not be responsible for mere neglect to take out probate (Re Stevens, 1898, 1 Ch. 162). See DEVASTAVIT.

(2) By operation of law by virtue of his office he takes a title to the personal property of the testator which vests him with full power over the testator's chattels (Attenborough v. Solomon, 1913, A. C. 76), and by Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 1, extending and amending the Land Transfer Act, 1897, real property devolves in the same manner as personal property, with some exceptions, e.g., an entailed interest not disposed of by the will, and property held in joint tenancy, and he can sell or mortgage that property for purposes of administration, and no purchaser or mortgagee dealing with him is concerned to inquire for what purpose the money is required. Even if a later will subsequently comes to light appointing a different person executor, the acts of the former executor so long as his title existed are good (Hewson v. Shelley, 1914, 2 Ch. 13). Probate of the will, when obtained, is only evidence of his title; as a rule it relates back to the time of the testator's death, and as the executor derives full power from the will he can act as executor before probate obtained. He may even commence an action before probate, and it is usually sufficient if he obtain probate in time to prove his title if it should be disputed; see, however, Tarn v. Commercial Banking Co., (1884) 12 Q. B. D. 294. But he must be prepared either to act wholly or not at all, for probate cannot be renounced partially (Re Smith, 1904, 1 Ch. 139), except in regard to land settled otherwise than by the will of the testator of the settlement of which the executor has not been appointed a trustee Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 23 (1).

(3) Under the Trustee Act, 1925, s. 7, replacing and amending s. 29 of the Law of Property Amendment Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35) and 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 38), the executor may and should shortly after the funeral publish an advertisement in The London Gazette, a London daily newspaper and, if necessary, a local newspaper, for debtors to pay their debts, and for claimants to send in the particulars of their claims to a named person within the time (not being as a rule less than two months) fixed by the notice and he may at the expiration of the time distribute the estate, having regard to the replies to the advertisement or any other claim of which he may have notice; see Re Bracken, (1889) 43 Ch. D. 1.

Under s. 26 of the Trustee Act, 1925, and the L. P. Amendment Act, 1926 (Schd.), reproducing and extending to trustees the Law of Property Amendment Acts, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35), ss. 27-29, and 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 38), s. 8, a sum may be set apart to meet future claims upon the estate in respect of the covenants in a lease assigned to a purchaser, etc.

(4) Probate should be obtained within six calendar months after death of testator, and if delayed after that time a penalty of 100*l.* and 10*l.* per cent. on the property would be incurred; and if there be a suit or dispute relative to the will or administration, the probate or letters of administration should be obtained within two calendar months after it is ended (Stamp Act, 1815 (55 Geo 3. c. 184, s. 37)). The probate should be obtained to the extend of the sum really expected to be received.

(5) It is the duty of the executor to collect and speedily reduce into money the personal assets, when not otherwise directed, especially if they be of a perishable nature.

(6) As an executor cannot sue himself, the law now allows him, when he has been legally invested with his representative character, to retain out of any assets (either legal or equitable (A. E. Act, 1925, s. 34 (2))), see O'Grady v. Wilmot, 1916, 2 A. C. 231, for the previous law), that may have come to his hands money to the extent of all funeral and testamentary expenses and debts legally paid by him out of his own pocket, and also any debt due to himself, before he pays any other creditor in equal degree, and he may retain his own debt notwithstanding a decree has been made for administration of the estate and notwithstanding the assets out of which he seeks to retain his debt came to his hands after decree, and even though the debt be statute-barred. Before 1926 an executor could retain a debt due to himself as trustee, but by A. E. Act, 1925, s. 34, the right is now exercisable only in respect of debts due to him in his own right. The degree of debts is now regulated in the case of insolvent estates by the rules of bankruptcy, s. 34 and Sched. I., Part I., A. E. Act, 1925. See RETAINER OF DEBTS.

(7) The executor may, even after action commenced by an adverse creditor and at any time before judgment therein, pay one creditor in preference to another of equal degree. After an order for administration has been made, however, the power to prefer no longer exists.

(8) In general, legacies ought not to be paid within a year after the death of the testator, and not even then without an indemnity, if there be the least reason to apprehend that there are debts or claims outstanding. This year is allowed in analogy to the Statute of Distribution, which enacts 'that no distribution of the goods of any person dying intestate be made till after one year after the intestate's death'; and in order that the executor may have full opportunity to obtain information of the state of the property he cannot be compelled to pay a legacy within that period, even in a case where the testator directed it to be discharged within six months after his death.

(9) An executor is not entitled to any remuneration for his own personal trouble or loss of time, unless it be expressed in the will: on which account the law formerly gave to the executor the whole residue undisposed of, unless, by some expression, to be collected from the will, a contrary intention was to be collected. But the next of kin became entitled to the unbequeathed residue by the Executors Act, 1830 (11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 40), now replaced with modifications by s. 49 (b), A. E. Act, 1925; see A.-G. v. Jefferys, 1908, A. C. 411. In many of the colonies, e.g., New Zealand, where not more than 5 per cent. can be allowed by the Administration Act, 1879 [1879, No. 49, s. 20], the executor has a percentage by statute on the net amount realized.

Executors are accountable for estate duty on property which comes to them as such (Finance Act, 1894), see O'Grady v. Wilmot, 1916, 2 A. C. 231 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30). ss. 6, 8; Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 16; and for legacy duty with the exception of annuities, and the executor must deduct the duty before transferring the legacy; see Legacy Duty Act, 1796 (36 Geo. 3, c. 52), ss. 8, 9.

When an executor or administrator sues, his representative character must appear on the writ (R. S. C. 1883, Ord. III., r. 4); and he may sue or be sued without joining the parties beneficially interested in the estate (Ord. XVI., r. 8). Consult Williams or Ingpen on Executors, and Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Executors and Administrators,' and see titles PROBATE; REAL REPRESENTATIVE; WILL. In Scotland an executor appointed by the deceased is called an 'Executornominate'; when the deceased makes no appointment an 'executor-dative' is appointed by the Court.

Executor de son tort. See A. E. Act, 1925, ss. 28, 29, and s. 55 (1) (xi.). If a stranger take upon himself to act as executor or administrator (see 14 Halsbury's L. of E., 2nd edn., para. 282), without any just authority (as by intermeddling with the goods of the deceased, and any other transactions), he is called in Law an executor of his own wrong, de son tort, and is liable to the extent of the assets which have come to him and to all the trouble of an executorship without any of the profits or advantages; but the doing of acts of necessity or humanity, as locking up the goods or burying the corpse of the deceased, will not amount to such an intermeddling as will charge a man as executor of his own wrong. Such an one cannot bring an action himself in right of the deceased; but actions may be brought against him.—1 Wms. Exors.; and see Peters v. Leeder, (1878) 47 L. J. Q. B.

573; A.-G. v. New York Breweries Co., 1899, A. C. 62. As to his liability in respect of a term of years of which the deceased was assignee, see Stratford-upon-Avon Corporation v. Parker, 1914, 2 K. B. 562.

An executor de son tort can discharge his liability by obtaining probate if he is entitled, or by accounting to the personal representative, or to the Court, in an administration by the Court.

Executor of an Executor. The interest in a testator's estate and effects, vested in his executor, at the decease of the executor, devolves upon such executor's executor; but in the case of the decease of an administrator, a fresh administration must be granted; for this reason, that, whereas an executor is appointed by the testator, an administrator merely derives his authority from the Court of Probate. See In the Goods of Reid, 1896, P. 129; and A. E. Act, 1925, s. 7.

Executor Lucratus, an executor who has assets in his hands; it includes the case of an executor of a testator who in his lifetime made himself liable by a wrongful interference with the property of another; see Davidson v. Tulloch, (1860) 6 Jur. (N. S.) 543, H. L. 3 Macq.

Executory, performing official duties; contingent; also personal estate of a deceased; whatever may be executed.

Executory Consideration. A consideration which is to be performed after the contract for which it is a consideration is made. See CONSIDERATION.

Executory Contract. See EXECUTED CONTRACT.

Executory Devise. Mr. Fearne (Cont. Rem. 386) defines an executory devise to be, strictly, such a limitation of a future estate or interest in lands or chattels (though, in the case of chattels personal, it is more properly an executory bequest) as the law admits in the case of a will, though contrary to the rules of limitation in conveyances at Common Law. It is only an indulgence allowed to a man's last will and testament, where otherwise the words of the will would be void; for wherever a future interest is so limited by devise as to operate as a contingent remainder, such an interest is not an executory devise, but a contingent remainder.

Executory Devises have been divided into three kinds, two relative to real, and the third to personal estate only, viz. :—

(1) Where a testator devises his whole fee-simple, but upon some contingency qualifies such devise, and limits an estate on the contingency; e.g., a devise of land to the testator's wife for life, remainder to C., his second son in fee, provided if D. his third son should within three months after the wife's death pay 500*l.* to C. or his executors, then to D. and his heirs: this is an executory devise to D.

(2) Where a testator, without disposing of the immediate fee, gives a future estate to arise, either upon a contingency, or at a period certain, unpreceded by, or not having the requisite connection with, any immediate freehold, to give it effect as a remainder.

The case of a devise to one, to take effect six months after the testator's decease, is an instance of the first class in this description.

And the case of a limitation to one for life, and from and after the expiration of one day (or any other period, not exceeding twenty-one years, we may suppose) next ensuing his decease, then over to another, may be adduced as an instance of the latter part of this description.

(3) The third sort of executory devises, comprising all that relates to chattels, is where a term or any personal estate is bequeathed to one for life, or otherwise, and after the decease of the devisee or legatee for life, or some other contingency or period, is given over to another person.

It is to be remarked that a remainder could only be limited in freehold estates. In personal property, under which both chattels real and chattels personal are included, there could not be a remainder in the strict sense of that word, and therefore every future bequest of personal property, whether it be preceded or not preceded by a prior bequest, or limited on a certain or an uncertain event, is an executory bequest, and falls under the rules by which that mode of limitation is regulated.

The great and essential difference between the nature of a contingent remainder and that of an executory devise consists in this, that the first could be barred and destroyed or prevented from taking effect by several different means, although the stringency of this rule was mitigated by the R. P. Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106), s. 8, which provided against failure upon premature determination of any preceding estate of freehold by forfeiture, surrender or merger, and the Contingent Remainders Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 33), which provided that every contingent remainder created after 2nd August, 1877, which would have been valid as an executory limitation including an executory devise should be capable of taking effect as an executory limitation. These statutory provisions have been repealed by the Law of Property Act, 1924, Sched. 10, and future legal estates in land under executory devises have been changed to equitable interests by the L. P. Act, 1925, s. 1, and by s. 4 (2) of that Act, after 1925 equitable interests in land shall only be capable of being validly created in any case in which an equivalent interest in property real or personal could have been validly created before 1926. And it is a rule that an executory devise cannot be prevented or destroyed by any alteration whatsoever, in the estate out of which or after which it is limited.

If the executory devise be limited to take effect on an estate-tail, then the tenant-in-tail may, by a deed of disposition in conformity with the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74), and s. 130, L. P. Act, 1925 (see TAIL), bar the entail, and all remainders, executory devises, and conditional limitations dependent thereupon. See EXECUTORY LIMITATION and CONTINGENT REMAINDER.

Executory Estates, interests which depend for their enjoyment on some subsequent event or contingency. These are assignable by the L. P. Act, 1925, s. 4 (2), re-enacting the Real Property Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106), s. 6.

Executory Fines, the fines sur cognizance de droit tantum; sur concessit; and sur done grant en render. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74.

Executory Limitation. A limitation of a future interest by deed or will; if by will, it is also called an executory devise. The Conveyancing Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 39), s. 10, restricted executory limitations of land contained in an instrument coming into operation after 1st January, 1883, by the enactment:

'Where there is a person entitled to land for an estate in fee, or for a term of years absolute or determinable on life, or for term of life, with an executory limitation over on default or failure of all or any of his issue whether within or at any specified period of time or not, that executory limitation shall be or become void and incapable of taking effect, if and as soon as there is living any issue who has attained the age of 21 years, of the class on default or failure whereof the limitation over was to take effect.' See Re Booth, 1900, 1 Ch. 768; Re Shrubbs, 1910, W. N. 143.

These provisions were re-enacted by s. 134 of the L. P. Act, 1925, and extended to include executory interests in any property and apply to all executory limitations in any instrument coming into operation after 1882 except that in instruments coming into operation after 1882 but before 1926, it only applies to limitations of land in fee simple or tail or for a term of years absolute or determinable on life or term of life.

Executory Remainder, a contingent remainder, because no present interest passes.

Executory Trusts. In the case of articles of agreement, made in contemplation of marriage, and which are consequently preparatory to a settlement, and in the case of those wills which are merely directory of a subsequent conveyance, the trusts declared by them are said to be executory or imperfect, because they require an ulterior act to raise and perfect them. They are rather considered as instructions for settlements than as instruments in themselves complete; and therefore Equity, in order to promote the presumed views of the parties in the one case and to support the manifest intention of the testator in the other, will attach to the words expressive of the trusts a more liberal and enlarged construction than they would admit if applied either to the limitation of a legal estate or a trust executed.—1 Sand. Uses and Trusts, 237. Lord Glenorchy v. Bosville, (1733) Cas. temp. Talb. 3; 1 W. & T. L. C.

Executory Uses, springing uses, which conferred a legal title answering to an executory devise; as when a limitation to the use of A. in fee is defeasible by a limitation to the use of B., to arise at a future period, or on a given event. After the repeal of the Statute of Uses, L. P. Act, 1925, s. 207 and Sched. VII., the limitations can only be created and take effect as equitable interests, L. P. Act, 1925, s. 4.

Executrix, a woman appointed by a testator to perform his will. By the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 18, a married woman appointed an executrix may sue and be sued, and may transfer stock independently of her husband 'as if she were a feme sole'; and see the further provision made by the Married Women's Property Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 18), s. 1, replaced and extended by the L. P. Act, 1925, s. 170, by which a married woman is able to acquire and hold any interest in property real or personal either alone or jointly as a trustee or personal representative as if she were a feme sole.

Exemplary Damages, damages on an unsparing scale, given in respect of tortious acts, committed through malice or other circumstances of aggravation. In Bel v. Laves, (1884) 2 Q. B. D. 356, an action by a sculptor for libellously styling him an impostor, the jury awarded 5,000*l.* damages, and a rule for a new trial on the ground (amongst others) of excessive damages was discharged by the High Court. The Court of Appeal affirmed this judgment, but laid it down that the Court had power to refuse a new trial on the plaintiff alone, and without the defendant consenting to the damages being reduced to such an amount as the Court would not consider excessive had they been given by the jury.

Where a cause of action survives against or for the benefit of a deceased person's estate, the damages recoverable shall not include any exemplary damages (Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 41)).

Exemplification, a copy; a certified transcript either under the great seal or under the seal of a particular Court.—1 Stark. Evid. 224.

Exemplificatione, a writ granted for the exemplification or transcript of an original record.—Reg. Brev. 290.

Exempli gratia [abbrev. ex. gr., or e.g., Lat.], for the purpose of example, or for instance.

Exemption, immunity; freedom from imposts; a privilege to be free from service or appearance.

Exennium, or Exhenium, a gift; a new year's gift.

Exequatur, an official recognition of a person in the character of consul or commercial agent, authorizing him to exercise his power, and given by the government of the country in which it is to be exercised.

Exercitorial Power, the trust given to a shipmaster.

Exercitor navis, the temporary owner or charterer of a ship.

Exercitiale, a heriot paid only in arms, horses, or military accoutrements.—Jac. Law Dict.

Exeter, or Exon, Domesday, the name given to a record preserved among the muniments and charters belonging to the dean and chapter of Exeter Cathedral, which contains a description of the western parts of the kingdom, comprising the counties of Wilts, Dorset, Somerset, Devon, and Cornwall. The Exeter Domesday was published with several other surveys nearly contemporaneous.

porary, by order of the Commissioners of the Public Records, under the direction of Sir Henry Ellis, in a volume supplementary to the Great Domesday, folio, London, 1816.

Exfrediare, to break the peace ; to commit open violence.—Jac. Law Dict.

Ex gravi querelâ, a writ that lay for him to whom any lands or tenements in fee were devised (within any city, town, or borough wherein lands were devisable by custom), against the heir of the devisor when he entered and detained them from him.—Reg. Brev. 224. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 36.

Exhereditio [Lat.], the act of disinheriting. The exclusion of a child by his father from the inheritance of any part of the estate.—Civil Law. See Sand. Just.

Exhibit, a document or other thing shown to a witness when giving evidence, and referred to by him in his evidence. The term is usually applied to a document referred to in, but not annexed to, an affidavit, and shown to the witness when the affidavit is sworn. A certificate, signed by the person before whom the affidavit is sworn, identifying the document, is indorsed upon the exhibit, and the deponent merely refers to it in the affidavit as 'the [document] now produced and shown to me marked A,' or as the case may be. The fee of the Commissioner for Oaths in respect of each exhibit is one shilling. See R. S. C., Ord. XXXVIII., rr. 23 and 24.

Exhibitant, a person who exhibits anything, as a complainant in articles of the peace.

Exhibition, an allowance for meat and drink, usually made by religious appropriators of churches to the vicar. Also, the benefaction settled for the maintaining of scholars in the universities, not depending on the foundation.—Paroch. Antiq. 304.

In Scots law it is an action for compelling the production of writings.

Exhumation, the disinterring of an interred corpse. To disinter a dead body without lawful authority is a common law misdemeanour. Unless a body is removed from one consecrated burial place to another by faculty, it is unlawful to remove any body or the remains unless by licence from the Secretary of State (Burial Act, 1857 (c. 81), s. 25 ; Fees (Increase) Act, 1923 (c. 4), s. 7 ; Cemeteries Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 65), s. 26). A coroner may by common law order disinterment within a reasonable time for taking an original inquisition or a fee for the inquisition. For the purpose of cremating bodies already buried, an exhumation licence must be obtained from the Secretary of State.

Exigence, or Exigency [probably a corruption of exigents, vitiated by an unskilful pronunciation], demand, want, need.

Exigendaries. See EXIGENTER.

Exigenter, or Exigi facias (that you cause to be demanded), judicial writ commanding the sheriff to demand the defendant from county court to county court, or, if in London, from husting to husting, until he be outlawed ; or if he appear, then to take and have him before the court on a day certain to answer to the plaintiff in an action of, etc. See OUTLAW.

Exigent [fr. exigendarius, Lat.], an officer of the Court of Common Pleas, who makes all exigents, proclamations, etc.—Cowel.

Exigible, demandable, requireable.

Exile [fr. exilium, Lat.], banishment ; the person banished.

Exilium, spoiling. The author of Fleta distinguishes between vastum, destructio, and exilium ; for he tells us that vastum and destructio are almost the same, and are properly applied to houses, gardens, or woods ; but exilium is where servants are enfranchised, and afterwards unlawfully turned out of their tenements.—Fleta, l. 1, c. xi.

Exitus, (1) children, offspring ; (2) the rents, issues, and profits of land and tenements ; (3) the conclusion of the pleadings. See ISSUE.

Exigaltus, he who is prosecuted as an outlaw.—Jac. Law Dict.

Ex-lex, an outlaw.

Ex mero motu (of his own accord). See OFFICE OF A JUDGE.

Ex necessitate legis (from the necessity of law).

Ex necessitate rei (from the necessity of the case).

Ex nudo pacto non oritur actio. Noy, Max. 24.—(An action does not arise from a bare promise.) See CONSIDERATION.

Ex officio (officially ; by virtue of office) ; e.g., justices of the peace were ex officio guardians of the poor.

Ex officio informations, proceedings filed in the King's Bench Division by the Attorney-General, at the direct and proper instance of the Crown, in cases of such enormous misdemeanours as peculiarly tend to disturb or endanger the government, or to molest or affront the sovereign in discharging the royal functions. The information is tried by a jury of the county where the offence arose, and for that purpose, unless the case be of such importance as to be tried at bar, it is sent down by writ of nisi prius into that county, and tried either by a common or special jury, like a civil action.—4 Steph. Com. See Archbold's Cr. Pl.

Ex officio oath, an oath taken by offending priests; abolished by 13 Car. 2, st. 1, c. 12.

Exoine, Essoine [Fr.], the excuse for not appearing in court when cited. See Essoin.

Exonerations sectæ, a writ that lay for the Crown's ward to be free from all suit to the county court, hundred court, leet, etc., during wardship.—Fitz. N. B. 158.

Exonerations sectæ ad curiam baron, a writ of the same nature, issued by the guardian of the Crown's ward, and addressed to the sheriff or stewards of the court, forbidding them to distrain him, etc., for not doing suit of court, etc.—Ibid.

Exoneretur (that he be discharged), an entry made upon the bail-piece upon render of a defendant to prison in discharge of his bail.

Exordium, the beginning or introductory part of a speech.

Ex parte (on behalf of), a proceeding by one party in the absence of the other.

Ex parte tally, a writ that lay for a bailiff or receiver, who, having auditors appointed to take his accounts, cannot obtain of them reasonable allowance, but is cast into prison.—Fitz. N. B. 129.

Expatriation, the forsaking one's own country, and renouncing allegiance, with the intention of becoming a permanent resident and citizen in another country. See British Nationality and Status of Aliens Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 17), ss. 13–16.

Expectancy, in, executory; relating to something in futuro. As to dealings with interests in expectancy, see Re Mudge, 1914, 1 Ch. 115, and cases there referred to.

Expectant, having relation to, or dependent upon.

Expectant Estates, interests to come into possession and be enjoyed in futuro; they are of two sorts at Common Law—reversions and remainders.—2 Bl. Com. 163.

Expectant Heir. A person to whom property will accrue on the death of another person. Expectant heirs wishing to anticipate this property have frequently borrowed money, to be repaid when the expected property shall devolve upon them. From the uncertainty of this period, the unsoundness of the security which the expectant heir can offer, and from the pressing character of his immediate necessities, the rate of interest is necessarily higher than that upon an ordinary loan, and is frequently very much higher than the risk run by the lender requires. At Common Law all such loans are good, and the interest upon them, however high, recoverable. By the Usury Acts, indeed—which, however, did not apply to loans to expectant heirs with any greater rigour than to loans to other persons—they were for a long period of years subject to the restriction that only a fixed maximum rate of interest could be exacted, but the Usury Acts were repealed in 1854 by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 90. See USURY.

From very early times, however, Courts of Equity have been accustomed to interfere between lender and borrower in these cases, and to set aside as 'unconscionable bargains' those mortgages of reversionary interests or other contracts of sale or loan in which the distress of the expectant heir is taken advantage of. See the leading case of Earl of Chesterfield v. Janssen, (1750) 2 Ves. Sen. 125; 1 W. & T. L. C.; and Earl of Aylesford v. Morris, (1873) L. R. 8 Ch. 484, which latter case decided that the Sales of Reversions Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 4), repealed and extended by the L. P. Act, 1925, s. 174, providing that no bond fide purchase of a reversion (including an expectancy or possibility) shall be set aside 'merely on the ground of undervalue,' leaves unaffected the jurisdiction of Courts of Equity to set aside these unconscionable bargains. The onus is on the buyer of a reversionary interest, including an expectancy or possibility to show that the transaction was in good faith under independent advice as a fair valuation, and if made in secret, or confidentially, that it was otherwise unobjectionable. See REVERSION.

The practice of the Court in setting aside the bargain is to direct the reversion charged to stand as security for the money actually advanced and interest at the rate of five per cent. upon such actual advance. See MONEY LENDERS ACT.

Expectation of Life, in the doctrine of life annuities, is the share or number of years of life which a person of a given age may, upon an equality of chance, expect to enjoy. Consult Imwood's Tables; Jenkins' Life Interests.

Expedient, the whole of a person's goods and chattels, bag and baggage.

Expediit reipublicæ ne quis sua ne male utatur.—(The good of the state requires a man not to injure his own property.)

Expediit or Interest reipublicæ ut sit finis

litium. Co. Litt. 303.—(It is for the public good that there be an end of litigation.) See LIMITATION.

Expeditatæ arbores, trees rooted up or cut down to the roots.—Fleta, l. 2, c. xli.

Expeditate, to cut out the ball of a dog's fore-feet, for the preservation of the Royal game.—Manw. c. xvi.

Expenditors, persons formerly appointed by commissioners of sewers to pay, disburse, or expend the money collected by the tax for the repairs of sewers, etc., when paid into their hands by the collectors, on the reparations, amendments, and reformatations ordered by the commissioners, for which they are to render accounts when thereunto required. See Statute of Sewers, 23 Hen. 8, c. 5.

Expensæ litis (costs of suit). See COSTS.

Expensis militum non levandis, etc., an ancient writ to prohibit the sheriff from levying any allowance for knights of the shire upon those who held lands in ancient demesne.—Reg. Brev. 261.

Experts, witnesses who give evidence upon matters of their own professional knowledge, as distinguished from particular matters of fact, e.g., professed judges of handwriting, foreign lawyers as to foreign law (see Re Turner, 1906, W. N. 27), or doctors as to the effects of drugs or poisons. The admissibility of such evidence rests upon the maxim cuiuslibet in sua arte est credendum.

Regarding Court Experts, see R. S. C. Ord. XXXVIIA. An arbitrator under the Small Holdings and Allotments Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 36), cannot by virtue of Schedule I. (5) of that Act hear expert witnesses except by direction of the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries. See Best on Evidence; as to privilege of expert on handwriting, see Seaman v. Netherclift, (1876) 2 C. P. D. 53; and as to the caution with which well-paid expert evidence is to be accepted as proof, see per Jessel, M.R., in Lord Abinger v. Ashton, (1873) L. R. 17 Eq. 358.

Explication, robbery; the act of committing waste upon land.

Expiring Laws Continuance Acts. Acts so called and continuing, generally until the end of the year following that in which they are passed, temporary Acts which would otherwise expire have for many years been passed at the end of each session of parliament. The practice of passing temporary Acts and continuing them by annual continuance Acts is a very old one, which has frequently caused complaint in the House of Commons (see Solicitors' Journal, April 18th, 1903). The Ballot Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 33), was, for example, kept in force by annual inclusion in successive Expiring Laws Continuance Acts until 1908, when it was made permanent. The Expiring Laws Act, 1922, made nineteen Acts permanent, thus effecting a simplification long overdue, and the Expiring Laws Acts of 1925 and 1932 made permanent several other statutes.

Expleses. See ESPLEES.

Expleta, Expletia, or Explecia, the rents and profits of an estate.—Old Records.

Explosives, as to injuries by, see the Malicious Damage Act, 1861, ss. 9, 10; the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, ss. 28–30, 64, 65; Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Criminal Law.'

The Explosives Act, 1875 (38 Vict. c. 17), as amended and extended by the Explosives Act, 1923 (13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 17), regulates the manufacture, keeping, sale, and conveyance of gunpowder and other explosives, and the licensing and management of storcs, defining 'explosive' in that Act as meaning:

gunpowder, nitro-glycerine, dynamite, gun-cotton, blasting powders, fulminate of mercury or of other metals, coloured fire, and every other substance, whether similar to those above mentioned or not, used or manufactured with a view to produce a practical effect by explosion or a pyrotechnic effect; and as including:

fog-signals, fireworks, fuses, rockets, percussion caps, detonators, cartridges, ammunition of all descriptions, and every adaptation or preparation of an explosive as above defined.

The Explosive Substances Act, 1883 (46 Vict. c. 3), greatly increases the punishment for causing or attempting to cause dangerous explosions, and allows an inquiry to be instituted before a justice of the peace by order of the Attorney-General if he has ground for believing an offence against the Act to have been committed, although no particular person may be charged with such offence. As to sending explosives through the post, see Post Office Protection Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 76). Coal Mines Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 61, regulates the use of explosives in coal mines, see also the Explosives in Coal Mines (Horse Killers) Order, 1931 (S. R. & O. 1931, No. 521); Explosives in Coal Mines Order, 1934 (S. R. & O. 1934, No. 6); Explosives in Coal Mines (Condor) Order, 1934 (S. R. & O. 1934, No. 152). See Chit. Stat., tit. 'Explosives.'

Exposing in a public thoroughfare a person infected with a contagious disease is a common nuisance, and punishable accordingly.—4 Steph. Com. If the disease is notifiable, it is also punishable on summary conviction under the Public Health Act, 1936, ss. 148–151.

Exposing Child under the age of two years. See Offences against the Person Act, 1861, s. 27. See also Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 12), s. 4 (exposing for purpose of begging); s. 11 exposing to risk of fire, and generally Part I. of the Act.

Exposing Person wilfully and in any public place, with intent to insult any female, is an offence under the Vagrancy Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 83), s. 4, punishable by imprisonment with hard labour up to three months. See also Town Police Clauses Act, 1847, s. 28.

Expositio, explanation.

Ex post facto [jure] (from a law made after); i.e., the law is retrospective, being passed only after the thing prohibited was done.

Express, that which is not left to implication; as express promise, express covenant.

Express Colour, in pleading. An evasive form of special pleading in a case where the defendant ought to plead the general issue. Abolished by the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), s. 64.

Expressio eorum quæ tacite insunt nihil operatur. Co. Litt. 210.—(The expression of those things which are tacitly implied has no effect.) See Broom's Max., citing Doe v. Alexander, (1814) 2 M. & S. 525, where the maxim was applied by Dampier, J., and other cases.

Expressio unius est exclusio alterius. Co. Litt. 210 a.—(The mention of one thing is the exclusion of another.) See Broom's Leg. Max.

Expressum facit cessare tacitum. Co. Litt. 210 a.—(What is expressed makes what is implied to cease.) See Broom's Max. Where a deed contains express covenants, no implication of any other covenants on the same subject-matter can be raised.—Nokes's Case, (1599) 4 Rep. 80 b; Stephens v. Junior Army and Navy Stores, 1914, 2 Ch. 526.

Expromission, a species of novation, as a creditor's acceptance of a new debtor, who takes the place of the old debtor, who is discharged.

Expromissor, a surety; bail.—Civil Law.

Expropriation, the surrender of a claim to exclusive property; also, dispossessing an owner of his property, wholly or partially. See Housing Acts.

Ex provisione mariti (from the provision of the husband).

Exurgation, the act of purging or cleansing, as where a book is published without its obscene passages.

Ex relatione, on the report of: an expression affixed to cases which the reporter gives on the authority of another; as ex relatione amici.

Extend, to value the lands, etc., of one bound by a statute, who has forfeited his bond, at their yearly value, so that it may be known when the creditor will be paid his debt. See EXTENT.

Extension, an indulgence by giving time to pay a debt or perform an obligation.

Extensio manerii, 4 Edw. 1, s. 1. It was a direction for the making of a survey of buildings, lands, commons, parks, woods, etc.

Extent, the peculiar remedy to recover debts of record due to the Crown; it differs from an ordinary writ of execution at the suit of a subject, because under it the body, lands, and goods of the debtor may all be taken at once, in order to compel the payment of the debt. It is not usual, however, to seize the body.

There are two kinds of Extent—in chief and in aid. (1) Extent in chief. It issues from the Exchequer, and may bear teste and be made returnable on any day certain in term or vacation (5 & 6 Vict. c. 86, s. 8). It directs the sheriff to take an inquisition or inquest of office, on the oaths of lawful men, to ascertain the lands, etc., of the debtor, and seize the same into the King's hands. The writ should be preceded by a scire facias in order to bring the debtor into court, and afford him an opportunity to show cause against it; but where the debt is in danger of being lost, the extent will be issued without a scire facias upon an affidavit of circumstances; and after the sheriff's return, the debtor, if he dispute the debt, or a third person, if he claim the property set forth in the inquisition, may enter an appearance and plead to the extent; issue is then joined, and it is decided either on demurrer or by a trial before a jury. If judgment be given for the Crown, it is that the subject take nothing by his traverse or plea; if given for the defendant or claimant, it is an award of amoveas manus. Error will lie upon the judgment provided the Attorney-General consent to the proceeding. Where there was no judgment it was the rule to issue a commission to ascertain what debt was due to the Crown; but by the Crown Suits Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 104), s. 47, a commission to find a debt due to the Crown shall not be necessary for authorizing the issue of an immediate extent, or of a writ of diem clausit extremum, and an immediate extent may be issued on an affidavit of debt and danger, and a writ of diem clausit extremum may be issued on an affidavit of debt and death, and on a fiat, as hereby provided. It was enacted by the Judgments Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 11), that no debt due to the Crown on Judgment, statute or recognizance, inquisition of debt, obligation, or specialty, or acceptance of office, shall affect any lands, tenements, or hereditaments as to purchasers or mortgagees, unless and until such memorandum or minute thereof, as in the Act provided, shall be registered as is therein provided; and provision is made in regard to the registration of a quietus for any Crown debt, and for Treasury certificates being granted exonerating lands from any further claim of the Crown. By the Crown Suits Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 104), s. 48, it was provided that any Crown judgment, etc., or specialty, shall not affect any land, as to a bonâ fide purchaser for valuable consideration, or as to a mortgagee (with or without notice of such judgment, etc.), unless a writ of extent, or of diem clausit extremum, or other writ or process of execution, has been issued and registered before the execution of the conveyance or mortgage; see now Land Charges Act, 1925, s. 6, and LAND CHARGES.

There is also an extent in chief in the second degree, which is a proceeding by the Crown against the debtor of a Crown-debtor, against whom also an extent in chief has issued.

(2) Extent in aid. It issues, not at the suit of the Crown, like an extent in chief, but at the suit of the Crown-debtor against a person indebted to himself; and it is grounded on the Statute of Extent (33 Hen. 4, c. 39), and on the principle that the Crown is entitled to the debts due to the debtor. The practice is governed by the Extents in Aid Act, 1817 (57 Geo. 3, c. 117), and by a rule of the Court of Exchequer, June 22, 1822, that the Crown-debtor must make oath that otherwise the debt will be lost; see R. v. Pridgeon, 1910, 2 K. B. 543.

There is a special writ of extent, which is issued in the event of the death of a Crown-debtor, and is called a diem clausit extremum, because it recites the death of the party. The sheriff is commanded to inquire, by a jury, concerning the chattels and lands of the deceased debtor, and seize them into the Crown's hands.

See generally the cases in Mews's Digest, tit. 'Crown (Execution by Extent)'; West on Extents; Robertson on the Crown, ch. iii.

Exterritoriality, the condition of being considered outside the territory of the state in which a person resides and therefore not amenable to its laws. The most marked instance is that of an ambassador. See Oxf. Dict.; Dacey's Conflict of Laws; Westlake's International Law.

Extinguishment, the annihilation of a collateral interest, or the superseding of one interest by another and greater interest in that out of which it is derived. It is of various natures as applied to various rights.

(1) Extinguishment of common. If he who is entitled to common appurtenant purchase any part of the land which is subject to his right of common, that right is extinguished for the whole; and so, if he release his right over any part of the land. But it has been justly doubted whether in any case, and especially if all persons who have common appurtenant in the same land concur in discharging some part of it, this legal trap should be allowed to operate.—Burton's Comp., 8th ed. 352. If one of the tenants of a manor purchase any part of the land over which he has a right of common appendant, his right over the rest will continue. So, on the alienation of any part of land to which common is appendant or appurtenant (though the latter is less favoured by the old law), the right of common is preserved and apportioned.—1 Bac. Ab. 628.

(2) Extinguishment of Easement. By statute, release, non-user, unity of seisin, or alteration of the dominant tenement; the term is sometimes used to denote the interruption but for which an inchoate right would become established by prescription.

(3) Extinguishment of copyhold. When a tenant conveyed to his lord, or did an act denoting his intention of not holding of his lord any longer, his copyhold was extinguished. When the lord did an act inconsistent with the nature of the tenure, e.g., conveyed to the tenant the freehold, or released to him his seigniorial rights, an enfranchisement was effected.

(4) Extinguishment of Manorial incidents: and enfranchisement of customary suits and services. See COPYHOLD.

(5) Extinguishment of debt. A creditor, by accepting a higher security than he had before, extinguishes the first debt. And when judgment is given for a debt, it supercedes or extinguishes the previous obligation (Plowd. 184; 1 Salk. 304); though it does not prejudice a security given for the debt (Economic Life Assurance Society v. Osborne, 1902, A. C. 147).

(6) Extinguishment of estates. If a person have a yearly rent out of lands, and afterwards purchase those lands, so that he has as good an estate in the land as in the rent, the rent is extinguished; for no one can have a rent issuing out of his own land, though a person must have as high an estate in the land as in the rent, or the rent will not be extinct.—Co. Litt. 147. It appears that an estate by statute, recognizance, or elegit may be extinguished by any act (as a deed of defeazance or of release), which extinguished the debt.—Burt. Comp. 373. Sect. 185, L. P. Act, 1925, replacing the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25 (4), provides that there shall not, after commencement of that Act, be any merger by operation of law only of any estate the beneficial interest in which would not be deemed to be merged or extinguished in equity.

(7) Extinguishment of interesse termini. A mere interesse termini could neither promote nor hinder the merger of any estate, nor could itself, properly speaking, be surrendered; but it might have been extinguished by surrender in law, or by assignment or release.—Burt. Comp. 364. The doctrine of interesse termini has been abolished by s. 149, L. P. Act, 1925. See INTERESSE TERMINI.

(8) Release by way of extinguishment. If my tenant for life make a greater estate than he is warranted in granting, as a lease to A. for life, remainder to B. and his heirs, and I release to A., this extinguishes my right to the reversion, and shall enure to the advantage of B.'s remainder as well as of A.'s particular estate.—2 Bl. Com. 325.

(9) Extinguishment of Power. A power which is ancillary to the performance of a trust or duty cannot be extinguished. In regard to other cases, the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 155, replacing the Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 52, provides that all powers, whether coupled with an interest or not, may be released. Until 1882 collateral powers over property without any estate or interest in it could not be released or extinguished. The powers of a tenant for life under the S. L. Act, 1925, cannot be extinguished (ibid., s. 104), except by surrender of the life estate to the remainderman (s. 105).

Extirpation, a judicial writ, either before or after judgment, that lay against a person who, when a verdict was found against him for land, etc., maliciously overthrew any house or extirpated any trees upon it.—Reg. Jud. 13, 56.

Extocare, to grub up lands, and reduce them to arable or meadow.—Dugd. Mon., tom. 2, p. 71.

Extorting Money, etc., by Menaces. See 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 44, 45; BLACKMAIL; and THREATS.

Extortion [fr. extorqueo, Lat., to wrest away], any oppression under colour of right, as the demanding of a more than legal fee by colour of office. See the Sheriffs Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 55), s. 29 (2), (6).

Extortio est crimen quando quis colore officii extorquet quod non est debitum, vel supra debitum, vel ante tempus quod est debitum. 10 Rep. 102.—(Extortion is that crime when, by colour of office, any person extorts that which is not due, or more than is due, or before the time when it is due.)

Extra Costs, those charges which do not appear upon the face of the proceedings, such as witnesses' expenses, fees to counsel, attendances, court-fees, etc., an affidavit of which must be made, to warrant the master in allowing them upon taxation of costs. See INCREASE.

Extracta Curia, the issues or profits of holding a court, arising from the customary fees, etc.—Paroch. Antiq. 572.

Extradition, the surrender by a foreign state of a person accused of a crime to the state where it was committed, in order that he may be tried there. It is recognized as a duty, independent of treaty, by international law, but is usually the subject of treaty terminable at one year's notice. The Extradition Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 52), 'as to the whole of His Majesty's dominions' provides (s. 2) that where an arrangement has been made with any foreign state with respect to the surrender to such state of any fugitive criminals, his Majesty may, by Order in Council, direct that this Act shall apply in the case of such foreign state. The Act, as amended by the Extradition Acts, 1873, 1895, and 1906, provides for the arrangements and procedure regarding extradition (see R. v. Daye, 1908, 2 K. B. 333), and imposes various restrictions thereon, e.g., in regard to political offences. The Extradition Act, 1932 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 39), adds offences in connection with dangerous drugs to the scheduled list of offences, and 1935 (25 & 26 Vict. Geo. 5, c. 25), for currency offences. The Extradition tion Acts, 1870–1935, have been applied to the suppression of the White Slave traffic (see S. R. & O. 1931, No. 718; 1934, No. 310; 1934, No. 500, and many others). Consult Clarke on Extradition, and Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Extradition,' where a list of numerous extradition treaties between this country and foreign states is given.

Extrajudicial [fr. extra and judicium, Lat.], out of the regular course of legal procedure. An extrajudicial dictum is the same as an obiter dictum. See DICTUM.

Extraordinary Traffic means the carriage of articles over a road which is so exceptional in the quality or quantity of the articles carried, or in the mode of user of the road, as substantially to increase the burden imposed by ordinary traffic on the road and to cause damage and expense beyond what is common. The road authority has power to recover expenses caused by extraordinary traffic under s. 23 of the Highways and Locomotives Amendment Act, 1878, now replaced by the Road Traffic Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 43), s. 54. See Hill v. Thomas, 1893, 2 Q. B. 333; Barnsley, etc., Society v. Worsborough U.D.C., 1916, A. C. 291; Butt v. Weston-super-Mare U.D.C., 1921, A. C. 340.

Extra-parochial [fr. extra and parochia, Lat.], outside of any parish. The Extra-parochial Places Act, 1857 (20 Vict. c. 19), provides for extra-parochial places being annexed to their adjoining parishes.

Extra-territoriality. See EX-TERRITORIALITY.

Extra territorium jus dicenti non paretur impune. 10 Rep. 77.—(The decision of one adjudicating beyond his territory cannot be obeyed with impunity.)

Extravagantes, those decretal epistles which were published after the Clementines. They were so called because at first they were not digested or arranged with the other papal constitutions, but seemed to be, as it were, detached from the canon law. They continued to be called by the same name when they were afterwards inserted in the body of the canon law. The first extravagantes are those of Pope John XXII., successor of Clement V. The last collection was brought down to the year 1843, and was called the common extravagantes, notwithstanding that they were likewise incorporated with the rest of the canon law.

Extra viam, out of the way.

Extra vires, beyond powers. See ULTRA VIRES.

Extumæ, reliques in churches and tombs.

Ex turpi causâ non oritur actio.—(No right of action arises from a base cause.) See EX DOLO MALO, etc. There are also maxims, Ex maleficio non oritur contractus and Ex facto illicito non oritur actio, to the same effect.

Ex visitatione Dei (by the visitation of God).

Ex vi termini (from the force or meaning of the expression).

Ey, ea, or ee, an island.

Eye-witness, one who gives testimony to facts seen by himself.

Eyre, Justices in [fr. eyre, Fr.; iter, Lat.], the court of justices itinerant, whom Bracton in many places calls justiciarios itinerantes; called in modern times the judges of assize, who have travelled on their several circuits since their first appointment by the statute of nisi prius, 13 Edw. 1, st. 1, c. 30. The eyre of the forest is nothing but the justice-seat, which is, or should by ancient custom be, held every three years by the justices of the forest, journeying up and down for such purpose.

Ezardar, a farmer or renter of land in Hindostan.—Indian.

F.

F, a stigma put upon felons with a hot iron on being admitted to the benefit of clergy, which was abolished by the Criminal Law Act, 1827 (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28), s. 6.

F. A. A., 'free of all average,' denoting in marine insurance that the insurance is against total loss only.

F. C. S.—In documents relating to policies of marine insurance these letters stand for the words 'free of capture and seizure.'

F. G. A.—These letters in connection with marine insurance mean 'free from general average.' They sometimes mean 'foreign general average,' and the precise meaning they denote must be gathered from the context. See AVERAGE (2).

F. O. B., free on board, a term frequently inserted in contracts for the sale of goods to be conveyed by ship, meaning that the cost of shipping will be paid by the buyer. When goods are so sold in London the buyer is considered as the shipper, and the goods when shipped are at his risk. See Green v. Sichel, (1860) 29 L. J. C. P. 213.

F. O. W.—These letters used in a charter-party mean 'first open water,' that is, immediately after the ice breaks up sufficiently to allow of safe navigation.

F. P. A.—These letters in connection with marine policies mean 'free from particular average.' See AVERAGE.

Fabric lands [ad fabricam reparandam, Lat.], land given to provide for the rebuilding or repair of cathedrals and churches. Anciently, almost every person gave something by his will to be applied in repairing the fabric of the cathedral or parish church where he lived.

Fabrics (Misdescription) Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 17), an Act prohibiting the sale of textile fabrics with a misleading description as to inflammability.

Facio ut des (I do that you may give).

Facio ut facias (I do that you may do).

Fac simile (make it like). An exact copy, preserving all the marks of the original.

Fac simile Probate, where the construction of the will may be affected by the appearance of the original paper, the Court will order the probate to pass in fac simile, as it may possibly help to show the meaning of the testator.

Fact, question of. See QUESTIONS OF FACT.

Facta armorum, feats of arms, jousts, tournaments, etc.

Facto, in fact; as where anything is actually done.—Jac. Law Dict. And see DE FACTO.

Factor [fr. facteur, Fr.], a substitute in mercantile affairs; an agent employed to sell goods or merchandise consigned or delivered to him by or for his principal, for a compensation commonly called factorage or commission. Hence he is often called a commission-merchant or consignee; and the goods received by him for sale are called a consignment. He is a home factor when he resides in the same state or country with his principal, and a foreign factor when he resides in a different state or country. He differs from a broker in this, and he may buy and sell in his own name, and is entrusted with the possession and disposal of the goods, and has a special property in, and a lien on, them; yet neither can delegate his authority, unless conferred by usages of trade or the assent of his principal. Factors have no incidental authority to barter goods, or to pledge them for advances made to them on their own account, or debts due by themselves; but they may pledge them for advances made on account of their principal, or for advances to themselves to the extent of their own lien on their goods. And they may pledge their principal's goods for the duties and other charges due thereon.

The Factors Acts of 1823, of 1825, of 1842, and of 1877, passed with the object of facilitating commerce by enabling factors to sell or pledge goods entrusted to them for sale, were amended and consolidated by the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), extended to Scotland by the Factors (Scotland) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 40) (see Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Factors').

Factorage, the wages, commission, or allowance made to a factor by a merchant.

Factory, a place where a number of traders reside in a foreign country for the convenience of trade; also a building in which goods are manufactured.

In the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, 'Factory' means by s. 149 'textile factory and non-textile factory, or either of those descriptions of factories.'

The expression 'textile factory' means any premises wherein or within the close or curtilage of which steam, water or other mechanical power is used to move or work any machinery employed in preparing, manufacturing or finishing or in any process incident to the manufacture of cotton, wool, hair, silk, flax, hemp, jute, tow, china-grass, cocoanut fibre or other like material, either separately or mixed together or mixed with any other material, or any fabric made thereof:

Provided that print works, bleaching and dyeing works, lace warehouses, paper mills, flax scutch mills, rope works and hat works shall not be deemed to be textile factories.

'Tenement factory' means a factory when mechanical power is supplied to different parts of the same building occupied by different persons for the purpose of any manufacturing process or handicraft, in such manner that those parts constitute in law separate factories; and for the purpose of the provisions of this Act with respect to tenement factories, all buildings situate within the same close or curtilage shall be treated as one building. See Mumby v. Valp, 1930, 1 K. B. 460 (power supplied by third person).

The expression 'non-textile factory' means, by the same section, print works, bleaching and dyeing works, foundries, paper mills, glass works and any other of the twenty kinds of works described in Part I. of Schedule VI. of the Act.

The Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, which contained 107 sections and 6 schedules, consolidated, with a few amendments, the 17 Acts from that of 1802 (42 Geo. 3, c. 73), to 37 & 38 Vict. c. 44 (the Factory Act, 1874), by which the labour of women, young persons, and children had been from time to time regulated, the education of children indirectly attained, and the fencing of machinery prescribed. The Act of 1878 was amended, as to White Lead Factories and Bakehouses, by the Factory and Workshop Act, 1883, as to Cotton Cloth and like humid factories, by the Cotton Cloth Factories Act, 1889, and generally by the Factory and Workshop Act, 1891, which increased the powers of factory inspectors, directed means of escape from fire to be provided, prohibited the employment of children under eleven, and of women within four weeks after childbirth, and enacted that weavers in the cotton, worsted, or woollen, or linen, or jute trade, if paid by the piece, should be entitled to have supplied to them with their work 'sufficient particulars of the rate of wages at which they are entitled to be paid'; and by the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, which constituted laundries and docks factories for most purposes.

The Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 22), has effected a second consolidation with further amendments, prohibiting the employment of children under twelve, directing the periodical examination of steam boilers, enabling district councils to make bye-laws as to escape from fire, increasing the powers of the Home Secretary for the regulation of dangerous trades, and conferring on county councils many of the powers which only district councils had before. This Act, which codifies the law on the subject up to 1901, must, however, be read in conjunction with the legislation since that date; reference should therefore be made to the Factory and Workshop Act, 1907 (extending to laundries, and charitable and reformatory institutions), the Police, Factories, etc. (Miscellaneous Provisions), Act, 1916, Part II., and the Education Acts, 1918, s. 14, and 1921, s. 170 (13). The Women and Young Persons (Employment in Lead Processes) Act, 1890; Employment of Women, Young Persons, and Children Act, 1920; Lead Paint (Protection against Poisoning) Act, 1926; Factory and Workshop (Cotton Cloth) Factories Act, 1929; Employment of Women and Young Persons Act, 1936. But see now Consolidating Factories Act, 1937.

The use of steam whistles for summoning or dismissing factory hands requires the sanction of local authorities, by the Steam Whistles Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 61).

Factum, a person's act or deed; anything stated or made certain. As to the plea of 'non est factum,' i.e. 'I never made the deed,' see Hovatson v. Webb, 1907, 1 Ch. 537, affd. 1908, 1 Ch. 1, and the cases there cited.

Faculties, Court of, a jurisdiction or tribunal belonging to the archbishop. It does not hold pleas in any suits, but creates rights to pews, monuments, and particular places and modes of burial. It has also various powers under 25 Hen. 8, c. 21, in granting licences of different descriptions, as a licence to marry, a faculty to erect an organ in a parish church, to level a churchyard, to remove bodies previously buried.—4 Inst. 337. The Master of the Faculties (Magister ad facultates) appoints Ecclesiastical notaries, and under the Public Notaries Acts, general notaries are appointed from his office. He has inherent jurisdiction to strike the name of any notary public off the roll of notaries public for misconduct (Re Champion, 1906, P. 86). See Phillimore's Eccl. Law, and see NOTARY.

Faculty [fr. facultas, Lat., power], a licence or authority; in Ecclesiastical Law a privilege granted by the ordinary to a man by favour and indulgence to do that which by law he may not do, e.g., to marry without banns, to erect a monument in a church, to construct a church window (Egerton v. All of Odd Rode, 1894, P. 15), or to remove what has been put up under a previous faculty (Re St. Margaret's, Westminster, 1905, P. 286), and see NOTARY and previous title.

Faculty of Advocates, the college or society of advocates in Scotland. See ADVOCATE.

Fæder-feoh, the portion brought by a wife to her husband, and which reverted to a widow, in case the heir of her deceased husband refused his consent to her second marriage: i.e., it reverted to her family in case she returned to them.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Faggot Votes. A faggot vote is where a man is formally possessed of a right to vote for a member of parliament, without possessing the substance which the vote should represent; as if he is enabled to buy a property, and at the same moment mortgage it to its full value for the mere sake of the vote; such a vote is called a faggot vote. The Reform Bill of 1832 contained provisions which were directed against faggot voters. The Representation of the People Act, 1884, carried such provisions still further. Since the Representation of the People Act, 1918, the subject of faggot votes has become a matter of historical interest only.

Faids, malice or deadly feud.

Falling of Record, when an action is brought against a person who alleges in his plea matters of record in bar of the action, and avers to prove it by the record; but the plaintiff saith nul tiel record, viz., denies there is any such record; upon which the defendant has a day given him by the Court to bring it in; if he fail to do it, then he is said to fail of his own record, and the plaintiff is entitled to sign judgment.—Termes de la Ley.

Faint Action, a feigned action.—Co. Litt. 361.

Faint Pleader, a fraudulent, false, or collusive manner of pleading to the deception of a third person.—3 Edw. 1, c. 19.

Fair Comment. Fair comment on a matter of public interest is a good defence to an action of libel for words prima facie defamatory; but the defence will be of no avail if express malice is established (Thomas v. Bradbury, Agnew & Co., 1906, 2 K. B. 627). When the defence is one of fair comment the plaintiff is not entitled to particulars (Digby v. Financial News, Ltd., 1907, 1 K. B. 502); but the defendant can administer interrogatories to the plaintiff (Walker v. Hodgson, 1909, 1 K. B. 239). Whether words exceed the limit of 'fair comment' or not is a question for the jury (Dakhyl v. Labouchere, 1908, 2 K. B. 325 n.). Consult Odgers on Libel.

Fair Pleader. See BEAU-PLEADER.

Fairs [fr. foire, Fr.; forum mundicie, Lat.]. These institutions are very closely allied to markets. A fair is a greater species of market, recurring at more distant intervals. No fair can be held without a grant from the Crown, or a prescription which supposes such grant. Before a patent is granted it is usual to have a writ of ad quod damnum executed and returned, that it may not be issued to the prejudice of another fair or market already existing. The grant usually contains a clause that it shall not be to the hurt of another fair or market; but this clause, if omitted, would be implied; for if the franchise occasion damage, either to the Crown or a subject, in any respect, it will be revoked; and a person whose ancient title is prejudiced is entitled to have a scire facias in the King's name to repeal the letters-patent. If His Majesty grant power to hold a fair or market in a particular place, the lieges can resort to no other, even though it be inconvenient. But if no place be appointed, the grantees may keep the fair or market where they please, or where they can most conveniently. Notwithstanding enfranchisement of copyholds under the Law of Property Act, 1922, the land formerly copyhold remains subject to the lord's right (if any) to markets and fairs (see COPYHOLDS). Times of holding fairs and markets are either determined by the letters-patent appointing the fair or market, or by usage, or under the Fairs Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 37) (repealing 31 & 32 Vict. c. 51), by the Secretary of State. See the Markets and Fairs Clauses Act (10 & 11 Vict. c. 14). The Metropolitan Fairs Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 106), was passed for the prevention of the holding of unlawful fairs within the limits of the Metropolitan Police District.

As to the powers of local authorities with reference to fairs, see Public Health Act, 1875, s. 167, and as to the weighing of cattle, see Markets and Fairs (Weighing of Cattle) Acts, 1887 and 1891.

The Fairs Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 12), proceeding on the preamble that 'certain of the fairs held in England and Wales are unnecessary, are the cause of grievous immorality, and are very injurious to the inhabitants of the town in which such fairs are held,' gives power to the Home Secretary to abolish any fair on representation of the magistrates, and with consent of the owner; and many fairs have been abolished under the powers of the Act. The holding of fairs on Sunday, except the four Sundays of harvest, is prohibited by an Act of 1448 (27 Hen. 6, c. 5). Consult Pease and Chitty on Markets and Fairs.

Falt [fr. factum, Lat.], a deed or writing.

Falt enrolle, a deed enrolled, as a bargain and sale of freeholds.—1 Keb. 568.

Faltours, evil-doers; idle livers; vagabonds.—Termes de la Ley.

Falang, jacket or close coat.—Blount.

Falcatura, one day's mowing of grass, a customary service to the lord by his inferior tenants. Falcata, the fresh grass mowed and laid in swathes. Falcator, the tenant-mower.—Ken Glos.

Fald, or Falda, a sheepfold.—Cowel.

Faldage [fr. faldagium, Lat.], a fold-course, i.e., common of pasture for sheep.

Faldæ Cursus, a sheep-walk.—2 Vent. 139.

Fald-fee, a composition paid anciently by tenants for the privilege of faldage.—Cowel.

Faldisdory [fr. falde, Sax., a hedge, and stop, a place], the bishop's seat or throne within the chancel.

Faldstool, or Foldstool, a place at the south side of the altar, at which the sovereign kneels at his coronation.

Faldworth, a person of age, that he may be reckoned of some decennary.—Du Fresne. See DECENNARY.

Falesia [fr. falaise, a cliff], a hill or down by the seaside.—Old Records.

Falk-land. See FOLKLAND.

Falkland Islands. See 6 & 7 Vict. c. 13, amended by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 121; both Acts were repealed by the British Settlements Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 54) (g.v.).

Fall of Land, a quantity of land six ells square superficial measure.

Fallow-land, land ploughed, but not sown, and left uncultivated for a time after successive crops.

Fallum, an unexplained term for some particular kind of land.—Cowel.

Falmotum. See FOLKEMOTE.

Falsa demonstratio non nocet.—(False description does not vitiate.) See Smith v. Ridgway, (1866) L. R. 1 Ex. 331, Ex. Ch.

Falsa orthographia, sive falsa grammatica, non vitiat concessionem. 9 Rep. 48.—(Bad spelling or bad grammar does not vitiate a grant.) See MALA GRAMMATICA.

False Imprisonment, restraining personal liberty without lawful authority, for which offence the law has not only decreed a punishment as a public crime, but has also given a private reparation to the party as well by removing the actual confinement for the present by habeas corpus, as by subjecting the wrongdoer to an action of trespass, etc., usually called an action of false imprisonment, on account of the damage sustained by the loss of time and liberty. It must amount to a total restraint of the plaintiff's liberty for some period, however short; see Bird v. Jones, (1845) 7 Q. B. 742. As to the persons liable, see Walters v. W. H. Smith & Son, Ltd., 1914, 1 K. B. 595; Herd v. Weardale Steel Co., 1915, A. C. 67. The onus of proving the defence of reasonable or probable cause lies on the defendant. An action for false imprisonment must not be confused with one for malicious prosecution where the onus of proving absence of reasonable and probable cause lies on the plaintiff (Sevell v. National Telephone Co., 1907, 1 K. B. 557). Consult Addison on Torts, Clerk and Lindsell on Torts; and see Warner v. Riddiford, (1858) 4 C. B. N. S. 180, 204; Brown v. Chapman, (1848) 6 C. B. 365; Lambert v. G. E. Ry., 1909, 2 K. B. 776 (arrest by railway police).

False Latin. When law proceedings were written in Latin, if a word were significant though not good Latin, yet an indictment, declaration, or fine should not be made void by it; but if the word were not Latin, nor allowed by the law, and it were in a material point, it made the whole vicious.—5 Rep. 121; 2 Nels. 830.

False Lights. Section 667 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 667, imposes a penalty upon any person who after receiving notice fails to extinguish or screen any fire or light that may be mistaken for a lighthouse. See FALSE SIGNAL.

False News, Spreading, to make discord between the sovereign and nobility, or concerning any great man of the realm, was a misdemeanour, punishable at Common Law by fine and imprisonment; which was confirmed by 3 Edw. 1 (Stat. West. prim.), c. 34; 2 Rich. 2, st. 1, c. 5; and 12 Rich. 2, c. 11, all repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 59). See SEDITION, and also Public Order Act, 1936.

False Personation, to obtain property. See PERSONATION.

False Pretence, obtaining property by. This offence, though allied to larceny, is distinguishable from it, as being perpetrated through the medium of a mere fraud; it is a misdemeanour at Common Law. By the Larceny Act, 1916, s. 32:—

Every person who, by any false pretence—

(1) with intent to defraud, obtains from any other person any chattel, money or valuable security, or causes or procures any money to be paid or any chattel or valuable security to be delivered to himself or to any other person for the use or benefit or on account of himself or any other person; or

(2) with intent to defraud or injure any other person fraudulently causes or induces any other person—

(a) to execute, make, accept, endorse or destroy the whole or any part of any valuable security; or

(b) to write, impress or affix his name or the name of any other person, or the seal of any corporate body or society, upon any paper or parchment in order that the same may be afterwards made or converted into, or used or dealt with as, a valuable security; shall be guilty of a misdemeanour and on conviction thereof liable to penal servitude for any term not exceeding five years.

In order to be convicted under this section the accused must have made a false pretence of the existence of a non-existing fact, and the money, etc., must have been obtained by means of such false pretence.

The false pretence may be by giving a cheque which the pretender has no authority to draw, but to give a cheque on an account on which the drawer has no balance is not necessarily an offence (Reg. v. Hazleton, (1874) 2 C. C. R. 134). As to guilty knowledge, see R. v. Ollis, 1900, 2 Q. B. 758.

Cheating at cards, etc., is punishable as obtaining by false pretence, by the Gaming Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 109), s. 47.

Obtaining credit, in incurring debt, under false pretences is a misdemeanour punishable by imprisonment, with hard labour up to 12 months, by s. 13 of the Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), and to order and consume a meal at a restaurant without having the means to pay for it is within this section, but was held not within s. 88 of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96) (Reg. v. Jones, 1898, 1 Q. B. 119).

Although a prisoner charged with obtaining by false pretences may now be convicted though larceny is proved, and a prisoner charged with larceny may be convicted of obtaining by false pretences if that offence be proved (Larceny Act, 1916, s. 44 (3), (4)), the distinction between larceny by trick and false pretences is of importance in that a person who obtains goods by false pretences can convey a good title to them, whereas a person guilty of larceny by trick can pass no such title (Heap v. Motor Advisory Agency, Ltd., 1922, 1 K. B. 583; Folkes v. King, 1922, 1 K. B. 282). The distinction is that in false pretences the owner intends to divest himself of the property in the goods, whereas in larceny he does not intend to pass the property (Whitehorn Bros. v. Davison, 1911, 1 K. B. 463).

Young Persons and Adults pleading guilty.

—Obtaining by false pretences, money, etc., to any amount, in the case of young persons between 12 and 16, or adults pleading guilty, and obtaining by false pretences money, etc., not exceeding forty shillings, in the case of adults consenting to the jurisdiction, may be dealt with summarily by justices of the peace under the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 22); but where justices propose so to deal, they must by s. 3 of that Act 'state in effect that a false pretence means a false representation by words, writing, or conduct that some fact exists or existed, and that a promise as to future conduct not intended to be kept is not by itself a false pretence,' and 'may add any such further explanation as the Court may deem suitable to the circumstances.'

False Prophecies, with intent to disturb the peace, were unlawful, as raising enthusiastic jealousies in the people and terrifying them with imaginary fears. They were punishable as misdemeanours by 5 Eliz. c. 15, repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1863.

False Representation. See DECEIT and REPRESENTATION.

False Return by sheriff of nulla bona to writ of fi. fa., after levying is actionable; for form of claim, see Bullen and Leake, Prec. of Pl.

False Signal, or Lights, exhibited with intent to bring ships into danger is a felony punishable with penal servitude for life by the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), s. 47. See FALSE LIGHTS.

False Swearing. See PERJURY.

False Trade Description means, for the purposes of the Merchandise Marks Acts, 1887 and 1926, a Trade Description (q.v.) which is false in a material respect as regards the goods to which it is applied, and includes every alteration of a trade description, whether by way of addition, effacement, or otherwise, where that alteration makes the description false in a material respect, and the fact that a trade description is a trade mark or part of a trade mark shall not prevent such trade description being a false trade description. See TRADE DESCRIPTION.

False Verdict. Formerly, if a jury gave a false verdict, the party injured by it might sue out a writ of attain against them, either at Common Law or on 11 Hen. 7, c. 24, at his election, for the purpose of reversing the judgment and punishing the jury for their verdict; but not where the jury erred merely in point of law, if they found according to the judge's direction. The practice of setting aside verdicts and granting new trials, however, so superseded the use of attains that there is no instance of one to be found in our books of reports later than in the time of Elizabeth, and it was altogether abolished by the County Juries Act, 1825 (6 Geo. 4, c. 50), s. 60.

Falsi crimen, fraudulent subornation or concealment, with design to darken or hide the truth, and make things appear otherwise than they are. It is committed:—(1) By words, as when a witness swears falsely; (2) by writing, as when a person antedates a contract; (3) by deed, as selling by false weights and measures.

Falsification.

1. Pedigree.—For a vendor or mortgagor or other person disposing of property or any interest therein for money or money's worth to a purchaser of land or chattels real or personal, or for his solicitor or other agent to conceal from the purchaser any instrument or incumbrance material to the title or to falsify any pedigree upon which the title may depend, in order to induce a purchaser or mortgagee or his solicitor to accept the title offered, is a misdemeanour punishable by fine or imprisonment with or without hard labour, or both, for not more than two years, by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 183, extending the Law of Property Amendment Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35), s. 24 (Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Conveyancing'), and the falsifier is also liable to an action for damages by the same enactment. The fiat of the Attorney-General is required before commencing a prosecution (L. P. Act, 1925, s. 183).

2. Official Documents.—Making any material alteration in any official document or in any copy thereof, with intent to defraud or deceive, is felony punishable by penal servitude up to seven years by s. 3 (3) of the Forgery Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 27); and see the Act generally.

3. Books or Accounts by Clerks.—The Falsification of Accounts Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 24), which applies only to clerks, officers, etc., enacts that:— if any clerk, officer, or servant, or any person employed or acting in the capacity of a clerk, officer, or servant, shall wilfully and with intent to defraud, destroy, alter, mutilate, or falsify any book, paper, writing, valuable security, or account which belongs to or is in the possession of his employer, or has been received by him for or on behalf of his employer, or shall wilfully and with intent to defraud make or concur in making any false entry in, or omit or alter, or concur in omitting or altering, any material particular from or in any such book, or any document, or account, then in every such case the person so offending shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and be liable to be kept in penal servitude for a term not exceeding seven years, or to be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding two years.

See as to falsification of accounts, Re Arton, 1896, 1 Q. B. 509; R. v. Palin, 1906, 1 K. B. 7.

4. Falsification by Director or other Officer of a Company.—The Companies Act, 1929, by s. 272 makes this a misdemeanour on the part of a director, officer, or contributory of a company, and see also ss. 82–84 of the Larceny Act, 1861. S. 217, Comp. Act, 1908 (as to which see Re London and Globe Financial Corporation, 1903, 1 Ch. 728), authorized liquidators to prosecute by direction of the High Court in the event of a winding-up. This section has been repealed, replaced and extended by the Companies Act, 1929, s. 277, and see s. 362. See generally Arch. Cr. Pl.

Falsionarius, a forger.—Hov. 424.

Falso retorno brevium, a writ that lay against a sheriff, who had execution of process for a false return.—Reg. Jud. 43.

Famaeide [fr. fama, Lat., reputation, and cædo, to kill], a slanderer.—Scots Law.

Famosus libellus, an infamous libel.

Fanatio. See FENCE-MONTH.

Faqeer, or Fakir, a poor man, mendicant; a religious beggar.—Indian.

Farandman, a traveller or merchant stranger.—Skene.

Fardel of Land, the fourth part of a yardland. Noy, in the Complete Lawyer, p. 57, says an eighth only, because according to him two fardels make a nook and four nooks a yardland. See YARDLAND.

Fardingdeal, Farthing or Farundel of Land, the fourth part of an acre of land.—Spelm.

Fare, a voyage or passage by water; also the money paid for a passage either by land or by water.

Railway fares must be published at stations, by the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 119), s. 16. Travelling without prepayment and with intent to avoid payment is punishable by fine up to 40s., and on second or subsequent offence either by fine up to 20l. or in the discretion of the Court by imprisonment up to one month on summary conviction, by the Regulation of Railways Act, 1889, superseding but not repealing s. 103 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20).

Tramway fares must be published inside and outside each of the carriages used, and avoiding payment of them is punishable by fine up to 40s. with liability to arrest.

As to fares on public service vehicles, see Traffic Acts, 1930, s. 72, and 1934, s. 40.

Farinagium, toll of meal or flour.—Jac. Law Dict.

Farleu, money paid by tenants in lieu of a heriot. It is often applied to the best chattel, as distinguished from heriot, the best beast.

Farlingaril, whoremongers and adulterers.

Farm, or Ferm [fr. firma, Lat.; feorme, Sax., food, and feorman, to feed], land taken upon lease under a rent, generally annual, payable by the tenant. It is a collective word, consisting of many things, as a messuage, land, meadow, pasture, wood, common, etc. In Lancashire a farm was called fermholt; in the north, a taek; and in Essex, a wike.—Termes de la Ley.

Farm Let, to let to be farmed: the full phrase is 'demise, sett, and to farm let.'

Farmer, one who cultivates hired land, also the lessee of taxes or tolls.

Faro, a game of chance in vogue in the eighteenth century; an unlawful game by 12 Geo. 2, c. 28, where it is spelt 'Pharaoh.'

Farriers. As to the duties of common farriers, see Raym. 654, and Oliphant on Horses.

Farthing [fr. feowen, Sax., four], the fourth part of a penny.

Farthing of Gold, an ancient coin, containing in value the fourth part of a noble.—9 Hen. 5, c. 7.

Farundel of Land. See FARDINGDEAL.

Faryndon Inn, the ancient appellation of Serjeants' Inn, Chancery Lane.

Fasius, a faggot of wood.—Dugd. Mon. tom. ii. 238.

Fast-day, a day of mortification by religious abstinence. See a list of Church of England Fast-days in the Prayer-book Calendar scheduled to the Calendar (New Style) Act, 1750 (24 Geo. 3, c. 23), and see also the still unrepealed 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 3 (printed in the second revised edition of the statutes published by authority in 1888), by which the eves of Christmas Day and other holy days are 'commanded to be fasted,' and archbishops, bishops and others are authorized to inquire of every person offending in the premises, and to punish offenders by the censures of the Church, and to enjoin them such penance as shall be to the spiritual judge by his discretion thought meet and convenient. 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 19, however, providing for abstinence from flesh in Lent or on Fridays or Saturdays, which was expressly saved by s. 4 of this Act, has been repealed by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 64, with many other disused Acts.

Fast-days may also be appointed on special occasions by royal proclamation, e.g., ss. 14 and 92 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, recognize such days. The last fast-day so appointed was on account of the Indian Mutiny in 1857, enjoined by proclamation published in the Gazette of September 25th. Consult Phillimore, Ecc. Law, ch. XII.

Fastens or Fastern's E'en, or Even [fr. vastal-abend, low Sax.], Shrove-Tuesday, the succeeding day being Ash-Wednesday, the first of the Lenten fast.

Fasternans, or Fasting-men [homines habentes, Lat.], men in repute and substance; pledges, sureties, or bondsmen, who, according to the Saxon policy, were fast bound to answer for each other's peaceable behaviour.

Fastl, fas signifies divine law; the epithet fastus is properly applied to anything in accordance with divine law, and hence those days upon which legal business might without impiety (sine piaculo) be transacted before the prætor were technically denominated fasti dies, i.e., lawful days. Consult Smith's Dict. of Antiq.

Fatetur facinus qui iudicium fugit. 3 Inst. 14.—(He who flees judgment confesses his guilt.) See ABSCOND, FLY FOR IT.

Fatua muller, a whore.—Du Fresne.

Fatuous persons, idiots.

Fautors, favourers or supporters of others; abettors of crimes, etc.

Favour, challenge to. See CHALLENGE.

Feal, tenants by knight-service, who swore to their lords to be feal and leal, i.e., faithful and loyal.

Feal and Divot, a right in Scotland, similar to the right of turbary in England for fuel, etc.

Fealty [fr. fidelitas, Lat.; feauté, Fr.], the special oath of fidelity or mutual bond of obligation between a lord and his tenant; the general oath being the allegiance performed by every subject to his sovereign, but this is better known by its more significant appellation of the oath of allegiance. Although foreign jurists consider fealty and homage as convertible terms, because in some continental countries they are blended so as to form one engagement, yet they are not to be confounded in our country, for they do not imply the same thing, homage being the acknowledgment of tenure, and fealty, the vassal oath of fidelity, being the essential feudal bond, and the animating principle of a feud, without which it could not subsist. Fealty comprehends the following obligations, viz.: (1) Incolume, that the tenant do no bodily harm to his lord; (2) Tutum, that he do no secret damage to him in his house; (3) Honestum, that he damage not his reputation; (4) Utile, that he do no damage to him in his possessions; (5) Facile and (6) Possibile, that he render it easy for the lord to do any good, and not make that impossible to be done which was before in his power to do.—Leg. Hen. 1, c. 5.

Feasts, anniversary days of rejoicing, either on a civil or religious occasion; opposed to fasts. Our feasts are either (1) immovable, such as Christmas-day, the Circumcision, Epiphany, Candlemas-day, Lady-day, All Saints, and All Souls, besides the days of the several apostles, St. Peter, St. Thomas, etc.: these are always celebrated on the same day of the year; or (2) movable, such as Easter, which fixes all the rest, as Palm Sunday, Good Friday, Ash Wednesday, Sexagesima, Ascension-day, Pentecost, Trinity Sunday, etc. The four principal immovable feasts of the year, which are commonly assigned in England for the payment of rents on leases, are the Annunciation of the Blessed Virgin Mary, or Lady-day, being the 25th of March; the Nativity of St. John the Baptist, held on the 24th of June; the feast of St. Michael on the 29th of September; and Christmas-day on the 25th of December.

A still unrepealed Act of 1551-2 (5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 3), directs certain days therein mentioned (being all Sundays, and the Saints' Days printed in black letter in the Calendar scheduled to the Calendar (New Style) Act, 1750 (24 Geo. 2, c. 23) 'to be kepte hollie days and none other,' and the Calendar (New Style) Act by s. 3 directs the observation of such Saints' Days as altered by such Calendar. The Calendar prefixed to the First Prayer Book of Edw. 6 (which derived statutory authority from the First Act of Uniformity (2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 1)) also marks such Saints' Days, and no others except St. Mary Magdalen's Day (July 22nd); but the Calendar scheduled to the Calendar (New Style) Act and printed in the Prayer Book now in force, additionally to, and in different type from such Saints' Days, marks other days, including Invention of Cross Day (May 3rd), Bishop Swithin's Day (July 15th), St. Mary Magdalen's Day (July 22nd), Holy Cross Day (September 14th), and O Sapientia Day (December 16th). Consult Phillimore, Ecc. Law, ch. XII.

Federal Government. When two or more sovereign or independent states mutually agree not to exercise certain powers incident to their several sovereignties, but to delegate the exercise of those powers to some person or body chosen by them jointly, there is said to be a federal union of those states, and the person or body to whom the exercise of such powers is delegated is called the Federal Government. The Swiss Confederation, and the United States of North America, are instances of Federal Governments.

A Federal Council of Australasia Act (48 & 49 Vict. c. 60), passed in 1885 (see AUSTRALASIA), is now superseded by the federating Commonwealth of Australia Constitution Act (63 & 64 Vict. c. 12) (see AUSTRALIA), which has repealed it.

An effective federation of the British North American Colonies was provided in 1867 by the British North America Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 3) (see BRITISH AMERICA), and in 1909 of the Colonies of Cape of Good Hope, Natal, Transvaal, and Orange Free State, by the South Africa

Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 9). The preambles of the three Acts—1867 (North America), 1885 (Australasia), and 1900 (Australia)—may be studied with advantage, and so may the 91st section of the Act of 1867, and the 51st section of the Act of 1900, which sections contain the matters (ordinarily similar) on which the Federal Parliament may legislate, amongst them being :—

Trade and Commerce.

Taxation.

Quarantine.

Marriage and Divorce.

Weights and Measures.

Legal Tender.

Copyrights and Patents.

Naturalization and Aliens.

Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes.

The Criminal Law.

The main distinction between Canadian and Australian Federation is that the Dominion Parliament of Canada, under the Act of 1867, has jurisdiction over all matters not specially assigned to the local legislatures; but that the Commonwealth Parliament of Australia has only such jurisdiction as is expressly vested in it or is not expressly withdrawn from the Parliaments of the states. As to South Africa, see s. 85 of the Act, defining the powers of the Provincial Councils. By the Government of India Act, 1936, His Majesty may upon Address of each House of Parliament proclaim a federation under the name of the Federation of India consisting of :—

(a) The Governor's Provinces,

(b) India States acceding to the Federation as provided, to include the Chief Commissioners' Provinces as provided by the Act which regulates the constitution of the Government of India in detail, and see DOMINIONS and STATUTE OF WESTMINSTER. See Journal of Society of Comparative Legislation for April and July, 1900.

Fee [fr. feoh, Sax.; fee, Dan., cattle; feudum, Med. Lat.; few, Scot.], property peculiar; reward or recompense for services. See FEES. Also an estate of inheritance divided into three species: (1) fee-simple absolute; (2) qualified or conditional or base fee, including (3) fee-tail, formerly fee-conditional. By the L. P. Act, 1925, s. 1, a fee-simple absolute in possession and a term of years absolute are the only estates in land capable of being conveyed or created at law. All other estates in land take effect as equitable interests (ibid., s. 1 (4)). See FEE-SIMPLE.

Fee-base. See BASE FEE.

Feeble-minded persons are one of the four classes of 'defectives' for dealing with whom elaborate provision is made by the Mental Treatment Act, 1927 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 33), s. 1; see IDiot. As to Scotland, see the Mental Deficiency and Lunacy (Scotland) Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 38).

Fee-conditional. See CONDITIONAL FEE.

Feed, to lend additional support; to strengthen ex post facto. A subsequently acquired interest is said to 'feed an estoppel'. Thus, if A., not having the legal estate, but being estopped from denying that he has it, convey property to B., then A.'s subsequent acquisition of the legal estate 'feeds the estoppel' and the legal estate vests in B.; see General Finance Co. v. Liberator Building Society, (1878) 10 Ch. D. p. 20; Doe v. Oliver, (1829) 5 Man. & Ry. 202.

Feeding Stuffs. The purity of feeding stuffs for cattle or poultry is protected, in the same way as that of artificial manures, by the Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs Act, 1925. See FERTILISERS.

Fee-expectant. If lands are given to a man and his wife in tail, habendum to them and their heirs, they had an estate tail and a fee-expectant.—Kitchin, Court Leete, p. 153. For the effect of this limitation created by instruments coming into operation after 1925, see Law of Property Act, 1925, ss. 130 et seq., and s. 60, UNDIVIDED SHARES, and Law of Property Amendment Act, 1932, s. 1.

Fee-farm rent, where an estate in fee is granted in perpetuity, subject to a rent in fee for so much as it is reasonably worth, not being less than one-fourth of the value of the lands at the time of its reservation; and such rent appears to be called fee-farm, because a grant of land reserving so considerable a rent is indeed only letting lands to farm in fee-simple, instead of the usual method of life or years.—1 Steph. Com., 13th ed. at p. 480. If the rent be in arrear for two years the feoffor or his heirs may have an action to recover the lands as his demesnes. Cowel's Law Dict., citing Britton, cap. 66, num. 4. Formerly it was said that these rents could not be distrained for, but the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1730 (4 Geo. 2, c. 28), s. 5, allowed distress, impounding and sale for the rents if the rents had been paid for three years. For the remedies in case of non-payment of these rents if created after 1881, see s. 121, Law of Property Act, 1925, and for relief against forfeiture, see L. P. Act, 1925, s. 146 (5) (a).

Fee-simple, a freehold estate of inheritance, absolute and unqualified. It stands at the head of estates as the highest in dignity and the most ample in extent; since every other kind of estate is derivable thereout, and mergeable therein, for omne majus continet in se minus. It may be enjoyed not only in land, but also in advowsons, commons, estovers, and other hereditaments as well as in personalty, as an annuity or dignity, and also in an upper chamber, though the lower buildings and soil belong to another.

Littleton, in his Tenures (l. i., c. 1, s. 1), gives a description of this estate, which appears to have been adopted by every subsequent writer. His language is this:—

A person who holds 'in fee-simple is he which hath lands or tenements to hold to him and his heirs for ever. And it is called in Latin feodum simplex, for feodum is the same that inheritance is, and simplex is as much as to say lawful or pure. And so feodum simplex signifies a lawful or pure inheritance. For if a man would purchase lands or tenements in fee-simple it behoveth him to have these words in his purchase, to have and to hold to him and to his heirs; for these words (his heirs) make the estate of inheritance. For if a man purchase lands to have and to hold to him for ever; or by these words, to have and to hold to him and his assignees for ever: in these two cases he hath but an estate for term of life, for that there lack these words (his heirs), which words only make an estate of inheritance in all feoffments and grants.'

Prior to the Conveyancing Act, 1881, the phrase universally adopted in deeds, in order to transfer a fee-simple absolute, was 'to A., his heirs and assigns for ever.' The word 'assigns,' however, was not material and might have been omitted, for it gave no other privilege to the owner than that which the law confers upon him by virtue of his estate, as entitling him to alien or transfer it; and the phrase 'for ever' not being liminary but simply declaratory of the time during which the property shall be enjoyed, might also have been omitted.

The Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 51, provided that in a deed it should be sufficient in the limitation of an estate in fee-simple to use the words 'in fee-simple' without the word 'heirs,' but this section applies only to conveyances made after the commencement of the Act, i.e., on or after the 1st January, 1882. The actual words of limitation given in the Act were required, for a conveyance 'in fee' without the addition of the word 'simple' will not pass the estate (Re Ethel, 1901, 1 Ch. 945). Even in conveying an equitable fee-simple, words of limitation were essential (Re Monckton, 1913, 2 Ch. 636).

The Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 60, effected another change upon the model, it is said, of the Wills Act, 1837, s. 28, since an estate for life is no longer a legal estate no ambiguity arises by the absence of words of limitation, accordingly s. 60, L. P. Act, 1925, enacts that a conveyance of freehold land to any person without words of limitation or equivalent expression shall pass to the grantee the fee-simple or other the whole interest which the grantor had power to convey in such land unless a contrary intention appears in the conveyance. It is, however, usual to add the words 'in fee simple' to express the intention of the grant. Sect. 60 only applies to conveyances and deeds executed after 1925, and see ss. 130 et seq., ibid.

The incidents of a fee-simple are: a power of management and of alienation, whether by gift, sale, or will; and until 1926 were descent to the heirs of an intestate owner; and escheat (see ESCHEAT) for want of heirs.

By the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 45, all the then existing rules of descent except in regard to entailed interests were abolished in the case of persons dying after 1925, with a few exceptions, and escheat was replaced by certain rights conferred on the Crown, the Duchy of Lancaster or the Duke of Cornwall to the exclusion of the rights (if any) of mesne lords (A. E. Act, 1925, s. 46).

The L. P. Act, 1925, s. 7, includes in the term, a fee-simple absolute, fee-simples which are liable to be divested under certain statutory provisions and (as amended by the L. P. Amendment Act, 1926) fee-simples subject to a legal or equitable right of re-entry. All other estates over land which are determinable by limitation or condition have become equitable interests (L. P. Act, 1925, 1st Sched., Part I.).

Fee-tail. See TAIL.

Fees, perquisites allowed to officers in the administration of justice, as a recompense for their labour and trouble, ascertained either by Acts of Parliament, by rule or order of Court, or by ancient usage; in modern times frequently commuted for a salary, e.g., by the Justices Clerks Act, 1877.

Although, however, the officers of a court may be paid by salary instead of by fees, the obligation of suitors to pay fees usually remains, these fees being paid into the fund out of which the salaries of the officers are defrayed. In the Supreme Court they are collected by means of stamps under s. 26 of the Judicature Act, 1875, and a Treasury Order of July, 1884, a judicial Order of the same year fixing the amount, and see Supreme Court Fees Rules, 1930.

The mode of collecting fees in a public office is under the Public Office Fees Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 58) (repealing and replacing the Public Office Fees Act, 1866), by stamps or money, as the Treasury may direct.

The fees of the steward of a manor were regulated entirely by custom, and a customal or list of fees to be taken, under every circumstance, was generally handed down from steward to steward. When the steward made excessive charges, the copyholder might have brought an action on the case to recover the excess, and it has been suggested that an indictment would lie for extortion colore officii. The fees of the steward of a manor who is a solicitor, but acts in the character of a steward only, were not taxable under the Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), s. 37, replaced by Solicitors Act, 1932 (c. 37), s. 64. In transactions where these fees are large or numerous a special agreement was generally made.—Allen v. Aldridge, (1843) 5 Beav. 401.

The Copyhold Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 46), by s. 9 and Sched. II., provides a scale of compensation to stewards in case of compulsory enfranchisements of copyholds.

Copyholds were enfranchised by the L. P. Act, 1922, s. 128, and by s. 131 of that Act stewards became entitled only to statutorily prescribed fees in respect of transactions effected after 1925. Inter alia, where the fee was customary, the customary fee is payable until the manorial incidents have been extinguished under the Act. See COPYHOLDS.

As to barristers' fees, see BARRISTER; and as to solicitors' fees, see COSTS.

Feigned Issue, a proceeding whereby an action was supposed to be brought by consent of the parties to determine some disputed right without the formality of pleading, saving thereby both time and expense. It might be ordered either by a Court of Law or Equity, or by a judge under the repealed Interpleader Act (1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 58). Before the Gaming Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 109), s. 19, questions of fact were often tried by means of a pretended wager between the parties interested. But by the last-named Act, in every case, where any Court of Law or Equity desired to have any question of fact decided by a jury, the Court might direct a writ of summons to be sued out by such person as it thought ought to be plaintiff, against such person as it thought ought to be defendant, and thereupon proceedings went on as upon a feigned issue. Compare R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XXXIV., r. 9.

Felagus, a companion, but particularly a friend who was bound in the decennary for the good behaviour of another.

Feld, field; in a compound word, wild.—Blount.

Fellow-servant. At Common Law a master is not liable to his servant for injury caused by the negligence of a fellow-servant (Priestly v. Fowler, (1837) 3 M. & W. 1), but this state of the law was altered by the Employers Liability Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 42), at first limited to expire on the 31st December, 1887, but since continued by successive Expiring Laws Continuance Acts. See COMMON EMPLOYMENT; WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT.

Felo de se (a felon with respect to himself); one who feloniously commits suicide. The barbarous mode of burying such persons, in a place where four roads met, with a stake driven through their bodies, was abolished by 4 Geo. 4, c. 52, which directed burial in the churchyard or other burial ground (without divine service) between the hours of nine and twelve at night. The Intermits (Felo de se) Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 19), repealed and re-enacted the above Act, omitting the provisions as to the hours of burial, and allowing, by permission of the ordinary, a religious service, the Prayer Book expressly forbidding the use of the Burial Service therein contained in the case of those who die 'laying violent hands on themselves.' Escheat or forfeiture for felony is abolished by the Forfeiture Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 23). A coroner's inquest (see CORONER) must be held in every case of suicide, and in the absence of evidence of unsoundness of mind a verdict of felo de se must still be directed and returned.

To attempt to commit suicide is a misdemeanour at Common Law, and is triable at Quarter Sessions (Reg. v. Burgess, (1862) L & C. 258).

In the army, by s. 38 of the Army Act (44 & 45 Vict. c. 58), an officer is liable to be cashiered and a soldier to be imprisoned for attempted suicide.

Felon [fr. felon, Fr.; felo, Mod. Low Lat.; fel, Sax.], one who has been convicted of felony. See FELONY.

Felony [fr. felonie, Fr.; felonia, Lat.; some deduce it fr. φῆλος, Gk., a deceiver, and fallo, Lat., to deceive; Spelman derives it fr. the Teutonic or German fee, a fieu or fief, and lon, price or value; Coke says, 'Ex vi termini significat quodlibet capitale crimen felleo animo perpetratum,' Co. Litt. 391 a], originally the state of having forfeited lands and goods to the Crown upon conviction for certain offences, and then, by transition, any offence upon conviction for which such forfeiture followed, in addition to any other punishment prescribed by law, as distinguished from misdemeanour, upon conviction for which no forfeiture followed. All indictable offences are either felonies or misdemeanours, but a material part of the distinction is taken away by the Forfeiture Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 23), which abolishes forfeiture for felony, and provides for the administration of the estates of felons while undergoing sentence; see Carr v. Anderson, 1903, 2 Ch. 279.

The only remaining distinctions between a felony and a misdemeanour appear to be that there are larger powers of arrest in the case of felony; that it is a crime to conceal a felony (see MISPRISON); that felony must be pleaded to personally; that a jury trying felony may not separate before verdict (this distinction has been done away with, except as to murder, treason, and treason felony, by the Juries Detention Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 18)); that a person indicted for murder or felony is entitled to peremptorily challenge twenty jurors on the panel (County Juries Act, 1825 (6 Geo. 4, c. 50), s. 29, as controlled by the Criminal Law Act, 1827 (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28), s. 3), and the jurors are accordingly sworn singly; that the prisoner on conviction for felony has a right to be heard before judgment; and that peers accused of felony are entitled to be tried by their peers (Earl Russell's case, 1901, A. C. 446). Lord De Clifford was tried on 12th December, 1935, and on 4th February, 1936, a motion, by the Lord Chancellor, that the present system of trial of peers by peers has outlived its usefulness, was carried by a majority in the House of Lords.

Feme, or Femme, a woman. See WOMAN.

Feme-covert, a married woman. See MARRIED WOMAN. A woman who may be subject to the control or interference of her husband over herself or her property.

Feme-sole. A woman not subject to the control or interference of a husband over herself or her property.

Fence, a hedge, ditch, or other inclosure of land for the better manurance and improvement of the same (Jac. Law Dict.). As to the larceny or malicious destruction of fences, see Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), ss. 34, 35; Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 8; and Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), s. 25. See BARBED WIRE. The word is also used by criminals to denote a receiver of or dealer in stolen property.

Fence-month, or Defence-month, a time during which female deer in forests do fawn; when hunting them is unlawful. It begins fifteen days before Old Midsummer, and ends fifteen days after it.—Manw., pt. 2, c. xiii.

Fencing Machinery. See MACHINERY.

Feneration [fr. feneration, Lat.], usury; the gain of interest; the practice of increasing money by lending.

Fengeld, a tax or imposition, exacted for the repelling of enemies.

Feod, or Feud, the right which the vassal had in land, or some immovable property of his lord, to use the same and take the profits thereof, rendering unto the lord such duties and services as belonged to the particular tenure; the actual property in the soil always remaining in the lord.—Spelm., Feuds and Tenures.

Feodal, of or belonging to the feod or feud.

Feodal System. See FEUDAL SYSTEM.

Feodality, fealty. See FEALTY.

Feodary, or Feudary, an officer of the Court of Wards, appointed by the master of that Court, under 32 Hen. 8, s. 26, whose business it was to be present with the escheator in every county at the finding of offices of lands, and to give evidence for the king as well concerning the value as the tenure; and his office was also to survey the land of the ward, after the office found, and to rate it. He also assigned the kings' widows their dower, and received all the rents, etc. Abolished by 12 Car. 2, c. 24.

Feodatory, or Feudatory, the tenant who held his estate by feudal service.
